

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

Dr. 11)

L. D 1.1
Per. L. Eng. A. 75 d. 48¹⁸⁷⁰⁽³⁾

CW. U. K
120
L 40

THE LAW JOURNAL REPORTS

FOR
THE YEAR 1870:

CASES RELATING TO THE POOR LAW, THE CRIMINAL LAW, AND OTHER SUBJECTS

CHIEFLY CONNECTED WITH
The Duties and Office of Magistrates,

DECIDED IN THE COURTS OF QUEEN'S BENCH, COMMON PLEAS, AND EXCHEQUER, AND IN THE COURT FOR CROWN CASES RESERVED,
MICHAELMAS TERM, 1869, TO MICHAELMAS TERM, 1870.

REPORTED

In the Court of Queen's Bench,
By ROBERT SAWYER, Esq. AND ARTHUR PAUL STONE, Esq.
BARRISTERS-AT-LAW.

In the Court of Common Pleas,
By WILLIAM PATERSON, Esq. AND GILMORE EVANS, Esq.
BARRISTERS-AT-LAW.

In the Court of Exchequer,
By HUGH COWIE, Esq. AND LUMLEY SMITH, Esq. BARRISTERS-AT-LAW.

In the Court for Crown Cases Reserved,
By THOMAS SIRRELL PRITCHARD, Esq. BARRISTER-AT-LAW.

MAGISTRATES' CASES.
NEW SERIES, VOL. XXXIX.

LONDON:

PRINTED BY SPOTTISWOODE AND CO. NEW-STREET SQUARE.

PUBLISHED BY EDWARD BRET INCE, 5, QUALITY COURT, CHANCERY LANE.

MDCCCLXX.

REPORTS OF CASES

CHIEFLY CONNECTED WITH

THE DUTIES AND OFFICE OF MAGISTRATES

AND THE ADMINISTRATION OF THE CRIMINAL LAW.

VOL. XXXIX. (NEW SERIES), COMMENCING WITH

MICHAELMAS TERM, 33 VICTORIÆ.

[IN THE COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.]
 1869. } HALL, appellant, v. POTTER,
 Nov. 6. } respondent.

Public Health Act, 1848, (11 & 12 Vict. c. 63) s. 69—Notice to pave streets not being highways.

A notice by a local board of health to the owner of houses abutting upon a street not being a highway, to sewer, level, pave, flag and channel the same, in pursuance of the Public Health Act, 1848, (11 & 12 Vict. c. 63) s. 69, is not invalid by reason of the plans and sections of the required works deposited under the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 61. s. 16, including narrow strips of land in front of the houses, not open to or used by the public.

CASE stated by the stipendiary Magistrate for the Manchester division of the county of Lancaster, under the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43.

1. At a petty sessions, holden at the county police court for the division of Manchester, on the 16th of December, 1868, a complaint was preferred by the appellant, the Clerk to the Local Board of Health for the district of Rusholme, in the county of Lancaster, that the respondent was, on the 7th day of August, 1867, the owner of certain premises fronting, adjoining and abutting upon a certain street, called Victoria Street, in Rusholme, within the said district, which said street was not then a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large, and was not then sewered, levelled, paved, flagged and channelled to the satisfaction of the said local board of health; and that the said local board of health had, by a certain writing, dated the 7th day of August, 1867, sealed with their seal, and signed by five of their members, and also by the clerk of the said local board of health, given the said respondent, as owner of the said premises fronting, adjoining or abutting upon the said street, notice within the space of two calendar months from the date of the said notice, to sewer, level, pave, flag and channel so much of the said street as the said premises fronted, adjoined or abutted upon, in manner in the said notice mentioned; and the said notice further required the said respondent to execute these works in accordance with a plan and section therein mentioned as being deposited at the office of the said local board of health.

2. The respondent did not, as required by the said notice, within two calendar months after the date of the said notice, execute the works in the said notice mentioned.

3. The said local board executed the said works required in the said notice to be done by the respondent, except that they did not flag certain gardens included in the said notice and plan, and mentioned in the 9th paragraph of this case. The said local board also executed works of sewerage, levelling, paving, flagging and channelling other parts of the said street.

B

NEW SERIES, 39.—MAG. CAS.

4. An apportionment of the expenses incurred by the said local board, in doing such work as was done by the said local board in the said street, was duly made, as required by the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 63. s. 69, and notice thereof, so far as related to the said premises of the respondent, was duly given to him.

5. The amount of the said expenses apportioned in respect of the said premises of the respondent for the work so done, as apportioned by the surveyor, amounted to 94*l.* 11*s.* 7*d.*; and such sum was duly demanded of the respondent, on the 2nd day of June, 1868, and he refused to pay the same.

6. The respondent was duly summoned before the stipendiary Magistrate, to shew cause why an order should not be made upon him for the payment of the sum of 94*l.* 11*s.* 7*d.* so as aforesaid demanded of him.

7. The complaint was heard and determined at a Petty Sessions, on the 12th day of January, 1869, the said parties then being present by attorney and counsel, and upon such hearing the said summons was dismissed.

8. The appellant being dissatisfied with such determination, applied for a case under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43.

9. The facts hereinbefore mentioned were proved, and it was also proved that the said premises of which the respondent was the owner, fronted, adjoined and abutted upon the said Victoria Street to the extent of 201 feet 3 inches, co-extensive with such street. It was also proved, that a portion of such premises, namely, 154 feet 6 inches in length, and 2 yards and 21 inches in breadth, composed small gardens enclosed in front of the houses there situate, of which the respondent was the owner. It was also proved, that no part of the said gardens had ever been dedicated to or used by the public. The notice so given, to sewer, level, pave, flag and channel, referred to a plan deposited in the office of the said local board, and included the land forming the said street, and also other land forming the said gardens. The length of the said street, as shewn in such plan, was 638 feet and 6 inches, and the width thereof 36 feet, including nevertheless in such 36 feet and 6 inches, the said gardens, so far as the same were so co-extensive with the said street as aforesaid. The stipendiary Magistrate held the notice to sewer, pave, &c., to be informal and invalid, because it required the respondent to do that which the local board had no authority to require him to do, inasmuch as it required him to sewer, &c. the land forming the said gardens in front of the respective houses.

10. The opinion of the Court is requested upon the following question:—Was the said notice of the 7th August, 1867, a bad notice, and altogether invalid on the ground above mentioned, or a good and valid notice so far as it related to the said works so actually executed by the said board?

11. If the Court shall be of opinion that the notice of the 7th August, 1867, was bad and altogether invalid, for the reason above stated, then the determination of the stipendiary Magistrate is to stand; otherwise the case is to be remitted back, with the opinion of the Court thereon, for the further hearing of the case.

W. E. Cole for the appellant.—The notice is in pursuance of the Public Health Act 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 63), s. 69, and is good pro tanto, notwithstanding s. 16 of the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 61, under which, previous to giving such notice, plans and sections of the required works are to be deposited in the office of the local board for the inspection of persons interested, and a reference to which is to be held sufficient without the annexation of a copy of such plans, &c. to the notice itself.

[LUSH, J.—The words of the notice are, "So much of the said street;" that does not include the strips of garden. Notwithstanding the error in the plan, the respondent must have been perfectly aware of what was really required of him.]

He referred to Caley v. The Local Board for Kingston-upon-Hull (1); Regina v. The

(1) 5 B. & S. 815; s.c. 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 7.

Newport Local Board (2); The Mayor, &c. of Manchester v. Chapman (3). Further, the objection, if valid, is cured by s. 137 of the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 63, and s. 63 of the 21 & 22 Vict. c. 98.

Quain (Baylis with him), for the respondent.—The decision of the Magistrate was right. By s. 16 of the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 61, the board, before giving notice under s. 69 of the Public Health Act 1848, are required to cause plans and sections of the required works to be made upon a certain scale, and by the form of notice given in schedule A to the first-mentioned act, such works are “to be executed in accordance with the plans and sections,” which are thus constituted an inseparable part of the notice. Parkinson v. The Mayor, &c. of Blackburn (4), where a notice requiring an owner to execute works in excess of jurisdiction, was held bad, is decisive of the present question.

COCKBURN, C.J.—There is no doubt that the notice, so far as it related to what might legally be required, is perfectly good, and is not vitiated by that portion of it which is ultra vires. In arriving at this conclusion, we impose no hardship upon the respondent, who must have known precisely what the local board in the exercise of their duty required of him, notwithstanding their mistake in including in their plan a portion of ground which was private property, and could not therefore be made the subject of the order.

LUSH, J.—The effect of the notice and plan, taken in conjunction, was simply to call upon the respondent to flag, channel, &c. so much of the street as lay in front of his property. It is quite impossible that he could have been misled by the accidental insertion in the plan of a piece of garden which was his own private property.

HANNEN, J.—I am of the same opinion. The notice, and so much of the plan as refers to the strip of garden in front of the respondent's houses, may be considered as notice to flag, &c. area A, and also area B, the first being within and the second beyond the jurisdiction of the local board; and the respondent has no right to refuse to do what is properly required with respect to area A, because he is improperly required to do something with respect to area B. Parkinson v. The Mayor of Blackburn (4) is distinguishable from this case, inasmuch as there the board required the owner “to repair, form, and pave” a portion of the street, which was entirely beyond the powers conferred upon them by the act. In this case, so much of the notice as is valid, is readily and easily separable from that which is bad.

HAYES, J. concurred.

Judgment for the appellant.

Attorneys—Dangerfield & Frazer, agents for G. S. Hall, Cambridge, for appellant; Bower & Cotton, agents for Edward Aston, Manchester, for respondent.

[IN THE COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.]

1869. } KENT, appellant, v. ASTLEY,
Nov. 13. } respondent.

Factory—Slate Quarry—30 & 31 Vict. c. 103. s. 3 (7)—“Premises.”

A slate quarry occupying with its accessories a large tract of land, uninclosed and approachable by no definite road or entrance, and furnished with covered sheds to which the rough blocks of material when raised are conveyed and there converted by a manufacturing process into slates, flags and other saleable articles, is not within the meaning of the term “premises” in the 30 & 31 Vict. c. 103, (Factory Acts Extension Act, 1867), s. 3. sub-section 7.

CASE stated by Justices of the Peace for the county of Carnarvon, under the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43; of which the following is a sufficient summary:—

At a petty sessions holden at the county hall at Carnarvon, in the said county, on the 26th of September, 1868, two summonses issued by Samuel Saville Kent, Sub-inspector of Factories (the appellant), against John N. F. Astley, of the parishes of Llanberis and Llanddeiniolen, in the said county, slate and flag quarry proprietor (the respondent), were heard before the Justices.

The first complaint against the respon-

(2) 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 97.

(3) 37 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 173.

(4) 33 Law Times 119.

dent was that he being the occupier of a certain factory within the said parishes and county, the same being a factory within the true intent and meaning of the Factory Acts, in such factory as aforesaid, in, on and within the precincts of which said factory 50 and more persons were employed in a certain manufacturing process, namely, in altering, repairing, ornamenting, finishing and otherwise adapting slates and flags for sale, did unlawfully employ, keep and allow to remain in the said factory, a young person requiring a surgical certificate of age, named Richard Griffiths Davies, without the certificate of age required by the said acts, whereby the said respondent had forfeited for the said offence a penalty of not less than 2*l.* nor more than 5*l.*

The second complaint against the respondent was for unlawfully employing and keeping, and allowing to remain in the said factory, the above mentioned Richard Griffiths Davies, without having duly registered his name and the date of his first employment, in the form and according to the directions given in Schedule B. to the Act 7 Vict. c. 15, whereby the said respondent had forfeited for the said offence a penalty of not less than 2*l.* nor more than 5*l.*

The said alleged factory is a slate quarry in a large open space extending over about 400 acres (in which there are also covered sheds or huts where the splitters work), where hundreds of men and very young boys are employed in getting large blocks of slate, which blocks or raw material are drawn, when got, to other parts of the same quarry and split with hammers and chisels, used as wedges, into laminæ or slates. These laminæ or slates are then edged square with an iron knife, by hand, into separate slates or articles, and divided into quantities for sale. They are sent away in thousands from the quarry to the market. These slates are also sold by retail, either separately or in quantity, by the buyers of them. In the quarry tombstones, gateposts, chimney-pieces, tanks and slabs of every size, are also made out of these blocks of slate, and ornamented according to order. The boy in question was found by the sub-inspector working in one of the sheds with other boys, to the number of upwards of 50, adapting slates for sale, on the 23rd of July, 1868. The shed was within the precincts of the quarry, between which and the mountain there is no boundary; and one of the places in which slabs are made is nearly a mile from the quarry, with fields, in different occupations but belonging to the proprietor of the quarry, intervening. There is no defined entrance to the quarry, which is entered by the work-people and others by a great many different ways. [The case also referred to the 30 & 31 Vict. c. 103. s. 3, so much of which as is material to the question is hereafter set out in the argument.]

Upon the hearing of the summonses, the Justices decided to dismiss them, considering that there was no possibility of keeping a clock to be visible and capable of being heard by all persons employed in the quarry, which one of the Factory Acts appears to contemplate; that the requirement of another of the said acts, that the inside walls of a factory shall be lime-washed, would be difficult and absurd in the case of a quarry; and that the definition of a factory as a place wherein machinery was used in manufacturing hemp, flax and such like materials, is not applicable to a quarry, to which, in fact, scarcely any of the clauses were applicable.

The question for the consideration of the Court, was whether the quarry and premises above described were within the operation of the Factory Acts? If the Court should be of opinion in the affirmative, the case was to be remitted to the Justices.

Sir J. D. Coleridge (Solicitor General) (Archibald with him) for the appellant.—By the 30 & 31 Vict. c. 103 (Factory Acts Extension Acts), s. 3. sub-section 7, “any premises, whether adjoining or separate, in the same occupation, situate in the same city, town, parish or place, and constituting one trade establishment, in, on or within the precincts of which 50 or more persons are employed in any manufacturing process,” are included under the term “factory,” and by the same section “manufacturing process” is defined to mean “any manual labour exercised by way of trade or for purposes of gain, in or incidental to the making any article or part of an article, or in or incidental to the altering, repairing, ornamenting, finishing or otherwise adapting any article for sale;" which definitions are applicable to a slate quarry and the works therein carried on, such as are described in the case. The justices were therefore wrong in their view of the question. Palmer's Shipbuilding and Iron Company v. Chaytor (1), where the whole of the several branches of the business of the manufactory communicated with each other, and were within one common boundary, may be relied on by the other side; but the true meaning is that any place in the same occupation used for trade purposes, and on which the statutable number of persons is employed, is a factory, although the manufacturing and other processes necessary to the purposes of the business may be carried on separately, and at a distance from each other.

[HANNEN, J.—Some of the old bankruptcy cases seem to throw light upon the question what constitutes a manufacturing process exercised by way of trade. In Sutton v. Weeley (2) a freeholder using a portion of his own soil in the manufacture of bricks was held not to be a trader within the bankrupt laws.]

Here the words are not merely "by way of trade," but also "for purposes of gain."

[COCKBURN, C.J.—Suppose the owner of land to use it for the cultivation of hemp, which he afterwards manufactures into rope, may he not carry on his manufacturing operations in such manner as to bring himself within the operation of the Factory Acts?]

There is no practical difference between such a case and that of a man who purchases raw material out of which he produces a manufactured article by manual labour. The process in question is as much a manufacturing process, and the place in which it is carried on is as much a factory within the meaning of the statute as the different processes and places enumerated in section 5, and thereby excepted from the operation of the act (which but for such exception would be within it), such as bleaching and dyeing and other works, which have been successively brought within the Factory Acts, or otherwise regulated by special acts of parliament passed from time to time. Further, the justices have given erroneous reasons for their decision. Under the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 15. s. 26, the hours of work of children and young persons in factories are to be regulated "by a public clock or by some other clock open to the public view," but it is not required that the clock should be placed in the factory; and indeed it is desirable that the clock should be out of the control of the occupier. Then as to the lime-washing of factory walls under the 3 & 4 Will. 4. c. 103. s. 26, and the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 15. s. 18, it is provided by clause 9 of the schedule to the 30 & 31 Vict. c. 103, that these sections shall not be in force as respects any factory.

Milward (Hance with him) for the respondent.—It is clear that the quarry in question, being a mere aperture on the side of a mountain, and separated therefrom by no defined fence or boundary, and to which it is impossible to adapt the requirements of the various Factory Acts, such as the hanging up of an abstract of the act, and the notice required by the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 15. s. 28; the providing of a clock for regulating the hours of labour, &c., cannot come within the meaning of the term "premises" in section 3. sub-section 7 of the 30 & 31 Vict. c. 103. The case is widely different from that of Palmer's Shipbuilding and Iron Company v. Chaytor (1), where the different places in which the several branches of the business were carried on communicated with each other, and were within one common boundary.

[COCKBURN, C.J.—The section under consideration brings within its operation "any premises, whether adjoining or separate, in the same occupation."]

It is also required that the premises should be situate "in the same city, town, parish or place," whereas it appears by the summonses in the present case that the quarry and its accessories extend into two different parishes.

The Solicitor General in reply.

COCKBURN, C.J.—I am of opinion that the Justices were right in their decision,

(1) 38 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 63; s. c. Law Rep. 4 Q.B. 209.

(2) 7 East 442.

although I do not adopt the reasons by which they were guided. The process in question being one in which manual labour was employed for converting the rough material taken from the quarry into slates for building, was no doubt a manufacturing process; and I agree that if the proprietor of land sees fit to use it for other than ordinary agricultural purposes, and to convert its produce into some manufactured article, as in the case I put in the course of the argument of the owner of land growing hemp and also carrying on the business of a rope-maker, he would be, quoad such conversion of the raw material, a manufacturer, and therefore liable to be convicted for offences within the scope of the Factory Acts. But my judgment in the present case is founded upon this consideration: that the process of converting slate in the rough into the manufactured article, was carried on in the quarry itself or places accessory thereto; and I cannot entertain the idea that it was the intention of the legislature to bring a quarry within the meaning of the term "premises," as used in section 3 of the statute in question; and further, I do not think that the fact of the process being carried on in covered sheds attached to this particular quarry, which, with its other accessories, extends over an area of 400 acres, makes any difference in this respect. The legislature has, doubtless, from time to time extended the operation of the Factory Acts, which was at first confined to buildings in which persons of both sexes were employed, to processes not originally within their contemplation; but it has not yet included a mere open air process, such as the one under consideration, and we should be outstripping the law in declaring those Acts applicable to this particular kind of work, which, although carried on in the precincts, might just as well be performed in the quarry itself. Nor do we discern in the case before us, the existence of any of those evils which it was the special object of the legislature to guard against, such as the unseemly mingling of the sexes, the crowding together of a number of persons within an inconveniently narrow space, or the employment of young children in works disproportioned to their powers. I think, therefore, we should be going beyond our province if we put such a construction on the word "premises," as that contended for on behalf of the appellant.

MELLOR, J.—I am of the same opinion, although I must confess to some fluctuations of mind during the argument. The course of the legislature appears to have been to extend the operation of the Factory Acts first to one trade and then to another, as occasion seemed to require; and I think we may derive much assistance from the consideration that the attention of the legislature has not yet been specially and in terms directed to slate and stone quarries, although long recognised as a valuable and important description of property. We find that bleaching and dyeing works, and other manufacturing processes, have been successively dealt with, in each case by a separate act of parliament, and the fact that quarries have escaped notice may fairly lead us to the conclusion that the legislature has not, up to the present time, determined to deal with them. I think, therefore, though not without doubt, that we should be attaching too wide a meaning to the word "premises" in the statute under consideration, by construing it as including a slate quarry. If it were necessary to determine the other point, I should have no hesitation in saying that the process in question was a manufacturing one.

HANNEN, J.—I am of the same opinion. It seems difficult to arrive at the conclusion that an open quarry, situate on a mountain's side, and occupying with its accessories several hundred acres, was ever intended by the legislature to be dealt with under the general term "premises;" and I agree with what has fallen from my brother Mellor, that the fact that other processes have from time to time been successively dealt with and brought under the operation of the Factory Acts, goes a long way to show that the omission of this particular source of employment was intentional and deliberate.

Judgment for the respondent.

Attorneys—Solicitor to the Treasury, for appellant; J. Fluker, agent for Dewes & Burgess, Nuneaton, for respondent.

[CROWN CASE RESERVED.]

1869. }
 Nov. 13. } REGINA v. MACGRATH.*

Larceny—Taking—Mock Auction—Influence of threat.

The prosecutrix entered a sale-room, where a mock auction was being held. The prisoner was auctioneer, and knocked down a piece of cloth to the prosecutrix for twenty-six shillings, for which she had not bid, as he knew. The prosecutrix denied that she had bid; the prisoner asserted that she had, and must pay for it before she could leave. The prosecutrix tried to go out of the room, when a confederate standing between her and the door also said that she had bid, and prevented her leaving. She then in fear paid the money, and took away the cloth which was given to her:—Held, that these facts constituted a larceny, as they sufficiently shewed that the money was obtained from the prosecutrix against her will.

The following CASE was stated by the learned Assistant Barrister to the Recorder of Liverpool.

At the court of Quarter Sessions of the Peace, holden in and for the borough of Liverpool, on the 30th day of August, 1869, Peter MacGrath was tried upon an indictment which charged him with feloniously stealing 26s. of the moneys and property of Peter Powell.

It was proved at the trial that on the 26th day of August, 1869, Jane Powell, the wife of the prosecutor, Peter Powell, between three and four o'clock in the afternoon passed a sale-room, and upon being invited to enter did so. There were about one dozen persons in the sale-room, and the prisoner was acting as auctioneer, and selling table-cloths and other articles. After two table-cloths had been sold, and purchased by two women who were present, a piece of cloth was put up for sale by auction, the prisoner acting as auctioneer. A man bid 25s. for it, when another man standing between Jane Powell and the door said to the prisoner that she had bid 26s. for it, upon which the prisoner knocked it down to her. The witness, Jane Powell, said: "I had not bid for it, nor made any sign; I told the prisoner I had not bid. He said I did. I said I did not, and would not pay for it; I said this several times. I went to go out. The prisoner said I had bid for it, and must pay before I would be allowed to go out. I was then prevented going out by the man who had said I had bid for it. He stood between me and the door, and said I must pay for it. I wanted to go out, and the man prevented me. I then paid 26s. to the prisoner; I paid the money because I was afraid. The piece of cloth was then given to me, and I took it away." In about an hour after she returned and saw the prisoner, and told him she could not keep the cloth, as she had not bid for it. He told her he could not give the money back, but if she came the following week he would exchange it. The next day the place was closed when Peter Powell and his wife went to call there about the cloth; but close by in the street the prisoner and the man who said she had bid, and another man by whom Jane Powell had been invited on the first occasion into the sale-room, were seen together and immediately to separate and go different ways. Peter Powell followed the prisoner, and said to him, "I believe you are the man who forced my wife to pay for a piece of cloth she never bid for;" upon which he replied, "I told her to come to the house on Monday." After some little struggle and endeavour to escape on the part of the prisoner he was given into custody. When charged he said to the policeman, "She cannot lock me up, she paid me the money." The counsel for the prisoner objected that the facts did not prove a larceny.

* Coram Kelly, C.B., Blackburn, J., Martin, B., Lush, J. and Brett, J.

I directed the jury that if the prisoner had the intention to deprive her of her money, and in order to obtain it was guilty of a trick and artifice by fraudulently asserting that she had made a bid when she had not, as he well knew, and that he obtained the money by such means he was guilty of the offence charged. The jury found that no bid had been made by Jane Powell, which the prisoner knew, and that he obtained the money from her by the trick and artifice mentioned above. A verdict of guilty was then entered. I postponed passing sentence and remanded the prisoner back to gaol, and reserved the question whether the facts proved a larceny, and also the question whether I rightly directed the jury, for the decision and opinion of the Court of Criminal Appeal.

Commings for the prisoner.—It is submitted that this conviction should be quashed because the prosecutrix here paid the money of her own will in order to free herself from a difficult position, and not under such an impression of terror as was sufficient to amount to a felonious taking on the part of the prisoner, to whom she paid it. She knew that she had not bid for the cloth, and that she could not be made to pay for it. It is a case of simple duress or extortion, but not robbery or larceny—Rees v. Wood (1). The prosecutrix paid her money, and took away the goods; therefore, as she had the goods for the money, it cannot be larceny—Rees v. Wilson (2). The direction to the jury was insufficient; they ought to have been asked whether she parted with her money against her will.

McConnell for the Crown.—The prosecutrix parted with her money under the influence of fear, arising from expected violence to her person, and therefore unwillingly; and the prisoner produced that state of fear by a trick with the object of obtaining her money. That is larceny—Rees v. Hickman (3). The jury have found that the prisoner obtained the money by a trick or artifice, which had the effect of inducing the prosecutrix to part with it, and that is sufficient—Rees v. Horner (4). If the prosecutrix was induced to part with the money through surprise, even if not against her will, still not being with her consent, it is larceny—Rees v. Morgan (5), Regina v. Robertson (6). The prosecutrix never intended to take the goods in the place of the money.

KELLY, C.B.—I think the conviction ought to be affirmed. The prisoner acted as, and professed to be an auctioneer. There was a bid for the piece of cloth, and it was knocked down, or at least the prisoner pretended to knock it down, to the prosecutrix. An altercation then arose. The prosecutrix said the cloth was not knocked down to her, and that she had not bid for it. The prisoner knew that this was so, but pretended that the prosecutrix had made a bid for the cloth. He would not let her go, and intimidated her, for she says in her evidence that she was afraid of him. She was told that she should not leave the room unless she paid for the cloth. In consequence of being thus frightened by the prisoner, and of his threat that she should not leave the room, the prosecutrix paid the money. The meaning of the finding of the jury must be taken to be, that the prosecutrix did not pay the money voluntarily. She was induced to do so by a subterfuge, and also by a threat of what might have amounted to personal violence. Under these circumstances she parted with her money, and I think, therefore, against her will.

There are several definitions of larceny. Bracton (lib. iii. c. 32. p. 150), defines it thus: "Furtum est secundum leges contractatio rei alienæ fraudulenta cum animo furandi, invito illo domino cujus res illa fuerit."

In modern times, East (7) defines it as "The wrongful or fraudulent taking and carrying away by any person of the mere personal goods of another, from any place, with a felonious intent to convert them to his, the taker's, own use, and make them his own property, without the consent of the owner."

The latter definition was adopted by Parke, B. in Regina v. Holloway (8).

The Criminal Law Commissioners, in their definition of larceny, say, "The taking and carrying away are felonious where the goods are taken against the will of the owner, either in his absence or in a clandestine manner, or where possession is obtained either by force or surprise, or by any trick, device or fraudulent expedient, the owner not voluntarily parting with his entire interest in the goods" (9).

(1) 2 Leach C. C. 721; s. c. 2 East P. C. 732.

(2) 8 Car. & P. 111.

(3) 1 Leach C. C. 318.

(4) 1 Leach C. C. 270.

(5) Dears. C. C. 395.

(6) 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M. C. 35.

(7) 2 East P. C. c. 16. s. 2.

(8) 1 Den. C. C. 370.

(9) 1 Rep. p. 16; and see Rosc. Cr. Ev. 6th ed. 569.

This case comes exactly within that definition, as the money was taken against the will of the owner. The prosecutrix did not part with it voluntarily, but the possession was obtained by fraud and force. Both these causes operated on the mind of the prosecutrix. It was a lie, a trick, a device, and fraudulent misrepresentation. The crime of obtaining money by false pretences is of another kind. It is constituted by the pretence that something has taken place which, in fact, has not taken place, by which pretence a person is deceived and induced to part with his money, &c., intending at the time so to part with it. The present is a different case. The prosecutrix was not deceived, she was intimidated, and by the operation of both the intimidation and the surprise of the trick, she was induced to give up her money against her will.

It is not necessary to consider whether there was sufficient force used to constitute a robbery. If there was such force, then the prisoner was properly convicted of larceny, which is included in the crime of robbery. All the elements of larceny would there be present.

It has been also argued that the direction to the jury was wrong. It might possibly have been better if the question had been put directly to the jury, whether the money was obtained by the threat of personal violence. That point is not reserved here. If it were, we could not possibly say that the jury were improperly directed in being asked whether the money was obtained by a trick or artifice. It would, under the circumstances, have been superfluous to have asked the jury whether the prosecutrix parted with her money against her will. If, however, this point had been reserved, we should still have affirmed the conviction.

MARTIN, B.—The indictment in this case was for larceny. If a robbery was in fact committed, that does not prevent a conviction for larceny.

BLACKBURN, J.—I am of the same opinion. To constitute a larceny there must be an animus furandi, i.e. a felonious intent to take the property of another against his or her will. The essence of the offence is, knowingly to take the goods of another against his will. The goods may be obtained in various ways. If by force, then a robbery is committed, and this would include a larceny, in which force is not a necessary ingredient. It would be a scandal to the law if goods could be obtained by frightening the owners, and yet that this should not constitute a taking within the meaning of the definition of larceny. The material ingredient is, that the goods should be obtained against the will of the owner. The other ingredients of larceny undoubtedly existed here, as appears in the evidence of the case. There is ample evidence that the money was obtained against the will of the prosecutrix. If there had been any doubt upon the point, the jury should have been asked the question, for it is clear that she did not part with her money of her own free will. This is in effect stated in the case. There was evidence that the money was obtained by the prisoner with a felonious intent, and against the will of the prosecutrix. The jury have found these facts against the prisoner, and these facts constitute larceny. Even if a robbery had in fact been committed, that does not preserve the prisoner from the liability to be convicted of larceny. A robbery includes a larceny. There may be some doubt whether a robbery was in fact committed in this case, but it is not necessary to consider that question.

LUSH, J.—I had some doubt during the argument whether there had been any sufficient taking. But I now think that there was a sufficient taking to constitute larceny, as the money was specifically demanded by the prisoner, and was exacted by him from the prosecutrix under coercion, whilst she was prevented from leaving the room.

BRETT, J.—The question is whether there was a taking from the prosecutrix against her will. If the matter rested on the trick, that would be insufficient, inasmuch as, if the prosecutrix had been deceived by it, and by reason of it had parted with her money, it would not have been larceny, but the money would have been obtained by false pretences; but here it can only be taken as evidence of the prisoner's motives, inasmuch as the prosecutrix was not deceived but parted with her money under the influence of fear of temporary imprisonment, though not accompanied by any personal violence. It is unnecessary to determine whether such an amount of duress would be sufficient to constitute a robbery. Upon consideration I think that if the threat was capable of being executed, and the prosecutrix really parted with her money against her will, that is sufficient to constitute the offence of larceny. There was evidence of such a taking, and the jury here found, in effect, that the money was obtained under a fear sufficient to make the giving of it an unwilling act on the part of the prosecutrix; consequently the taking was against the will of the prosecutrix, and was therefore a larceny.

C

Conviction affirmed.

Attorneys—Wright & Venn, agents for J. Rayner, Liverpool, for the prosecution.

[CROWN CASE RESERVED.]

1869. } REGINA v. WILLIAM RITSON AND
Nov. 13. } SAMUEL RITSON.*

Forgery—24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 20—Antedating one's own Deed.

A, by deed bearing date on the 7th of May, 1868, conveyed on that day certain lands to B in fee. Subsequently, on the 26th of April, 1869, C produced a deed, bearing date the 12th of March, 1868, purporting to be a demise of the same land for a long term of years, as from the 25th of March, 1868, from A to C. It was found by the jury that the alleged lease was executed after A's conveyance to B, and ante-dated for the purpose of defrauding B:—Held, that A. and C. were guilty of forgery.

CASE reserved by Hayes, J.

The prisoners were indicted at the last Manchester Assizes, under the 24th & 25th Vict. c. 98. s. 20, for forging a deed with intent to defraud James Gardner. William Ritson was the father of Samuel Ritson and was a builder. He had been entitled to certain building land at Heaton Norris, in Lancashire, which had been conveyed to him in fee, and he had borrowed on the security of it of the prosecutor James Gardner more than 730*l.*, for which advances he had given on the 10th of January, 1868, an equitable mortgage by written agreement and deposit of title deeds.

* Coram Kelly, C.B., Martin, B., Blackburn, J., Lush, J., and Brett, J.

On the 5th of May, 1868, William Ritson executed a deed under the Bankrupt Act of 1861, conveying all his real and personal estate to James Booth, a trustee for the benefit of creditors, and on the 7th of May, 1868, by deed between James Booth, the trustee, of the first part, and William Ritson of the second part, and the said James Gardner of the third part, reciting the said deed of assignment, and that James Gardner had become mortgagee of the said building land, and that there was then due to him 789*l.* 6*s.* 2*d.* for principal and interest, and that the said James Booth and William Ritson, having caused a valuation to be made, had ascertained that the said sum was in excess of the value of the said hereditaments, and that there were some building materials on the land not fixed to the freehold, and that it had been agreed between the parties to the deed, to convey the land and assign the materials for 50*l.* to the said James Gardner,—

It was witnessed that the said James Booth and William Ritson, in consideration of the said sum paid as therein mentioned (namely 49*l.* to Booth and 1*l.* to William Ritson), did respectively grant, convey, and confirm unto the said James Gardner, the said freehold land (subject to the two indentures therein mentioned, being previous conveyances to other parties by the said William Ritson of two small plots thereof), and all the estate, claim and demand of the said James Booth and William Ritson therein, to and to the use of the said James Gardner, his heirs and assigns for ever, with a covenant from the said James Booth and William Ritson that they, or one of them, had full power to grant the said lands and hereditaments as aforesaid, free from all incumbrances, except as appeared by the said deed; but which deed contained no mention of the deed found to be a forgery, as after mentioned, but only mentioned the conveyances of the said two small plots. After the execution of the said conveyance to the prosecutor, he entered into possession of the ground so conveyed to him.

About March, 1869, the prosecutor had buildings erecting on adjoining land, and had employed William Ritson as a builder, and had given him permission to erect a shed on part of the ground so conveyed as aforesaid, which was done. The prosecutor afterwards wished to have it removed, but the two Ritsons, the son being then working with his father, refused to do so, and the prosecutor removed it himself. On the 20th of April, 1869, the prosecutor received a letter from a solicitor, written on behalf of Samuel Ritson, claiming title to the land, and complaining of prosecutor having trespassed thereon by pulling down a building, and offering to show the deed under which Samuel Ritson claimed. And on the 26th of April, a writ in an action of trespass, at the suit of Samuel Ritson, was sued out and served on the prosecutor. The prosecutor then saw the attorney for Samuel Ritson, who produced the deed charged as a forged deed, and the prosecutor commenced the prosecution against the two prisoners before the magistrates.

This deed is dated the 12th of March, 1868, the date being before William Ritson's deed of assignment and the conveyance to the prosecutor, and purports to be made between William Ritson of the one part, and Samuel Ritson of the other part. It recites the original conveyance in fee to William Ritson, and that William Ritson had agreed with Samuel Ritson for a lease to him of part of the land at a yearly rent of 18l. 3s. 4d., and then professes to demise to Samuel Ritson a large part of the frontage and most valuable part of the land, which had been equitably mortgaged, and afterwards conveyed to the prosecutor, as mentioned above, for the term of 999 years, from the 25th of March then instant. The said deed contained no notice of any title, legal or equitable, of the prosecutor, and contained the usual covenants between a lessor and lessee. It was executed by both William and Samuel Ritson, and professed to have been attested by a witness; but such witness was not called at the trial, nor was any evidence given as to the professional man, or other person, by whom the deed was prepared. Although the date of the deed was the 12th of March, 1868, it was proved by the stamp distributor, who had issued the stamp, that it was not in fact issued from the office by him before the 7th of January, 1869, nor was the deed ever mentioned by the prisoners before that year.

It was contended on the part of the prosecutor, that the deed was a forged deed, made after the prosecutor's conveyance, and ante-dated, for the fraudulent purpose of overreaching that conveyance, and so endeavouring to deprive the prosecutor of his estate under the said conveyance, and of a considerable part of the property for a long term, and leaving only a valueless reversion in him in such part of the property. And in support of this view, the counsel for the prosecution cited Hawk, P.C., vol. 1. c. 21. p. 263. 8th Ed., and Salwey v. Wain, Moor, 655, 44th & 45th Eliz., and 2 Russ. (4th Ed.), 719. And see 3 Inst. 169; Bac. Abr. Forgery.

The counsel for the prisoners contended that the deed could not be a forgery, as it was really executed by the parties between whom it purported to be made, and that there was no modern authority in support of the doctrine contended for by the prosecution.

He also contended that the prosecutor had obtained his conveyance by fraud, and that it was void against the prisoners, and if so, the lease would be rightfully made.

The jury found that there was no ground for imputing any fraud to the prosecutor with regard to his security and conveyance; and I having expressed an opinion in conformity with the authorities cited on the part of the prosecution, and informed the jury that if the alleged lease was executed after the prosecutor's conveyance, and ante-dated, with the purpose of defrauding him, it would be a forgery.

The jury found both the prisoners guilty. And in pursuance of the request of the prisoners' counsel, I reserved the question, whether the prisoners were properly convicted of forgery, under the circumstances, for the opinion of this Court.

Torr for the prisoners.—It is submitted that the crime of forgery was not committed by the prisoners or either of them. Forgery means the fraudulently making by one of a deed as the deed of another, or the altering of a deed belonging to another, or the altering of one's own deed after publication. There is a distinction between fraudulently making a deed containing a falsehood, as for instance, a false recital, or a false date, before it is delivered out to the other party, and fraudulently making a false deed, that is to say, purporting to be another person's deed; and it is submitted that in the former case it would not be forgery, but a false pretence or cheat, whilst in the latter case it would be forgery. So here it is submitted that, though there might have been a cheat or false pretence, and therefore a conspiracy to defraud, the prisoners were wrongly convicted of forgery. By the 5th Eliz. c. 14, which repealed the earlier statutes on the subject, it was enacted that "if any person or persons whatsoever, upon his or their own head or imagination, or by false conspiracy and fraud with others, shall wittingly, subtilly and falsely forge or make, &c., any false deed, charter or writing, sealed, &c., to the intent that the state of freehold or inheritance of any person or persons, of, in, or to any lands, &c., or the right, title, or interest of any person or persons, of, in or to the same, shall or may be interested, troubled, defeated, recovered or charged," &c., &c., "and shall thereof be convicted, either upon an action or actions of forger of false deeds to be founded upon this statute, or, &c., shall pay," &c. Lord Coke, in commenting upon this statute, says (3 Inst. 168), "To forge is metaphorically taken from the smith, who breaketh upon his anvil and forgeth what fashion or shape he will; the offence (as appeareth before) is called crimen falsi, and the offender falsarius, and the Latin word to forge is falsare or fabricare. And this is properly taken when the act is done in the name of another person." In commenting on the words "or make, &c.," Lord Coke says, "These be larger words than to forge, for one may make a false writing within this act, though it be not forged in the name of another, nor his seal nor hand counterfeited." As if A made a true deed of feoffment under his hand and seal of the manor of Dale unto B, and B or some other rase out D, the first letter of Dale, and put in S, and then where the true deed was of the manor of Dale, now it is false, altered and made the manor of Sale. This is a false writing under seal within the purview of this statute. And so it is if a rent charge of one hundred pounds by the year be granted out of land in fee, or for life, &c., and the grantee or any other rase out one and instead thereof inserteth two, this is a false writing within the danger of this statute. But the present conviction was upon an indictment framed on the 24th & 25th Vict. c. 98, s. 20, which enacts that "whosoever with intent to defraud shall forge or alter, or, &c., any deed, &c.," shall be guilty of felony. This is a re-enactment of the 11th Geo. 4. and 1st Will. 4. c. 10, which has the same words, and by the change of language it is submitted it was intended to narrow the application of the word "make" in the statute of Elizabeth.

[MARTIN, B.—In Russell on Crimes, Vol. II. p. 710, 4th edit., there is a definition of forgery; and again, at p. 711, the authority in 3 Inst. 169 is referred to in this way: "And though it seems to have been thought that a deed so altered is more properly to be called a false than a forged deed, not being forged in the name of another, nor his seal or hand counterfeited; yet, according to the better opinion, such an alteration amounts to forgery; on the ground that the fraud and villany are the same as if there were an entire making of a new deed in another's name;" and also at p. 719, Russell says, "A man may be guilty of forgery in making a false deed in his own name. Thus it has been holden to be forgery for a person to make a feoffment of certain lands to I. S., and afterwards to make a deed of feoffment of the same lands to I. D. of a date prior to that of the feoffment to I. S., for herein he falsifies the date in order to defraud his own feoffee by making a second conveyance which at the time he had no power to make." Then East, P.C., Vol. II. c. 19. s. 1, is referred to which says: "Forgery at Common Law denotes a false making, a making malo animo of any written instrument for the purpose of fraud and deceit. This definition results from all the authorities, ancient and modern, taken together;" and further on it is said, "Lord Coke indeed seems to confine it in strictness to an act done in the name of another, but this was long ago argued in Anne Lewis's case to be too narrow a definition." Then Hawkins is cited, and at Bk. 1. c. 21. s. 2, he says: "As to the first particular it is said to be possible for a man knowingly to make a deed in his own name and also to sign it himself, which yet in judgment of law may be no better than downright forgery; or if a man make a feoffment of certain lands to J. D., and afterwards make a deed of feoffment of the same lands to J. D. of a date prior to that of the feoffment to J. S., in which case he is said to be guilty of forgery, because he knowingly falsifies the date in order to defraud his own feoffee by making a second conveyance which at the time he had no power to make. But Sir E. Coke seems to say that a deed so altered may more properly be called a false than a forged writing, because it is not forged in the name of another, nor his seal or hand counterfeited. But I see no good reason why such an alteration of a deed should not as properly be called forgery as the entire making of a new deed in another's name, for in both cases not only the fraud and villany are the very same, but also a man's hand and seal are falsely made use of to testify his assent to an instrument, which after such an alteration is no more his deed than a stranger's. Also the notion of forgery doth not seem so much to consist in the counterfeiting a man's hand and seal, which may often be done innocently, but in the endeavouring to give an appearance of truth to a mere deceit and falsity, and either to impose that upon the world as the solemn act of another which he is in no way privy to, or at least to make a man's own act appear to have been done at a time when it was not done, and by force of such a falsity to give it an operation which in truth and justice it ought not to have, as appears by the foregoing cases in this section, to most of which Sir E. Coke himself seems to agree." East then cites Mr. Justice Blackstone, 4 Com. 247, who says that "Forgery is the fraudulent making or alteration of a writing to the prejudice of another's right." East continues: "In Croghan's case, Buller, J. said, it is 'the making of a false instrument with intent to deceive,' as Eyre, B., in Taylor's case, defined it to be 'a false signature made with intent to deceive.'" East also refers to Parke's case, 2 Lea 775, when Mr. Justice Grose, delivering the opinion of the Judges, and said, "The definition of forgery is the false making a note or other instrument with intent to defraud." East further cites Eyre, B., in the case of Jones v. Palmer, 1 Lea. 366, "The definition of forgery is the false making an instrument which purports on the face of it to be good and valid for the purpose for which it was created with a design to defraud," &c. Again, at p. 855, East says it is forgery "if he make a subsequent deed of feoffment as of a date prior to a former deed of his own conveying the same lands, thereby attempting to give the last an operation, which in justice it ought not to have, in order to defraud his own feoffee."

Salwey v. Wain, Moor 655, is also an authority for that proposition.]

No doubt the definitions in the text books are against the contention on behalf of the prisoners, but there has been no case since the case in Moor, referred to by East, in the above passage, but it is submitted the distinction is between a real deed containing a falsehood and a false deed. In Comyn's Digest, tit. Forgery (A), the definition given is: "Forgery is when a man fraudulently writes or publishes a false deed or writing, to the prejudice of the right of the offender."

Addison for the prosecution. — This conviction is right. In Bac. Abr., tit. Forgery (A), it is written: "The notion of forgery doth not so much consist in the counterfeiture of a man's hand and seal, which may often be done innocently, but in the endeavouring to give an appearance of truth to a mere deceit and falsity; and either to impose that upon the world, as the solemn act of another which he is in no way privy to, or at least to make a man's own act appear to have been done at a time when it was not done, and by force of such a falsity, to give it an operation which in truth and justice it ought not to have."

[MARTIN, B.—Sir M. Foster, in Lewis's case, p. 117, expressly says that ante-dating a deed of conveyance to overreach a former deed is forgery, and further, "that act does not use the words, 'the deed of any person, or the deed of another,' but any false deed." Is the deed in question, then, a false deed, or is it not? Undoubtedly it is. Was it published with an intention to defraud? It certainly was. This being so, it would sound very harsh to say that the prisoner's case was not brought within the letter and meaning of the act.]

He was then stopped; and the Court gave judgment as follows:—

KELLY, C.B.—This conviction must be affirmed. The authorities,—such as Comyn's Digest; Bac. Abr. Forgery (A); Inst.; Sir M. Foster; Russell on Crimes,—are uniformly to the effect, not that every instrument containing a false statement is a forgery, but that every instrument which purports to be what it is not, whether executed by a person who is not the person purporting to execute, or bearing a date which is not the true date is a forgery. If, then, we adopt the definition of forgery as given by those authorities, it is impossible to distinguish this case from those either of forgery at common law or by statute.

MARTIN, B.—I am of the same opinion. It is laid down in 3 Inst. 169, also by Sir M. Foster and in Russell on Crimes, in the passages referred to in the course of the argument, as well as in Tomlin's Law Dictionary, that when a party makes a feoffment of land, and afterwards makes a feoffment of the same land in which he falsifies the date, he is guilty of forgery.

BLACKBURN, J.—I am of the same opinion. The definition of forgery in Comyn's Digest, tit. Forgery, is correct. Forgery consists, not in making a deed which has a false statement but in making an instrument appear to be what it is not. In Bac. Abr. tit. Forgery, it is said that forgery consists "in the endeavouring to give an appearance of truth to a mere deceit and falsity," or "at least to make a man's own act appear to have been done at a time when it was not done, and by force of such a falsity, to give it an operation which it ought not to have."

In this particular case the falsehood is in a date which is here material, though in ordinary cases it would not be material, therefore it falls within that definition.

Then in 3 Inst. 169, Coke says such a case would be forgery, and he refers to times as early as the year-books; it is a mistake to suppose that he was speaking only with reference to the statute of Elizabeth, he was quoting from earlier authorities.

Then Sir M. Foster, referring to Lewis's case decided by the judges in consultation, considers it as plain. So say all the text-writers, and there is no authority against it. Therefore I think this conviction is right, and must be affirmed.

LUSH, J.—It is conceded that if the parties had, in the first instance, put in the true date and then altered it, it would have been forgery. Then it would be absurd to hold, that to put in a false date from the beginning is not forgery. Here the deed is false in the sense of professing to be what it is not, and is calculated to deceive another.

BRETT, J., concurred.

Conviction affirmed.

Attorneys—James Pearce, agent for Samuel Stringer, Manchester, for the prisoner.

[CROWN CASE RESERVED.]

1869. } REGINA v. HODGKISS.*
Nov. 20. }

Perjury—False Affidavit—Bills of Sale Act—Misdemeanour—Indictment—Surplusage.

The prisoner was indicted for wilful and corrupt perjury in making a false affidavit before a Commissioner for taking oaths in the Court of Queen's Bench, for the purpose of getting a bill of sale filed under the Bills of Sale Act, 1854:—Held, a misdemeanour though not wilful and corrupt perjury.

* Coram Kelly, C.B., Martin, B., Byles, J., Blackburn, J., and Lush, J.

Held also, that the conclusion of an indictment for perjury, "that so the defendant did commit wilful and corrupt perjury" might be rejected as surplusage, and a conviction for the misdemeanour was right upon such an indictment.

CASE reserved by Pigott, B.

The prisoner was tried at the last Summer Assizes for the county of Worcester, upon an indictment which charged that he committed wilful and corrupt perjury in an affidavit sworn by him before a Commissioner for taking Affidavits in the Court of Queen's Bench.

The affidavit was sworn before a Commissioner at Stourbridge, and was made for the purpose of getting a bill of sale filed. It was material in the affidavit to state the date when the bill of sale was made, which the prisoner swore was on the 18th of December, 1868, whereas it was in fact made on the 4th of January, 1869.

The counsel for the prisoner objected that such an affidavit could not be the subject of an indictment for perjury, not being, as he contended, sworn in a judicial proceeding. I overruled the objection and left the case to the jury, who found the prisoner guilty; but I reserved the case for this Court upon the above objection, being pressed by the counsel so to do, and the prisoner was admitted to bail (1).

(1) By the Bills of Sale Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 36. s. 1), it is enacted as follows:—Every bill of sale of personal chattels made, after the passing of this Act, either absolutely or conditionally, or subject or not subject to any trusts, and whereby the grantee or holder shall have power either without notice and either immediately after the making of such bill of sale, or at any future time, to seize or take possession of any property and effects comprised in or made subject to such bill of sale, and every schedule or inventory which shall be thereto annexed or therein referred to, or a true copy thereof, and of every attestation of the execution thereof shall, together with an affidavit of the time of such bill of sale being made or given, and a description of the residence and occupation of the person making or giving the same, or in case the same shall be made or given by any

No counsel appeared, and the Court gave judgment as follows:—

KELLY, C.B.—The prisoner has been convicted on an indictment which charged that he, with intent to falsely register a bill of sale, made an affidavit under the Bill of Sales Act, which affidavit was intitled in the Queen's Bench, and swore to the date of the bill of sale falsely. The question is, whether that offence amounted to wilful and corrupt perjury. It is not wilful and corrupt perjury in strict legal meaning, but it is quite clear that taking a false oath in an affidavit required by the act of parliament for the purpose of procuring the registration of a bill of sale is a misdemeanour, and liable to the punishment attached to a misdemeanour. Then the indictment in this case, after alleging the facts above stated, bore the conclusion person under or in the execution of any process, then a description of the residence and occupation of the person against whom such process shall have issued, and of every attesting witness to such bill of sale, be filed by the officer acting as clerk of the docket and judgments in the Court of Queen's Bench within twenty-one days after the making or giving such bill of sale (in like manner as a warrant of attorney in any personal action given by a trader is now by law required to be filed), otherwise such bill of sale shall, as against all assignees of the estate and effects of the person whose goods or any of them are comprised in such bill of sale under the laws relating to bankruptcy or insolvency, or under any assignment for the benefit of the creditors of such person, and as against all sheriff's officers and other persons seizing any property or effects comprised in such bill of sale in the execution of any process of any court of law or equity authorizing the seizure of the goods of the person by whom, or of whose goods such bill of sale shall have been made, and against every person on whose behalf such process shall have been issued, be null and void to all intents and purposes whatsoever, so far as regards the property in or right to the possessions of any personal chattels comprised in such bill of sale, which at or after the time of such bankruptcy, or of filing the insolvent's petition in such insolvency, or of the execution by the debtor of such assignment for the benefit of his creditors or of executing such process (as the case may be), and after the expiration of the said period of twenty-one days, shall be in the possession or apparent possession of the person making such bill of sale, or of any person against whom the process shall have issued under, or in the execution of which such bill of sale shall have been made or given, as the case may be.

that so the defendant "did commit wilful and corrupt perjury." That, however, we think may be rejected as surplusage (2). The indictment states facts sufficient to constitute a misdemeanour, and therefore we think the conviction should stand as a conviction of a misdemeanour, and that the prisoner is liable to be sentenced to punishment for that offence.

MARTIN, B.—I am of the same opinion, and act upon the authority of the case where a person was convicted of taking a false oath before a surrogate, for the purpose of obtaining a marriage license (3).

The other learned judges concurred.

Conviction affirmed.

(2) In Ryalls v. The Queen (11 Q.B. 781; s.c. 18 Law J. Rep. (n.s.) M.C. 69) in error from a conviction upon an indictment for perjury, it was held that the whole averment of the conclusion—"and so the jurors aforesaid did say that the said J. R. R.," &c., "did commit perjury"—might be struck out, on the ground that the perjury was sufficiently alleged by the preceding part of the count; and as "perjury" is not a word of art like "murder," the concluding part of the count was immaterial. We should rather say that perjury is a word of art, but only expressive of a conclusion of law, and a mere conclusion of law from the premises is immaterial, and therefore being unnecessary may always be rejected as surplusage (1 Chit. C.L. 232 and 2 Chit. C.L. 312). There seems, therefore, to be a distinction between such a term as perjury and such words of art as describe the offence, as murder, feloniously, burglariously, &c., which are essential and cannot be rejected (4 Hawk. P.C., p. 26, Bk. 2. c. 25. s. 55).

(3) Regina v. Chapman. 1 Den. C.C. 432. 18 Law J. Rep. (n.s.) M.C. 152.

COPY OF THE INDICTMENT.

Worcestershire.—The jurors for our Lady the Queen upon their oath present that on the 4th day of January in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine, one William Priest made and executed to one Sergeant Turner, a bill of sale of certain personal chattels of him the said William Priest, which bill of sale bears date the 18th day of December, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-eight; and the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, do further present that one William Edward Hodgkiss, intending and desiring, according to the provisions of the statute in such case made and provided, to obtain the filing of the said bill of sale, or a true copy thereof, and contriving and intending to cause it to appear that the said bill of sale was made and given on the day and in the year last aforesaid, afterwards, to wit, on the day and year first aforesaid, came in his proper person before John Bullen Shepherd, then being a commissioner for taking affidavits in writing in the Court of Queen's Bench, and then produced a certain affidavit or writing of him the said William Edward Hodgkiss, and then by and before the said John Bullen Shepherd in due form of law was sworn, and took his corporal oath upon the Holy Gospels of God concerning the truth of the matters contained in the said affidavit, he the said John Bullen Shepherd then having sufficient competent and lawful power and authority to administer the said oath to the said W. E. Hodgkiss in that behalf. And the jurors aforesaid, on their oath aforesaid, do further present that at the time when the said W. E. Hodgkiss was so duly sworn as aforesaid, it became and was material and necessary for the purpose of obtaining the filing of the said bill of sale, or a true copy thereof, as aforesaid, in and by affidavit to state and set forth, amongst other things, the time of the said bill of sale being made or given; and the jurors aforesaid, on their oath aforesaid, do further present that the said W. E. Hodgkiss being so duly sworn as aforesaid upon his oath aforesaid before the said J. B. Shepherd so being such commissioner as aforesaid, unlawfully, falsely, corruptly, knowingly, wilfully, and maliciously, in and by his said affidavit in writing, did depose and swear, amongst other things, in substance and to the effect following, that is to say, that the said bill of sale was made and given on the day it bears date, being the said 18th of December A.D. 1868; and that the said W. E. Hodgkiss was present and did see the said W. Priest sign and execute the same on the day and the year last aforesaid; whereas in truth and in fact the said bill of sale was not made or given on the day it bears date, to wit, on the day and in the year last aforesaid, and whereas, in truth and fact, the said W. E. Hodgkiss was not present and did not see the said W. Priest sign and execute the said bill of sale on the day and in the year last aforesaid, when in truth and in fact the said bill of sale was made and given on the day and in the year first aforesaid as aforesaid, as he the said W. E. Hodgkiss then well knew; and so the jurors aforesaid, on their oath aforesaid, do say that the said W. E. Hodgkiss in manner and form aforesaid, unlawfully, falsely, wilfully, maliciously and corruptly, did commit wilful and corrupt perjury against the peace aforesaid.

We are indebted to the favour of Mr. Green, of the Clerk of Assize Office for the Oxford Circuit, for the above copy of this indictment. The indictment did not form part of the case, but it is inserted here because the form of it was referred to by the Lord Chief Baron in his judgment.

[IN THE COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.]

1869. { THE QUEEN v. THE JUSTICES OF
 Nov. 25. { THE WEST RIDING OF YORK-SHIRE.

Wine and Beerhouse Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 27)—9 Geo. 4. c. 61—Alehouse—General Annual Licensing Meeting—Adjournment—Certificate—Res Judicata.

B, who was the holder of a license granted to him under the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 61, for the sale of beer in a beerhouse occupied by him, gave the proper notices required by 32 & 33 Vict. c. 27 of his intention to apply for a certificate to obtain a license for the sale of beer, &c. in the said house. He made his application at the General Annual Licensing Meeting, but the certificate was refused upon the ground that he came within the 3rd sub-section of the 8th section of 32 & 33 Vict. c. 27. The meeting was held upon the 20th of August, and was adjourned to the 17th of September. On the 25th of August, D gave notice that he should apply at the adjourned meeting for a certificate in respect of the same house which he alleged was occupied by him. The justices refused to entertain the application, as they had already refused such certificate on the application of B. Upon appeal to the quarter sessions, the appeal was dismissed without hearing it on the merits:—Held, upon a rule for a mandamus to enter continuances and hear the appeal, first, that the refusal to grant the certificate to B, upon a ground personal to him, did not prevent D from making an application for a certificate in respect of the same house; secondly, that the notices having been given by D 21 days before the adjourned meeting at which the application was made by him, the requirements of section 7 of 32 & 33 Vict. c. 27, were so far complied with.

Held, therefore, that the rule for a mandamus must be absolute.

Rule calling upon the keepers of the peace and justices in and for the West Riding of the County of York, to shew cause why a mandamus should not issue, commanding them to enter continuances from session to session to the next general quarter sessions of the peace, to be holden for the said West Riding, upon the appeal of Thomas Drake against the decision of the justices at the adjourned general licensing meeting, holden on the 17th of September, 1869, in and for the borough of Halifax, in the said Riding, refusing the application of the said Thomas Drake for a certificate under the provisions of "The Wine and Beerhouse Act, 1869."

NEW SERIES, 39.—MAG. CAS.

It appeared from the affidavits that in pursuance of the 1st section of the 9 Geo. 4. c. 61, the borough justices of Halifax appointed the 20th of August, 1869, for holding the general annual licensing meeting for the borough. Prior and up to the said 20th of August, Joseph Boocock occupied the Nag's Head Inn, within the borough, as a beerhouse. On the 22nd of July, 1869, he, as required by the Wine and Beerhouse Act, 1869, gave a notice of his intention to apply at the general annual licensing meeting for a certificate to obtain a license to sell beer in the Nag's Head Inn. He also lodged a certificate of character at the office of the clerk to the justices. At the general annual licensing meeting it was proved that Joseph Boocock had, in the year 1864, while keeping the West Riding Hotel in the said borough, been convicted for knowingly permitting prostitutes to assemble in that house, and had been fined 5l. for the said offence, and that his spirit license for the said West Riding Hotel was refused in 1865. The justices refused to grant him a certificate, on the ground that he came within the 3rd sub-section of The Wine and Beerhouse Act, 1869. No notice of appeal was given by him against such refusal. At the time of making the said application for the certificate, Joseph Boocock held a license under 3 & 4 Vict. c. 61, by which he was authorised to sell beer until the 10th of October, 1869. The meeting of the 20th of August, 1869, was continued by adjournment in pursuance of the 9 Geo. 4. c. 61, to the 17th of September, 1869. The name of Joseph Boocock was kept upon the signboard of the Nag's Head, as the apparent occupier, to the 8th of October, 1869, but Thomas Drake swore in his affidavit, that on the 25th of August, 1869, he was the real resident holder and occupier of the dwelling house and premises known as "The Nag's Head." On the 25th of August the said Thomas Drake gave notice of his intention to apply at the adjourned general annual licensing meeting for a certificate authorising the grant to him of a license to sell by retail beer and cider, in the house and premises occupied by him, which house was the said house called the "Nag's Head." He also lodged a certificate of character. The notices were served 21 days before the said 17th of September upon which day the adjourned meeting was held, and at that meeting the said Thomas Drake applied for a certificate, but the justices declined to re-hear the application of any person whose certificate was refused at the general annual licensing meeting, either on grounds relating to himself or to his premises, and refused to grant the certificate for which he applied. Notice of appeal was given against such refusal, and the appeal came on to be tried before the court of quarter sessions at Leeds, on the 19th of October, 1869. It was urged on behalf of the respondents, that the appellant had not given 21 days' notice prior to the general annual licensing meeting held on the 20th of August; that he was not the bonâ fide occupier of the house as required by the statute at the time of giving the notice; and that the matter had been adjudicated upon at the general meeting, so that the justices were not bound to re-hear the application.

D

The justices dismissed the appeal with costs (1).

Waddy shewed cause against the rule:—The justices at the Quarter Sessions were right in holding that the matter had been

(1) The following sections of 9 Geo. 4. c. 61 & 32 & 33 Vict. c. 27 are material:—

9 Geo. 4. c. 61, s. 3. enacts, "It shall be lawful for the justices acting at a general annual licensing meeting, and they are hereby required to continue such meeting by adjournment, to such day or days, and to such place or places within the division or place for which such meeting shall be holden, as such justices may deem most convenient and sufficient for enabling persons keeping inns within such division or place to apply for such license; provided, nevertheless, that the adjourned meeting to be holden next after such general annual licensing meeting shall not be so holden in or upon any of the five days next ensuing that on which such general annual licensing meeting shall have been holden as aforesaid; and that every adjournment of the said general annual licensing meeting shall be holden within the month of March in the counties of Middlesex and Surrey, and of August or September in every other county."

already adjudicated upon, and were also right in the construction which they put upon the statute. Boocock had given the proper notices, and had applied for a certificate in respect of this same house. The matter was investigated by the justices at the general licensing meeting, the result being that the certificate was refused. His old license remained in force up to the 10th of October, 1869; and his name remained upon the signboard up to the 8th. The justices might fairly consider that he was really the occupier of the house, and that the matter was res adjudicata. Next it is submitted that the intention of the Legislature was that the notices previous to the application should be given

S. 5. "Whenever the justices shall have ordered any such adjournments of the general annual licensing meeting, or shall have appointed such special sessions as aforesaid, the day, hour and place for holding every such adjourned meeting, and every such special session, shall be appointed by precept of the majority of the said justices, directed to the high constable, requiring notices, similar in form to those given at the general licensing meeting, to be affixed on the door of the church or chapel, or on some other public and conspicuous place, and to be served upon the same parties."

32 & 33 Vict. c. 27. s. 4. "From and after the 15th of July, 1869, no license or renewal of a license for the sale by retail of beer, cider, or wine, or any of such articles, under the provisions of any of the said recited acts shall (save as in this act otherwise provided) be granted except upon the production and in pursuance of the authority of a certificate granted under this act.

Any license granted or renewed in contravention of this enactment shall be void."

S. 5. "Certificates under this act shall be granted by the justices assembled at the general annual licensing meeting held in pursuance of an act of the session of the 9th year of the reign of King George the Fourth, chapter 61, intitled 'an act to regulate the granting of licenses to keepers of inns, alehouses, and victualling houses in England,' or at some adjournment of such meeting held in pursuance of the said last mentioned act," &c.

S. 7. "Every person intending to apply to the justices for a certificate under this act shall, twenty-one days at least before he applies, give notice in writing of his intention to one of the overseers of the parish, township, or place in which the house or shop in respect of which his application is to be made is situate, and to some constable or peace officer acting within such parish, township or place; and shall, in such notice, set forth his name and address, and a description of the license or licenses for which he intends to apply, and of the situation of the house or shop in respect of which the application is to be made," &c.

before the general licensing meeting. If so, the notices given by Thomas Drake were too late, for they were given after the 20th of August, the day upon which the general licensing meeting was held. By the 7th section of 32 & 33 Vict. c. 27, every person intending to apply for a certificate shall, twenty-one days at least before he applies, give notice in writing of his intention, &c. The statute refers in the 5th section to the 9 Geo. 4. c. 61, and provides that certificates shall be granted by the justices assembled at the general annual licensing meeting held in pursuance of the latter act, or at some adjournment of such meeting. By s. 10 of the latter act every person intending to apply for a license in respect of a house not heretofore kept as an inn, shall on the several Sundays between the 1st of January and the last day of February, in the counties of Middlesex and Surrey, and elsewhere between the 1st day of June and the last day of July, affix a notice on the door of the house, and upon the church doors, and shall serve a copy of such notice upon one of the overseers of the poor within the month of February in the counties of Middlesex and Surrey, and elsewhere within the month of July, and upon a constable, &c., "prior to the general annual licensing meeting." The case of a house not previously licensed is dealt with also by the 7th section of the 32 & 33 Vict. c. 27, but the earlier part already referred to applies to the present case, and it was intended that the notice of twenty-one days should be prior to the general annual licensing meeting, which, in all counties except Middlesex and Surrey, must, under section 1 of 9 Geo. 4. c. 61, be held on some day between the 20th of August and the 14th of September.

[LUSH, J.—The 3rd section of 9 Geo. 4. c. 51, provides that the justices, at the general licensing meeting, may continue such meeting by adjournment to such day or days, and to such place or places as they may deem "most convenient and sufficient for enabling persons keeping inns within such division or place to apply for such license." Why, then, should not a notice be good for such adjourned meeting though not given in time for the general meeting? Such a notice is not to be necessary in the case of an application for a renewal of a certificate.]

The adjourned meetings are simply for the purpose of finishing the business which was not disposed of at the general meeting.

[LUSH, J.—Such a construction would not accord with the provision in 9 Geo. 4. c. 61. s. 3, as to the time of holding the adjourned meeting: that is to say, not within five days of the general meeting; nor with the provision in the 5th section of the same statute, that the adjourned meeting is to be holden by precept, requiring notices similar in form to those given at the general annual licensing meeting.]

A somewhat similar question has already been before this Court in the present term—ex parte Rushworth. There the justices had at the general licensing meeting refused to grant a certificate, whereupon the applicant gave new notices twenty-one days before the adjourned meeting. At that meeting the justices declined to hear the application, and this Court refused a rule for a mandamus commanding them to do so.

[BLACKBURN, J.—It was there unnecessary to decide anything more than this: that the applicant had a remedy by appeal to the Quarter Sessions, if he had any just ground of complaint, and that having that remedy, he could not, by giving new notices, entitle himself to make a fresh application for a certificate.]

Further, it is submitted, that the adjourned meeting is a continuance of the first general meeting. The adjourned meeting is to be considered as held on the same day as the general meeting, in the same way as an adjourned Quarter Sessions is considered as being held on the same day as the original Sessions. The power to hold the adjourned meeting is given by s. 3 of 9 Geo. 4. c. 61: "It shall be lawful for the justices to continue such meeting by adjournment."

Hannay in support of the rule.—By ss. 8 and 19 of 32 & 33 Vict. c. 27, Drake had a right to the certificate, unless the justices refused it upon some or one of the grounds specified in the 8th section. He had brought himself within the terms of the 7th section, by giving twenty-one days' notice before he applied. The jurisdiction given by the statute is a special jurisdiction, to be exercised at one meeting, but that meeting to be held by law on several days. If the construction suggested on the other side is adopted, the Court must insert the words "before the general annual licensing meeting." The 5th section also shews that the general meeting and the adjourned meeting are not considered as one day in law, for if that were so, the words "or at some adjournment of such meeting" would have been unnecessary. By the 3rd section of 9 Geo. 4. c. 61, the justices are to continue the meeting by adjournment to such day or days, and to such place or places, as they may deem most convenient and sufficient for enabling persons keeping inns within such division or place to apply for such license. This power was given to enable people to apply at such adjourned meeting. There is a change in the language used in the 5th and 7th sections of 32 & 33 Vict. c. 27. A reason for such change is to be found by referring to the 2nd section of 9 Geo. 4. c. 61; under that section only fifteen days' notice need be given of the time and place of holding the general meeting, so that if the construction contended for by the other side is correct, namely, that the twenty-one days' notice must be prior to the general licensing meeting, the justices might, if they pleased, shut up all the houses in the kingdom. The 32 & 33 Vict. c. 27. s. 7, provides that twenty-one days' notice shall be given, but then it makes such notice sufficient if given prior to the making of the application. He also referred to The Queen v. The Justices of Sussex (1), as to the adjournment of the Quarter Sessions.

BLACKBURN, J.—I think that this rule must be made absolute, and that the Quarter Sessions must hear the appeal. The 32 & 33 Vict. c. 27, refers back to the 9 Geo. 4. c. 61, which by s. 1. provides that general licensing meetings shall be held in all counties other than Middlesex and Surrey, between the 20th of August and the 14th of September. Mr. Hannay has called attention to the provision in the 2nd section, that a petty session is to be holden at least twenty-one days before the general licensing meeting, at which the justices are by precept to appoint the day, hour and place upon and in which the said meeting is to be held, and requiring the chief constable within five days next ensuing that on which he shall have received the precept, to give notice of the time and place of holding such meeting. That may bear upon the construction of the 32 & 33 Vict. c. 61; it would give fifteen days' notice of the meeting. Then we come to the 3rd section upon which this case turns. (His Lordship read that section.) I think the intention was that the justices might adjourn the meeting to such place and time as would be most convenient for the persons who required licenses to make their applications; and that such persons were not to be dragged at great inconvenience to a distant place, at which the general meeting might be held. I think, therefore, that the application for a license might be made at the adjourned meeting if that was most convenient to the applicant. We now have to apply the 32 & 33 Vict. c. 27, for the first time. I agree with what Mr. Hannay has said, that if the Legislature had intended that the notice must be given twenty-one days before the general licensing meeting, it would have said so. But reading the 7th section of the last act with the 3rd section of 9 Geo. 4. c. 61, I think that it is not necessary that the notices should be given twenty-one days before the general meeting, and that it is sufficient if they are given twenty-one days before the adjourned meeting at which the application is made. No hardship or inconvenience would follow from this, and we have only to say that the appeal should have been heard.

Next it is said that the matter was res adjudicata, but it is clear that the refusal of the certificate to Boocock was personal to him and did not affect Drake at all. The Quarter Sessions must hear the case upon its merits, and decide whether the certificate shall be granted or no.

MELLOR, J.—I am of the same opinion. I find that the 32 & 33 Vict. c. 27 refers to the 9 Geo. 4. c. 61, and the 5th section of the former act states that certificates shall be granted by the justices assembled at the general annual licensing meeting, or at some adjournment of such meeting, &c. One cannot help seeing, when one reads the two statutes together, that this adjournment was not intended to be like an adjournment of the Quarter Sessions, or an adjournment of the business before the Court, but that it was intended to be an adjournment for the purpose of applications being made at such adjourned meeting, and that individual applications might be made at such meeting. Here the applicant Drake gave his notice twenty-one days before he made his application at the adjourned meeting; the period of twenty-one days is the only limitation imposed by the statute. I also agree that he was not prevented from making his application for a certificate by reason of the matter being res adjudicata.

(1) 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.), M.C. 69; s.c. 4 B. & S. 966.

LUSH, J.—I am of the same opinion. I only wish to add, with respect to the second point, that if the decision of the justices had turned upon the unfitness or bad character of the house, I should think, as at present advised, that they could not be required to adjudicate upon that matter again. But it is clear that their decision did not proceed upon any such ground; it was a decision relating to the personal character and qualification of the applicant Boocock.

Rule absolute for a mandamus.

Attorneys—Bower & Cotton, agents for F. Jubb, Halifax, for the prosecution; Edwards, Layton, & Jaques, agents for J. B. Holroyd, Halifax, for defendants.

1869. }
Nov. 17. } MERCER v. WOODGATE.

Highway—Right of Ploughing up the Surface of Footpath—Limited Dedication.

The appellant was convicted under 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50. s. 72, for destroying and injuring the surface of a highway, by ploughing it up. It appeared that a footway ran through a field of which the defendant was occupier. There was no evidence of the existence of this footpath before living memory, and no evidence of any limited dedication of the way to the public. It was proved, however, that within living memory it had been used as a footway by the public, and that the appellant and the previous occupier had, during all this time, ploughed it up in the manner now complained of:—Held, that the conviction was wrong, for the proper inference from the facts was, that the exercise of the right of ploughing up the path had been coeval with the user of the way by the public. The way must therefore be considered as having been dedicated and accepted by the public, subject to the inconvenience of being occasionally ploughed up, and there was no legal objection to such a limited dedication of a way.

This was a case stated by justices of Worcestershire under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43.

Upon the hearing of an information preferred by the respondent against the appellant under sect. 72 of the 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50 (1), that the appellant on the 25th of September, 1868, at the parish of Bellbroughton, in Worcester, did unlawfully and wilfully destroy and injure the surface of a highway there situate, leading from Bellbroughton to Fairfield and Bromsgrove, by then and there ploughing up the same a certain distance, to wit, fifty yards and more, thereby doing injury to the highway, to the amount of 20s., contrary to the statute, &c., the appellant was convicted, and ordered to pay the sum of 1s., to be paid and applied according to law, and also to pay to the respondent the sum of 16s. for his costs.

The following facts were either proved before the justices or admitted by both parties:—

The appellant is a farmer, and the occupier of a certain field of arable land, in the parish of Bellbroughton, across which is a public footpath leading from the village of Bellbroughton to the Stour-bridge and Bromsgrove turnpike road, and the hamlet of Fairfield. The appellant, on the 25th of September, 1868, in due course of farming, ploughed the field, and in so doing ploughed up and destroyed all trace of the footpath in question.

(1) By 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50. s. 72, if any person shall wilfully ride upon any footpath or causeway by the side of any road, made or set apart for the use or accommodation of foot-passengers, or shall wilfully lead or drive any horse, &c., upon any such footpath or causeway . . . or shall cause any injury or damage to be done to the said highway, or the hedges, posts, &c., thereof, or shall wilfully obstruct the passage of any footway, or wilfully destroy or injure the surface of any highway, &c., every person so offending shall forfeit and pay for each and every such offence any sum not exceeding 40s.

The appellant bonâ fide claimed the right to plough, and to continue to plough, the footpath, and the previous occupier had so ploughed at all times, within living memory.

There was no evidence before the justices of the existence of the footpath, or the tillage of the land, before living memory, and no witnesses were called on behalf of the appellant, nor was any evidence given by the appellant of any partial or limited dedication of the land, or of any reservation by him of the right to plough up the land along the line of the footpath, except as otherwise appears by this case.

On the part of the respondent it was contended that the footpath was a highway within the meaning of 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50, and that under the circumstances the justices should convict the appellant under section 72 of that act for the destroying and injuring the surface of a highway.

On the part of the appellant it was contended that the footpath was not a highway within the meaning of the 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50, but that if it were, he and the previous occupiers having ploughed it up as long as it was known to have existed, the public had a right only to the use of the footpath, subject to its being so ploughed up.

The justices, however, being of opinion that the footpath was a highway within the meaning of 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50, and that the appellant having destroyed and injured the surface of the footpath, they were bound in law to find the appellant's acts to be unlawful, no further evidence than herein appears having been offered to them of any reservation by the owner at the time of dedication, or presumed dedication, of a right to plough up the surface of the footway, and accordingly they gave their determination against the appellant in the manner before stated.

The question for the opinion of the Court is, whether the footpath is a highway within the meaning of the 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50, and, if so, whether the justices were bound in law under the circumstances above stated to convict the appellant of an unlawful act, or whether, upon the facts set forth, they would have been justified in finding the acts complained of to be lawful, and whether they had jurisdiction. If the Court should be of opinion that the justices were bound to convict the appellant, and that their jurisdiction was not ousted in consequence of the land having been ploughed at all times when necessary within living memory, then the conviction is to be affirmed, otherwise it is to be quashed.

Harington for the appellant. The appellant was improperly convicted. The case of Pelham v. Pickersgill (2) shews that it will be presumed that the right claimed by the owner of the soil had a legal commencement, where the enjoyment of it appears to have been coeval with the highway. Stafford v. Coyney (3) is an authority in favour of the limited dedication of a highway; and in Fisher v. Prowse (4), and Cooper v. Walker (5), the law upon this subject was fully considered, and it was laid down that a way may be dedicated subject to an obstruction to the passers. Either there has been a dedication of this highway subject to such an obstruction, or there has been no dedication at all.

Rew, for the respondent. The conviction was right. Upon a dedication of a highway the freeholders cannot reserve a right to plough it up. Such a reservation is inconsistent with the dedication.

[BLACKBURN, J.—Then if there cannot be such a limited dedication, there is no dedication at all.]

A highway may be dedicated subject to the maintenance of an existing nuisance, as in Fisher v. Prowse (4) and Cooper v. Walker (5), but cannot be dedicated subject to a right to create future nuisances upon it. In James v. Hayward (6), in trespass for throwing down a gate, the defendant justified because the gate was placed across the highway to the nuisance of the king's subjects; the plaintiff replied that he set up two posts on each side of the way, and hung the gate upon one of the posts for the preservation of the springs of the wood from cattle so

(2) 1 Tem. Rep. 660.

(3) 7 B. & C. 257.

(4) 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 212; s. c. 2 B. & S. 770.

(5) 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 214; s. c. 2 B. & S. 770.

(6) Cro. Car. 184.

that the subjects might pass that way without impediment. The defendant demurred, and the first question was whether the erecting of a gate across a highway which might be opened and shut at the pleasure of the passengers was a common nuisance in itself in law, and it was held by Hyde, C.J., and two other judges, that it was a nuisance, for it was not so free and easy a passage as if there had been no such enclosure.

[BLACKBURN, J.—Do you say that if the owner of land put up a board saying, “I grant a right of way across my land, but I do so subject to my right of ploughing it up,” that the dedication would be good and the reservation void?]

In The Queen v. Charlesworth (7), a case relating to the obstruction of a highway, Lord Campbell says—“Then it is argued that a right has been reserved by the landowner to make as many rail and tram roads as he pleases in all time to come for the convenient use of his coal pits. But if this would be a nuisance, there could be no such right reserved. No authority has been cited on the reservation of a right in futuro to put up as many gates or make as many tramways as the landowner thinks proper. No such reservation could exist if the acts were a nuisance.”

[BLACKBURN, J.—I observe that the expressions of Patteson, J., in the same case, are more guarded. The learned Judge says—“We must consider these works to be a nuisance, and we cannot suppose a reservation of right so large as that claimed.”]

In Wellbeloved on Highways, p. 443, is this passage—“It may also be stated, as clearly deducible from Lord Ellenborough’s decision in Rea v. Cross (8), that it is a common nuisance to plough up a public footpath, not only because the public are obstructed in their accustomed passage, but more particularly as all traces of the way are thereby obliterated and the public are left in ignorance as to the route which they ought to pursue . . .” In one case, Griesley’s case (9), where an information was laid against the defendant for stopping up a highway, the word was obstupabat; it was proved in evidence that he ploughed it up, and the Court resolved that it did well maintain the information. In Bateman v. Burge (10) it was held that if there be a public footway with a stile across it of a certain height, no one has a right to remove the stile and put up a gate of greater height.

[COCKBURN, C.J., referred to Rea v. Northampton (11), where it was held that a bridge may be a public bridge, though it is only used by the public at such times as it is dangerous to pass the river.]

In Morant v. Chamberlain (12) a distinction is drawn between a right to place things causing inconvenience to the public upon a highway, and a right to obstruct it altogether. He also referred to the notes to Dovaston v. Payne (13).

COCKBURN, C.J.—I am of opinion that our judgment should be in favour of the appellant. It appears from the evidence that, as far back as living memory went, the public had enjoyed the right to this footpath, and that the appellant and the previous occupiers of the field through which the way passed had, during the same time, been in the habit of ploughing it up. I think that we must take it as the only proper inference from this evidence, that the exercise of the right of ploughing up the footpath by the owner of the soil had been coeval with the use of the way by the public, so that the dedication of the way was subject to a reservation of the right to plough it. There is no obligation upon anyone to dedicate a way to the public, and if he proposes to do so, subject to certain limitations, the public are not bound to accept the dedication, and the owner of the soil cannot be taken to grant more than he professes to grant. If, therefore, he says, “You may have the way, but I shall reserve to myself the right of ploughing it up from time to time,” the way can only be accepted subject to this reservation. The case of Rea v. Northampton (11), to which I referred during the argument, is an authority to shew that a bridge or way may be open to the public during part of the year only; and if there (10) 6 C. & P. 391.

(11) 2 M. & S. 262.

(12) 30 Law J. Rep. (n.s.) Exch. 299; s.c. Hurl. & N. 541.

(13) 2 Smith’s L. Ca. 6th ed. 133.

(7) 16 Q.B. Rep. 1012.

(8) 3 Campb. 224.

(9) 1 Vent. 4.

was no such limited dedication here, I agree with my brother Blackburn, that the respondent is upon the horns of a dilemma, and is bound to admit that there was no highway at all. If it were otherwise there would be a great deal of injustice, since everybody knows that footpaths such as these are common in agricultural districts, and it has never hitherto been proposed to convert them into gravelled roads, and to hold that in such cases there is an absolute dedication to the public of part of the field, preventing the owner in spite of his reservation from ploughing it up. It would not only be unjust to the occupiers, but inconvenient to the public, who would lose the benefit of a partial dedication. I think that there is nothing in the law to prevent a right of way being qualified to the extent contended for by the appellant, and that there is abundant evidence that such a qualification has always subsisted in the present case.

BLACKBURN, J.—I am of the same opinion. I quite agree that where a highway is absolutely dedicated to the public, which is a voluntary act on the part of the owner of the soil, they have a right to prevent anything in the nature of a nuisance upon it, and that ploughing up the highway would prima facie be a nuisance. Where there is a general dedication of a footpath the parish may be liable to repair it, so that a soft road might be converted into a hard one. It appears, however, that this way was dedicated subject to the right of ploughing it up, and Mr. Rew contends that this reservation is void either because it enables the owner of the soil to stop up the highway and exclude the public, or because it effaces the path to such an extent as to interfere with their right. But in the case of Fisher v. Prowse (4), which has already been referred to, it was held that a highway might be dedicated subject to certain conditions; and that if the use of the soil as a way is offered by the owner to the public, under given conditions and subject to certain reservations, and the public accept the use under such circumstances, there can be no injustice in holding them to the terms on which the benefit was conferred. In the present case the benefit of the way was offered to the public subject to the conditions that it might be occasionally ploughed up, and though this, for a time, may be inconvenient to the public, they may well submit to it for the sake of the right which they enjoy in the intervals of ploughing.

MELLOR, J.—I am of the same opinion. It is quite clear that the practice of ploughing up the soil of the footpath has been contemporaneous with the right of passage over it. Under these circumstances, can we do anything but infer that there was a limited dedication of the highway? The cases cited by Mr. Rew only shew that, when a highway has once been absolutely dedicated to the public, the freeholder cannot reserve to himself the right of destroying the road or rendering it impassable. But when we find what was the true character of the dedication here, it would be very unjust if effect could not be given to it.

HANNEN, J.—I am of the same opinion. The effect of the authorities is, that where there is an unrestricted dedication of a highway, there can be no right to plough up the soil. But these authorities do not touch the question whether there can be a restricted dedication of a highway, and this question is answered by Fisher v. Prowse (4) in the affirmative. And I should be very sorry to arrive at a different conclusion, because we know that the effect of it would be that, wherever footpaths like the present exist, they would at once be grubbed up and destroyed by the owners of the soil. In Poole v. Huskisson (14), Parke, B., explains that to constitute a valid dedication to the public of a highway, there must be an intention to dedicate, there must be an animus dedicandi of which the use by the public is evidence, and no more, and a single act of interruption by the owner is of much more weight upon a question of intention than many acts of enjoyment. Here the evidence as to the ploughing up the footpath was all one way. If Mr. Rew's argument were well founded, and there could be no such partial dedication as the present one, there would be no dedication at all.

Conviction quashed.

Attorneys—Wood, Street & Hayter, for appellant; Skilbeck & Griffith, agents for Harward, Shepherd and Harward, Stourbridge, for respondent.

(14) 11 Moo. & W., p. 830.

[IN THE COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.]

1869. } THE POOR LAW COMMISSIONERS
 Nov. 6. } FOR IRELAND, appellants, v.
 } THE SELECT VESTRY OF } LIVERPOOL, respondents.

*Irish Poor—Desertion by Husband—Irremovability of Wife and Children—
 8 & 9 Vict. c. 117. s. 2.*

The wife and unemancipated children of an Irishman, all born in Ireland, becoming chargeable to an English parish by reason of the desertion of the husband, cannot, in his absence, be removed to the Irish settlement of the wife under the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 117. s. 2. That section makes no provision for such a case, but contemplates their removal to the husband's place of settlement only, as members of his family, and with him.

At a petty sessions of the peace for the borough of Liverpool, holden on the 28th of May, 1868, a warrant for the removal of Ellen Keating and her two children, Margaret and John, of the respective ages of thirteen and two years, from the parish of Liverpool to the union of Tullamore, was granted by two justices of the borough upon the examination of the said Ellen Keating.

Notice of appeal having been given against the said warrant, pursuant to the 26 & 27 Vict. c. 89. s. 7, the following SPECIAL CASE was stated under the 12 & 13 Vict. c. 45. s. 11:—

Ellen Keating is the lawful wife of John Keating, and the said Margaret and John, in the said warrant mentioned, are their legitimate and unemancipated children.

On the 30th of September, 1867, Ellen Keating and her said two children, Margaret and John, were admitted into the Liverpool workhouse, as the wife and children, and known to the respondents to be the wife and children respectively of the said John Keating, and there remained until removed to Tullamore Union, Ireland, by warrant dated the 28th of May, 1868.

The said John Keating was born in Ireland, but not within the district of the union of Tullamore, nor has he ever resided for three years within the district of the said union.

The said Ellen Keating was born within the district of the union of Tullamore, and both of the said children, Margaret and John, were born in Ireland.
 NEW SERIES, 39.—MAG. CAS.

On the 31st of October, 1867, the respondents laid an information on oath before the magistrates against the said John Keating, the husband, for having on the said 30th of September, 1867, ran away from the parish of Liverpool, leaving and deserting his said wife, Ellen, and his two children, Margaret and John, chargeable to the said parish of Liverpool, and a warrant was granted thereon; and on the 17th of September, 1868, being after the appeal in this case was entered at the Court of Quarter Sessions for the borough of Liverpool, and after the same was respited to the next Quarter Sessions of the said borough, he was brought before the stipendiary magistrate for the said borough and convicted of the said offence.

The warrant of removal was issued in the absence of the said John Keating, and without any summons having been issued requiring his attendance before the magistrates for the said borough, at the sessions at which the said warrant was granted.

At the time of granting the said warrant of removal, viz., the 28th of May, 1868, and up to and until the time of his apprehension, viz., on the 17th of September, 1868, the said John Keating, the husband, was living and residing in Hull, in the county of Yorkshire, and not in and within the said parish of Liverpool, but the respondents did not, at the time such order was made, know where the said John Keating, the husband, was or where he could be found, nor did it appear, either from the examination of the said Ellen Keating, the warrant of removal, or otherwise, that enquiry was made as to the said John Keating, or as to his place of birth.

The questions for the consideration of the Court are,

1st. Whether a warrant of removal, under the above facts, should have been granted by the magistrates.

2nd. If so, whether it was rightly granted for removal to the Tullamore Union.

If the Court shall be of opinion in the affirmative of both the above questions, then the appellants agree that a judgment, in conformity with such decision and for such costs as the Court may adjudge, may be entered on motion by the respondents at the sessions next or next but one after such decision shall have been given.

E

If the Court shall be of a contrary opinion on either of the above questions, then the respondents agree that a judgment in conformity with such decision, and for such costs as the Court may adjudge, may be entered on motion by the appellants at the sessions next or next but one after such decision shall have been given.

Mellish (L. Temple with him) for the appellants.—The question turns on the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 117. s. 2, and the point for decision is, who is the person really chargeable? By the 4 & 5 Will. 4. c. 76. s. 56, all relief given to or on account of the wife, or to or on account of any child or children under the age of sixteen, &c., shall be considered as given to the husband of such wife, or to the father of such children; and this enactment is in perfect keeping with the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 117. s. 2, which deals with persons not settled in England becoming chargeable to any parish therein by reason of relief given to the wife or children. The husband, then, notwithstanding his desertion of his family, is the person chargeable, and the wife and children can only be removed under the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 117. s. 2, and the amending Acts, with him, and as part of his family, to his own place of settlement, as defined by the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 113. s. 2; that is to say, to the place in Ireland where the justices shall find the person to have been born or have last resided for the space of three years. If, as contended on the other side, the wife can be removed with her children to her own maiden settlement, it follows that they must be so removable notwithstanding that the husband, having deserted them, was known to be resident and earning his livelihood in some other parish. The statutes in question have not in fact made any provision for such a case as the present.

G. Francis for the respondents.—The case is within the mischief which it was the object of the statutes in question to remedy, and the Court will, if possible, put such a construction upon them as will carry out their intention. The wife and children were actually chargeable to the removing parish, and it was for the offence of leaving them so chargeable that the husband was apprehended and convicted; by his absence the wife was constituted the head of the family, and she and her children were therefore properly removed to her maiden settlement. The King v. The inhabitants of Cottingham (1).

[HAYES, J., referred to The Queen v. Much Hoole (2)].

He also cited The Queen v. All Saints, Derby (3).

Cur. adv. vult.

The judgment of the Court (4) was now delivered by COCKBURN, C.J.—This was a case stated by consent under the statute 12 & 13 Vict. c. 45, upon an appeal against an order or warrant made by two justices of the peace for the borough of Liverpool on the 28th of May, 1868, for the removal of Elizabeth Keating and her two children from the parish of Liverpool, where they had become chargeable, to the union of Tullamore, in Ireland, the birth-place of the said Elizabeth Keating.

The pauper, Elizabeth Keating, was the wife of one John Keating who was an Irishman. Neither of them had acquired any settlement in England; the children were the issue of the marriage and were both born in Ireland; they were infants and unemancipated, one being aged 13, and the other 2 years.

At the time when Elizabeth Keating and the children became chargeable, and also at the time of the making the warrant of removal and of executing it, John Keating was not living in the parish of Liverpool. He had some time previously deserted his wife, and was living at Hull, in Yorkshire, but the respondents did not then know where he was or where he could be found.

He was, consequently, not summoned or brought before the removing magistrates, nor does it appear from the ex-

(1) 7 B. & C. 615.

(2) 21 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 1; 17 Q.B. Rep. 548.

(3) 19 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 14; 14 Q.B. Rep. 207.

(4) Cockburn, C.J., Lush, J., Hannen, J., Hayes, J.

amination, warrant of removal, or any statement in the case, that enquiry was made as to him or as to his place of birth. In point of fact he was not born in Tullamore nor had he resided there for three years.

Under these circumstances it was contended, on behalf of the appellants, that the warrant of removal of the wife and the two children to Tullamore, the place of the wife's birth, was invalid, and ought not to have been granted, and we are of that opinion.

The statute under which the removal of Irish paupers is now regulated, is the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 117, as amended by the 10 & 11 Vict. c. 33, the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 76, and the 26 & 27 Vict. c. 89. The material clause is the 2nd section of the first-mentioned statute. The language of the section, according to its plain natural meaning, appears to require that where there is a husband, as well as a wife and children liable to be removed, they are all to be removed together.

With regard to the place to which the removal is to be made, by the 4th section of the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 117, the justices of a county or borough were empowered to make regulations for the removal of "such poor persons, their wives and children." But this section is now repealed by statute 26 & 27 Vict. c. 89. s. 3, and by the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 113. s. 2, the warrant of removal was required to contain (amongst other things) the name of the place in Ireland where the removing justices shall find such poor person to have been born, or to have last resided for three years. And a copy of the warrant was thereby required to be given to the person or "the head of the family" about to be removed by virtue of it. This shews that the legislature intended that where there was a head of the family, the removal was to be to his or her place of birth or place of residence, and the 26 & 27 Vict. c. 89, which makes further regulations concerning these removals, and gives the right of appeal by the Poor Law Commissioners of Ireland, prescribes the particular form of warrant used in this case.

No provision is made in any of these acts or in any of the former statutes which were repealed by the 1st section of the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 117, where a woman has been deserted by her husband, for her being removed without him or being removed to any other place than the husband's settlement if he were living; and upon a review of the statutes, and the decisions upon them, we think that such a case is left unprovided for.

In The King v. Cottingham (2) which case arose on the construction of a former act, the 59 Geo. 3. c. 12, which is now repealed, but which in its enactments closely resembled the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 117. s. 2, it was held that the wife of an Irishman, who had no settlement in England and had deserted her, might be removed without him to her own maiden settlement, which revived on her desertion by her husband. But it was there laid down by Bayley, J., in delivering the judgment of the Court, that the statute of the 59 Geo. 3. c. 12. s. 83, which in this respect is undistinguishable from the present, did not authorise the removal of the wife alone to the place of birth of her husband, and that as the husband having quitted the parish could not be removed to Ireland, so the wife could not be removed there without him, and that the case was therefore not within the act. It had been previously held in The Queen v. Leeds (5), that the wife and unemancipated children of a Scotchman, who had not deserted his wife but was living with her, could not, even with his consent, be removed to her maiden settlement, but that all were removable with the husband to Scotland. In The Queen v. All Saints, Derby (3), the question of the construction of the present act arose in the case of the children of an Irish father by an Irish mother. The mother had died, and the children had been deserted by the father. It was there decided that they were removable to the parish of their birth in England and not to Ireland, under the 2nd section of the statute. Coleridge, J., there laid down that according to the act the father must be dealt with as the subject of removal, and Wightman, J., said that the statute for the purpose of removal "applied directly to the father only, and to the children not otherwise than incidentally as a part of his family, and that if the father cannot be removed, there is no power over the children." Coleridge, J., also observed that the section might mean that, if the father were summoned, the order might be made at the time and place named, whether he appeared or not, or at any time when he did come, and that if he were absent, service of a summons upon him must be shewn, so that at all events the proceedings should relate to him. This case, which recognised the previous case of The King v. Cottingham (1), appears to make it clear that the wife and children cannot be removed except with the father, and at all events as a part of the father's family, and in a proceeding having reference to him; and therefore, at all events, a warrant of removal which ignores the father and the father's place of birth, and removes to that of the mother, must be considered as unwarranted by the statute.

(5) 5 Q.B. Rep. 916; s. c. 13 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 107.

The subsequent cases of The Queen v. Much Hoole (2) and The King v. St. Giles, Cripplegate (5), are substantially in accordance with the cases previously mentioned, as shewing that neither a wife deserted by her husband, an Irishman, nor a daughter, though unemancipated and becoming chargeable in a different parish from that in which her parents, who were Irish, without a settlement, resided, can be removed to Ireland under the statute now in question; and as we have had no instance brought to our notice of such a removal having been made, and have been unable to discover any such case, we consider that this order of removal ought to be reversed as illegal, and that the respondent should, according to the 7th section of the 26 & 27 Vict. c. 89, pay the expenses of the preliminary enquiry and appeal, and also those of maintaining the persons removed, and of conveying them back to Liverpool.

Order of removal quashed.

Attorneys—Field, Roscoe & Co., agents for Marsh & Co., Warrington, for appellants; Monckton & Monckton, for respondents.

(5) 17 Q.B. Rep. 636; s. c. 21 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 28.

1869. } COCKER, appellant v. CARDWELL
Nov. 17. } and others, respondents.

Nuisance Removal Acts, 18 & 19 Vict. c. 121. s. 12; 23 & 24 Vict. c. 77. s. 13; 29 & 30 Vict. c. 90. ss. 14, 21—Information by inhabitant under 23 & 24 Vict. c. 77. s. 13—Summons without previous notice to abate nuisance.

Under 23 & 24 Vict. c. 77. s. 13 (amended by 29 & 30 Vict. c. 90, part 2), a justice of the peace upon the complaint of any inhabitant of any parish or place of the existence of any nuisance on any private premises in the same parish or place, may issue a summons requiring the person by whose act, default, permission, or sufferance, the nuisance arises, &c., or if such person cannot be found or ascertained, the owner or occupier of the premises on which the nuisance arises, to appear before justices, &c., without proof of the service of a previous notice to abate the nuisance.

CASE stated by justices of the West Riding, under the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43.

The respondents were summoned before two justices on an information by the appellant laid under section 13 of the 23 & 24 Vict. c. 77 (1), charging them with

(1) By 18 & 19 Vict. c. 121 (The Nuisances Removal Act, 1855) s. 11, a power of entry upon premises is given to the local authority, for the purpose of ascertaining the existence of nuisances, and by s. 12. In any case where a nuisance is ascertained by the local authority to exist, &c., they shall cause complaint thereof to be made before a justice of the peace, and such justice shall thereupon issue a summons requiring the person by whose act, default, permission, or sufferance, the nuisance arises, or continues, or if such person cannot be found or ascertained, the owner or occupier of the premises on which the nuisance arises, to appear before any two justices, in petty sessions assembled, at their usual place of meeting, who shall proceed to inquire into the complaint, and if it be proved to their satisfaction that the nuisance exists, or did exist, &c., the justices shall make an order on such person, owner or occupier, for the abatement, or discontinuance, and prohibition, of the nuisance, &c.

By 23 & 24 Vict. c. 77. s. 13. "Upon complaint before a justice of the peace by any inhabitant of any parish or place of the existence of any nuisance on any private premises in the same parish or place, such justices shall issue a summons requiring the person by whose act, default, permission, or sufferance, the nuisance arises, or if such person cannot be found or ascertained, the owner or occupier of the premises on which the nuisance having on the 23rd March, 1869, committed a nuisance by allowing a certain chimney at their mill at Savile town, near Dewsbury, to send forth black smoke in such quantity as to be a nuisance. On the 19th April, 1869, the information came on to be heard. It was proved that the appellant was an inhabitant of the parish or place in which the nuisance complained of arose, and he gave evidence in support of the information. Mr. Wilson Hemingway also proved that on the 8th June, 1868, he informed the defendants of his appointment as smoke inspector for the Dewsbury Union district by the West Riding Association for the Suppression of the Smoke Nuisance, and that on the same 8th June, 1868, he left a copy of the notice hereinafter set out at the respondents' place of business. Also that on the 20th October, 1868, he personally served the appellant, James Cardwell, with a notice of which the following is a copy.

West Riding Association for the Suppression of the Smoke Nuisance, statutes 18 & 19 Vict. c. 121; 24 & 24 Vict. c. 77; 29 & 30 Vict. c. 90.

I hereby give notice that having been appointed by the above-named association arises, to appear before two justices in petty sessions . . . who shall proceed to inquire into the complaint and act in relation thereto as in cases where a complaint is made by a local authority under section 12 of the Nuisances Removal Act, 1855, and as if the person making the complaint were such local authority; provided always, that it shall be lawful for the said justices, if they see fit, to adjourn the hearing or further hearing of such summons for an examination of the premises where the nuisance is alleged to exist, and to require the admission, or authorise the entry, into such premises of any constable or other person or persons, &c., provided also that the costs in the case of every such application shall be in the discretion of the justices.

By 29 & 30 Vict. c. 90 (part 2) s. 21, the nuisance authority or chief officer of police shall, previous to taking proceedings before a justice under section 12 of the Nuisances Removal Act, 1855, serve a notice on the person by whose act, default, or sufferance, the nuisance arises or is continued, or if such person cannot be found or ascertained, on the owner or occupier of the premises on which the nuisance arises, to abate the same, &c.

By s. 14. The expression "Nuisances Removal Acts" shall mean the acts passed in the years following of the reign of her present Majesty, that is to say, 18 & 19 Vict. c. 121, 23 & 24 Vict. c.

to the office of smoke inspector for the Dewsbury Union district, I have already commenced discharging the duties of that appointment, and am now making observations of such chimneys as appear to me to be most noxious with the view of laying information according to law for the abatement of nuisances arising from dense smoke. All the chimneys within the district will be inspected as early as possible, and if you have not already adopted some proper and satisfactory means for the prevention of smoke, you are hereby required to do so without further delay, or summary legal proceedings will be taken against you without further notice for any nuisance which may arise from your neglect.—Yours, &c.,

WILSON HEMINGWAY.

Westgate, Dewsbury.

Upon the hearing the following questions arose:—Upon an information by an inhabitant under section 13 of the Act 23 & 24 Vict. c. 77, is a notice required to be given as under section 21 of the 29 & 30 Vict. c. 90, by the nuisance authority or chief officer of police? and, if so, was the notice given to the respondents sufficient for that purpose? The justices were of opinion that a notice was required, and that the notice given was insufficient. The question for the opinion of the Court is, whether the justices were right in holding that a notice was required, and that the notice before referred to, and given at the time proved, was insufficient?

Jelf, for the appellant. In the absence of express words, it must be held that justices may issue a summons under 23 & 24 Vict. c. 77. s. 13. without proof of a previous notice. The words in section 12 of 29 & 30 Vict. c. 90, which apply to such a notice, are strictly limited to proceedings under the Nuisances Removal Act, 1855. And there are reasons why such a notice should not be required where the summons is taken out under section 13 of 23 & 24 Vict. c. 77, for the justices have power to adjourn the inquiries if necessary, and have also a discretion as to costs, which is a sufficient check against vexatious proceedings. He cited Glen's Law of Public Health, 5th ed. p. 482.

77, as amended by this part of this act, and this part of this act shall be construed as one with the said acts.

No counsel appeared for the respondents.

COCKBURN, C.J.—I am of opinion that the appellant's construction of 23 & 24 Vict. c. 77. s. 13. is right, and that upon an information by an inhabitant under this section no notice is required to be given, as under 29 & 30 Vict. c. 50. s. 21. This omission appears to me to be per incuriam, and not by design. By the first of the Nuisance Removal Acts to which we have been referred, 18 & 19 Vict. c. 121, sections 11 & 12, the local authority may, without any previous notice, put the law in motion for the abatement of a nuisance by a summons requiring the person offending to appear before justices. The second act, 23 & 24 Vict. c. 77, gives this jurisdiction to justices upon the complaint of a private individual, and there again no notice other than the summons itself is required, though there is a proviso enabling the justices, if they see fit, to adjourn the hearing for an examination of the premises where the nuisance is alleged to exist. We come now to the third act, 29 & 30 Vict. c. 90, and this act by section 21 requires that before the nuisance authority shall apply for a summons before a justice under 18 & 19 Vict. c. 121. s. 12, they shall serve a notice on the person by whose act the nuisance arises to abate the same within a specified time. This notice gives no power to the local authority to abate the nuisance itself, for this power can only be exercised by means of an order of justices; yet still the local authority is bound to serve the offender with a notice. Now it is plain that if such a notice is required in a proceeding before justices on the part of the local authority, in whom some confidence may reasonably be placed, then a fortiori it ought to be required in proceedings set on foot by private individuals who are not competent to pass an equally clear judgment upon the existence of a nuisance. It is far more probable that vexatious proceedings should be instituted by persons who have not had the advantage of the power of entering upon the premises where the nuisance is said to exist, conferred by section 11 of the first act. But it seems that the framer of the last act forgot to apply the provisions as to notice to the intermediate act, though there it was more necessary than in the two others. It is true that it is provided that these three acts shall be construed as one, and they are in pari materia with each other. But we cannot import into the second act words which are omitted from it, and in their absence we must hold that no notice was necessary.

BLACKBURN, J.—I am of the same opinion, and think that the justices have not correctly construed these acts. Looking at the manner in which the acts are prepared and incorporated with each other, I can only say that small blame is due to those who fail in understanding them. Many complaints have been made as to the manner in which the statutes relating to the public health are framed, but the evil has never been remedied. In the present case we have an act containing one set of provisions, a second act amending and enlarging the first act, and a third act which is to be read as one with the two preceding acts as amended by the third act. The natural result of this is that the Legislature have said one thing when they meant another. The first act says that the local authority must go before justices to enforce the abatement of a nuisance; the second that the justices upon the complaint of a private individual may proceed as if the local authority had come before them. Then it seems to have occurred to the Legislature that it would be a hard case if the person alleged to have caused the nuisance were summoned without a notice, and that provision should be made accordingly. I quite agree that it is much more proper that such a notice should be given where a private individual applies for the summons than where the application is by the local authority; but I can only suppose that the draughtsman had forgotten the existence of section 13 of the second act. I have no doubt that this was casus omissus, and that the Legislature would have inserted the right words if their attention had been called to the second act; but we cannot supply the omission.

MELLOR, J., concurred.

HANNEN, J.—I am also of opinion that the omission was very likely owing to the clumsy and inefficient way in which the acts are prepared. It is, however, just possible that the Legislature may have thought that the local authority, which is invested with extensive powers, should give a notice, which they would not require from a private individual.

Judgment for the appellant.

Attorneys—Chester & Urquhart, agents for T. W. Clough, Huddersfield, for appellant.

[CROWN CASES RESERVED.]

Nov. 13. }
1869. } THE QUEEN v. MARTIN.

Coinage — Procedure — Indictment for knowingly having counterfeit coin in possession after previous conviction for uttering.

Upon the trial of an indictment for the felony of having committed a misdemeanour within either of sections 9, 10, or 11 of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99 relating to the unlawful possession and uttering of counterfeit coin after a previous conviction for a misdemeanour within those sections; the prisoner must first be arraigned upon the subsequent offence, and evidence respecting the subsequent offence must first be submitted to the jury, and the previous conviction must not be inquired into until after the verdict on the charge of the subsequent offence.

CASE stated by Forsyth, Queen's Counsel, sitting as Commissioner at the Leeds Summer Assizes:—

William Martin was tried before me on the charge of being unlawfully in possession of counterfeit coin, he having been before convicted of unlawfully uttering counterfeit coin (1).

At the outset of the case Mr. Forbes, the counsel for the prosecution, called a witness and proposed to give in evidence a certificate to prove the previous conviction.

(1) The first count of the indictment was as follows:—

Yorkshire, West Riding Division to wit.—The jurors for our Lady the Queen upon their oath present that William Martin on the 10th day of April, in the year of our Lord one thousand and eighty-nine, unlawfully had in his custody and possession fifteen pieces of false and counterfeit coin resembling and apparently intended to resemble and pass for fifteen pieces of the Queen's current silver coin called crowns, five pieces of false and counterfeit coin resembling and apparently intended to resemble and pass for five pieces of the Queen's current silver coin called florins, and five pieces of false and counterfeit coin resembling and apparently intended to resemble and pass for five pieces of the Queen's current silver coin called shillings, knowing the said several pieces of false and counterfeit coin to be false and counterfeit, and with intent unlawfully, fraudulently, and deceitfully to utter and put off the same, against the form of the statute in such case made and provided. And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, do say that heretofore and before the committing of the offence hereinbefore mentioned, to wit at a special session and delivery of the gaol of our Lady the Queen holden at Lincoln, in and for the county of Lincoln, on Friday, the 11th day of December, in the twenty-first year of Her present Majesty's reign, the said William Martin, in the name of Martin Kelly, was in due form of law convicted on a certain indictment against him, for that he on the 14th day of November, in the twenty-first year of the reign aforesaid, at the parish of Gainsborough, in the county of Lincoln, did unlawfully utter and put off to Mary Pycock one counterfeit half-crown, knowing the same to be false and counterfeit, against the form of the statute in such case then made and provided. And that the said William Martin, in the name of Martin Kelly, was thereupon ordered to be imprisoned in the house of correction, and kept to hard labour for the term of two years. And so the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, do say that the said William Martin, on the day and year first aforesaid, feloniously and unlawfully had in his custody and possession the said several pieces of false and counterfeit coin, knowing the same to be false and counterfeit, and with intent unlawfully, fraudulently, and deceitfully to utter and put off the same in manner aforesaid, and against the form of the statute in such case made and provided.

eight hundred and sixty-nine, unlawfully had in his custody and possession fifteen pieces of false and counterfeit coin resembling and apparently intended to resemble and pass for fifteen pieces of the Queen's current silver coin called crowns, five pieces of false and counterfeit coin resembling and apparently intended to resemble and pass for five pieces of the Queen's current silver coin called florins, and five pieces of false and counterfeit coin resembling and apparently intended to resemble and pass for five pieces of the Queen's current silver coin called shillings, knowing the said several pieces of false and counterfeit coin to be false and counterfeit, and with intent unlawfully, fraudulently, and deceitfully to utter and put off the same, against the form of the statute in such case made and provided. And the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, do say that heretofore and before the committing of the offence hereinbefore mentioned, to wit at a special session and delivery of the gaol of our Lady the Queen holden at Lincoln, in and for the county of Lincoln, on Friday, the 11th day of December, in the twenty-first year of Her present Majesty's reign, the said William Martin, in the name of Martin Kelly, was in due form of law convicted on a certain indictment against him, for that he on the 14th day of November, in the twenty-first year of the reign aforesaid, at the parish of Gainsborough, in the county of Lincoln, did unlawfully utter and put off to Mary Pycock one counterfeit half-crown, knowing the same to be false and counterfeit, against the form of the statute in such case then made and provided. And that the said William Martin, in the name of Martin Kelly, was thereupon ordered to be imprisoned in the house of correction, and kept to hard labour for the term of two years. And so the jurors aforesaid, upon their oath aforesaid, do say that the said William Martin, on the day and year first aforesaid, feloniously and unlawfully had in his custody and possession the said several pieces of false and counterfeit coin, knowing the same to be false and counterfeit, and with intent unlawfully, fraudulently, and deceitfully to utter and put off the same in manner aforesaid, and against the form of the statute in such case made and provided.

possession of counterfeit coin was by the 12th section of the above statute made felony only when there had been a previous conviction of an offence relating to the coin, and no such previous conviction had been proved. I allowed the case to go to the jury upon the question whether the prisoner was guilty or not of the subsequent offence. The jury found a verdict of guilty. The prisoner was then asked whether he had been previously convicted as charged in the indictment, and he admitted that he had been so convicted. Feeling doubtful whether I had done right, first, in refusing to admit the certificate when it was tendered in evidence, and secondly, in leaving to the jury the question of the prisoner's guilt as to the subsequent offence before the previous conviction had been proved, I deferred passing sentence, and the prisoner remains in custody. I desire to have the opinion of the Court for Crown Cases Reserved, whether I was right in rejecting the certificate when it was tendered in evidence, and in submitting to the jury the question whether the prisoner was guilty of the subsequent offence before the previous conviction had been proved against him.

Forbes for the prosecution. — This case has been stated for the purpose of ascertaining the correct procedure upon the trial of such indictments as the present. It is submitted that it was necessary that the previous conviction should have been first proved, in order to shew that the subsequent offence was a felony. The prisoner was arraigned and tried as for a felony, and before the jury could find him guilty of a felony, it must have been shewn to them that the facts proved against the prisoner amounted to a felony, which could be done only by shewing that he had been previously convicted of one of the offences designated in the 9th, 10th, or 11th section of the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99. By the 12th section of that act, it is enacted that "whosoever, having been convicted either before or after the passing of this act, of any such misdemeanour, or crime, and offence, as in any of the last three preceding sections mentioned, or of any felony or high crime and offence against this, or any former act, relating to the coin, shall afterwards commit any of the misdemeanours or crimes and offences in any of the said sections mentioned, shall in England and Ireland be guilty of felony."

By section 37, "the proceedings upon any indictment for committing any offence, after a previous conviction or convictions, shall be as follows: (that is to say), the offender shall, in the first instance, be arraigned upon so much only of the indictment as charges the subsequent offence, and if he plead not guilty, or if the Court order a plea of not guilty to be entered on his behalf, the jury shall be charged in the first instance to inquire concerning such subsequent offence only; and if they find him guilty, or if on arraignment he plead guilty, he shall then, and not before, be asked whether he had been previously convicted as alleged in the indictment, and if he answer that he had been so previously convicted, the Court may proceed to sentence him accordingly; but if he deny that he had been so previously convicted, &c., the jury shall then be charged to inquire concerning such previous conviction or convictions, and in such case it shall not be necessary to swear the jury again, &c."

Learned judges on circuit are reported to have varied in their practice in this matter (2).

[MARTIN, B.—I used to think upon the reading of the indictment, that the previous conviction ought to have been first proved, but on referring to the statute, I thought it clear to the contrary.]

The 37th section might be referred to the 20th and 21st sections of the act, and read with reference to those sections.

No counsel appeared for the prisoner.

Per Curiam (3).—The learned Commissioner took the right course. The act is directory and is sufficiently explicit.

Conviction affirmed.

Attorney—The Solicitor to the Treasury for the prosecution.

(2) See The Queen v. Goodwin, 10 Cox C.C. 534.

(3) Kelly, C.B., Blackburn, J., Martin, B., Lush J., and Brett, J.

[IN THE COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.]

1870.
Jan. 16.

THE TRUSTEES OF THE BRIGHTON TURNPIKE TRUST
(appellants) v. THE SUR-VEYORS OF THE HIGHWAYS OF THE PARISH OF PRESTON
(respondents).

Turnpike Road—Repair—Insufficiency of Trust Funds—Contribution from Highway Rates—Apportionment—4 & 5 Vict. c. 59. s. 1.

By a special Turnpike Roads Act, the trustees were authorised to expend the sum of 850*l.* upon the repair of the 35 miles of road within their trust. This sum was insufficient for the repairs, and they applied to justices to make an order upon the surveyors of highways for the parish of P., through which a portion of the road passed, for the payment of a sum of money towards the repairs of such road. They required an order for the payment of 115*l.* 8*s.* 6*d.*, which sum they arrived at by apportioning the 850*l.* according to a mileage proportion, which would give 27*l.* 4*s.* 8*d.* to P., and then deducting that sum from 142*l.* 13*s.* 2*d.*, the estimated amount necessary for the repair of the road in P. The cost of repairing the road in P. was higher than the cost in other parishes, owing to the traffic being much heavier, and if the apportionment had been made after taking into consideration such additional cost, the sum apportioned to P. would have been 89*l.*:—Held, that the mode of calculation adopted by the trustees was wrong, and that the justices were right in ordering the payment of 53*l.* 13*s.* 2*d.*, the difference between the above sum of 89*l.* and the estimated cost of the repairs for the year in P.

CASE stated by justices under Statute 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43.

1. At a special sessions for highways, held at Hove, in the county of Sussex, on the 1st day of March, 1869, an information by Edward Waugh, clerk to the appellants, was exhibited before the justices under the 4 & 5 Vict. c. 59 (which statute has been continued by several subsequent statutes to the present time), stating that the funds of the Brighton, Cuckfield and West Grinstead Turnpike Trust, applicable under the Brighton, Cuckfield and West Grinstead Turnpike Roads Act,

NEW SERIES, 39.—MAG. CAS.

1854 (the local Act by which the trustees are authorised to levy tolls upon the roads for the repairs and maintaining the same), were insufficient for the repairs of the turnpike road within the parish of Preston; and praying that the justices would proceed to make such judgment and order in the premises, as upon examination to the justices should seem meet, and as to law did appertain.

2. The justices examined into the allegations contained in the information; and it appearing to them that the allegations were true, they did adjudge and order that the respondents should pay to the appellants the sum of 53*l.* out of the highway rates to be levied in the parish of Preston, such sum of 53*l.* to be wholly laid out in the actual repairs of such part of the turnpike road as lies within the parish of Preston.

3. The appellants were dissatisfied with the determination of the justices upon the hearing of the information, as being erroneous in point of law, and having duly applied to them to state and sign a case, setting forth the facts and grounds of their determination, for the opinion of this Court,

The following CASE was stated.

4. Upon the hearing of the information, the following facts were proved or admitted by both parties:—

5. The turnpike trust is regulated by "The Brighton, Cuckfield and West Grinstead Turnpike Roads Act, 1854," which Act is to be taken and considered as part of this case, and is hereinafter referred to as the local Act.

6. Section 25 of the local Act provides for the application of the revenue of the trust in the following order:—

1. In paying the expenses of the Act.

2. In paying the expenses of erecting a new toll-house in lieu of the Preston gate.

3. In paying the expenses of repairing toll-gates, and in salaries and general management, not exceeding in any one year the sum of 174*l.*

4. In paying the expenses (not exceeding the sum of 850*l.* in any one year) of maintaining and keeping in repair the said roads.

F

5. In paying interest at 3l. 10s. per cent. on 2,761l., a portion of the debt due on the roads.

6. In paying interest at the rate as aforesaid on 4,700l., the remainder of the debt.

7 and 8. In reducing the principal of such debt.

9. In paying any further expenses (beyond the sum of 850l.) of maintaining, keeping in repair, and improving the roads, and of putting the Act into execution in reference thereto.

7. There was not any portion of the revenue applicable for the repair of the roads under the 9th clause of the last paragraph.

8. The roads of the trust were of the total length of 35 miles, and the proportion of the turnpike road within the parish of Preston was one mile and thirty-eight poles in length.

9. The sum of 850l. authorised by the local Act to be expended in the repairs of the roads, was at the rate of about 24l. 6s. per mile on the whole length of the roads, and such sum was wholly insufficient for the repairs of the roads. The average cost of the repairs has been the sum of 1,200l. per annum.

10. In no one of the parishes, within which the turnpike road of the trust lies, can it be kept in repair for a sum at the rate of 24l. 6s. per mile.

11. The estimated cost of repairs for the whole of the road, for the year ending 31st of December, 1869, was the sum of 1,350l. 13s., out of which the cost of repairing so much of the turnpike road as lay within the parish of Preston for that year, was the sum of 142l. 13s. 2d.

12. The portion of the turnpike road which lay within the parish of Preston had a large amount of traffic upon it, and was very much used and resorted to by the inhabitants and visitors of Brighton, and cost considerably more to keep in repair than any other portion of the roads.

13. There was no toll-gate in the parish of Preston, and under the local Act the trustees were prohibited from erecting a toll-gate in such parish.

14. The cost of keeping the roads in repair varied considerably in the several parishes, and the following tabular statement shews the length of the road in each parish, and the estimated cost of repairing the same for one year.

Name of Parish.	Length of Road.			Total cost of Repairs in 1869.
	M.	F.	P. L.	£	s.	d.
Preston	1	...	38	142	13	2
Patcham	2	4	34	172	15	3
Piecombe	2	2	38	108	11	3
Clayton	4	5	39	202	4	6
Keymer	1	...	37	41	1	0
Cuckfield	10	2	37	328	11	2
Hangham	3	6	1	99	13	6
Crawley	6	13	31	11	11
Ifield	1	2	8	38	14	0
Bolney	2	2	32	59	14	4
Cowfold	2	3	37	70	5	2
West Grinstead ...	1	7	25	54	17	11
	34	7	21	1350	13	0

15. The appellants as trustees of the roads, at a meeting held for, among other purposes, that of fixing the amount to be contributed towards the repairs of the roads out of the highway rates of the several parishes within which they lie, had considered and decided that the sum of 850l., which by the local Act they are authorised to expend out of the tolls in the repair of the roads, should be credited to the several parishes within which they lie, rateably in proportion to the mileage of road of the trust within each parish; and they consequently applied to the respondents to pay them out of the highway rates for the parish of Preston the difference between the anticipated cost of the actual repairs of such part of the turnpike road as lies within the parish, and the sum (portion of the 850l.) which they had on the above-mentioned mileage principle appropriated to the repairs thereof.

16. The respondents contended that the trustees ought to expend the sum of 850l. in proportion to the actual wear and tear in each parish. There was no evidence to shew whether the sum of 850l., or any part thereof, had been actually expended in proportion to mileage, or in proportion to wear and tear.

17. Under the mileage principle contended for by the appellants, the proportion of the sum of 850l. to be spent in the parish of Preston was 27*l.* 4*s.* 8*d.*, leaving a sum of 115*l.* 8*s.* 6*d.* to be contributed by the respondents, and this last mentioned sum the appellants applied to the justices to adjudge and order to be paid by the respondents.

18. The justices were of opinion that,—whereas the anticipated cost for the entire year of the repair of all the roads of the trust was 1,350*l.* 13*s.*, of which 850*l.* was the sum to be contributed under the local Act out of the tolls, and the excess 500*l.* 13*s.*, the sum to be contributed under the general Act, out of the highway rates,—it was right that the two sums of 850*l.* and 500*l.* 13*s.* should be apportioned between the several parishes upon one and the same principle, that, namely, of accordance with anticipated cost for the entire year of repair in each parish, and not upon the principle of mere mileage, and as 89*l.* would be the share of the 850*l.*, for which the parish of Preston would be entitled to have credit on this principle, the justices ordered the respondents to pay out of the highway rates of the parish of Preston the sum of 53*l.* 13*s.* 2*d.*, such sum being the difference between 89*l.*, and the sum of 142*l.* 13*s.* 2*d.*, the estimated costs for the entire year of the repairs in that parish.

19. The question of law, arising upon the above statements, was, whether, under the circumstances stated, the decision of the justices was correct, or whether the principle contended for by the appellants was correct.

If the Court should be of opinion that the principle contended for by the appellants was the correct one, then the order was to be amended by increasing the sum of 53*l.* 13*s.* 2*d.*, thereby ordered to be paid, to the sum of 115*l.* 8*s.* 6*d.* But if the Court should be of a contrary opinion, then the order was to stand.

Grantham for the appellants.—The appellants had a right to call upon the respondents to supply the deficiency between the sum necessary for the repairs, and the sum apportioned to the parish. The whole sum of 850*l.* has been divided according to a mileage proportion, which is the correct mode of apportionment. The trust is now being wound up, and the respondent parish will for the future be compelled to maintain the whole length of road included within it. The mode adopted is the most simple, and the best.

[MELLOR, J., referred to The King v. The Justices of Berks (1).]

Merrifield for the respondents.—The justices were right in ordering the payment of the contribution of 53*l.* 13*s.* 2*d.* only, instead of the sum which the appellants asked for. The mode of apportionment adopted by the appellants was unjust. The expense of repairs necessary upon the road in the respondent parish was much greater, as shewn in the Case, than upon the roads in the country parishes where the traffic was light. That being so, it is unjust to apportion the 850*l.* according to a mileage proportion, and then to assess the amount of contribution, according to the expense made necessary by the extra wear and tear in the respondent parish. The fair way is to apportion the 850*l.* according to the respective amount of wear and tear of the roads in the several parishes. The statute 4 & 5 Vict. c. 59. s. 1. gives the justices a wide discretion, and the Court cannot say that they were wrong. [He referred to The Queen v. South Shields (2), and Brown v. Evans (3).]

Grantham replied.

COCKBURN, C.J.—I am of opinion that the justices were right, and that our judgment must be for the respondents. The statute in question makes provision for enabling trustees of turnpike roads, where the funds are inadequate to pay for the expenditure necessary in repairing the roads, to apply for an order for a contribution out of the highway rate made for any parish through which the road passes. The section says that the justices may adjudge and order what portion, "if any," of the rate or assessment shall be paid by the parish surveyor to the trustees.

Starting from that point of view, I come to the conclusion that an apportionment according to the mileage principle is wrong. This is the case of a trust with roads passing through several parishes—one contiguous to Brighton, where the population is large and the traffic heavy, and others

(1) 8 Dowl. 727.

(2) 23 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 134; s. c. 3 E. & B. 599.

(3) 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 101.

being country parishes without any large population. In the former class of parishes, a much larger expenditure would be necessary than in the latter. Now, if the fund which the trustees are authorised to raise and expend was sufficient for the repair of the whole system of roads, it would be expended according to the proportion required for this or that parish. Instead of being sufficient, it proves to be insufficient, and it becomes necessary to apply for a rate in aid. Suppose that for parish A. 100*l.* is required for the maintenance of the roads, while for parish B. 50*l.* would be enough, and a rate in aid is required, the amount which the trustees have in hand ought to be expended in the same proportion as it would have been, if it had been sufficient without calling for any contribution. Justice and equity require that it should be apportioned between the parishes, in proportion to the expenditure required in each, for the repairs of the road in each. The justices were therefore right in saying that the fund received by the trustees ought to be apportioned in the way suggested by them, that being the course which justice and equity required.

MELLOR, J.—I am of the same opinion, and for the same reasons. The division according to the mileage is the more simple, but the more equitable and proper mode of apportionment is according to the expenditure required.

HANNEN, J.—I have had some difficulty during the argument, but upon the whole I agree with the opinion which has been expressed. If it had been intended that the fund should be expended according to the mileage principle, it seems strange that the Legislature should not have said so. As they have not said so, I think that it must have been contemplated that something more was necessary than a mere computation of a mileage proportion. It is proper that the greater expenditure required in the repair of any particular portion of road should be taken into consideration.

Judgment for the respondent.

Attorneys—Prior & Bigg, agents for E. Waugh, Cuckfield, for appellants; E. M. Hore, agent for Williams & Greaves, Brighton, for respondents.

[IN THE COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.]
1870. } ALLEN, appellant, v. WORTHY,
Jan. 16. } respondent.

Vaccination—30 & 31 Vict. c. 84. s. 31—Certificate of Medical Practitioner—Omission to procure Vaccination of Child—Second offence.

On the 30th of March, 1869, A. was convicted for disobeying an order of a justice to cause his child to be vaccinated within seven days from the date of such order. Subsequently the registrar of births and deaths gave him notice to procure the vaccination of the child, which he failed to do; and on the 29th of April, another information came on to be heard against him, when he was ordered to have the child vaccinated within seven days from the date of such order. At the hearing he produced a certificate in the form given in schedule B. to the Act 30 & 31 Vict. c. 84, and signed by a medical practitioner, certifying that the child was not in a fit state to be vaccinated, and postponing the vaccination until the 20th of June. He did not obey the order made upon him, and on the 13th of May, 1869, another information under 30 & 31 Vict. c. 84. s. 31, came on to be heard against him for disobedience of such order. He again produced the certificate above mentioned, but he was convicted:—Held, first, that the justices were not deprived of the jurisdiction to convict him, by reason of the former conviction; and secondly, that the certificate was not a bar to the proceeding, but that the justices had jurisdiction to consider whether it was given bonâ fide or not, and that if they thought it was not, they might consider that A. had shewn no reasonable ground for his omission to carry the order into effect.

CASE stated by Justices under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43.

1. On the 8th day of May, 1869, the following information was laid before a justice of the peace for the county of Huntingdon, under the provisions of the 30 & 31 Vict. c. 84, "The Vaccination Act, 1867":—

"Be it remembered that, on the 8th day of May, 1869, at St. Neots, in the said county of Huntingdon, Alfred Worthy, of Eynesbury, in the said county of Huntingdon, registrar of births and deaths, personally cometh before me, the undersigned, one of her Majesty's justices of the peace in and for the said county, and informeth me that Henry James Allen, late of the parish of Eynesbury aforesaid, dissenting minister, within the space of six calendar months last past, to wit, on the 8th day of May, 1869, at the parish of Eynesbury, in the said county of Huntingdon, did disobey a certain order under the hand and seal of Captain William Humbley, one of her Majesty's justices of the peace for the said county of Huntingdon, bearing date the 29th day of April, 1869, whereby the said Henry James Allen was ordered and directed to have Eliza Allen, under the age of fourteen years, and the legitimate child of the said Henry James Allen, vaccinated within seven days from the date of the said order, contrary to the form of the statute in such case made and provided. Wherefore, the said Alfred Worthy prayeth the consideration of me, the said justice, in the premises, and that the said Henry James Allen may be summoned to appear before me and answer the premises, and make his defence thereto.

"Alfred Worthy.

"Exhibited before me, the day and year and at the place first above written.

"W. Humbley."

2. The justice issued his summons to Henry J. Allen to appear at the petty sessions, St. Neots, on the 13th day of May, 1869.

3. At the hearing before the justices who stated this case, it was proved that the following order had been made and served on the appellant:—

"To H. J. Allen, of Eynesbury, in the county of Huntingdon, dissenting minister.

"Whereas, by an information taken before the undersigned, Captain William Humbley, one of her Majesty's justices of the peace in and for the said county, on the 22nd day of April now instant, Alfred Worthy, of Eynesbury, in the county of Huntingdon, registrar of births and deaths for the district of the St. Neots Union, comprising the said parish of Eynesbury, informed me, the said justice, that Eliza Allen, under the age of fourteen years, the legitimate child of you, the said H. J.

Allen, had not been successfully vaccinated, notwithstanding that he, the said Alfred Worthy, had given notice to you, the said H. J. Allen, to procure such child to be vaccinated, contrary to the form of the statute in such case made and provided. Whereupon I, the said justice, issued my summons to you, the said H. J. Allen, directing you to appear with the said child before me, the said justice, or some other justice of the peace for the said county, on the 29th day of April instant, to shew cause why such child had not been vaccinated. And whereas you, the said H. J. Allen, have this day appeared before me, the said justice, and it being now made to appear to me, on oath, that the said Eliza Allen is under the age of fourteen years, and has not been vaccinated, and has not had the small-pox, and you, the said H. J. Allen, having failed to shew any reason why the said Eliza Allen should not be vaccinated: Now I, the undersigned, do hereby order and direct you, the said H. J. Allen, to have the said Eliza Allen vaccinated within seven days from the date of this order.

"Given under my hand and seal, this 29th day of April, 1869, at St. Neots, in the county aforesaid.

"W. Humbley (L.S.)"

4. It was proved that the appellant had neglected to obey the order, and it was admitted that the child had not, at the time of the hearing, been vaccinated.

5. The appellant stated, and the fact was admitted by the respondent, that the appellant had previously, on the 30th of March, 1869, been convicted of disobeying an order dated the 11th of March, 1869, under the hand and seal of a justice of the county, whereby the appellant had been ordered to cause Eliza Allen to be vaccinated within seven days from the date of such last-mentioned order.

6. It was therefore contended on behalf of the appellant, that the information now laid against him was for the same offence, and that therefore the appellant could not be again convicted, and stress was laid on the concluding words of the Lord Chief Justice Cockburn, in the judgment pronounced in Filcher v. Stafford (1).

(1) 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 113.

7. We however considered that the jurisdiction of justices, under s. 31 of the Vaccination Act of 1867, was not limited to making but one order, directing a child under 14 years to be vaccinated, and that the neglect to obey such order formed a separate offence punishable on conviction, and that the conviction for disobeying a previous order was no previous conviction of the offence charged in the information before us, and that consequently the case was in no way governed by the decision in Pilcher v. Stafford, and that s. 31 of the Vaccination Act, 1867, appeared to us to have been inserted in such Act, with the object of avoiding the mischief found to exist when Pilcher v. Stafford was decided.

8. The appellant then contended that Eliza Allen was then, and, since the 30th of April then last past, had been in an unfit state for vaccination, and in support of this contention, produced a certificate of which the following is a copy:—

[Form B.] “The Vaccination Act of 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 84).

“Medical Certificate of unfitness for successful vaccination. [To be delivered (pursuant to s. 18) to the father or mother of an unvaccinated child, or to the person having the custody of such child.]

“I the undersigned hereby certify that I am of opinion that Eliza Allen, the child of H. J. Allen, of Eynesbury, in the parish of Eynesbury, in the county or borough of Hunts, aged 12, is not now in a fit and proper state to be successfully vaccinated. I do here postpone the vaccination until the 20th of June, dated this 20th of April, 1869.”

W. J. Collins, M.D., &c.

“1 Albert Terrace, Regent's Park.”

And it was contended, on behalf of the appellant, that the justices were bound by the terms of the Vaccination Act of 1867, to accept such certificate as proof that the child was then unfit to be vaccinated, and that the production of such certificate was reasonable ground for the omission of the appellant to carry the order of the 29th of April, 1869, into effect.

9. “We drew attention to the fact that such certificate was dated prior to the date of the order of the 29th of April, 1869, and it was admitted that the same certificate had been produced when such last-mentioned order was made, but the justice making such order had refused to attach any weight to such certificate, on the ground that the practitioner by whom such certificate purported to have been signed was opposed to the operation of vaccination generally, as had been stated by the appellant on a previous occasion, and such practitioner has signed a certificate under the Vaccination Act of 1867, and which had been on such previous occasion produced in Court, stating that Eliza Allen ought never to be vaccinated; that the reproduction of such certificate of the 20th of April, 1869, which had been refused by the justice making the order of the 29th of April, 1869, formed, under such circumstances, no reasonable ground for the omission of the appellant to carry into effect such order, and we therefore convicted the appellant, and adjudged him to pay a penalty or sum of 7s., and the sum of 3s. for costs, such sums to be respectively levied by distress, and in default of sufficient distress, we adjudged the appellant to be committed to the common gaol at Great Stukeley, in the county of Huntingdon, for a period of 14 days.”

The questions for the opinion of the Court were: First, Whether the conviction of the appellant on the 30th of March, 1869, was a sufficient defence to the information of the 8th of May, 1869. Second, Whether the production of the medical certificate set out in the case was a sufficient answer to the information of the 8th of May, 1869.

Graham, for the appellant.—The first question is whether the justices had jurisdiction to enforce the penalty under the 31st section of 30 & 31 Vict. c. 84, the appellant having been already convicted for discharging the order made upon the 30th of March (2).

(2) The 30 & 31 Vict. c. 84. s. 18. enacts, “If any public vaccinator or medical practitioner shall be of opinion that the child is not in a fit and proper state to be successfully vaccinated, he shall forthwith deliver to the parent or other person having the custody of such child, a certificate under his hand according to the Form in the schedule hereto

This point is settled in the appellant's favour by Pilcher v. Stafford (1). It was there held, under 16 & 17 Vict. c. 100, that a parent having been fined for neglecting to have his child vaccinated, no further proceeding could be taken against him. There is no material difference between the two statutes in respect of this matter, and the proceeding now in question is substantially a proceeding for neglecting to have the child vaccinated. In that case, Cockburn, C.J., after saying that the Act did not enact a remedy, continued as follows: "If we were to hold otherwise on the present enactments, it would follow that for every day during which the omission to vaccinate a child continues, a penalty would be incurred, so that the penalties might accumulate to a very serious amount, which could never have been the intention of the legislature." So, under the statute now in question, there is nothing to shew that a person may be fined toties quoties. If it had been so intended, the legislature would have said so, having in view the decision in Pilcher v. Stafford (1). Nor is there anything to shew that the registrar can give the notice provided for by the 15th section more than once, so as to make the parent repeatedly liable to the penalty. That notice is to be given for the benefit and protection of the parent, not to authorise the imposition of repeated penalties.

annexed marked B, or to the like effect, that the child is then in a state unfit for successful vaccination, which certificate shall remain in force for two months, and shall be renewable for successive periods of two months until a public vaccinator or medical practitioner shall deem the child to be in a fit state for successful vaccination, when the child shall, with all reasonable despatch, be vaccinated, and the certificate of successful vaccination duly given if warranted by the result."

Section 29. "Every parent or person having the custody of a child, who shall neglect to take such child, or to cause it to be taken to be vaccinated, or, after vaccination, to be inspected, according to the provisions of this Act, and shall not render a reasonable excuse for his neglect, shall be guilty of an offence, and be liable to be proceeded against summarily, and upon conviction to pay a penalty not exceeding twenty shillings."

Section 31. "If any registrar, or any officer appointed by the guardians to enforce the provisions of this Act, shall give information in writing to a justice of the peace that he has reason to believe, that any child under the age of 14 years, being within the union or parish for which the informant acts, has not been successfully vaccinated, and that he has given notice to the parent or person having the custody of such child to procure its being vaccinated, and that this notice has been disregarded, the justice may summon such parent or person to appear with the child before him at a certain time and place, and upon the appearance, if the justice shall find, after such examination as he shall deem necessary, that the child has not been vaccinated, nor has already had the small-pox, he may, if he see fit, make an order under his hand and seal, directing such child to be vaccinated within a certain time; and if, at the expiration of such time, the child shall not have been so vaccinated, or shall not be shewn to be then unfit to be vaccinated, or to be insusceptible of vaccination, the person upon whom such order shall have been made shall be proceeded against summarily; and, unless he can shew some reasonable ground for his omission to carry the order into effect, shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding twenty shillings. Provided that if the justice shall be of opinion that the person is improperly brought before him, and shall refuse to make any order for the vaccination of the child, he may order the informant to pay to such person, such sum of money as he shall consider to be a fair compensation for his expenses and loss of time in attending before the justice."

Section 34. "In any prosecution for neglect to procure the vaccination of a child, it shall not be necessary in support thereof, to prove that the defendant had received notice from the registrar or any other officer, of the requirements of the law in this respect; but if the defendant produce any such certificate as herein-before described, or the registrar of vaccinations kept by the registrar as herein-before provided, in which the certificate of successful vaccination of such child shall be duly entered, the same shall be a sufficient defence for him, except in regard to the certificate marked B, when the time specified therein for the postponement of the vaccination shall have expired before the time when the information shall have been laid."

The second point raises the question whether the production of the certificate in the form furnished by 16 & 17 Vict. c. 100, schedule B (3) did not constitute a defence to the proceeding against the appellant. The justices were wrong in their decision upon this point. Even if they had a discretion, under the concluding words of the 31st section, to hold that the appellant did not shew any reasonable ground for his omission to carry the order into effect, they seem to have so held in this case, simply because the justice who made the order of the 29th of April, thought that the practitioner, who gave the certificate, objected to vaccination altogether. But the production of the certificate was a defence under section 34, a defence not to be confounded with the reasonable ground for the omission referred to in section 31. But, further, the intention was, that the medical practitioner, and not the justice, should decide whether the child was in a fit and proper state to be successfully vaccinated.

(3) It was observed by Hannen, J., that although the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 100 is repealed by 30 & 31 Vict. c. 84, there is no schedule printed with that statute in the edition of the Statutes used in the Court. It will, however, be found to be properly inserted in the edition of the statutes published with the Law Journal Reports, and also in that published by the Law Reports.

[MELLOR, J.—This order is made upon the appellant in consequence of his disobedience of the former order, and was not a prosecution for neglect to procure the vaccination of the child within s. 34.]

The Solicitor General, Sir J. D. Coleridge (Archibald with him), for the respondent. The decision in Pilcher v. Stafford (1) was quite right, and need not be disputed in the present case. It was given under 16 & 17 Vict. c. 100, which was repealed by the statute now in question. This later act, in the earlier sections, gives a similar mode of proceeding, but by the 31st section gives additional machinery and additional powers for the very purpose of enabling measures to be taken more effectual than those which, under 16 & 17 Vict. c. 190, had been found defective in attaining the salutary objective view. It being found that the appellant refused to have the child vaccinated, proceedings were taken against him anew for disobedience of the order, and the justices had power, under section 31, to make the order now appealed against, as the appellant persisted in neglecting to have the child vaccinated. It is clear that the justices are not prevented from hearing a fresh application when the former order is disobeyed, for by section 31, if the order has been obeyed, but the vaccination has not been successful, they may summon the parent to appear before them, and may make an order if they see fit. So long as the child is under the age of 14 years, this proceeding may be taken as often as may be necessary.

[MELLOR, J.—The policy of the legislature was to insure the vaccination being successful.]

Then the question arises whether the certificate was a bar to the proceeding. It is submitted that it was not. The justices say in the case, "We drew attention to the fact that such certificate was dated on a day prior to the date of the order of the 29th of April, 1869, and it was admitted that the same certificate was produced when such last-mentioned order was made, and it appears that the justice who made the order refused to attach any merit to the certificate, because the practitioner who signed it was opposed to the operation of vaccination generally, as had been stated by the appellant on a previous occasion."

[COCKBURN, C.J.—The language of the certificate is ambiguous; it may mean that there was something peculiar about this child, or it may mean that, in common with all children, it was not a fit subject for vaccination.]

Under 16 & 17 Vict. c. 100. s. 5, the certificate was conclusive for two months, but under section 31 of 30 & 31 Vict. c. 84, the justices are to decide whether any reasonable ground can be shewn for the omission to carry the order into effect. The case shews that they did so consider, and they decide that no such reasonable ground was shewn. It cannot be that a medical practitioner, by giving such a certificate malâ fide, can altogether free the parent from the obligation cast upon him.

[COCKBURN, C.J.—It is evidence upon which the justice may act if he sees fit.]

Graham in reply.—If the certificate is given malâ fide, the proper remedy is by proceeding, under section 30, against the medical practitioner for misdemeanour. He is the judge to decide whether the child is a fit subject for vaccination or not; section 34 overrides section 31, and makes the certificate a sufficient defence. But even if the justices were entitled to consider whether it was honestly given or not, there is nothing whatever to shew malâ fides.

COCKBURN, C.J.—After the full discussion which we have had of the several provisions of these statutes, I think that we must decide that the justices were right in convicting the appellant.

It is quite clear that it was intended by the 31st section of 30 & 31 Vict. c. 84 to give additional powers to the officers appointed for the purpose of insuring and enforcing the operation of vaccination. This Act, however, does not repeal or suspend the machinery founded by the previous statute 16 & 17 Vict. c. 100. By the earlier sections it re-enacts what had been provided for by that Act. By section 15, the registrar is to give notice of vaccination to the parents, or other persons registering births. By section 16, those persons are to procure the vaccination of children within three months. The 29th section makes it an offence to neglect to procure the vaccination of the child. There is, however, an enactment relating to the voluntary procuring of vaccination by the parents without the intervention of magisterial authority. This is a provision that if the public vaccinator or a medical practitioner shall be of opinion that the child is not in a fit and proper state to be successfully vaccinated, he shall give a certificate to that effect, which shall remain in force for two months, and may be renewed from time to time. If no such certificate be given, or if the time has expired and the child has not been vaccinated, an offence within section 29 is committed. But all that has nothing to do with any magisterial intervention, according to the construction which was put upon the former statute in Pilcher v. Stafford (1), and which was a perfectly correct decision; it was there held that when the offence was once completed, and the offender had been convicted and punished by the infliction of a penalty, there was no provision in the statute whereby a fresh offence was created with a liability to a fresh penalty. But here the question is whether the new machinery introduced by section 31 has not made a difference. It is clear that if the 31st section had not been introduced, the decision in Pilcher v. Stafford (1) would have applied; but I think that that section makes all the difference as regards what may now be done with respect to a second offence and a second penalty. The 31st section provides that if any child, under the age of 14 years, has not been successfully vaccinated (which includes the not having been vaccinated at all), notice may be given by the registrar to the parents to have the child vaccinated, and in the event of that notice not being complied with, information may be given to the justice, who may enquire into the matter, and if he is satisfied that the child has not been vaccinated, and has not had the small-pox, he may order that the child shall be vaccinated within a certain time. If this order is not obeyed, the section creates an offence; namely, the offence of not having complied with the order. Now, in this case, the appellant received notice that he must procure the vaccination of the child. The justice made an order, and it was not complied with. An information was then laid against the appellant, he was convicted, and a penalty was imposed. Nevertheless, the order was not complied with, and it became necessary to renew the proceedings under the 31st section. A fresh notice was given, the matter was again brought before the justice, and a fresh order was made, which also was disobeyed; and now the appellant has been convicted of disobeying that order under the provisions contained in section 31. It is said that the power of the registrar to give such an order under section 31 is gone as soon as he has once given such an order, and that a person cannot be convicted toties quoties, as often as occasion shall arise when he has disobeyed successive orders. At first, I was inclined to think that there was some reason for that contention, and still I think that the intention is not so clearly expressed as it might have been, but the Solicitor-General has satisfied me that it is competent for the registrar to repeat his notice, and therefore that it is competent for the justice to make his order toties quoties, so often as a fresh notice is given, and so long as the child remains unvaccinated. The language is general, and when we look at the intention of the legislature, we are bound to put a reasonable construction upon the language of the statute. It was intended to effect a great public good by caring for the health of persons, and especially for the health of children who are not able to help themselves. It is not necessary here to discuss whether vaccination is a blessing or not; the legislature has thought it a matter of great public importance, and therefore the statute has been passed, and is to be enforced. • I think, therefore, that the power given by section 31 is not confined to one notice, one order, and one conviction, but that the whole proceeding may be instituted toties quoties, so long as the disobedience continues.

But then it is said that the certificate which has been given and produced was an answer to the proceedings, and the question is whether that is so with regard to proceedings taken under section 31. I think that it is not. I think that the effect given by the statute to the certificate has no reference to such proceedings. It is to be observed that the giving of the certificate is provided for by section 19, which follows immediately after the legislation which provides for what is to be done by parents within three months after the birth of the child, and prima facie, I think that it must be taken to be confined to these proceedings, and not to such as are instituted under section 31. And there is an obvious distinction; the earlier sections have reference to what a parent is to do upon notice being given of what the statute requires. If he fails to fulfil the requirements of the statute, then he is punishable under section 29. Under that section it may well be said that it would be a sufficient answer to say, "I have a certificate that the child is not in a fit and proper state to be successfully vaccinated," because in such a case there has been no intervention of a magisterial tribunal establishing that the child is in a fit state to be vaccinated. But it is a different thing when you come to the 31st section, where notice having been given by the registrar, the matter is brought before the justice, who, only after making full inquiry, is competent to make the order. It would then be fit that the certificate should be carefully considered, but not to the extent of taking away from him the judicial discretion which it would be his duty, in the exercise of his functions, to bestow upon the case.

I think it plain, when I look at the 31st section, that it was never intended that such a certificate should have the effect of ousting the exercise of the independent discretion of the justices, as judges, to determine whether the order should be made or not. The section does not refer to the certificate. There is a total silence as to the certificate. [His Lordship read the section.] The person is to be proceeded against for disobedience of the order, unless he can shew some reasonable ground, &c. Of the reasonableness of the ground shewn the justice is to be the judge. But then Mr. Graham says that we must look at section 34, which provides that the certificate shall be a sufficient defence. [His Lordship read the section.] But that has no reference to section 31. If it had not reference to evidence it would have been introduced after the earlier sections, to which I have before referred. It is to be a defence in a "prosecution for neglect to procure the vaccination of a child," thus applying not to section 31, where the proceeding is for disobedience of the order, but to the prosecution under the earlier sections. The same 34th section also provides that it shall not be necessary to prove that the defendant had received notice—of what? Why, notice of the requirements of the law in respect of the vaccination of the child, thus referring again to the earlier sections. It was, therefore, for the justices to consider whether the order had been disobeyed, and whether the penalty should be enforced. They would have to consider the effect of the certificate, and if they were satisfied that it was not bona fide made, or not one on which they ought to act, it would be perfectly competent for them to convict the appellant. It is not our office to decide whether or not they were hasty in arriving at the conclusion at which they did arrive. The certificate ought to be taken into consideration with the other circumstances of the case, but it is enough for us to say that it is not an answer to the charge against the appellant so as to deprive the justices of the power to convict him.

MELLOR, J.—The decision in Pilcher v. Stafford (1) was a right decision as the law then stood. But alterations are made by the late statutes, and the manifest duty of the Court is to uphold the obvious policy of the legislature as far as the language of the statute enables us so to do, without straining expressions or interpolating words. It appears to me that the 34th section applies only to such cases as come within the 15th, 16th and 29th sections, and I think that it might more consistently have been inserted immediately after the 29th section. We must read it as if it stood in that place. Then what is the effect of the statute? The 15th, 16th and 29th sections apply to the vaccination of children of tender years, and the three forms of certificates given in the schedules apply to proceedings under those sections, but have no application to a proceeding under section 31 for disobedience of the order. The policy of the legislature was that the power of the justices should be extended so as to enable them to deal with the cases of children up to the age of 14 years. That is the limit as far as age is concerned, and I think that the legislature intended that, within such limit, there should not be any absolute bar to the power of the justices to compel the vaccination of the child. Whether the justices in this case exercised a wise discretion or not, is not for us to say, but I am of opinion that so long as vaccination has not been successfully performed upon a child, so long is the parent or the person having the custody of the child liable to be proceeded against under this Act, in order to compel the vaccination, until the child has attained the age of 14 years. The justices were therefore right, and our judgment must be for the respondent.

HANNEN, J.—I am of the same opinion, and have nothing to add.

Judgment for the respondent.

Attorneys—Thomas & Holland, agents for Conquest & Stimson, Bedford, for appellant; the Solicitor to the Treasury, for respondent.

[IN THE COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.]

1870. } THOMAS, appellant, v. ALSOP, re-
Jan. 19. } spondent.

Order of Maintenance—Wife chargeable to Union without her Husband—Wife leaving Husband through his misconduct—Offer of Husband to receive back Wife.

By the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 122), s. 33, when a married woman requires relief without her husband, the guardians of the union or parish, or the overseers of the parish, as the case may be, to which she becomes chargeable, may apply to the justices having jurisdiction in such union or parish in petty sessions assembled, and thereupon such justices may summon such husband to appear before them, to shew cause why an order should not be made upon him to maintain his wife; and upon his appearance, or in the event of his not appearing, upon proof of due service of such summons upon him, such justices may, after hearing such wife upon oath, or receiving such other evidence as they may deem sufficient, make an order upon him to pay such sum weekly or otherwise, towards the cost of the relief of the wife, as after consideration of all the circumstances of the case shall appear to them to be proper, &c. A husband having been summoned before justices under this section, it appeared that his wife had, about sixteen years previously, left his house, owing to his ill-usage, and had ever since lived separate from him. At the hearing of the summons she was still suffering from injury which she had received from him before their separation. He now offered to receive back his wife and promised not to ill use her, but she refused to go back, and there was medical evidence to shew that it would be dangerous for her to return to cohabitation:—Held, that the justices had jurisdiction, notwithstanding the husband's offer, to make an order, under the above section, upon him for the maintenance of his wife.

CASE stated by Justices under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43.

At a petty sessions for the division of Teignbridge, in Devon, on July 27th, 1869, an information and complaint preferred by John Alsop, of Newton Abbot, clerk to the Board of Guardians of the Newton Abbot Union (the respondent), against James Thomas, of Newton Abbot, watchmaker (the appellant), under the 33rd section of the Act 31 & 32 Vict. c. 122 (1),—setting forth that the respondent, at a petty sessions held at the Town Hall, Newton Abbot, on July 23rd, 1869, made an information and complaint, that on July 6th then last past, Thirza Thomas, late of Ashburton, in the said county, but then of the parish of Wolborough in Devon, the lawful wife of the appellant, being a married woman and requiring relief without her husband, had become chargeable to the Newton Abbot Union, and was then chargeable thereto, and that the board of guardians of the union had instructed the complainant (the respondent) to apply that the appellant might be summoned to shew cause why an order should not be made on him to maintain his wife,—was heard and determined by the Justices; and the appellant was ordered to pay to one of the relieving officers of the union every week, from the 27th day of July, 1869, the sum of seven shillings for and towards the relief and maintenance of his wife, for and during so long a time

(1) By 31 & 32 Vict. c. 122. "An Act to make further Amendments in the Laws for the Relief of the Poor in England and Wales," s. 33, when a married woman requires relief without her husband, the guardians of the union or parish, or the overseers of the parish, as the case may be, to which she becomes chargeable, may apply to the justices having jurisdiction in such union or parish in petty sessions assembled, and thereupon such justices may summon such husband to appear before them to shew cause why an order should not be made upon him to maintain his wife; and upon his appearance, or in the event of his not appearing, upon proof of due service of such summons upon him, such justices may, upon hearing such wife upon oath, or receiving such other evidence as they may deem sufficient, make an order upon him to pay such sum, weekly or otherwise, towards the cost of the relief of the wife, as, after consideration of all the circumstances of the case, shall appear to them to be proper, and shall determine in such order, how and to whom the payments shall from time to time be made; which order shall, if the payments required by it to be made be in arrear, be enforced in the manner prescribed by the act 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, for the enforcing of orders of justices requiring the payment of a sum of money. Provided that such orders may be at any future time revoked by the justices in petty sessions assembled, if they see sufficient cause for so doing.

as she should require relief, or until the order should be revoked.

It was proved on the part of the respondent, and found as a fact, that Thirza Thomas was the lawful wife of the appellant, and was duly married at the parish church of St. Olave, in the city of Exeter, and in the county of the same city, on the 7th of August, 1835, as appeared by the certificate produced. That she lived with the appellant from the date of her marriage up to the 17th of March, 1853, when, in consequence of the ill usage she received from him, she left his house and lived separate from him; and that she was then, at the time of hearing the information, suffering from the injury she had received from him prior to her separation. That she was suffering from uterine disease, from which she had suffered for sixteen years, and that after such a long continuance it was now incurable.

That the appellant had not contributed to the support of his wife during the separation, but had applied to his wife to return to cohabitation. That since the separation she had exhausted what little means she had, and had been supported by the bounty of her friends; that her health was bad, her sight not good, and that she was now wholly unable to maintain herself, and that she required relief.

That whilst residing in the parish of Ashburton, within the Newton Abbot Union, she became chargeable to the common fund of the union, on the 6th of July, 1869, and was then at the time of hearing the information and complaint an inmate of the Newton Abbot Union House, and still chargeable thereto.

That the appellant, at the hearing of the case, through his attorney, offered to receive back his wife at his (appellant's) house and provide for her. That she declined to return to the appellant, from the brutality she had previously received from him, and medical evidence was called, and it was proved to the satisfaction of the justices that it would be injurious to her health to return to cohabitation with him.

It was contended on the part of the appellant, that inasmuch as his wife had, in the presence of the Court, refused to return back to cohabitation with him, who then again offered her a home and made promise not to ill-use her, that the justices had no jurisdiction, and were debarred from making any order on the appellant after such refusal; and the appellant relied on the case, Flannagan v. The Overseers of Bishopwearmouth (2), an appeal on a case stated by justices on 5th George 4. c. 83. s. 3 (the Vagrant Act), in support of his argument, and argued that by such refusal to return, the wife had no further claim on the appellant, and no payment could be required of him after such declaration on her part.

The justices, however, were of opinion that the 33rd section of 31 & 32 Vict. c. 122. was not affected by that decision, but provided expressly for cases to which this decision would have previously been applicable, and that consequently they had power to make an order on the appellant under the 33rd section of 31 & 32 Vict. c. 122.

The question of law arising on the above statements for the opinion of this Court therefore is—Whether the justices had jurisdiction to make such an order after the appellant had offered to receive and provide for his wife in manner before stated.

If the Court should be of opinion that the order was legally and properly made, and the appellant is liable as aforesaid, then the order is to stand. But if the Court should be of opinion otherwise, then the information and complaint is to be dismissed, and the Court is hereby solicited, according to 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43, to remit the case to the justices with the opinion of the Court thereon.

McKellar, for the appellant.—The justices had no jurisdiction to make the order in question. No proof was given that the wife required relief within the meaning of the Act. The husband offered to do everything in his power for her support. He proposed to take her back to his house, and promised to treat her with kindness. All that can be said is that he has not provided her with a separate maintenance, but this is no ground for making him liable to the provisions of a penal statute. In Flannagan v. The Overseers of Bishopwearmouth (2), the appellant was summoned under The Vagrant Act, 5 Geo. 4. c. 83. s. 3 (3), upon the charge of wilfully refusing or neglecting to maintain his wife. At the hearing of the summons he offered to maintain his wife if she would come and live with him, but this she refused to do, alleging that he had assaulted her and illused her, and that she was afraid to live with him. The magistrates, being satisfied that the appellant had been guilty of ill-usage, convicted him under the section, though he offered to maintain his wife in future, and to treat her with kindness. But the Court of Queen's Bench quashed the conviction, and Lord Campbell said, "Here the justices seem to have supposed that because the wife might have good ground for refusing to return and live with her husband, that rendered him liable to the offence of wilfully refusing to maintain her under the Vagrant Act. As the law stood, although her apprehensions were well founded, it could not be said that there had been any wilful refusal of the husband to maintain his wife, and the conviction therefore must be quashed." And Wightman, J., adds: "This is an attempt, it would seem, to enforce a separate maintenance in a case where a husband has refused to make his wife a separate allowance." In the present case, a similar attempt was made to enforce a judicial separation before two justices at petty sessions, when the proper course was for the wife to apply to the Divorce Court for relief. In Cargill v. Cargill (4), it was intimated that the offer of a husband, who has deserted his wife, to take her and to provide for her, will take away her right to an order for the protection of her property under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85. s. 21. as there can be no desertion except where the wife is left without provision.

(3) Which enacts that every person, being able wholly or in part to maintain himself or herself, or his or her family, by work or by other means, and wilfully refusing or neglecting so to do, by which refusal or neglect he or she or any of his or her family whom he or she may be legally bound to maintain, shall have become chargeable to any parish, township, or place, &c., shall be deemed an idle and disorderly person, within the true intent and meaning of the Act, and may be committed to hard labour for any term not exceeding one calendar month.

(4) 27 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. & M. 69.

(2) 3 E. & B. 451; s. c. 27 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 46.

[MELLOR, J.—The process under the present Act is more like the recovery of a debt than that of a penalty, nothing is said about the desertion of the wife. COCKBURN, C.J.—If the circumstances were such as to enable the wife to pledge her husband's credit, she was entitled to relief within the meaning of the Act.]

The wife did not require relief apart from her husband, so as to become legally chargeable to the union. The relief which she claimed was relief which the husband was willing to give.

[LUSH, J.—The relief was offered upon terms which the wife was not bound to accept. It was a question for the justices whether the husband had or had not altered his conduct.]

The wife has not become chargeable as a direct consequence of the husband's conduct. He cited Burn's Justice of the Peace, 29th edition, Vol. IV. 299; The King v. Flintan (5), Sweeney v. Spooner (6).

Bere, for the respondent, was not called upon to argue.

COCKBURN, C.J.—I think that we need not call on the counsel for the respondent, and that our judgment must be in approval of what the justices have done. The Act of Parliament, which we are called upon to consider, differs most essentially from the Vagrant Act, 5 Geo. 4. c. 83, upon which the case of Flannagan v. The Overseers of the Poor of Bishopwearmouth (2), was decided. By the Act of 5 Geo. 4. a man was made punishable who wilfully refused or neglected to maintain his wife. This is a different case. Here by 31 & 32 Vict. c. 122. s. 33, when a married woman requires relief without her husband the guardians of the union or parish, or the overseers of the parish, as the case may be, to which she becomes chargeable, may apply to the justices having jurisdiction in such union or parish in petty sessions; who may summon the husband before them to shew cause why he should not maintain his wife, and after hearing the wife and receiving such other evidence as they may deem sufficient, may make an order upon him for the payment of such weekly sum for the support of his wife as they may think proper under the circumstances of the case. Now it is quite clear that this is an enactment altogether different in scope and effect from the former one, and the only difficulty arises upon the particular state of facts to which this enactment is to be applied. It appears that the wife, some years ago, left her husband's house in consequence of his violence, and no one contends that where a wife is subject to personal ill-treatment, she is not justified in leaving her husband's house, and in refusing to return to it, unless she thinks that his temper has changed, and that it is safe for her to return. In this case the wife having left the husband seeks and is entitled to relief from the union, and the husband being summoned to shew cause why an order should not be made upon him for the maintenance of his wife, says, as a reason why it should not be made, that he is ready and willing to maintain her when she returns to him. Now the magistrates do not ask us to decide whether the wife was right in leaving her husband, or in refusing to return to him, they only ask whether the offer to take her back ousts them of their jurisdiction. I am of opinion that it does not. It is for the magistrates to determine whether the wife is bound to return to her husband. If the wife is driven to leave her husband, he is bound to maintain her, not in the conjugal home, but while living apart from him, and if he refuses to do so, she is justified in pledging his credit for necessities. I think that it is quite clear that, under the circumstances before us, she did require relief within the meaning of the Act. The magistrates have found as a fact that she did, and sitting in their place I should have come to the same conclusion. It is, however, only necessary for us to say that their jurisdiction was not ousted, and I think that there can be no doubt about our decision. The consequences of holding otherwise would be a most serious evil, for the wife would be obliged either to go back to her husband and submit to his ill-treatment, or get no relief at all. The order of the justices must be confirmed.

(5) 1 B. & Ad. 227.

(6) 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 82.

MELLOR, J.—I also think that the magistrates had jurisdiction. Some of the facts are such as would make it necessary that I should have a little more explanation before I was quite satisfied as to the merits of the case. But the magistrates have relieved us from any difficulty. They seem to have thought and to have found that the wife was under a reasonable apprehension of violence from her husband, and that she was not bound to return to him. The case to which we have been referred was decided upon the construction of the Vagrant Act, a statute which makes it a criminal offence for a man to wilfully neglect or refuse to maintain his wife. The Court, in giving judgment, seem to have used stronger language than was absolutely necessary for the decision of that case. For it is quite clear that if the wife must return to her husband or be disqualified from obtaining relief, she is in danger of being starved. And I cannot help thinking that the later Act was intended to give an additional jurisdiction to the justices, in order to enable them if necessary to compel a husband to provide his wife with necessities, and that this jurisdiction is not affected by cases upon the Vagrant Act.

LUSH, J.—I entirely agree with the rest of the Court in holding that the magistrates had jurisdiction, and that the case of Flannagan v. The Overseers of Bishopwearmouth (2) is distinguishable on the grounds stated by the Lord Chief Justice. The statute now under consideration is framed differently from the Vagrant Act, and was passed for a different purpose. I understand the magistrates to have come to the conclusion that this woman was some years ago driven from her home by her husband's violence, and that although he now offers to take her back, she refuses the offer, on a well founded apprehension of future violence. This being so, and the wife having no means of supporting herself so as to escape from her husband's violence, she becomes chargeable on the union, and the magistrates in making the order for the payment by the husband of a specific sum, were providing for the very case for which the statute was passed.

Judgment for the respondent.

Attorneys—Vizard, Crowder, & Co., agents for E. Square, Plymouth, for appellant; Church, Sons, & Clarke, agents for Francis & Baker, Newton Abbot, for respondent.

[CROWN CASE RESERVED.]

1870. } REGINA v. FALKINGHAM AND
Jan. 22. } FALKINGHAM.*

*Children—Abandonment and exposure—
Life endangered—24 & 25 Vict. c. 100. s. 27.*

The prisoners were convicted on an indictment which charged that they did abandon and expose a child, under the age of two years, whereby the life of the child was endangered. The indictment was framed on the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100. s. 27. One of the prisoners was the mother of the child, which was illegitimate, and both the prisoners put the child in a hamper at S., wrapped up in a shawl, and packed with shavings and cotton wool, and the mother took the hamper to the booking office of the railway station at M., and left it, having paid the carriage of it to G. The hamper was addressed to the lodgings of the father of the child at G. She told the clerk at the office to be very careful of it, and to send it by the next train, which was due in ten minutes from that time. Upon the address were the words written "With care; to be delivered immediately." The hamper was carried by the passenger train, and was delivered at its address in a little less than an hour from leaving M. On its being opened the child was found alive. The child was taken by the relieving officer the same evening to the union workhouse, where it lived for three weeks afterwards, when it died from causes not attributable to the conduct of the prisoners, or either of them. It was proved to have been a delicate child:—Held, by a majority of the Judges, that the conviction was right.

*Coram Cockburn, C.J., Kelly, C.B., Bovill, C.J., Martin, B., Willes, J., Channell, B., Byles, J., Blackburn, J., Keating, J., Mellor, J., Pigott, B., Lush, J., Hannan, J., Brett, J., and Cleasby, B.

CASE reserved by the Chairman of the Quarter Sessions for the North Riding of Yorkshire.

The prisoners were indicted (1) at the Michaelmas Quarter Sessions of the Peace of the North Riding of Yorkshire for a misdemeanour, under the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100. s. 27.

The prisoner Mary Falkingham was the mother of the child, which was about five weeks old at the time mentioned in the indictment; at which time both prisoners were residing together at Stockton-on-Tees.

It was proved that the prisoner Mary Falkingham about four months previous to the birth of the child had an interview with the father of the child, who was then residing at Gisborough, in this Riding, at which interview they had a conversation relative to the maintenance of the child after it should be born. She told him that she would father the child on him, and that he would have to pay for it, to which the man replied, "I will not pay for it; but if you send it to me, I will keep it." Nothing was said by either of them as to the time at which or the mode by which the child was to be sent.

On the day named in the indictment, both prisoners put the child into a hamper, wrapped up in a woollen shawl, and packed with shavings and cotton wool, and the prisoner Mary Falkingham, with the knowledge and connivance of the other prisoner, took the hamper by a passenger vessel on the river Tees from Stockton, where they resided, to Middlesbrough (a distance of about four or five miles), at which latter place she took the hamper to the booking office of the railway station, and there left it, paying 6d. for the carriage thereof, and telling the clerk to be very careful of it and to send it to Gisborough by the next

(1) COPY OF THE INDICTMENT.

The jurors for our Lady the Queen upon their oath present—that Martha Falkingham and Mary Falkingham, on the 25th day of August, 1869, unlawfully and wilfully did abandon and expose a certain child, then being under the age of two years, whereby the life of the said child was endangered.

train, which would leave Middlesbrough in ten minutes from that time. She did not say anything as to the contents of the hamper. The hamper was addressed "Mr. Carra, Northoutgate, Gisbro'. With care; to be delivered immediately," at which address the father of the child was then lodging.

The hamper was carried by the ordinary passenger train from Middlesbrough to Gisborough, leaving the former place at 7.45 p.m., and arriving at Gisborough at 8.15 p.m. At 8.40 p.m. it was delivered by a railway porter at its address. On its being opened it was found to contain the child alive, and packed in manner before mentioned, with a paper, on which was written "Please take care of this child, for George Beaumont is the father of it."

The child was taken by the relieving officer the same evening to the union workhouse, where it lived for three weeks afterwards, at the expiration of which period it died from causes not attributable to the conduct of the prisoners, or either of them. It was proved to have been a delicate child.

The prisoners' counsel objected that upon these facts there was no evidence to go to the jury that the life of the child was endangered; and secondly, that there was no abandonment and no exposure of the child within the meaning of the statute. The Court overruled the objections, and left the case to the jury, who found both prisoners guilty.

At the request of the prisoners' counsel this Case was granted by the Court for the opinion of the Court of Criminal Appeal, whether the prisoners were rightly convicted.

[The Case was adjourned from the last sitting of the Court, for the purpose of obtaining the judgment of all the judges on it.

Shepherd now appeared for the prosecution, but was not instructed at the last sitting. He was not heard.]

COCKBURN, C.J. — We have considered this case. As no counsel appeared at the last sitting of the Court, we supposed that no counsel would be instructed to argue this case, and have accordingly proceeded to form our judgment without hearing an argument, and it is the opinion of a majority of the judges that the conviction should be affirmed. (2)

Conviction affirmed.

BAIL COURT. }
1869. REGINA v. JUSTICES OF
Nov. 25. } SURREY.*

Highway—Order of Sessions that Highway shall cease to be a Highway which the Parish is liable to repair—Appeal—27 & 28 Vict. c. 101. s. 21—"Like Proceedings"—5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 58.

By the 27 & 28 Vict. c. 101. s. 21, when any highway board consider any highway unnecessary for public use, they may direct the district surveyor to apply to two justices to view the same, and thereupon "the like proceedings shall be had as when application is made under the Highway Act, 1835, to procure the stopping up of any highway, save only that the order to be made thereupon, instead of directing the highway to be stopped up, shall direct that the same shall cease to be a highway which the parish is liable to repair," &c. That Act, by section 2, is to be construed as one with the Highway Act, 1862, which by section 42 is to be construed as one with the 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50. By s. 85 of 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50, the proceedings for stopping up and diverting a highway are provided for, and by section 88 an appeal to Quarter Sessions is given to any person who would be injured or aggrieved by an order to stop up any unnecessary highway under that Act:—Held, that an appeal to Quarter Sessions lay under the 27 & 28 Vict. c. 101. s. 21, against an order directing that a highway should cease to be a highway which the parish is liable to repair.

At the Michaelmas Quarter Sessions for the County of Surrey, two applications were made to that Court to enrol four

(2) By rule of this Court of 1st of June, 1850, it is ordered that "when any case is intended to be argued by counsel, or by the parties, notice thereof be given to the clerk of this Court at least two days previously to the sitting of the said Court" [See for this rule Burn's Justice of the Peace, 30th ed. vol. 1. p. 271. tit. Appeal.]

* CORAM HANSON J.

NEW SERIES, 39.—MAG. CAS.

certificates (made under the 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50. s. 85, and the 27 & 28 Vict. c. 101. s. 21, by justices who had viewed certain highways, and had certified that it appeared to them on such view, that the said highways were unnecessary for public use), and to make orders that the said highways should cease to be highways which the parish is liable to repair. Against these applications and orders, Edward Eager had given notice of appeal. Upon the applications being made and being objected to, it was insisted for the applicant that no right of appeal lay against such applications and orders, and that the sessions had no jurisdiction to hear such appeals.

Gates on a former day obtained a rule to shew cause why a writ of mandamus should not issue, directed to the justices of Surrey, commanding them to enter, or cause to be entered, continuances from session to session to the next general Quarter Sessions of the peace to be holden in and for the said county, to hear the several appeals of Edward Eager against the enrolment of four several certificates bearing date on or about the 18th of September, 1869, made for the purpose of rendering irreparable certain highways. (1)

Robinson, Serjt. (Thesiger with him) now shewed cause.—This rule should be discharged because no appeal lies under the 27 & 28 Vict. c. 101. s. 21, against an order

(1) The following sections of the statutes are material:—

By the 27 & 28 Vict. c. 101. s. 21, when any highway board consider any highway unnecessary for public use, they may direct the district surveyor to apply to two justices to view the same, and thereupon the like proceedings shall be had as where application is made under the "Highway Act, 1835," to procure the stopping up of any highway, save only that the order to be made thereupon, instead of directing the highway to be stopped up, shall direct that the same shall cease to be a highway which the parish is liable to repair, and the liability of the parish shall cease accordingly; and for the purpose of such proceedings under this enactment, such variation shall be made in any notice, certificate, or other matter preliminary to the making of such order, as the nature of the case may require. Provided that if, at any time thereafter, upon application of any person interested in the maintenance of any highway, after one month's previous notice in writing thereof to the clerk of the highway board for the district in which such of justices made under that section, directing that a highway shall cease to be a highway which the parish is liable to repair. No appeal is directly and expressly given by that section unless the words "the like proceedings shall be had as when applica-highway is situated, it appear to any quarter or general sessions of the peace, that from any change of circumstances since the time of the making of any such order as aforesaid, under which the liability of the parish to repair the same has ceased, the same has become of public use and ought to be kept in repair by the parish, they may direct that the liability to repair shall revive, from and after such day as they shall name in their order, and such liability shall revive accordingly, as if the first mentioned order had not been made; and the said court may by their order direct the expenses of and incident to such application to be paid as they may see fit.

II

By 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50. s. 84, when the inhabitants in vestry assembled shall deem it expedient that any highway should be stopped up, diverted, or turned, either entirely, or reserving a bridleway or footway along the whole or any part or parts thereof, the chairman of such meeting shall, by an order in writing, direct the surveyor to apply to two justices to view the same, and shall authorise him to pay all the expenses attending such view, and the stopping up, diverting, or turning such highway, either entirely, or subject to such reservation as aforesaid, out of the money received by him for the purposes of this Act. Provided, nevertheless, that if any other party shall be desirous of stopping up, diverting, or turning any highway as aforesaid, he shall, by a notice in writing, require the surveyor to give notice to the churchwardens to assemble the inhabitants in vestry, and to submit to them the wish of such person; and if such inhabitants shall agree to the proposal, the said surveyor shall apply to the justices as last aforesaid for the purposes aforesaid, &c.

Section 85. When it shall appear upon such view of such two justices of the peace, made at the request of the said surveyor as aforesaid, that any public highway may be diverted or turned, either entirely or subject as aforesaid, so as to make the same more commodious or nearer to the public, and the owner of the lands or grounds, through which such new highway so proposed to be made, shall consent thereto by writing under his hand, or if it shall appear upon such view, that any public highway is unnecessary, the said justices shall direct the surveyor to affix a notice, in the form or to the effect of schedule to this Act, annexed in legible characters at the place and by the side of each end of the said highway from whence the same is proposed to be turned, diverted, or stopped, either entirely or subject as aforesaid, and also to insert the same notice in one newspaper published or generally circulated in the county where the highway so proposed to be diverted, turned, or stopped up, either entirely or subject as aforesaid (as the case may be), shall lie for four successive weeks next after the said justices have viewed such public highway, and to affix a like notice on the door of the church of every parish in which such highway so proposed to be diverted, turned, or stopped up, either entirely or subject as aforesaid, or any part thereof shall lie, on four successive Sundays next after the making such view; and the said several notices having been so published, and proof thereof having been given to the satisfaction of the said justices, and a plan having been delivered to them at the same time, particularly describing the old and the proposed new highway by metes, bounds, and admeasurement thereof, which plan shall be verified by some competent surveyor, the said justices shall proceed to certify under their hands the fact of their having viewed the said highway as aforesaid, and that the proposed highway is nearer or more commodious to the public; and if nearer, the said certificate shall state the number of yards or feet it is nearer, or if more commodious, the reasons why it is so; and if the highway is proposed to be stopped up as unnecessary, either entirely or subject as aforesaid, then the certificate shall state the reason why it is unnecessary; and the said certificate of the said justices, together with the said proof and plan so laid before them as aforesaid, shall, as soon as conveniently as may be after the making of the said certificate, be lodged with the clerk of the peace for the county in which the said highway is situated, and shall (at the quarter sessions which shall be holden for the limit within which the highway so diverted, turned, or stopped up, either entirely or subject as aforesaid, shall lie, next after the expiration of four weeks from the day of the said certificate of the said justices having been lodged with the clerk of the peace as aforesaid) be read by the said clerk of the peace in open court; and the said certificate, together with the proof and plan as aforesaid, as well as the consent in writing of the owner of the land, through which the new highway is proposed to be made, shall be enrolled by the clerk of the peace amongst the records of the said court of quarter sessions. Provided always, that any person whatever shall be at liberty, at any time previous to the said quarter sessions, to inspect the said certificate and plan, so as aforesaid lodged with the said clerk of the peace, and to have a copy thereof on payment to the clerk of the peace at the rate of 6d. per folio, and a reasonable compensation for the copy of the plan.

Section 86. Provided always, that in any case where it is proposed to stop up or divert more than one highway, which highways shall be deemed to be so connected together as that they cannot be separately stopped or diverted without interference one with the other, it shall be lawful to include such different highways in one order or certificate.

Section 87. Provided also, that in the event of any appeal being brought against the whole or any parts of any order or certificate, for diverting more highways than one, it shall be lawful for that Court to decide upon the propriety of confirming the tion is made under the Highway Act, 1835," are to have that meaning; but it is submitted that they have not, and that no whole or any part or parts of such order or certificate, without prejudice to the remaining part or parts thereof.

Section 88. By 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50. s. 88, "when any such certificate shall have been so given as aforesaid, it shall and may be lawful for any person who may think that he would be injured or aggrieved, if any such highway should be diverted and turned, or stopped up either entirely or subject as aforesaid, and such new highway set out and appropriated in lieu thereof as aforesaid, or if any unnecessary highway should be ordered to be stopped up as aforesaid, to make his complaint thereof, by appeal to the justices of the peace of the said quarter sessions, upon giving to the surveyor ten days' notice in writing of such appeal, together with a statement in writing of the grounds of such appeal, who is hereby required within forty-eight hours after the receipt of such notice, to deliver a copy of the same to the party by whom he was required to apply to the justices to view the said highway; provided that, in all cases where the said surveyor shall have been directed by the inhabitants in vestry assembled to apply to such justices as aforesaid, when the said surveyor shall not be required to deliver a copy of such notice to any party; provided also, that it shall not be lawful for the appellant to be heard in support of such appeal, unless such notice and statement shall have been so given as aforesaid, nor on the hearing of such appeal to go into or give evidence of any other grounds of appeal than those set forth in such statement as aforesaid."

Section 89. "In cases of such appeal, the justices of the said quarter sessions shall, for the purpose of determining whether the proposed highway is nearer or more commodious to the public, or whether the public highway so intended to be stopped up, either entirely or subject as aforesaid, is unnecessary, or whether the party appealing would be injured or aggrieved, impanel a jury of twelve disinterested men out of the persons returned to serve as jurymen at such quarter sessions; and if, after hearing the evidence placed before them, the said jury shall return a verdict that the proposed new highway is nearer or more commodious to the public, or that the public highway so intended to be stopped up, either entirely or subject as aforesaid, is unnecessary, or that the party appealing would not be injured or aggrieved, then the said Court of quarter sessions shall dismiss such appeal and make the order herein-mentioned for diverting, and turning and stopping up such highway, either entirely or subject as aforesaid, or for diverting, turning and stopping up of such old highway, and purchasing the ground and soil for such new highway, or for stopping up such unnecessary highway, either entirely or subject as aforesaid; but if the said jury shall return a verdict that the proposed new highway is not nearer or more commodious to the public, or that the highway so in-appeal to Quarter Sessions from an order of justices lies by implication—Regina v. Hanson (2), Regina v. Stock (3), Regina v. Justices of Surrey (4), Regina v. Recorder of Ipswich (5). It may well be that the legislature did not intend to give an appeal against this order, though they gave it against an order for stopping up a highway under the old Act, for the orders are different in their nature. The effect of the former order was to get rid of the highway as a highway altogether, and the rights of the public were put an end to, but the effect of the present order is merely to suspend the liability of the parish to repair, which liability may under certain conditions be revived. It was intended too by the later Act to give the highway board more extensive powers than the vestry of a parish formerly had, and it is competent for a private individual, if tended to be stopped up, either entirely or subject as aforesaid, is not unnecessary, or that the party appealing would be injured or aggrieved, then the said Court of quarter sessions shall allow such appeal, and shall not make such order as aforesaid.

Section 91. Provided always, that if no such appeal be made, or being made shall be dismissed as aforesaid, then the justices at the said quarter sessions shall make an order to divert and turn and stop up such highway, either entirely or subject as aforesaid, and to divert, turn, and stop up such old highway, and to purchase the ground and soil for such new highway, or to stop up such unnecessary highway, either entirely or subject as aforesaid, by such ways and means, and subject to such exceptions and conditions in all respects, as in this Act is mentioned in regard to the highways to be widened, and the proceedings thereupon, shall be binding and conclusive on all persons whomsoever. The new highways so to be appropriated and set out shall be, and for ever after continue, a public highway to all intents and purposes whatsoever; but no old highway, except in the case of stopping up of such useless highway as herein is mentioned, shall be stopped up until such new highway shall be completed and put in good condition and repair, and so certified by two justices of the peace upon view thereof, which certificate shall be returned to the clerk of the peace, and by him enrolled amongst the records of the Court of quarter sessions, next after such order as aforesaid shall have been made pursuant to the directions herein before contained.

(2) 4 B. & Ald. 519.

(3) 8 Ad. & E. 405; s.c. 7 Law J. Rep. (n.s.) M.C. 93.

(4) 2 Term R.p. 504, 510.

(5) 8 Dowl. 113.

his rights are injured or affected, to go before the justices who view and fix the time the notices are issued for publication. An appeal is given in respect of certain matters under section 38 of 27 & 28 Vict. c. 101, which do not include the present, and the concluding words of that section are, "no appeal shall be had except in respect of the matters and upon the grounds hereinbefore mentioned."

Garth (Gates with him) in support of the rule.—All the Highway Acts must be considered together and read as one Act according to 27 & 28 Vict. c. 101. s. 2, 25 & 26 Vict. c. 61. s. 42. subsection 1. By 25 & 26 Vict. c. 61. s. 17 the duties of repairing highways devolved upon the highway board of the district in which the highways are, and they are to perform the same duties and to be liable to the same legal proceedings as the surveyor of the parish had been, in respect of roads within a parish. The general public are not represented at the highway board, and the effect of no appeal lying in this case would be to render the fact of this highway being a highway repairable by the parish not traversable at all.

HANNEN, J.—I am of opinion that the appeal will lie in this case, and the rule must be made absolute for a mandamus to the justices, commanding them to enter continuances and hear this appeal.

I entirely agree with the observations which have been made, particularly by Mr. Thesiger, that an appeal can only be given by the clearly expressed intention of the legislature. But that is to be ascertained by an examination of the whole of the enactment which is the subject of inquiry, in order to determine really and truly what was the intention of the legislature as it may be collected from the words which they have used. And it is not essential that there should be anything more than a clear intention expressed by them.

In the 21st section of the 27 & 28 Vict. c. 101, the words which are relied upon are these: "When any highway board consider any highway unnecessary for public use, they may direct the district surveyor to apply to two justices to view the same, and thereupon the like proceedings shall be had as where application is made under the Highway Act, 1835, to procure the stoppage up of any highway."

And it has been argued by Mr. Gates that the "like proceedings" included all those proceedings up to the final order to be made by the justices at Quarter Sessions, which are found to be contained in the Act of 1835, for the purpose of procuring the stoppage up of a highway, and that the expression, "the like proceedings," includes in it those proceedings which are designated by the general name of appeal to the Quarter Sessions. I think that argument is well founded, because I find by the next sentence in the 21st section, the change which is pointed out as necessary to be made is a change in the order to be made upon those proceedings, namely, that instead of its being an order directing the highway to be stopped up, it shall direct that the same shall cease to be a highway which the parish is liable to repair.

Now the order which formerly would have been the effective order declaring that the highway shall be stopped up is the order which would be made by the justices in quarter sessions under the 91st section of the former Act, and the proceedings which are provided for by the 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50, for the purpose of stopping up a highway, are all proceedings which lead up to an order to be made by the justices in quarter sessions. Therefore, although I do find in the 86th and 87th sections the word "order" loosely used in conjunction with "certificate," as though it were applicable to the certificate which is to be given by the two justices under the 85th section, yet when it comes to be looked at it is in effect not an "order" but a certificate with a view to found the jurisdiction of the justices in quarter sessions to be exercised under the 91st section.

The rights of the parties interested are protected in a peculiar way. There is very elaborate machinery provided for notice to be given at one end of the road proposed to be stopped up or otherwise altered, which of course must be supposed to be given for the purpose of informing all persons interested that their rights are likely to be affected, yet the 85th section has provided no means for those persons making themselves heard before the justices who have to give the certificate, but it only seems to contemplate the fact that they shall have notice that the justices having been put in motion are about to give a certificate which is the essential and prima facie condition on the order being made, and that upon that certificate being granted, which they have access to, then their remedy is to be by taking these proceedings which are called an appeal before the justices in Quarter Sessions. But, as I say, there is no operative order until the order of the justices in quarter sessions has been made under the 91st section.

I think, therefore, that in speaking of the "like proceedings" which shall be had where application is to be made to procure the stopping up of a highway—(save only that the order is to be different)—the Legislature intended to include in the words, "the like proceedings," all those proceedings up to the time of making the order by the justices at Quarter Sessions.

I am further strengthened in that view by the reasonableness of it. I am unable to conceive any reason why persons affected by the rendering a road not repairable by the parish for the future, should be put in a worse position than those persons who would have been affected not merely by the stopping up of the road under the original Act, but by changing the road from one character to the other, as by making it cease to be a carriage road and converting it into a bridle road, which would be a change producing similar disadvantageous effects upon a person accustomed to use that road, as the order which is now to be made under the 21st section. I cannot, therefore, understand why a person so injured by the making the road cease to be repairable should not be put in the same position as persons who are injured by the road being stopped up or otherwise altered.

Again, I find that the case of persons interested in the maintenance of a highway is contemplated by the 21st section. For, as I pointed out in the course of the argument, express provision is made by which persons so interested in the maintenance of a highway, if they find after the order has been made that there is ground for making an alteration in it, shall have the power of having the matter investigated not by two justices simply, but by the justices of quarter sessions. If there be not this proceeding by way of appeal, as it is called upon the original investigation of the matter, this singular anomaly will arise, that the person affected by the original order that the road should be no longer repairable by the parish would be conclusively bound by the certificate of the two justices who should view the road in the first instance, without any means of calling their certificate in question, although the same person, if he desired to have a change made in that original order, would be entitled to go to the justices in Quarter Sessions. I cannot conceive that the legislature could have intended such an anomaly as that.

I do not think the other sections that have been referred to require any further comment from me, except with regard to the 38th section, which undoubtedly deals with the subject of appeal. But although I was for the moment under a different impression, I think that the argument addressed to me by Mr. Garth is sound, namely, that that relates only to accounts of the board, and is in fact a giving (and no doubt it is requisite) an appeal where an appeal would not otherwise exist. That does not touch the question, which is the one I have to determine, of what is the extent of the proceedings under the old Act which are given by the expression "the like proceedings" in the 21st section. For these reasons I think that the rule should be made absolute.

As to the cases that have been cited, I do not think that they are material upon the question which I have to decide in this case. In all cases of this kind that which has to be looked at is the intention of the legislature, and that must always depend upon the particular object which the legislature had in view in the enactment which is the subject of consideration. Therefore whatever reasons there may have been for the decisions in the particular cases cited, I come to the conclusion, by the examination of these Acts in themselves, that it was the intention of the legislature to give this proceeding, which is only loosely called an appeal, it being in fact a substantive proceeding leading up to the order of the justices in Quarter Sessions which is the only operative order by which a road can be made to cease to be repaired.

I think, therefore, upon these grounds, that the rule should be made absolute in the terms prayed.

Rule absolute.

Attorneys—J. & M. Pontifex, agents for H. F. Day, Godalming, for applicant; F. F. Smallpeice, agent for Smallpeice & Co., Guildford, for the justices.

[CROWN CASES RESERVED.]

1870. }
Jan. 22, 29. } THE QUEEN v. STAINER.*

Embezzlement—Prosecution by Illegal Society—24 & 25 Vict. c. 96. s. 68.

A society in the nature of a friendly society, but having rules—not enrolled or certified under the Friendly Societies Acts—certain of which rules are in restraint of trade, and therefore void, is not an illegal society in the sense that it is disabled from prosecuting a servant for embezzlement.

This was a CASE stated by the Chairman of the Worcestershire Quarter Sessions.

At the Worcestershire quarter sessions, held on the 3rd of January, 1870, a prisoner named James Stainer was tried before me on a charge of embezzling certain moneys received by him on account of the society known as "The Power Loom Carpet Weavers' Mutual Defence and Provident Association of Kidderminster and Stourport."

This society was established many years ago under rules, of which a copy accompanies, and is to be taken as part of this case.

In March, 1868, these rules were revised; and such revised rules, of which a copy also accompanies, and is to be taken as part of this case, have ever since been, and are now, in force and define the object and the constitution of the society and the duties of its several officers.

* Coram Cockburn, C.J., Byles, J., Keating, J., Pigott, B., and Cleasby, B.

Neither the original nor the revised rules were enrolled or certified under the Friendly Societies Acts.

Some time before the revision of the rules the prisoner became a member of the society, and was duly appointed what was called a local secretary, to keep the accounts and collect the contributions of members of the society employed at the works of Messrs. Dixon & Co., of Kidderminster, and after such revision he continued to be a member of the society and to act under the 18th of the revised rules, as such local secretary, until the embezzlement charged against him was discovered towards the end of October, 1869, and it was in respect of moneys received by him, as such local secretary, in September and the early part of October, 1869, that the charge of embezzlement arose.

It was proved by Robert Gillam, the general secretary of the society, who was called on the part of the prosecution, that the 34th and 35th of the revised rules had never been acted upon, that the 37th of the revised rules had been acted upon with respect to the clearance card therein mentioned, but not otherwise, and that the 36th of the revised rules had never been acted upon, except that two members, named respectively Thomas Painter and John Branford, who worked at the said Messrs. Dixon's, and who had each, at different times, taken a son into their working shed to learn weaving contrary to the provisions of the said 36th rule, were told that they would have to pay the fine mentioned in the rule, and both left the society to avoid such payment.

It was also proved by the said Robert Gillam, that, prior to the revision of the rules, the society had occasionally contributed towards the support of men out on strike, and that the last of such occasions was at Christmas, 1866, when a sum of 90*l.* was given to men out on strike at Stourport, and that on one occasion, since the revision of the rules, viz., on the 13th of May, 1868, a sum of 5*l.* per week was voted to some ironmakers and chainmakers who were out on strike. The following entry relating to the last mentioned vote appears in the minute book of the society:—

"At a delegate meeting, held at the Vine Inn, on Wednesday, May 18th, 1868, the following resolution was unanimously passed—

"Proposed by Joseph Arnold, seconded by James Inston, that the ironmakers and chainmakers have the sum of 5*l.* per week granted to them from the funds so long as they are out, to be equally divided between them."

Except as above mentioned no evidence was given at the trial of any application of the funds of the society towards the support of men on strike, or for any illegal purpose.

There are between 500 and 600 members of the society, and their funds at the present time exceed 2,000*l.*, invested in the Savings' Bank in the names of several sets of trustees appointed for that purpose.

At the close of the case for the prosecution, Streeten and Jelf, on behalf of the prisoner, objected that the society was proved to have been established, in part at least, for an illegal object, and that I ought on that ground to direct the prisoner to be acquitted. Nos. 30, 35, 36 and 37 of the revised rules were principally relied upon as shewing the illegality alleged, and the following cases were cited in support of the objection:—R. v. Hunt, 8 C. & P. 642; Hornby v. Close, 36 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 43; s. c. Law Rep. 2 Q.B. 153; Farrer v. Close, 38 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 132; s. c. Law Rep. 4 Q.B. 602.

I overruled the objection and refused to withdraw the case from the consideration of the jury, but I consented to reserve the point, if necessary. The trial accordingly proceeded, and the jury returned a verdict of Guilty, whereupon the prisoner was sentenced to one year's imprisonment with hard labour, and he is now detained in Worcester prison in pursuance of that sentence.

The question on which I respectfully desire the opinion of the Court for the consideration of Crown Cases Reserved, is, whether I was right in overruling the objection so taken on behalf of the prisoner, or whether such objection was valid in point of law and entitled the prisoner to be acquitted.

(Signed) R. Paul Amphlett.

The following revised rules of the society were referred to in the course of the case:—

(1). That this society be known as "The Power Loom Carpet Weavers' Mutual Defence and Provident Association."

(2). That the object of this society shall be—The attainment and maintenance of a fair remuneration for labour, the regulation of the supply of hands and hours of work, to render assistance in cases of sickness, accident, or death, and generally to promote the interests of the members.

(18). A secretary shall be appointed to keep the accounts and to manage the affairs in each firm connected with this association; the appointment of such officers to rest with the members employed at such firms. Such secretary's duties shall be to collect and pay over at head-quarters all contributions, levies, fines, &c.; to arrange for the proper discharge of all claims, and generally to conduct the business of this society in their respective shops. They shall receive for their services 2½ per cent. on all moneys collected by them for the purposes of this society.

(29). Members of this society having a dispute with employers or their managers, foremen or agents, shall in no wise leave their work with a view to receive assistance from the funds of this society until the matter in dispute has been thoroughly investigated, and the sanction of the committee, supported by a majority of members, shall have been obtained.

(30). The hours of work allowed by the Factory Acts shall be the recognised work hours for members of this society; and any member infringing on such hours by working overtime—that is, by working before six o'clock in the morning, after six o'clock in the evening, after two o'clock on Saturdays, or meal hours, shall be fined 2*s.* 6*d.*, and shall likewise be suspended from all the privileges of membership for twelve months.

(35). Any member of this association making application for work at a firm where there is no vacancy, and thereby creating that spirit-crushing influence which all good men deplore, shall, upon proof of the offence, be fined 2*s.* 6*d.* in each and every case, such fines to be placed to the offender's arrears.

(36). Any member of this society taking a person into a shop to learn the weaving where no vacant loom exists, and against the expressed wish of his shopmates, shall be fined 2*s.* 6*d.*, and shall likewise be suspended from all privileges of membership for twelve months.

(37). Should any member leave one firm to work at another, he shall get a clearance card to certify his position with respect to this society; and if he be in arrears of his contributions, levies, fines, &c., he shall pay in the same to the secretary acting for the shop wherein he has obtained employment. And any member producing a false certificate shall be fined 1*s.*; and any secretary wilfully drawing up a false certificate shall be expelled from his office.

F. T. Streeten (Jelf with him) for the prisoner (Jan. 22).—Embezzlement is an offence created by statute, and can only be committed by a clerk or servant, or one employed in the capacity of a clerk or servant, and in respect of money or goods received by him for or on account of his master or employer, and it is submitted that the employment must be a lawful one, and that if it be unlawful the employer cannot be permitted to come into a court of justice and prosecute the employed for an offence arising out of the relation of master and servant in such an employment. This society is illegal, as being in restraint of trade, and against public policy. This appears from the 35th, 36th and 37th rules. (He read these rules.) In Hilton v. Eckersley (2), it was held that the obligee of a bond made to carry out a combination of owners of mills to work such hours and pay such wages only as the majority agreed, could not sue upon it because it was made in restraint of freedom of trade. In Hornby v. Close (3), a society though not registered under the Friendly Societies Acts had deposited a copy of its rules with the Registrar of Friendly Societies, under 18 & 19 Vict. c. 63. s. 44; some of its rules were laudable, and some void, as having for their object the support of strikes amongst workmen, and so being in restraint of trade; and it was held that the illegal rules prevented such a society from being able to take advantage of the summary remedy before justices, provided by the 24th section of the same Act, against a member who misapplied moneys of the society in his hands. In Farrer v. Close (4), the case of Hornby v. Close (3) was followed, though the Court were divided upon the question whether the rules in the latter case brought it within the former decision. There, too, the actual operation of the society was taken into consideration in construing the object of the rules.

[COCKBURN, C.J.—But this is not a society violating any criminal law.]

It is contended that such a society as this is even indictable, but it is submitted that it is not necessary to go so far, and that a society established for purposes which are against public policy is unlawful to the extent contended for. In Russ. on Crimes, Ed. by Greaves, vol. ii. p. 442, it is stated, that a person cannot be convicted for embezzlement as clerk or servant to a society that is illegal. The same rule is stated in Archbold's Criminal Pleading, page 412, and other writers. In The King v. Hunt (5), a society, the members of which on admission had an unlawful oath administered to them, was held to be within that rule.

[COCKBURN, C.J.—Have not the legislature recognised societies established with such objects as these rules point to?]

The 32 & 33 Vict. c. 61 has so far declared such societies legal as to extend the protection of the 24th section of the Friendly Societies Act, 1855, for the punishment of frauds and impositions to their funds; but this Act is only in force for a year, and it is submitted is only a tentative Act, and it was evidently the impression of the legislature that no protection for such funds existed.

[COCKBURN, C.J.—There may have been a misapprehension of the effect of Hornby v. Close (3), or the legislature may have intended to give an additional remedy, and did not mean that such societies had not the ordinary remedies at common law.]

The principle is that our Courts will not recognise or lend themselves to aid persons who cannot come before them with clean hands. It is a principle of public policy and not of favour to the individual—Broom's Legal Maxims, 3rd ed., p. 663, and upon such a principle there can be no distinction between civil and criminal illegality.

[COCKBURN, C.J.—With respect to the objects of this society being against public policy, it would seem that the legislature have afforded an answer to that argument by passing the 32 & 33 Vict. c. 61.]

So, before the decision against the bond in Hilton v. Eckersley (2), the 6 Geo. 4. c. 129 had made combinations to raise or lower the rate of wages and to regulate the hours of labour no longer punishable, unless accompanied by force, threats, intimidation, or molestation.

(5) 8 Car. & P. 642.

(2) 6 E. & B. 47-66; 24 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 356; Ex. Ch. 25 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 199.

(3) 36 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 43; Law Rep. 2 Q.B. 153.

(4) 38 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 132; Law Rep. 2 Q.B. 602.

[COCKBURN, C.J.—Do you say that a person would be justified in stealing the goods of this society?]

No. In larceny it is sufficient to shew the possession of the property stolen, and it is unnecessary to account for that possession, and no one has a right to take from another what is in his possession; but in embezzlement, the money is intercepted before it gets into the possession of the master, who has therefore to shew that he has a right to it which the law will recognize. Under the Bailees Act it is submitted that there could be no conviction of the bailee if the bailment were for an unlawful purpose.

Moreover, this society is indictable at common law. Any conspiracy to do an unlawful act which is contrary to public policy, or even to commit a trespass, is indictable. Forestalling, regrating and engrossing, which were acts of the former nature, were indictable at common law as well as by statute, and would be so now but for 7 & 8 Vict. c. 24. In Hilton v. Eckersley (2), Crompton, J., in delivering his judgment, p. 53, said, that he thought combinations like those disclosed in the bond in that case, were illegal and indictable at common law, as tending directly to impede and interfere with the free course of trade. The precedents of indictments for combinations of two or more persons to raise wages were all framed on the common law. And in the judgment of the Court of Exchequer Chamber in Hilton v. Eckersley (2), the Court were careful to abstain from giving any opinion whether such combinations were or were not criminal and punishable. So in Hornby v. Close (3), the Court expressly and intentionally abstained from saying that such rules having for their object the support of men on strike were not criminal.

[COCKBURN, C.J.—And carefully refrained from saying that they were criminal.]

J. O. Griffiths for the prosecution (Jan. 29).—It is admitted that if this society were a criminal partnership it could not enforce the law against its members, which is the effect of The Queen v. Hunt (5); but it is a legal partnership, with some of its rules, e.g. 35 and 36, simply void as being in restraint of trade. The contract is divisible, and the Court will uphold the good, and reject the bad part—Chitty on Contracts, p. 617, 8th ed., Price v. Green (6). Tenant v. Elliott (7), shews that A. receiving money to the use of B., on an illegal contract between B. and C., cannot set up the illegality as a defence to B.'s action for money had and received. In Sharp v. Taylor (8) it was held, in the Court of Chancery, that one of two partners who had possessed himself of the property of the firm, could not be allowed to retain it by merely shewing that, in realizing it, some provision of some Act of Parliament had been violated. This society was not registered as a Friendly Society, nor was a copy of its rules deposited with the registrar; it cannot therefore be brought directly within section 44 of 18 & 19 Vict. c. 63. But 32 & 33 Vict. c. 61 shews the feeling of the legislature. [He was then stopped.]

F. T. Streeten in reply.—The cases cited on the other side were cases of illegality in the transactions, not illegality in the constitution of the societies. This is a criminally illegal association.

[BYLES, J.—Does not the 32 & 33 Vict. c. 61. assume that these rules in restraint of trade are unlawful but not criminal?]

That Act expressly applies only to societies having rules as to the terms of employment.

[COCKBURN, C.J.—It does not say they must register, and the omission is an argument that they should have the benefit whether registered or not. If you are right, a society might be entitled to prosecute one of their members before justices, and yet could not indict him at the assizes, and would themselves be liable to be indicted.]

One person may lawfully hiss at a theatre, but if several go by agreement with the intention and for the purpose of hissing and so condemning the performance, they are guilty of unlawful conspiracy, and indictable at common law—per Lord Mansfield, C.J., in Clifford v. Brandon (9).

(6) 16 Mee. & W. 346; s.c. 16 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 108.

(7) 1 Bos. & P. 3.

(8) 2 Phillips 801.

(9) 2 Campb. 368.

[COCKBURN, C.J.—Against that case my sense of justice has always revolted.]

In 4 Wentworth's Pleading, p. 100, there is a precedent of an indictment for conspiracy against journeymen leather-dressers, which shews that this society is indictable. But even if this association be not criminal, it is sufficient that it could not maintain an action against a member for money received. The very moneys alleged to have been embezzled by the prisoner may have been appropriated to the illegal purposes of the society.

COCKBURN, C.J.—It is not necessary to determine how far the criminality of an association formed for criminal purposes would affect its title to property. There is nothing which can be held criminal in the constitution or purposes of this society. The primary purposes indeed were eminently laudable; it was originally a friendly society, though not registered as such. But there were one or two of its rules, with reference to employment and the rate of wages, which were designed to further the purposes of a trades union. According to Farrer v. Close (4), and Hilton v. Eckersley (2) in the Exchequer Chamber, these purposes would be illegal, and these particular rules, as being in restraint of trade, would be void, but the Court abstained from saying that they were criminal. It does not follow because rules may be against public policy that they are therefore criminal. The main purposes of a society must be criminal before the question of criminality could arise. I entertain no doubt about this case. The last Act, 32 & 33 Vict. c. 61, says that associations having rules, which as being in restraint of trade are void, shall have the advantage of the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 63. It was argued that the 32 & 33 Vict. c. 61 has reference only to registered societies; but even if this were so, it is equally an indication of the intention of the legislature that such societies as the present shall not have a defective title to property. It is a declaration by the legislature that such societies are not criminal, because we cannot suppose that the legislature would say a criminal society should have those advantages. There could be nothing more preposterous than that this society should be able to prosecute before justices, and yet not able to indict at the assizes. There is a clear declaration by the legislature that such a society as this shall have no defect in its title to property.

BYLES, J.—The objects of this society may be unlawful in the sense that some of the rules are void, but they are not criminal. I agree with all that my Lord has said as to the effect of the last statute.

KRATING, J.—The only illegality is that two of the rules are in restraint of trade, and could not be enforced. Is that a criminal illegality which would deprive the society's funds of the protection of the law, that is, from being plundered? I think not. Even if the last statute were confined to societies registered as friendly societies, yet it is a clear indication of the intention of the legislature, that the mere fact of some of its rules being in restraint of trade shall not deprive a society of the protection of the criminal law. Mr. Streeten argued that the members of this society would be indictable at Common Law. It seems to me, in the absence of authority, that they would not. He could not give an instance of such an indictment, and I cannot think that it would lie. It is clear that the purpose of the legislature was to protect these societies where not conducted with violence and intimidation. I agree with my Lord as to the effect of the last statute.

PIGOTT, B.—The legislature in the last statute recognises the right of property in these societies, and that makes an end of the case.

CLEASBY, B., concurred.

Conviction affirmed.

Attorneys—Miller Corbett, Kidderminster, for prosecution; Henry Saunders, Junr., Kidderminster, for prisoner.

[CROWN CASE RESERVED.]

1870.

Jan. 22. }

THE QUEEN v. FRENCH.*

Forgery—Acquittance or receipt for money—24 & 25 Vict. c. 98. s. 23—Clearance ticket—Friendly Society.

A friendly society had branches in various towns. A member belonging to one branch could not be received into the Court of another branch as a clearance member without a document called a "clearance" certifying that he had paid all the dues and demands of the branch to which he belonged, and authorising the other branch to receive him :—Held, that such "clearance" was not an acquittance or receipt for money within section 23 of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98. and that a conviction for forging such a document must be quashed.

* Coram Cockburn, C.J., Byles, J., Keating, J., Pigott, B., and Cleasby, B.

Case reserved by Lush, J.

The indictment was framed on the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98. s. 23, for forging an acquittance or receipt for money (1).

The prisoner was secretary of a friendly society, called the Ancient Order of Foresters, which had branches in various towns. A member removing from one place to another, who had paid all dues, was entitled to a document in the form hereafter set out, called a "clearance," which admitted him to all the privileges of membership at any place where a branch of the society existed.

The qualifications for membership were the payment of an entrance fee, a certain time of probation, and certain general payments made at meetings of the society, called "Courts." At these Courts, constituted by the presence of the chief ranger, the sub-chief ranger, the treasurer, the secretary, and two members at the least, the payments were made to the secretary, and by him handed over there and then to the treasurer. Neither the chief ranger, nor the sub-chief ranger, received or was responsible for any of these payments, nor were their signatures to a "clearance" understood as importing that any money had been received by them or either of them; but a "clearance" without their signatures would not have been accepted.

(1) 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98. s. 23.—"Whoever shall forge or alter, dispose of, or put off, knowing the same to be forged or altered, any undertaking . . . or accountable receipt, acquittance or receipt for money, or for goods . . . with intent in any of the cases aforesaid to defraud, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the Court, to be kept in penal servitude for life, or for any term not less than three years, or to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and with or without solitary confinement."

Edward Cragg, a member of the society, was entitled to a "clearance," but the money he had paid had not been accounted for by the prisoner to the treasurer.

The prisoner sent to Cragg a "clearance," of which the following is a copy, and to which he forged the names of the chief and the sub-chief rangers :—

"Ancient Order of Foresters Friendly Society.

"Member's Clearance.

"Authorised form pursuant to general law.

"Saml. Shawcross, per. sec.

"Court Painters, No. 4,076, of the Leeds district, held at the Harewood Arms, Harewood Street, in Leeds, in the county of York.

"To all whom it may concern.

"These are to certify,

"That the bearer hereof, Brother Edward Cragg, a married man, now aged 26 years, by trade a painter, was admitted a member of the above Court, on the 25th day of June, 1864, and has paid all dues and demands up to the 29th day of August, 1868.

"We therefore hereby authorise any Court of the order to accept the said brother as a clearance member, subject to the conditions expressed in the general laws to which, so far as they may apply to the above Court, we undertake to conform.

"In witness whereof we have, by order of the Court, and in its behalf, subscribed our hand and affixed the seal of the Court.

"Thomas Maw, Chief Ranger,

"John Doyle, Sub-chief Ranger,

"George French, Secretary.

"Cautions.—The member to whom this clearance is granted must throw it into some legal Court within two calendar months from the time of drawing the same, and should it be refused by any Court it must be returned to the Court which granted it within one calendar month, or the member will become suspended. See General Laws, 92, 93, 94, 95.

"We, the undersigned, declare that this is the document presented to this Court, No. 1,567, by Brother Cragg, on October 26th, 1868.

"William Tranter, C.R.,

"Nathaniel Powell, S.C.R.,

"Thomas Bates, Secretary.

"Court 1,567.

"May 24, 1868."

The question for the opinion of the Court is, whether the above document is an acquittance or receipt for money within the meaning of the statute?

No counsel appeared.

Per Curiam.—The question in this case is whether the document set out in the case is an acquittance or receipt for money within the 23rd section of the 24th & 25th Vict. c. 98. We are of opinion that it is not, and therefore this conviction must be quashed. The prisoner was a member of a friendly society, called the Ancient Order of Foresters, which had branches in various towns. A member of one branch removing to a place where another branch held its Court, would not be received into such other branch without a clearance shewing that he had paid all dues and demands of the branch from whence he came. The prisoner was secretary of the society, and had received from a member all the fees due to his branch, and the member thereupon became entitled to a clearance. The prisoner ought to have paid such moneys over to the treasurer of the society, but did not do so, and sent nevertheless to the member his clearance. To this clearance the prisoner forged the signatures of the chief ranger and sub-chief ranger of the society, because without such signatures the clearance would not have been accepted. The prisoner was indicted for forging this document, as being an acquittance or receipt for money under the above statute, but we think it is rather a certificate certifying that a member has paid up his dues, and an authority to another Court to accept the brother as a clearance member, and cannot be treated as an acquittance or receipt for money within the statute.

Conviction quashed.

[CROWN CASE RESERVED.]

1870. }
Jan. 22. } REGINA v. PARKER.*

Evidence—Depositions of person deceased, or so ill as not to be able to travel—Signature of Justices—11 & 12 Vict. c. 42. s. 17—Indictment—Surplusage.

By the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42. s. 17. the depositions of the witnesses produced on the examination before justices against a person charged with an indictable offence, "shall be read over to, and signed respectively by, the witnesses," and "shall be signed also by the justice or justices taking the same;" and if, upon the trial of the person accused, it shall be proved that any person whose deposition shall have been taken as aforesaid is dead, or so ill as not to be able to travel, then (after proof of certain matters), "if such deposition purport to be signed by the justice by or before whom the same purports to have been taken, it shall be lawful to read such deposition in evidence in such prosecution, unless it shall be proved that such deposition was not in fact signed by the justice purporting to sign the same." By the schedule (M) to the Act, the caption runs, "the examination of O. D. and E. F. taken, &c." And the conclusion is, "the above depositions of O. D. and E. F. were taken and (sworn) before me at — on the day and year first above mentioned. On the trial of a person committed by justices under the above section, a deposition of a deceased witness appeared to be the second of four depositions made at the same hearing, all of which were pinned together, each occupying more than one piece of paper. The justices had not signed either of the sheets on which the depositions were written, except the last, and that sheet did not contain any part of the deposition in question, but their signatures were appended at the end of the last deposition to a statement in the form copied from schedule M: "The above depositions (naming the several witnesses, and amongst them the deceased) were taken and sworn before us at, &c.:"—Held, that such deposition was properly received in evidence, and that it is not necessary that the separate deposition of each witness should be signed by the justices, but that it is sufficient if the depositions are signed as a body by the justices, according to the conclusion of schedule M to the act.

* Coram Cockburn, C.J., Byles, J., Keating, J., Pigott, B., and Cleasby, B.

The indictment charged the prisoner with the offence of making a false declaration before a justice, that he had lost a pawnbroker's ticket, "whereas in truth and in fact he had not lost the said ticket, but had sold, lent, or deposited it, as a security to one S. O., &c.:"—Held, that the allegation "but had sold, lent, or deposited it, &c.," did not render the indictment ambiguous or uncertain, but was pure surplusage, which might be rejected and need not be proved.

The Queen v. Richards (5) overruled.

Case reserved by LUSH, J.

The prisoner was convicted on an indictment which was in the following form:—

Northumberland to wit—The jurors for our Lady the Queen on their oath present that William Parker did, on the sixth day of April, A.D. 1869, at the parish of Tynemouth, in the borough of Tynemouth, in the county of Northumberland, wilfully and corruptly make a false declaration before John Byrom Bramwell, Esquire, one of Her Majesty's justices of the peace for the said borough of Tynemouth, that he the said William Parker had lost a certain note or memorandum being a pawnbroker's ticket. Whereas in truth and in fact he had not lost the said ticket, but had sold, lent, or deposited it as a security to one James Carter, as he the said William Parker well knew at the time he made the said false declaration, against the form of the statute in such case made and provided.

Misdemeanor in making a false declaration.
(Mr. Stevenson.)

Witnesses,

James Carter.
James Mitchell.
Sarah Frame.
John Hewitt, P.C.

The deposition of a deceased witness was tendered and objected to on the ground that it did not purport to be signed by the justices before whom it purported to have been taken as required by the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42. s. 17 (1).

(1) By 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42. s. 17. "In all cases where any person shall appear or shall be brought before any justice or justices of the peace, charged with an indictable offence, whether committed in England or Wales, or upon the high seas, or on land beyond the sea, or whether such person appear voluntarily upon summons, or have been

The deposition in question was the second of four depositions made at the same hearing, all of which were pinned together. Each occupied more than one sheet of paper.

The justices did not sign either of the sheets on which the depositions were written, except the last (that sheet not containing any part of the depositions in question), and their signature was appended at the end of the last deposition to a statement in the following form, copied from schedule M (2) of the 11 & 12 Vict.

apprehended with or without warrant, or be in custody for the same or any other offence, such justice or justices before he or they shall commit such accused person to prison for trial, or before he or they shall admit him to bail, shall, in the presence of such accused person, who shall be at liberty to put questions to any witness produced against him, take the statement (M) on oath, or affirmation of those who shall know the facts and circumstances of the case, and shall put the same into writing, and such depositions shall be read over to, and signed respectively by, the witnesses who shall have been so examined, and shall be signed also by the justice or justices taking the same; and the justice or justices before whom any such witness shall appear to be examined as aforesaid, shall, before such witness is examined, administer to such witness the usual oath or affirmation, which such justice or justices shall have full power and authority to do. And if upon the trial of the person so accused as first aforesaid, it shall be proved by the oath or affirmation of any credible witness, that any person whose deposition shall have been taken as aforesaid, is dead, or so ill as not to be able to travel, and if also it be proved that such deposition was taken in the presence of the person so accused, and that he or his counsel or attorney had a full opportunity of cross-examining the witness, then, if such deposition purport to be signed by the justice by or before whom the same purports to have been taken, it shall be lawful to read such deposition as evidence in such prosecution without further proof thereof, unless it shall be proved that such deposition was not in fact signed by the justice purporting to sign the same."

(2) SCHEDULE (M).

To wit. } The examination of [D. of farmer] and E. F. of labourer], taken on [oath] this day of , in the year of our Lord, at in the said [county], in the presence and hearing of A. B., who is charged this day before [me] for that he the said
A. B., on at [&c., describing the offence as in a warrant of commitment]. This deponent C.D. on his [oath] saith as follows [&c.] : [stating the deposition of the witness as nearly as possible in the words he uses. When his deposi-

c. 42. "The above depositions of," naming the several witnesses, and amongst them the deceased, "were taken and sworn before us at, &c.," according to the form in the schedule.

I allowed the deposition to be read, subject to the opinion of this Court on its admissibility.

It was objected, after the jury were sworn and charged, that the indictment was bad for uncertainty, as it alleged in the alternative that the prisoner "had sold, lent, or deposited it." I overruled the objection, but as I meant to reserve the other point, I also reserved this for the opinion of the Court (see 1 C. & K. 243).

If the deposition ought not to have been received, or if the indictment is bad, the conviction is to be quashed.

Greenhow, for the prisoner.—The depositions ought not to have been admitted in evidence, on the ground that the separate deposition of each witness was not signed by the justice before whom they were taken, at the end of each such deposition respectively. He referred to Regina v. Osborne (3), Regina v. Lee (4), Regina v. Richards (5), Regina v. France (6), Regina v. Johnson (7), and Regina v. Young (8).

It is also objected that the indictment was bad, on the ground that the description of the offence being in the alternative was uncertain, and embarrassed the prisoner in his defence. Even the allegation charges the offence in the disjunctive, and is therefore bad (9). Even if the allegation is surplusage, it must be accurately stated, or the indictment is bad.

[COCKBURN, C.J.—But here the surplusage was not matter touching the substance of, or ingredient in, the offence, but was in respect of something subsequent to the substance.]

tion is complete let him sign it]. And this deponent E. F., upon his oath saith as follows [&c.]. The above depositions of C. D. and E. F. were taken and [sworn] before me at _____ on the _____ day and year first above mentioned.

(3) 3 Car. & P. 113.

(4) 4 Fost. & F. 63.

(5) 6 Fost. & F. 360.

(6) 2 Moo. & R. 207.

(7) 2 Car. & K. 354.

(8) 3 Car. & K. 166.

(9) Archb. Cr. Pl. 16th ed. p. 48.

COCKBURN, C.J.—I am of opinion that the other conviction must be affirmed, and that both objections fail. With respect to the admissibility of the depositions: in Regina v. Young (8), tried before Mr. Greaves, with whose decision Mr. J. Williams concurred, and in Regina v. Lee (4), the depositions were signed as here, and held admissible. In Regina v. Richards (5), tried before me, the same question presented itself, but my attention was then only called to the 17th section of the statute, and not to the schedule. Afterwards, upon Mr. Oke, the clerk to the Lord Mayor, calling my attention to the form and language of the schedule, and reading the two together, I thought that, inasmuch as the section of the statute left the matter in doubt by the omission of the word "respectively," which had been used in reference to the signatures of the witnesses, when it came to speak of the magistrate's signature, and the schedule makes the magistrate certify by his signature at the end of the depositions, that the "above depositions," in the plural number, were taken before him, it seemed to me to be plain that the legislature did not intend to exact from magistrates their signature to each deposition, but only to the depositions as a body. And I accordingly wrote to Mr. Oke to say that I did not intend on a future occasion to abide by the decision I had given in Regina v. Richards (5). And I still think, that it is sufficient for the depositions to be signed according to the form given in the schedule. In this case the depositions were signed in that manner, and I therefore think they were admissible. With respect to the second objection, I think that the words objected to were pure and simple surplusage. The offence charged in the indictment was that the prisoner made a false declaration that he had lost the pawnbroker's ticket, and the words objected to were a mere statement of evidence, and not part of the description of the offence, nor an essential ingredient in the offence, and therefore I think immaterial, and the objection made ought not to prevail.

BYLES, J.—I think these depositions purported to be signed by the justices before whom they purported to be taken, in the manner required by the act. The different sheets appear to have been attached together at the time of the signature, and it can make no difference whether they were attached by a pin or in any other way, as to the continuity of the piece of paper. As to the second objection, it is necessary to state in the indictment what the declaration was, and that it was false, but it cannot be necessary to allege further, how the declarant had disposed of the ticket, for that is to ask the prosecutor to state what in all probability he cannot know.

KEATING, J., PIGOTT, B., and CLEASBY, concurred.

Conviction affirmed.

[IN THE COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH].

1870. }
Jan. 27. } Ex parte SHORT.

Wine and Beerhouse Act, 1869, 32 & 33 Vict. c. 27. s. 17—11 & 12 Vict. c. 40. s. 2—Beerhouse—Second Offence—Refusing to admit Constable—Keeping House open during prohibited hours on Sunday.

In the month of August, 1869, and after the passing of the 32 & 33 Vict. c. 27, S., a beerhouse keeper, was convicted for keeping her house open for the sale of beer on Sunday, before half-past 12 o'clock in the day time. On the 6th October, 1869, she was convicted for refusing to admit a constable to her premises:—Held, that the justices had power, under s. 17 of 32 & 33 Vict. c. 27, to treat this as a second offence, and under 4 & 5 Will. 4. c. 85. s. 7, to order that S. should be disqualified from selling beer, &c., by retail, for the space of two years.

This was an application for a rule nisi, calling on two justices of Cheshire to shew cause why a writ of certiorari should not issue to bring up a conviction made by them, on the 6th October last, against Margaret Short, a person licensed to sell beer, for refusing to admit a constable to her premises. The justices adjudged that she should be disqualified from selling beer, ale, &c., for two years. The conviction did not shew any previous offence of the same kind, but it recited four other previous convictions for other offences, one of which was since the passing of "The Wine and Beerhouse Act, 1869" (32 & 33 Vict. c. 27), and was for keeping the house open for the sale of beer on Sunday, before half-past twelve o'clock at noon, but the other three convictions were previous to the passing of the last mentioned Act. It appeared from the affidavits that she had never been previously convicted of the offence of refusing to admit a constable into her house, or of any of the offences enumerated in the first part of the 17th section of The Wine and Beerhouse Act, 1869, since the passing of that Act.

J. Paterson, in support of the application. The justices conceived that they had a right, under 4 & 5 Will. 4. c. 85. s. 7, to order that Margaret Short should be disqualified for two years, but this is not so (1). The conviction does not shew any first offence which could give them any such power, and it appears from the affidavits that there was none. But it will be said that by reason of the 17th section of The Wine and Beerhouse Act, 1869, the keeping of the house open on Sunday

(1) Statute 4 & 5 Will. 4. c. 85. s. 7. "That it shall be lawful for all constables and officers of police, and they are hereby authorised and empowered, to enter into all houses which are or shall be licensed to sell beer or spirituous liquors to be consumed upon the premises, when and so often as such constables and officers shall think proper; and if any person having such license as aforesaid, or any servant or other person in his employ or by his direction, shall refuse to admit, or shall not admit such constable or officer of police into such house or upon such premises, such person having such license, shall, for the first offence, forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding five pounds, together with the costs of the conviction, to be recovered within twenty days next after that on which such offence was committed, before one or more justices of the peace; and it shall be lawful for any two or more justices, before whom any such person shall be convicted of such offence for the second time, to adjudge (if they shall so think fit) that such offender shall be disqualified from selling beer, ale, porter, cyder, or perry, by retail, for the space of two years next after such conviction, or for such shorter space of time as they may think proper."

became a second offence; but that again is an error; for the keeping the house so open is not an offence against the tenor or conditions of a license granted to Margaret Short under any of the recited acts, or an offence for which a penalty is imposed by any of said recited acts (2).

[BLACKBURN, J.—Is not the keeping of the house open during the prohibited hours an offence against the tenor or conditions of the license granted under any of the recited Acts?]

No, it was an offence under 3 & 4 Vict. c. 61. s. 15, but that part of that Act is repealed by 11 & 12 Vict. c. 49. s. 2, and a new enactment is provided with reference to this subject under the 4th section.

[BLACKBURN, J.—But is it not equally an offence against the tenor of the license, though it may now be only punishable under 11 & 12 Vict. c. 49?]

No, it is now a substantive offence with a higher penalty, and with an alteration in the hours. See Regina v. Whiteley (3). The Wine and Beerhouse Act, 1869, recites several Beerhouse Acts, but not the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 49, under which the offence is punishable.

The Court granted a rule nisi, against which

G. Taylor shewed cause in the first instance. The justices had power to make the order complained of. It is true that there had not been a previous offence of refusing to admit a constable, but there had been one of keeping the house open within the prohibited hours on Sunday.

(2) 32 & 33 Vict. c. 27. s. 17.—In the following cases, that is to say,—

1. Where any person is convicted of an offence against the tenor or conditions of a license granted to him under any of the said recited Acts, or of an offence for which a penalty is imposed by any of the said recited Acts;

2. Where any person is convicted of an offence against the tenor of a license granted to him under the said Act of the ninth year of the reign of King George the Fourth;

If any previous conviction or convictions, since the passing of this Act, for any of the said offences be proved against him, the offence of which he is last convicted shall be deemed to be a second or third offence, as the case may be: provided that the said previous conviction or convictions did take place within the five years next preceding."

(3) 3 Hurl. & N. 143.

That was an offence which comes within both clauses of the 17th section of the Wine and Beerhouse Act, 1869, for although the mode of punishment may be supplied by the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 49, it is an offence against the tenor and effect of the license granted under the Beerhouse Acts. The 11 & 12 Vict. c. 49 was, no doubt, passed for the purpose of regulating the sale of beer, and other liquors on the Lord's Day, but the Beerhouse Acts had provided for the keeping the house open before half-past 12 o'clock on Sundays, before the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 49 was passed. It is also an offence against the tenor of a license granted to her under 9 Geo. 4. & 1 Will. 4. c. 64; see the form of license in the schedule to that Act.

(He was then stopped.)

J. Paterson in support of the rule.—The conviction follows the words of the 11 & 12 Will. 4. c. 49, which is not one of the recited Acts.

COCKBURN, C.J.—The offence created by that statute is identical with the things which had been prohibited by the licenses. It is against the tenor and condition of the license, and the legislature framed the 17th section with the view of meeting such cases. The offence sufficiently comes within the description given in that section.

BLACKBURN, J.—The obvious meaning is, that if a conviction takes place after the commission of one of a certain class of offences since the passing of The Wine and Beerhouse Act, 1869, the offence of which the person is last convicted shall be deemed a second offence, with the consequences attached to the committing of a second offence.

MELLOR, J.—I am of the same opinion.
Rule discharged with costs.

Attorneys—R. M. & F. Lowe, agents for E. J. Kent, Liverpool, for the prosecution; Makinson & Carpenter, agents for Bretherton & Co., Birkenhead, for defendant.

[IN THE COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.]

1870. } THE NORTH EASTERN RAILWAY
Jan. 26. } COMPANY, appellants, v. THE LOCAL BOARD OF LEADGATE,
respondents.

Local Government Act, 1858 (21 & 22 Vict. c. 98), s. 55—General district Rate—Railway not constructed under Parliamentary Powers—Land rateable upon reduced Scale.

By the Local Government Act, 1858 (21 & 22 Vict. c. 98), s. 55, provision is made for general district rates, and it is enacted that the occupier of land used only as a railway constructed under the powers of any Act of Parliament for public conveyance shall be assessed in respect of the same in the proportion of one-fourth part only of such net annual value thereof:—Held, that a line of railway which though actually worked and used under the provisions of different Acts of Parliament, was originally constructed by private agreement, without any parliamentary powers, is not rateable upon the reduced scale, but upon the full annual value.

Upon appeal by the North Eastern Railway Company to the General Quarter Sessions for the county of Durham, against an assessment for a general district rate, made on the 27th of December, 1867, by the Local Board for the district of Leadgate, under the powers of "The Local Government Act, 1858," the following facts were stated in the form of a special case for the opinion of the Court.

CASE.

1. In the year 1834, by deed of settlement, dated 3rd of February, 1834, a company called the Stanhope and Tyne Railroad Company, was established for the purpose of working certain limestone quarries, near Stanhope, in the county of Durham, and certain coal mines in the parish of Lanchester, in the same county, called the Pontop and Medomsley Collieries, and for the carriage of coals, limestone and other articles of merchandise, along a railway then in course of formation by the company, and called the Stanhope and Tyne Railroad.

2. The line of the railway commenced New Series, 39.—Mac. Cas.

at certain lime quarries in the parish of Stanhope, and passed through a point called the Carr House, at Pontop, and from thence to the River Tyne, in the town of South Shields, the whole length of the line being thirty-five miles or thereabouts.

3. In the year 1834 the Stanhope and Tyne Railroad Company completed the construction of their intended railroad, and it was opened for use in the month of September in that year. The company had no powers conferred upon them by Act of Parliament to enable them to construct the railway, and it was not by virtue of any powers conferred by Act of Parliament that the railway was constructed. The land upon which the railway was constructed was not the property of the company and the company did not obtain by purchase or otherwise the property in the land, nor had the company any right or title to use the same except as hereinafter mentioned. The company before and at the time of the construction of the railway entered into agreements with the owners of land upon which the railway was constructed, by which agreements, in consideration of half-yearly payments, made by the company to the owners, the company obtained leave to use on certain terms and for certain periods the land for the purposes of the railway. The whole of the railway was constructed upon lands which the company obtained leave to use by virtue of such agreements except a portion within the district of Leadgate, which was constructed upon what was then and is used as a public highway.

4. The Stanhope and Tyne Railroad Company, which besides the railway also constructed staiths, with suitable machinery for loading and unloading vessels, in the River Tyne, used the line of railway for the purposes aforesaid, and also for the conveyance of passengers and goods from the month of September, 1834, down to the year 1839. In the latter year the company ceased to use that portion of the railway which lay between Stanhope and Carr House, being a distance of eleven miles or thereabouts (herein called "the upper part of the railway"), but down to the year 1842 continued to use that portion of the railway which lay between Carr House and the River Tyne (herein called "the lower part of the railway.")

K

5. On the 5th of February, 1841, the company, having become embarrassed, was under the powers of the deed of settlement dissolved, and on 13th of May, 1842, an Act was passed (5 Vict. s. 2. c. xxvii.)

The case then set out several sections of this Act, by which a company called the "Pontop and South Shields Railway" was incorporated and the "upper part of the railway," vested in this company, which took powers to purchase the land over which the line of railway passed, and it was declared that nothing in the Act should exempt "the lower part of the railway" from the provisions of any future general Act relating to railways. In 1844 another Act (7 Vict. c. xxvi.) was passed whereby the Pontop and South Shields Railway Company were empowered to widen a part of their railway and to purchase lands for that purpose, and in pursuance of this and the preceding Act, the company, from 1842 to 1846, kept open and regulated the lower part of the railway, and the staiths and works, and widened "the lower part of the railway." By later Acts both "the lower part of the railway" and "the upper part of the railway" were vested in the appellants, and from the dates 1841 and 1842, respectively, they have been worked and used for public traffic under the provisions of the several Acts relating thereto, and subject to such provisions of the general statutes for regulating railways as are applicable thereto.

27. In the year 1866 the Local Government Act, 1858 (1), was applied to the

(1) By the Local Government Act 1858 (21 & 22 Vict. c. 98), s. 55:—The general district rates shall be made and levied upon the occupier of all such kinds of property as by the laws in force for the time being are or may be assessable to any rate for the relief of the poor, and shall be assessed upon the full nett annual value of such property ascertained by the rate (if any) for the relief of the poor, made next before the making of the assessments under this Act, subject, however, to the following exceptions, regulations, and conditions. . . . The owner of any tithes, or of any tithe commutation, rentcharge, or the occupier of any land used as arable, meadow, or pasture ground only, or as woodlands, market gardens, or district of Leadgate, and on the 27th of December, 1867, the Local Board for that district made an assessment for a General District Rate upon the occupiers and other parties liable by law to be assessed thereto.

28. Parts of "the upper part of the railway," and of "the lower part of the railway," and used only as railways are within the district of Leadgate.

29. In pursuance of the powers contained in the Acts of Parliament hereinbefore mentioned, the lands upon which "the upper part of the railway" was constructed, by virtue of agreements for wayleaves, have by various purchases by private contract become vested in the appellants. These lands are exclusively used for the purposes of the railway.

30. Part of the land over which "the lower part of the railway" passes in the district of Leadgate is the property of the appellants. The remainder of such land (with the exception of a portion which forms part of a highway) is held by the appellants under leases or agreements for wayleaves, as before mentioned, which have been from time to time renewed, and under which the appellants still pay half-yearly rents for the use thereof.

31. Since the time when "the upper part of the railway" and "the lower part of the railway" became vested in the Wear Valley Railway Company and the appellants respectively, as hereinbefore stated, the Wear Valley Railway Company and the Stockton and Darlington Railway Company and the appellants respectively, have expended large sums of money in widening, levelling, repairing and improving the same.

32. The appellants before and at the time of the making of the assessment, possessed and occupied within the district of Leadgate, houses used as dwelling-houses by the railway company's manager and servants, and a warehouse.

33. In the assessment the appellants were assessed, not only in respect of the nursery grounds, and the occupier of any land covered with water, or used only as a canal or towing path for the same, or as a railway constructed under the powers of any Act of Parliament for public conveyance, shall be assessed in respect of the same in the proportion of one-fourth part only of such nett annual value thereof.

houses and warehouse, but also in respect of the parts of "the upper part of the railway" and of "the lower part of the railway" which are so within the district of Leadgate, and used only as railways, upon the full nett annual value thereof. The appellants admit their liability to be so assessed in respect of the houses and warehouse, but contend that in respect of the parts of "the upper part of the railway" and "the lower part of the railway" which are so within the district of Leadgate, and used only as railways as aforesaid, they are only liable to be assessed in the proportion of one-fourth part only of the nett annual value thereof.

The question for the opinion of the Court is whether the appellants are liable to be assessed in respect of those parts of the upper part of the railway and of the lower part of the railway which are within the district of Leadgate, and used only as railways, upon the full nett annual value thereof, in the proportion of one-fourth part, or in respect of any and what part of those parts.

Mellish (Kemplay with him) for the appellants.—"Land used only as a railway constructed under the powers of an Act of Parliament, for public conveyance," was clearly intended to comprise all lines actually worked under parliamentary powers, in whatever manner they might originally have been constructed. The Court will put a liberal construction upon the words of the exception in s. 55 of the Local Government Act, for the general design of this section is to mitigate the rates where land is used in a particular manner. And it is submitted that the words may be read as meaning "land used in the same manner as a railway constructed under the powers of an Act of Parliament."

Manisty (Bruce with him) for the respondents.—The railway in question was originally constructed by private agreement, and not under parliamentary powers. The liability of the appellants to be rated in respect of it cannot be affected by the provisions of Acts passed after the construction of the line. The word "constructed" is used in contradistinction to the word "used" and must be construed in its plain and ordinary sense.

COCKBURN, C.J.—In this case I very much regret to be obliged to come to a conclusion adverse to Mr. Mellish, because I cannot suppose that the legislature intended to make a distinction between a railway constructed by a private company and afterwards brought within the provisions of an Act of Parliament, and the case of a railway constructed in the first instance under the powers of an Act of Parliament. I regret that I cannot put such a construction on the Act as I think would meet the justice and equity of the case, and I may go further and say that I have no doubt that if those who passed this Act had had the particular case in their mind they would, in all probability, have framed their language differently, and would have granted the same exemptions to a railway like the present one as they have granted to railways constructed under Acts of Parliament. The difficulty I have is this: Mr. Mellish asks us to read the words "or as a railway constructed under the powers of an Act of Parliament, for public conveyance," as if the word "constructed" was not there, and to read it thus—"or as a railway used under the powers of any Act, or public Act," which is exactly this case. This is a railway used as a railway under the powers of Acts of Parliament for public conveyance, and it is proposed that the awkward word "constructed" should be rejected, and considered as omitted. I am of opinion that this cannot be done. However it may be a subject of regret that this case should not have been provided for by the legislature, the only way in which we can read it is, that the exemption is given to land used as a railway, which railway has been constructed under the powers of Acts of Parliament, the term used being, I think, employed to shew that the land must be still actually used for the purpose; so that, although a railway may have been constructed under an Act, if it has fallen into disuse, as we know has been the case with several railways, the exemption will no longer apply. We cannot read it as if it were "used in the same way as a railway constructed under the powers of an Act." We can only read it in the way in which I have already referred to, "used as a railway, which railway has been constructed under the powers of an Act of Parliament." I daresay this was not what the legislature meant; but I cannot find anything to justify me in striking out any of the words they have used, and reading a sentence as though they were not there. They must have been put in with some object. We must therefore decide adversely to the company.

MELLOR, J.—I am of the same opinion. We cannot read the section as Mr. Mellish desires us to do without introducing words, or rejecting the word "constructed." I do not feel at liberty to do either, however much I might be inclined to do so.

LUSH, J.—I share in the regret expressed by my Lord Chief Justice and my brother Mellor, in being obliged to put this construction upon the Act, which I cannot think that the legislature intended to put. I can only collect this intention from the language which they have used. I am bound to put a proper and reasonable construction upon every word, and I cannot read the section in any other sense than as prescribing two conditions as to the qualification of a railway to be assessed at a lower rate: it is to be used as a railway; and secondly, it must have been constructed under the powers of an Act of Parliament. I cannot adopt Mr. Mellish's view without rejecting words, or putting a strained meaning on other words, which I do not feel competent to do.

Judgment for the respondents.

Attorneys—Messrs. Williamson, Hill & Co., agents for Messrs. Richardson, Gutch & Co., York, for appellants; Messrs. Pattison, Wigg & Co., agents for Messrs. J. & R. S. Watson, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, for respondents.

[IN THE COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.]
1870. } THE QUEEN v. THE MAYOR, &c.,
Jan. 14. } OF WIGAN.

Prison—Liability of Borough to contribute towards the expense of enlarging County Gaol—"Repairs, alterations, additions and improvements in or to prison"—5 & 6 Vict. c. 98. s. 18; Prison Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 126), ss. 8. 23. 24.

By 5 & 6 Vict. c. 98. s. 18, a borough with a separate Court of Sessions, sending its prisoners to the county gaol without any special contract, shall pay the expense incurred in the conveyance, transport, maintenance, safe custody and care of every such prisoner, according to the time he shall remain in custody there, at the average daily cost of each prisoner according to the whole number of prisoners confined in the prison, including in such expenses all expenses of "repairs, alterations, additions and improvements in or to the prison"—Held, that any such borough is bound to contribute, in the proportion above mentioned, not only towards the cost of the necessary and ordinary repairs of the county gaol, but towards the cost of enlarging it, according to the provisions of the Prison Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 126).

Rule for the council of the borough of Wigan to shew cause why a mandamus should not issue directed to them, commanding them to pay to the governor of the gaol at Kirkdale the sum of 1,242l. 19s. 9d. for the conveyance, transport, safe custody and care (1) of Wigan prisoners in the gaol, from December 1, 1867, to November 30, 1868, and, if necessary, to make and levy a rate for that purpose.

(1) By 5 & 6 Vict. c. 98. s. 18: "In every borough to which a separate Court of Sessions of the peace hath been or shall hereafter be granted, or purported to be granted, and where the persons committed for offences arising within such borough have been or shall hereafter be sent to any prison of the county in which such borough is situated, and no special contract shall be subsisting between such borough and county relative to the prisoners, the council of the borough shall pay or cause to be paid to the treasurer of such prison, &c., the actual expenses heretofore incurred, or hereafter to be incurred, in the conveyance, transport, maintenance, safe custody and care of every such prisoner, according to the time for which each such prisoner shall there have been or shall remain in custody there, at the average daily cost of each prisoner according to the whole number of prisoners confined in the prison, &c., including in such expenses all expenses of repairs, alterations, additions, or improvements in or to the prison."

It appeared from the affidavits that Wigan is a borough with a separate Court of Quarter Sessions, and between December 1st, 1867, and November 30th, 1868, sent the borough prisoners to Kirkdale gaol, a prison of the county of Lancaster, but without any special contract with the county. A presentment having been duly made at the general sessions for the county, that the prison was insufficient and inconvenient and otherwise inadequate to give effect to the rules and regulations prescribed by "The Prison Act, 1865," and that part of it was in want of repair, the justices resolved that a sum not exceeding 21,000*l.* should be granted for the purpose of enlarging the prison. By subsequent resolutions this sum was increased to 28,700*l.* In January, 1868, a letter was addressed by the Home Secretary to the county justices, calling attention to the

By the Prison Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 126), s. 8: "There shall be provided, at the expense of every county, riding, division, hundred, liberty, franchise, borough, &c., or other place having a separate prison jurisdiction, adequate accommodation for its prisoners in a prison or prisons constructed and regulated in such manner as to comply with the regulations of the Act in respect of prisons.

"All expenses incurred by a prison authority in carrying into effect the provisions of the Act shall be defrayed out of the county rate or rate in the nature of a county rate, borough rate, or other rate leviable, in the county, riding, division, hundred, liberty, franchise, borough, &c., or other place having a separate prison jurisdiction, and applicable to the maintenance of a prison, or out of any other property applicable to that purpose."

By section 23: "Subject to the conditions herein-after mentioned, any prison authority may alter, enlarge, or rebuild any of its prisons, or may, if necessary, build other prisons in lieu of or in addition to any subsisting prisons, and may borrow money for the purpose of such alteration, enlargement, new building, or building, &c."

By section 24: "The necessity for any alteration or enlargement, or for rebuilding of an existing prison, or for the building of a new prison, is to be proved, in the case of a municipal borough, by the certificate of the recorder, or chairman of quarter sessions where there is no recorder, and in any other case by a presentment of two or more of the visiting justices, or other justices having jurisdiction within the district of the prison authority, with the sanction of one of her Majesty's Secretaries of State."

fact that the cell accommodation of the prison was insufficient, and intimating that unless the provisions of the law were complied with in regard to the prison, proceedings would be taken to prevent any grant being made by the Treasury towards the expense of maintaining the prisoners. In compliance with this letter, and the previous resolutions, a corridor containing 132 cells, cook house, bakery, &c., also male and female hospitals and fever wards, storehouse, chief warder's house, &c., were added to the prison. Application was then made to the borough by the visiting justices of the prison for the payment of certain sums as the amount due from the borough on account of the maintenance of prisoners committed from the borough to the prison during 1868. The corporation paid the amount required, deducting the proportion charged against the borough in respect of the expenses incurred in erecting the new buildings in the prison, on the ground that this expenditure did not come within the meaning of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 98. s. 18, but ought to be defrayed out of the county rates. During the half-year ending 1868 an unusual number of prisoners were committed to the county gaol from Wigan, and consequently the proportion of expenses charged upon the corporation was greater than is usually the case, even after deducting the disputed items.

The rule above mentioned having been obtained by the county justices,

H. Giffard and Baylis shewed cause.—The corporation are not liable to contribute to the cost of enlarging the prison in the proportion contended for by the county justices. The new buildings are not "repairs, alterations, additions and improvements" within the meaning of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 98. s. 18. The words in the statute refer to necessary repairs to a properly constructed prison, and not to a reconstruction of the prison itself. The Prison Act, 1865, requires different accommodation for prisoners, and the new buildings were constructed according to this Act, and were not necessary under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 98. The Act of 1865 does not in the absence of express enactment incorporate the provisions of the earlier Act. If the mandamus be refused, the justices may still charge the expenses against the county as if they were making a new gaol according to the provisions of the Prison Act, 1865, s. 8. The borough would pay a fair proportion of this rate, and not a proportion based on the number of prisoners which they may happen to have had in the gaol in a particular year.

[COCKBURN, C.J.—The enlargement of the county gaol may have been caused by the increase in the number of the borough prisoners.]

The Boroughs Relief Act, 12 & 13 Vict. c. 82, s. 1, shews that it was not the intention of the legislature that a borough like Wigan should contribute towards the construction of the county gaol. The accidental fact that the borough prisoners during 1868 were above the average in numbers proves the injustice of the method contended for by the county justices.

[LUSH, J.—The Act 5 & 6 Vict. c. 98, enables you to participate in the earnings of all the prisoners in the gaol.]

The expenses caused by the borough prisoners are not of a permanent nature.

Holker and Gorst, in support of the rule, were not heard.

COCKBURN, C.J.—I am of opinion that this rule should be made absolute. I have no doubt that the additions to the prison come within the words "repairs, alterations, additions and improvements in or to the prison," in 5 & 6 Vict. c. 98, s. 18. It was the intention of the legislature that boroughs or divisions should contribute to such of the prison expenses as might reasonably be caused by the admission of prisoners from every such borough or division, and that the amount should be regulated by the number of prisoners. It may be that owing to the unusually large number of prisoners which are sent by a borough in a single year there may be occasionally some hardship. But the only question for us is, whether these charges are within the words of the statute. I have no doubt that they are.

BLACKBURN, J.—I am of the same opinion. I see no reason why these expenses should be charged on the county rate. It may very possibly happen, as pointed out by the counsel for the borough, that there may be an unusual number of prisoners in a particular year, and this may be a good equitable reason for the justices to spread the expenditure over a number of years. But this does not affect the construction of the statute.

MELLOR, J., and LUSH, J., concurred.

Rule absolute.

Attorneys—Messrs. Sharpe, Parkers & Pritchard, agents for Mr. M. W. Peace, Wigan, for the prosecution; Messrs. Riddale & Craddock, agents for Messrs. Birchall & Co., Preston, for defendants.

[IN THE COURT OF EXCHEQUER.]

1870. }

Jan. 21. }

THE QUEEN v. EAVES.

Excise—Notice of Appeal—7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 53, ss. 61, 83—Notice of Hearing—4 Vict. c. 20, s. 30.

Service in Court of notice of appeal against an adjudication under the Excise Act (7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 53) upon the clerk to the justices in their presence is a good service on the justices themselves.

Service of the notice of the time for hearing the appeal on a clerk in the office of excise is not a good service under 4 Vict. c. 20, s. 30, that section requiring service to be made on the person laying the information.

CASE stated by the Recorder of Liverpool under the Excise Act, 7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 53, s. 84.

The appellant, David Eaves, was on the 15th of June, 1861, convicted by two justices of the borough of Liverpool, on the information of Benjamin Evans, an officer of excise, in a penalty of 100*l.*, for being concerned in the removal, deposit and concealment of a quantity of excisable goods, contrary to 7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 53.

Immediately on the conviction being pronounced, the appellant's counsel stated verbally in Court that the appellant would appeal against the conviction. About the same time the attorney for the appellant served on the clerk to the magistrates for the borough a notice of appeal to the quarter sessions, the clerk and the convicting justices being then in Court; and he also handed to Evans's attorney a copy of the notice, Evans himself being present at the hearing.

Evans's attorney immediately handed back the notice, stating that he declined to accept it.

On the 17th of June the appellant's attorney deposited 100*l.* with the collector of excise in Liverpool, and served a notice of appeal on a clerk in the office of the clerk of the peace for the borough.

On the 5th of July the appellant's attorney caused to be served a notice of the hearing of the appeal on clerks at the respective places of business of the convicting magistrates, and also caused a similar notice to be left at the Excise Office in the borough of Liverpool, with a clerk there.

At the hearing of the appeal, the respondent contended that the notices of appeal and of hearing were insufficient, whereupon this case was stated.

The question for the Court was whether the appellant had given the notices and complied with the preliminaries necessary to legally entitle him to have the appeal heard.

The following are the enactments bearing on the question:—

7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 53. s. 83, "No appeal shall be allowed unless the party or parties appealing shall, at and immediately upon the giving of the judgment appealed against, give notice in writing of such appeal to the Commissioners of Excise or justices of the peace respectively, from whose judgment such appeal shall be made, and also to the adverse party or parties on such appeal, and shall lodge such notice at the office or with the registrar of the Commissioners of Appeal, or with the clerk of the peace for the justices of the peace at such general quarter sessions respectively, by and before whom such appeal is to be finally adjudged and determined; and no such appeal as aforesaid shall be heard unless the party or parties appellant on such appeal shall within one week at least before such appeal is to be finally adjudged and determined, give notice in writing to the adverse party or parties on such appeal of the time and place when such appeal is to be heard,"—provided that when the judgment appealed from shall be a conviction in any penalty, the amount thereof shall be deposited in the hands of the Commissioners or collector of excise.

Section 61 of the same statute provides that no information for penalties can be exhibited except by order of the Commissioners of Excise.

4 & 5 Will. 4. c. 51. s. 28, enables such penalties to be sued for by order of the Commissioners of excise, and in the name of an officer of excise.

4 Vict. c. 20. s. 30, enacts "that the notice of the time and place when and where any appeal to the Barons of the Exchequer or to the justices assembled at quarter sessions is to be heard, shall be given on the part of the appellant to, or left at the place of abode of the respondent, seven clear days at least before such appeal is to be heard and determined."

Leofric Temple, for the appellant, contended that service in Court on the clerk to the justices in their presence was service on the justices themselves; and that the service of the notice of hearing at the excise office was a service on the Excise Commissioners, who were really the prosecutors, the nominal prosecutor acting in his own name by their order (7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 53. s. 61, and 4 & 5 Will. 4. c. 51. s. 28).

Charles Russell, the Attorney-General, the Solicitor-General, and Locke with him, for the respondent, contended that the justices must be personally served; and that the words "at the place of abode of the respondent," in 4 Vict. c. 20. s. 30, shewed that the actual respondent was intended to be served, and that it was not sufficient to serve a clerk at the Excise Office.

THE COURT (1) were of opinion that the service in Court of the notice of appeal on the magistrates' clerk was good, as service on the magistrates; but that the service of the notice of hearing on the clerk in the Excise Office was not good service on the adverse party or the respondent.

Case remitted.

Attorneys—Messrs. Vizard, Crowder & Co., agents for Messrs. Tebay & Lynch, Liverpool, for appellant; Solicitor to the Treasury, for respondent.

(1) Kelly, C.B., Martin, B., and Pigott, B.

[IN THE COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.]

1870. } FOSTER, appellant, TUCKER, re-
Feb. 14. } spondent.

Turnpike Toll—Manure carried by Dealer —Exemption—5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 18. s. 1.

Under 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 18. s. 1, which provides that no turnpike toll shall be demanded in respect of any horse or carriage conveying manure for land, artificial manure carried by the dealer to the farmer in the dealer's cart is exempt from toll.

CASE stated by justices of Wilts, under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43.

At a petty sessions for Salisbury, in Wilts, on the 22nd June, 1869, an information was preferred by John Tucker, the respondent, against T. Foster, the appellant, under 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 18. s. 1 (1), charging that T. Foster, of the parish of Coombe Bissett, in Wilts, being the collector of tolls at a turnpike gate there situate, called "the Coombe Bissett gate," did demand and take of and from one Trimby the sum of 1s. as and for the toll payable for the passing through the gate of a waggon drawn by two horses, he, Trimby, being exempt from the payment thereof, and claiming such exemption by reason of the waggon and horses being employed in conveying only manure for land, contrary to the form of the statute in such case made and provided, and the appellant was convicted, the justices stating the following case.

John Rebbeck, a farmer, living at Ebbesborne, in Wilts, had ordered from Charles Prangley, a dealer in artificial manures, a load of manufactured manure, namely, superphosphate of lime, for his land.

On the 18th of June, 1869, the manure was forwarded to Rebbeck, in a waggon drawn by two horses, belonging to Prangley, and driven by his carter, Trimby. Trimby passed with such waggon and horses, loaded with the manure, through the turnpike gate at Coombe Bissett, of which the appellant is the toll collector. The appellant demanded a toll of one shilling. Trimby claimed exemption on the ground that he was carrying the manure to Rebbeck, and on the appellant refusing to let him pass, he paid the toll.

It was contended on the part of the appellant that the manure was liable to toll, inasmuch as it was manufactured merchandise, and had not passed from the dealer's hands; that Prangley was not as such manufacturer and dealer entitled to any exemption from toll.

The justices being of opinion that it was manure for land, which was exempt from toll when on its carriage to land, whether carried by the owner of the land or the person of whom it was purchased, gave their determination against the appellant. The question for the opinion of the Court is, whether imported or artificial manure, being conveyed to the farmer by the manufacturer and seller, is exempt from toll.

De Rutzen, for the appellant.—It is admitted that the case of The Queen v. Freke (2), a decision upon the construction of a local act, and that of Pratt v. Brown (3), are in favour of the view that these goods were exempt from toll. But it is submitted that the exception ought only to apply to those who are about to use the manure and not to those who sell it.

Snowden, for the respondent, was not heard.

LUSH, J.—We need not trouble the counsel for the respondent. The words of the exemption are general. The case expressly states that superphosphate of lime is manure, and the decisions shew that it is immaterial whether the article is being carried for the dealer or the person who is going to use it.

Judgment for the respondent.

Attorneys—Messrs. Sandys & Knott, agents for Messrs. Johns & Trail, Blandford, for appellant; Messrs. Venning, Robins, & Venning, agents for Messrs. Cobb & Smith, Salisbury, for respondent.

(2) 5 E. & B. 944; s. c. 25 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 64.

(3) 8 Car. & P. 244.

(1) Which provides that from and after the 1st of January, 1836, no toll shall be demanded or taken on any turnpike road for or in respect of any horse, beast, cattle, or carriage when employed in carrying any dung, soil, compost, or manure for land (save and except lime), and the necessary implements used for filling the manure, and the cloth that may have been used for covering any hay, clover, or straw which may have been conveyed.

[IN THE COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.]

1870. }
Jan. 31. }

THE QUEEN v. PRATT.

Debtor and Creditor—Imprisonment for Nonpayment of Costs on Appeal to Quarter Sessions—“Sum of Money Recoverable Summarily before a Justice of the Peace” —New Debtors Act (32 & 33 Vict. c. 62), s. 4. sub s. 2—11 & 12 Vict. c. 43. s. 27—12 & 13 Vict. c. 45. s. 5.

By the Debtors Act, 1869, Part 1, imprisonment for debt is abolished, but there is excepted from the enactment, first, default in payment of a penalty, &c.; secondly, default in payment of any sum recoverable summarily before a justice or justices of the peace. By 12 & 13 Vict. c. 45. s. 5, upon any appeal to sessions the Court may order the party against whom the same shall be decided to pay costs, such costs to be recoverable in the manner pointed out by s. 27 of 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43. By the latter section, if the statute give costs and the sessions order them, the order must direct them to be paid to the clerk of the peace, &c., and if they are not paid, the clerk of the peace is to grant a certificate to that effect, and upon production thereof to a justice, a warrant of distress may issue, and in default of distress, a warrant for commitment to prison.

Upon appeal to quarter sessions against an affiliation order, the order was quashed, with costs, and the respondent, in default of distress, committed to prison:—Held, that as the word “recoverable” was used by the Act 12 & 13 Vict. c. 45, in alluding to the proceedings under 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43. s. 27, for enforcing the payment of costs, the right to these costs must be taken to be a right to a sum of money recoverable summarily before a justice of the peace, within the exception in the Debtors Act, and the respondent was therefore not protected from imprisonment.

Rule calling on the Rev. G. H. Pratt to shew cause why a habeas corpus should not issue directed to the keeper of the house of correction at Spilsby, in Lincolnshire, commanding him to have the body of Isabella Cole before the Court, &c.

It appeared from the affidavits that an order had been made by borough magistrates of Louth for the maintenance by the Rev. G. H. Pratt of a bastard child of the prisoner. Upon appeal to the quarter sessions the order was quashed, with costs, to be paid by the respondent to the deputy clerk of the peace within fourteen days. The appellant taxed the costs, and having obtained from the clerk of the peace a certificate that they had not been paid, applied to a justice of the peace for a distress warrant to levy them upon the respondent's goods, under 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, and 12 & 13 Vict. c. 45. In default of distress the justice issued his warrant for the committal of the respondent to Spilsby gaol for the period of two months, and she was accordingly arrested, and lodged in the gaol. This rule was obtained on the ground that under the recent Debtors Act, 32 & 33 Vict. c. 62, the respondent was not subject to imprisonment (1).

NEW SERIES, 39.—MAG. CAS.

Digby Seymour and Hopwood shewed cause.—The respondent is not entitled to be discharged from custody. First, these costs are a penalty within the meaning of s. 4 of the Debtors Act. The costs are awarded by virtue of 7 & 8 Vict.

(1) By the Debtors Act, 1869 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 62), s. 4, with the exceptions hereinafter mentioned, no person shall after the commencement of this Act be arrested or imprisoned for making default in payment of a sum of money. There shall be excepted from the operation of the above enactment—1. Default in payment of a penalty or sum in the nature of a penalty, other than a penalty in respect of any contract; 2. Default in payment of any sum recoverable summarily before a justice or justices of the peace.

By 12 & 13 Vict. c. 45. s. 6, upon any appeal to any Court of general or quarter sessions of the peace, the Court before whom the same shall be brought may, if it think fit, order and direct the party or parties against whom the same shall be decided, to pay to the other party or parties such costs and charges as may appear to such Court just and reasonable, such costs to be recoverable in the manner provided for the recovery of costs upon an appeal against an order or conviction by 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43.

By 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, s. 18, in all cases of summary conviction, or of orders made by a justice or justices of the peace, power is given to the justice or justices making the same in his or their discretion, to award costs, which shall be specified in the conviction or order of dismissal, “and the same shall be recoverable in the same manner and under the same warrants as any penalty or sum of money adjudged to be paid in and by such conviction or order is to be recoverable; and in cases where there is no such penalty or

L

c. 101. s. 4, and before Baines' Act (12 & 13 Vict. c. 45) costs under an order of sessions could only be enforced by indictment—The Queen v. Mortlock (2). By 12 & 13 Vict. c. 45. s. 5, the quarter sessions may make an order for the payment of the costs upon an appeal, and these costs are to be recoverable in the manner pointed out by 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43. s. 27. By the section referred to, the order for costs upon appeal is to direct them to be paid to the clerk of the peace, and upon his certificate that they are not paid, a justice of the peace may issue a distress warrant, and in default of distress, a warrant of committal.

[COCKBURN, C.J.—Can these costs be said to be recoverable before a justice who only acts ministerially in issuing his warrant?]

The word "recoverable" is used in the same sense as recovered. Bancroft v. Mitchell (3) is an authority to shew that the proceedings for enforcing these costs are sum to be thereby recovered, then such costs shall be recoverable by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of the party."

And by section 27, after an appeal against any such conviction or order as in the Act previously mentioned shall be decided, if the same shall be decided in favour of the respondents, the justice or justices who made such conviction or order, or any other justice of the peace of the same county, riding, &c., may issue such warrant of distress or commitment as aforesaid for execution of the same, as if no such appeal had been brought; and if upon any such appeal, the Court of quarter sessions shall order either party to pay costs, such order shall direct such costs to be paid to the clerk of the peace, to be by him paid over to the party entitled to the same, &c., and if the same shall not be paid within the time limited, and the party ordered to pay the same shall not be bound by any recognizance, &c., such clerk of the peace or his deputy, upon application to the party entitled to such costs, or of any person on his behalf, shall grant to the party so applying a certificate that such costs have not been paid, and upon production of such certificate to any justice or justices of the peace for the same county, &c., it shall be lawful for him or them to enforce the payment of such costs by warrant of distress in manner aforesaid, and in default of distress, he or they may commit the party against whom such warrant shall have issued in manner hereinbefore mentioned, for any time not exceeding three calendar months, unless the amount of such costs, &c., shall be sooner paid.

(2) 7 Q.B. Rep. 459; s.c. 14 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 153.

(3) 36 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 257.

in the nature of criminal process. Secondly, if not a penalty, the costs are clearly a sum of money recoverable summarily before justices, as appears from the sense in which the word "recoverable" is used in the two Acts—11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, and 12 & 13 Vict. c. 45.

J. Mellor and Lumley in support of the rule.—Under the order directing the respondent to pay the costs of the appeal to the Quarter Sessions, such costs were not a "penalty" within the meaning of the Debtors Act. The Queen v. Berry (4) shews that proceedings in bastardy are in the nature of a civil suit.

[The Court intimated that the costs could not be considered as a penalty.]

Secondly, the costs are not a sum recoverable summarily before a justice or justices of the peace. The words "recoverable summarily" are a term of art, and apply only to cases where the justices, in the exercise of their summary powers, decide whether money shall or shall not be paid, and not where they have only to enforce payment. It is only where justices make an order for the payment of money after issuing a summons that the money can be said to be "summarily recoverable." Where they enforce payment of the costs awarded upon an appeal to quarter sessions, the costs are levied, not recovered, by the intervention of the magistrates. In 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43. s. 29, summary proceedings are described as being founded upon an information and summons. In the Cattle Diseases Prevention Act, 1866 (29 & 30 Vict. c. 2), s. 30, penalties under the act and the expenses are to be recovered before two justices, in manner directed by 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, which must be by summary proceedings founded upon an information and summons.

[BLACKBURN, J.—If you will refer to 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43. s. 18, you will find that costs awarded upon a summary conviction are directed to be "recoverable" in the same manner and under the same warrants as any penalty or sum of money adjudged to be paid in and by such conviction or order is to be recoverable.]

The costs in question are recoverable

(4) 28 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 86.

by the joint operation of the order of quarter sessions and the warrant of the justices enforcing the payment, and they cannot come within the words "recoverable summarily before a justice of the peace."

COCKBURN, C.J.—Everything has been said which could well be said in support of this rule, but the argument has failed to disturb the view which I had formed as to the construction of the statute. Upon the best consideration which I can give to it, I think that the case falls within the second exception in section 4 of the statute. It cannot but be admitted that costs are within the meaning of the words "default in payment of a sum of money," because otherwise costs recoverable by a defendant who has obtained judgment in a superior Court would not come within the statute; and I so far agree with the counsel in support of the rule as to think that under ordinary circumstances the enactment would apply to them. We come, therefore, to the question, Are these costs "a sum of money recoverable summarily before justices" within the meaning of the exception in the act? Now, I cannot help saying that I should be surprised if in an act manifestly intended for the abolition of imprisonment for debt, and which contains a series of exceptions, a case of this kind, where a magistrate has to exercise an important jurisdiction, should not be provided for. Then, if we look to the other Acts of Parliament to see what has been the language of the legislature in cases where the payment of costs is directed to be enforced by a process like the present one, we find that in Jervis's Act (11 & 12 Vict. c. 43. s. 18), by which justices are empowered to give costs in cases of summary convictions or orders, and in Baines' Act (12 & 13 Vict. c. 45. s. 5), which gives the power to award costs on appeals to the sessions, the same word "recoverable" is applied to the process by which the payment is enforced. It has been argued that the use of the word "summarily" after "recoverable" shews that it is only intended to describe proceedings which are commenced by information; but I cannot help thinking that what is meant is every case where proceedings are taken before a magistrate either in his judicial or ministerial capacity for the recovery of a penalty or sum of money. Having regard to the words of the statute, and the sense in which the word "recoverable" is used in previous acts, I think that in the present case the right to imprison is not taken away. The rule must be discharged.

BLACKBURN, J.—I am of the same opinion. The respondent was committed to prison in a manner which was perfectly right and legal, unless the effect of the Act, 32 & 33 Vict. c. 62, is to take away the right of imprisoning her. This statute enacts in general terms, that, with the exceptions to be afterwards mentioned, "no person shall be arrested or imprisoned for making default in payment of a sum of money," and the question is whether this case is within the exception, "any sum recoverable summarily before a justice or justices of the peace." Now there are many cases where the payment of a sum of money may be enforced by the justices of the peace, and it has been argued that the words "recoverable summarily" apply only to those cases where there is an adjudication, after summons and hearing, that a sum of money is due. Now, although the word "recover" properly applies to a case where a magistrate has to adjudicate whether money is or is not due, yet the word "recoverable" may also apply to cases where the payment of money is enforced without the magistrate being called upon to adjudicate, as in the case of a poor rate, which is enforced by a distress warrant granted by justices whose duty is purely a ministerial one. Now I think the legislature must be taken to have been well aware in passing the Debtors' Act that there are cases where the justices, who make an order for the payment of money, may upon default themselves commit the person liable to prison, and that there are a great many cases where this power of so committing the defaulter is not given to them, but to other justices. Bearing this in remembrance, it may well be that the legislature, in abolishing the power of imprisonment for debt, might say, "We do not at present deal with any of those cases where a man may be imprisoned by justices in a summary proceeding for default in the payment of a sum of money. Now we find in Baines' Act, that the costs upon appeal to sessions are to be "recoverable" in the same manner as in section 27 of Jervis's Act, and turning there we find that in section 18 the costs upon an order of dismissal are to be "recoverable" in the same manner as a penalty, using the word as applicable to proceedings for enforcing the payment of the costs. Therefore the legislature, in framing the exception, might very well have intended to use the word "recoverable" in the same sense as in Baines' Act, although the right to the sum of money had been previously determined before another tribunal.

LUSH, J.—I am of the same opinion. I think that this case is taken out of the operation of the Debtors Act by the second branch of section 4, as being a sum of money "recoverable summarily" before a justice of the peace. I think that these words "sum of money" were advisedly used as a substitute for the word "debt," in order to include cases which do not properly come under the description of "debt," as costs on a judgment of nonsuit or on a rule of Court, or unliquidated damages in an action of tort, cases in which a ca. sa. might otherwise have been issued, and the person arrested imprisoned for life. We find, therefore, that the words "sum of money" are used both in the enacting part of the section and in the exception to it, and in both instances they include costs. Then, can it be said that costs awarded by a Court of Quarter Sessions are "recoverable summarily before a justice of the peace?" Now section 5 of Baines' Act is as follows (the learned judge read the section). So that the very expression "recoverable" is used as indicating the process for enforcing the payment of the costs awarded by the quarter sessions. By section 18 of Jervis's Act the costs where the information is dismissed are to be "recoverable" in the same way as a penalty, and by sections 19 and 21 a justice, who has taken no part in making the order of dismissal, may enforce payment of the costs by a warrant of distress. By section 27 these powers are extended to costs upon appeal. Now, it is provided by Baines' Act that the costs upon an appeal, like the present one, are to be "recoverable" in the manner pointed out in section 27 of Jervis's Act. Is there any reason why we should put the limited construction upon the words "recoverable summarily" which has been suggested, and hold that they only apply to cases where there has been an adjudication on summons? It is conceded that the costs upon the original order would come within the exception, and it would be rather extraordinary if the costs on appeal were not affected by it. Prima facie one would suppose that the exception applied to both cases. We ought also not to lose sight of the fact that the reasons for abolishing imprisonment for debt for an indefinite period, do not apply to an imprisonment for a limited term, which is not in the nature of an execution.

Rule discharged.

Attorneys—Brooksbank & Galland, agents for F. Sharpley, Louth, for respondent; Woodroffe & Plaskitt, agents for J. T. Tweed, Lincoln, for appellant.

[IN THE COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.]

1870. } THE QUEEN ON THE PROSECUTION
Feb. 14. } OF TURNER v. PEARSON.

Assault and Battery—Summary Jurisdiction—Title to Land in Question—Excess
—24 & 25 Vict. c. 100. s. 42 & 46.

The power given to justices by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100. s. 42, of summarily hearing and determining charges of assault and battery is by s. 46 ousted in any case where a question as to the title to land arises, and they cannot in such a case convict the defendant for using more violence than was necessary.

Rule for the prosecutor to shew cause why a conviction under the hands and seals of two justices of the peace in and for the county of Derby, whereby the defendant was convicted for unlawfully assaulting one Turner, should not be quashed.

It appeared from the affidavits in support of the motion to quash the conviction tion, that the defendant was summoned under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100. s. 42, for an assault on Turner, when it appeared that the defendant claimed to be the owner of a piece of land at South Wingfield in Derby, and had committed an assault on Turner in endeavouring to prevent him from asserting a right of placing bricks on the land.

The defendant's attorney appeared before the justices and offered evidence to shew that the title to the land came into question, and therefore they had no authority to hear and determine the charge according to 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 46 (1), but the justices refused to hear the evidence, and although it appeared in the cross examination of Turner that the title to the land did come into question, they proceeded with the charge and convicted the defendant, on the ground that he had used more violence than was necessary.

Robinson, Serjt., shewed cause, and contended that the jurisdiction of the justices was only ousted where the assault was an act necessarily done in vindication of the title to land. In the present case, it must be taken that there was more violence than was necessary, and the conviction only applied to the excess. He cited Re Thompson (2).

Bruce, in support of the rule, was not heard.

LUSH, J.—I think we need not trouble the counsel in support of the motion. I am of opinion that the rule must be made absolute. It appears from the affidavits, and is not contradicted on the other side, that the assault in question was committed in the course of an assertion of title by the defendant. The prosecutor had entered upon land which the defendant claimed to be his, and the assault was committed in an attempt to prevent him from placing bricks on the land. It appeared also that these facts were distinctly brought to the notice of the justices. That being so, I am of opinion that their jurisdiction was at an end, and that they had no power to go into the question, whether the violence was excessive or not. I think the words of the 46th section shew this beyond all doubt. The jurisdiction which the magistrates have to deal summarily with assaults is given by previous sections of the same Act. Then comes the 46th, which contains a provision, "That nothing herein contained shall authorise any justices to hear and determine any case of assault or battery in which any question shall arise as to the title to any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, or any interest therein or accruing therefrom." The words of the section are very large, and comprise every case of assault and battery in which the title to land comes into question. In all these cases the power to decide summarily is ousted. I think, therefore, the magistrates should have held their hands. We can do nothing else but reverse the conviction.

HANNEN, J., concurred.

Rule absolute.

Attorneys—Neal & Philpot, agents for Wilson & Burkinshaw, Alfreton, for prosecutor; Aldridge & Thorn, agents for Richards & Son, Alfreton, for defendant.

[IN THE COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.]

1870. } BERRY, appellant, v. HENDERSON,
Feb. 14. } respondent.

Sale of Poisons—Medicine—Person to whom Sold or Delivered—31 & 32 Vict. c. 121. s. 17; 32 & 33 Vict. c. 117. s. 3.

By the Pharmacy Act 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 121. s. 17), "it shall be unlawful to sell any poison, either by wholesale or by retail, unless the box, bottle, vessel, wrapper, or cover in which such poison be contained be distinctly labelled with the name of the article and the word 'poison,' and with the name and address of the seller of the poison; and it shall be unlawful to sell any

(1) By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100. s. 42, two justices may hear and determine a charge of unlawful assault and battery, and upon conviction may fine or imprison the offender.

By s. 46, nothing herein contained shall authorise any justices to hear and determine any case of assault and battery in which any question shall arise as to the title to any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, or any interest therein, or accruing therefrom.

(2) 6 Hurl. & N. 193; s. c. 30 Law J. Rep. (n.s.) M.C. 19.

poison mentioned in the first part of schedule A to the Act (among which is prussic acid), to any person unknown to the seller, &c., and any person selling poison otherwise than is herein provided shall, upon a summary conviction before two justices of the peace, be liable to a penalty not exceeding five pounds for the first offence; and for the purposes of the section the person on whose behalf any sale is made by any apprentice or servant, shall be deemed to be the seller, but the provisions of the section are not to apply to any medicine supplied by a legally qualified apothecary to his patient, nor apply to any article when forming part of the ingredients of any medicine when dispensed by a person registered under the Act, provided such medicine be labelled in the manner aforesaid with the name and address of the seller, and the ingredients thereof be entered, with the name of the person to whom it is sold or delivered, in a book to be kept by the seller for that purpose."

The appellant, a duly registered chemist, was convicted under this section for selling poison to a person unknown to him. It was proved that one J., who was unknown to the appellant, came into his shop and produced a prescription written in the abbreviated form usual among chemists. At the foot of it were the initials R. M. L. and the words Mrs. Newton, Aug. 11, 1869. There was a legally qualified medical practitioner having the initials R. M. L. The appellant's assistant dispensed the prescription by putting a small quantity of prussic acid into a bottle and filling up the bottle with rose water, according to the meaning of the prescription. The appellant made an entry in his prescription book, Newton, Mrs. (copying the prescription), Aug. 11, R. M. L. He also indexed the entry by inserting the name "Newton" and the page in the index contained in the book. The bottle was labelled with the name and address of the appellant but not with the word "poison." The prescription was one which might be ordered for a lotion. No evidence was given as to whether there was such a person as Mrs. Newton or not. The appellant was also convicted in respect of the same sale for selling poison in a bottle not labelled with the word "poison."

Held, first, that, assuming that the appellant bona fide believed that he was dispersing a prescription given by a medical man to Mrs. Newton, that he could not be convicted for selling poison to a person unknown to him, but must be taken to have dispensed a medicine according to the requirements of the proviso to s. 17. Secondly, that he could not be twice convicted under the same section in respect of the same sale.

CASE stated by Justices of Sussex under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43.

1. At a petty sessions holden at Worthing, Sussex, on the 18th of August, 1869, an information was preferred under section 17 of the Pharmacy Act, 1868 (1),

(1) By the Pharmacy Act, 1868, 31 & 32 Vict. c. 121. s. 17, "It shall be unlawful to sell any poison, either by wholesale or by retail, unless the box, bottle, vessel, wrapper, or cover in which such poison is contained, be distinctly labelled with the name of the article and the word 'poison,' and with the name and address of the seller of the poison; and it shall be unlawful to sell any poison of those which are in the first part of schedule A to this Act (among which is prussic acid) or may hereafter be added thereto under section 2 of this Act, to any person unknown to the seller, unless introduced by some person known to the seller; and on every sale of any such article, the seller shall, before delivery, make or cause to be made an entry in a book to be kept for that purpose, stating, in the form set forth in schedule F to this Act, the date of the sale, the name and address of the purchaser, the name and quantity of the article sold, and the purpose for which it is stated by the purchaser to be required, to which entry the signature of the purchaser, and of the person, if any, who introduced him, shall be affixed; and any person selling poison otherwise than is herein provided, shall, upon a summary conviction before two justices of the peace in England, be liable to a penalty not exceeding five pounds for the first offence, and to a penalty not exceeding ten pounds for the second or any subsequent offence; and for the purposes of this section, the person on whose behalf any sale is made by any apprentice or servant, shall be deemed to be the seller; but the provisions of this section, which are solely applicable to poisons in the first part of the schedule A to this Act, or which require that the label shall contain the name and address of the seller, shall not apply to articles to be exported from Great Britain by wholesale dealers, nor to sales by wholesale to retail dealers in the ordinary course of wholesale dealing; nor shall any of the provisions of this section apply to any medicine supplied by a legally qualified apothecary to his patient, nor apply to any article when forming part of the ingredients of any medicine dispensed by a person registered under this Act, provided such medicine be labelled in the manner aforesaid with the name and address of the seller, and the ingredients by L. B. Henderson (the respondent), an inspector of police, against Henry Berry (the appellant), a pharmaceutical chemist duly registered under the Pharmacy Act, 1868, charging that the appellant on the 11th of August, 1869, at Worthing, did unlawfully sell a certain poison, to wit, prussic acid, by retail, the bottle in which such poison was contained not being labelled with the word poison.

2. The following facts were proved or admitted.

3. On the 11th of August, 1869, one Ansell Johnson came into the shop of the appellant, the appellant and his assistant being there, and asked to have made up a prescription which was written in pencil and is as follows:—

Ry Acid : Hydrocyan : Scheel's, 3 ij.

Aq : Rosæ, 3 ij.

M. ft. lotio.

Ter die applic :

R. M. L.

Mrs. Newton,
August 11th, 1869.

The original of this prescription is to be taken to form part of this case.

4. The meaning of the name "Mrs. Newton" in the prescription was that the prescription was for the use of Mrs. Newton. There is a legally qualified medical practitioner having the initials "R. M. L."

5. The appellant's assistant dispensed the prescription by putting two drachms of hydrocyanic acid into a two ounce bottle and filling up the bottle with rose-water according to the meaning of the prescription.

6. The appellant made the following entry in his prescription book :
Newton, Mrs.

R. acid, Hydrocyan. Scheel's, 3 ij.

thereof be entered, with the name of the person to whom it is sold or delivered, in a book to be kept by the seller for that purpose."

By the Pharmacy Act Amendment Act, 32 & 33 Vict. c. 117. s. 3, nothing in 31 & 32 Vict. c. 121. s. 17, is to apply to any medicine supplied by a legally qualified medical practitioner to his patient, or dispensed by any person registered under the Act, provided such medicine be distinctly labelled with the name and address of the seller, and the ingredients thereof be entered, with the name of the person to whom it is sold or delivered, in a book to be kept by the seller for that purpose.

Aq. Rosæ, ad., 3 ij.

M. ft. lotio.

Ter die applicand.

R. M. L.

August 11.

He also indexed the entry by inserting the name "Newton" and the page in the index contained in the book.

7. The prescription book is a book in which the appellant copies all prescriptions he makes up. This book is to be taken to form part of this case.

8. Ansell Johnson paid the appellant's claim and took the bottle and its contents away.

9. The bottle was labelled as follows :

Caution. For external use ;

The lotion to be used three times a day.

Mrs. Newton.

H. Berry, Dispensing Chemist,
Member of the Pharmaceutical Society, 68 Montague Street, Worthing.

The bottle was not labelled poison. The bottle and the label thereon are to be taken to form part of this case.

10. Hydrocyanic acid, Scheel's, is prussic acid. The prescription is one that might be ordered for a lotion. Rose water by itself is not a medicine.

11. No evidence was given that there was or was not any such person as Mrs. Newton. Ansell Johnson, a witness for the prosecution, refused to answer the two questions—Did he buy it for Mrs. Newton? Did he buy it for himself?—on the ground that by answering he might tend to criminate himself on a charge of attempting to commit suicide, on which he at the time stood remanded.

12. The appellant had been convicted in respect of the same sale of selling poison to a person unknown to him.

13. The Pharmacy Act, 1869, received the royal assent on the day of the alleged offence.

14. The following points were raised on behalf of the appellant:—

15. That the appellant had not sold a poison within the meaning of the Pharmacy Act, 1868, but that the appellant being a person registered under that Act, had dispensed a medicine, and that the appellant had complied with the provisions of the Pharmacy Act, 1868.

16. That if the appellant had sold a poison it was an article forming part of the ingredients of a medicine, and that the proviso forming the end of the section had been complied with.

17. That the appellant could not have committed two offences by one act, and that he could not therefore be convicted for this offence.

18. The following points were raised on behalf of the respondent:—

19. That the thing sold was not a medicine, but a poison partially diluted.

20. That the name "Mrs. Newton" entered by the appellant was not the name of the person to whom the article was sold or delivered, but only the name of a person for whose use it was alleged to be required.

21. That the book in which the entry was made was not a book kept for that purpose, inasmuch as it was kept for the purpose of copying therein prescriptions of all sorts.

22. That if by one act two laws were broken, two punishments might follow.

23. The justices adjourned the further consideration of the matter until the 25th of August, 1869.

24. On the last-mentioned day they convicted the appellant of the offence, and adjudged him to forfeit and pay the sum of 10s., to be paid and applied according to law, and also to pay to the respondent the sum of 1l. 1s. for his costs.

25. The appellant being dissatisfied with the decision applied to the justices to state this case.

26. The questions of law are:—

27. Whether a mixture of prussic acid and rose water is a poison within the meaning of s. 17 of the Pharmacy Act, 1868.

28. Whether a mixture of prussic acid and rose water, when dispensed by a person registered under the Pharmacy Act, 1868, is a medicine within the meaning of s. 17 of that Act.

29. Whether, according to the facts before stated, the appellant complied with the requirements of the proviso at the end of the 17th section of the Pharmacy Act, 1868.

30. Whether a man can be twice convicted for one act.

31. Whether, upon the facts herein-stated, and the law applicable thereto, the appellant was properly convicted.

Quain (Bullock with him) for the appellant.—A question has arisen whether the later Act, 32 & 33 Vict. c. 117, which received the royal assent on the very day on which the conviction took place, applies to the present case. But the appellant has no wish to raise this point, as the words of 31 & 32 Vict. c. 121. s. 17, under which the conviction took place, are sufficient to shew that he was improperly convicted. The first question is whether the article sold to Johnson was a medicine within the meaning of the proviso to the section.

[HANNEN, J.—Was the bottle labelled in the manner required by the Act?]

It is not necessary that it should be labelled "poison," "labelled in the manner aforesaid" means labelled with the name and address of the seller, and it was so labelled. It is stated that the prescription is one which might be ordered for a lotion, that is, a medicine composed for the purpose of being applied externally. The term medicine is applied to a thing used externally as well as internally.

[LUSH, J.—The proviso might have been necessary in order to apply to medicine which contained a very small proportion of prussic acid, so that the whole compound was not poisonous. But suppose the thing sent out is essentially a poison, how is that protected by the proviso?]

Whether the article is a poison or a medicine depends upon the patient for whom it is prescribed. The moment a prescription, written in the ordinary form, and professing to be written by a duly qualified medical man, is brought to a chemist, and the chemist, acting in good faith, puts up the ingredients, and inserts the name of the person to whom he professes to sell the prescription in a book kept for the purpose, he brings himself within the proviso. It would be very inexpedient to require that ordinary medicines should be labelled with the word "poison." The statute in the case of a medicine does not require the name and address of the buyer to be entered in the chemist's book, but only the name of the person for whom it appears to be intended. The later Act, 32 & 33 Vict. c. 117, was only passed to extend the operation of section 17 of the preceding Act to legally qualified medical practitioners, but any doubt as to the construction of this section with regard to the labelling which is required is removed by the words of 32 & 33 Vict. c. 117. s. 3, "distinctly labelled with the name and address of the seller." Lastly, it cannot be seriously contended that the appellant can be convicted in two distinct penalties for the same offence.

Lumley Smith, for the respondent.—The case is not within the proviso to 31 & 32 Vict. c. 121. s. 17. The object of the statute was twofold: to prevent poisons being obtained for improper purposes, and to preserve evidence of the person to whom the poison was supplied by the chemist. The mixture sold by the appellant was a poison within the meaning of the first part of the section, for prussic acid is a poison, although it be diluted with water. The proviso was only intended to apply to medicines for internal use, in which a very small quantity of poison may be introduced. No mixture can be a medicine within the meaning of the Act unless it has medicinal ingredients. The word "medicine" applies only to mixtures where one ingredient corrects the other, and not to a mere dilution of poison. The next question is whether a proper entry of the transaction was made, and it is submitted that the appellant ought to have produced affirmative proof that "Mrs. Newton" was an existing person.

[LUSH, J.—Must we not take it that the appellant bona fide believed that this was a prescription for a lotion intended for Mrs. Newton?]

Bona fide belief does not affect the question, as is shewn by the words making the chemist or druggist liable for the act of his apprentice or servant. Further, it is not enough that there is a physician whose initials are the same as those written on the prescription.

[LUSH, J.—To require the appellant to prove that some physician bearing these initials, did in fact write the prescription, would place a great difficulty in the way of chemists.]

In the next place the name of "Mrs. Newton" entered in the book was not the name of the person to whom the mixture was sold or delivered. It was delivered to Johnson. The prescription ought also to have been entered, not in the ordinary prescription book, but in a book kept for the purpose. With regard to the double conviction there have been two different infractions of the law.

[LUSH, J.—No matter how far the offender deviates from the statute, the statute only renders him liable to one penalty for each act.]

Quain, in reply.—It was for the prosecution to shew that the appellant did not bona fide believe that Mrs. Newton was the person to whom the medicine was sold. (It was thereupon agreed that the Court should be at liberty to draw inferences of fact from the case.)

LUSH, J.—Then I think we need not trouble you further, Mr. Quain. Assuming that we are to draw inferences, and taking the case as if it stood as the finding of the magistrates, in point of fact, that this gentleman did really believe that when he was dispensing this prescription he was making up a prescription which had been actually given by a medical man to Mrs. Newton for a lotion, as it purported to be, I am of opinion, that he has brought himself within the proviso. The first part of the 31 & 32 Vict. c. 121. s. 17, the enacting part, applies to the sale of poisons, and amongst the enumerated poisons is prussic acid. I observe that the Act seems to allude to poisons as being sold in their simple state, or in one form of preparation. It does not appear to contemplate their being mixed up with any other ingredients; they must be pure and simple. Then comes the proviso. Taking the general sweeping words of the enactment, they would, perhaps, have prohibited any medical man dispensing a prescription that contained a poison. It was supposed this might be so, in all probability; and then comes the proviso, which says, that nothing in the Act contained shall "apply to any medicine supplied by a legally qualified apothecary to his patient, nor apply to any article when forming part of the ingredients of any medicine dispensed by a person registered under this Act." Is this a medicine? That is not disputed. The word "medicine" is comprehensive enough to embrace everything which is to be applied medicinally, whether externally or internally. According to the prescription, this was intended to be used as a lotion, and the case states as a fact, that the prescription was one which might be proper for a lotion. The proviso seems to put upon the same footing, in this respect, a duly qualified medical man, supplying this thing to his patient, and a registered chemist and druggist dispensing such a thing. If a duly qualified medical man had actually supplied, and himself delivered, to his patient this compound of prussic acid and rosewater as a lotion, then he would be protected under the first part of the proviso. That being so, I think the same rules apply to a registered chemist and druggist making up that compound from a prescription, which, as I understand, is the making up something that is prescribed, and making it with directions how it is to be used. Then, did this prussic acid form part of the ingredients of a medicine dispensed by a duly registered person? It struck me, on first reading the section, that the word applied only to cases where the poisonous article is one of several ingredients, where, perhaps, its poisonous qualities are qualified in a more or less degree by the other ingredients; but then, I think, it would be very difficult to apply the Act with that interpretation of it. We cannot enter into the consideration whether the other ingredients are fewer or greater in number, or in what proportion they may be. This is of itself a compound, and is a medicine which might have been ordered by a medical man to be used as a lotion. Then, has he complied with the remaining part of the section, which requires that the medicine "should be labelled in the manner aforesaid?" by which I understand, "labelled distinctly and legibly with the name and address of the seller," as stated in the section; and that the ingredients thereof be entered, with the name of the person to whom it is sold or delivered, in a book to be kept by the seller for that purpose. It is found that the ingredients were entered in what he called his prescription-book, which, I think, satisfies the requirements of the Act, as a book kept for that purpose, a book kept for entering such medicines or prescriptions. Then he has entered, as the person to whom it was sold, Mrs. Newton. The statute, by saying the name of the person to whom it was sold, or for whom it was delivered, has, I think, meant to give him the option of putting down the name of the person to whom he actually gave it over the counter, or the name of the person whose agent that person was, and for whose use it was intended. Taking the fact to be found, that he reasonably believed that this mixture was duly prescribed for Mrs. Newton, Mrs. Newton must be taken to be the person to whom he sold it, and, therefore, he complied with the provisions of the Act. For these reasons, I think, the conviction was wrong.

M

HANNEN, J.—I am of the same opinion. I think we are able to pronounce our judgment upon the assumption which has been made, that it is to be taken that the magistrates would have found that the chemist in this case acted bona fide, believing that Mrs. Newton was the person to whom the medicine was sold. Without that, I should have thought it necessary that there should be a further inquiry, but upon that assumption I think we shall be putting a construction upon the Act which will not lead to the dangerous consequences which have been suggested, because it will only be where a chemist establishes that he has entered the name of the person to whom he delivers the medicine, or to the person to whom it shall be found he reasonably believed he had sold it, that he brings himself within the terms of this proviso.

Conviction quashed.

Attorneys—Flux, Argles & Rawlins, for appellant; H. S. Willett, agent for M. Green, Worthing, for respondent.

[CROWN CASE RESERVED.]

1870. }
 Jan. 22. } THE QUEEN v. WYATT.*

Pleading — Indictment — Aiding and Abetting a Felony—Aiding in Attempt—14 & 15 Vict. c. 100. s. 9—Rape.

An indictment against H. and W. charged H. with rape, and W. with aiding and abetting the said rape. They were found not guilty of the felony, but the jury found H. guilty of attempting to commit the rape charged, and W. of aiding and abetting H. in the attempt:—Held, that H. was rightly convicted of misdemeanour.

CASE reserved by Pigott, B.

The prisoners were tried before me at the last Winter Assize at Taunton, upon an indictment which charged the prisoner Hapgood with rape, and the prisoner Wyatt with aiding and abetting in the above rape.

The jury acquitted both prisoners of the felonies charged, but found them both guilty of misdemeanour — Hapgood of attempting to commit the rape, and Wyatt of aiding Hapgood in the attempt. The prisoner Wyatt's counsel submitted that this finding amounted to acquittal of Wyatt altogether, inasmuch as the case was not within the Statute 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100. s. 9 (1). I overruled the objection, and passed judgment upon him; but, at

* Coram Cockburn, C.J., Byles, J., Keating, J., Pigott, B., and Cleasby, B.

(1) The 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100. s. 9. enacts—And whereas offenders often escape conviction by reason that such persons ought to have been charged with attempting to commit offences, and not with the actual commission thereof: For remedy thereof be it enacted that if, on the trial of any person charged with any felony or misdemeanour, it shall appear to the jury upon the evidence that the defendant did not complete the offence charged, but that he was guilty only of an attempt to commit the same, such person shall not by reason thereof be entitled to be acquitted, but the jury shall be at liberty to return as their verdict, that the defendant is not guilty of the felony or misdemeanour charged, but is guilty of an attempt to commit the same, and thereupon such person shall be liable to be punished in the same manner as if he had been convicted upon an indictment of attempting to commit the particular felony or misdemeanour charged in the said indictment; and no person so tried as herein lastly mentioned shall be liable to be afterwards prosecuted for an attempt to commit the felony or misdemeanour for which he was so tried.

the request of the defendant Wyatt's counsel, I reserved the point for this Court.

The question is, whether Wyatt was properly convicted of misdemeanour?

No counsel appeared.

Per Curiam.—The conviction was right.
Conviction affirmed.

[IN THE COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.]

1870. {
 April 30. { THE QUEEN v. THE GUARDIANS OF THE POOR OF THE ST. THOMAS' POOR LAW UNION, IN THE COUNTY OF DEVON.

*Poor Law—Settlement—Public Tax or Levy—*3 Will. & M. c. 11. s. 6—Improvement Rate and Lamp Rate.

Under an Improvement Act for the city of E., authority was given to levy certain Improvement and Lamp Rates. Commissioners were appointed under the Act, who were empowered to rate and assess, by a just and equitable ground rate, the several land-owners and owners, and the several tenants and occupiers of all houses, &c., within the city. Power was given to the commissioners to appoint two or more of the inhabitants of the city or of each parish, &c., within it, to be assessors of the rates, and they were required to make such rates, and to deliver copies thereof to the commissioners who were to settle and sign the same. The church-wardens and overseers of the poor of the respective parishes were to be the collectors of the rates.

T. rented a dwelling-house in the parish of S. within the city, and paid his share towards the Improvement Rate and the Lamp Rate made under the powers given by the Act:—Held, that these rates were public taxes or levies of the parish, within the meaning of stat. 3 Will. & M. c. 11. s. 6, and that T. gained a settlement in the parish of S.

Upon appeal to the Quarter Sessions for the county of Devon, against an order of justices for the removal of Ann Tappan and her seven children, from the parish of Withycombe Raleigh, in the St. Thomas Poor-law Union in the county of Devon, to the appellants' Poor-law Union of Exeter; the place of their last legal settlement being adjudged to be in the parish of St. Sidwell, in the city and county of the city of Exeter, in the last-mentioned union, the sessions quashed the order subject to the following:—

CASE.

1. The paupers, Ann Tupman and her children, were respectively the widow and legitimate children of William Henry Tupman, deceased, who died in a house occupied by himself and his family in the parish of St. Sidwell, in the city of Exeter (one of the parishes of the appellants' union), on the 1st of October, 1868. Shortly after the death of W. H. Tupman the paupers removed themselves into the respondents' union. The order of removal appealed against was made the 29th of January, 1869.

2. W. H. Tupman bona fide rented a tenement (viz., the house in which he died) which consisted of a separate and distinct dwelling-house in the parish of St. Sidwell, at and for a larger sum than 10*l.* a year for the term of one whole year (namely, from Michaelmas, 1867, to Michaelmas, 1868), and the house was occupied by W. H. Tupman and paupers during the whole of the year, under the yearly hiring, and the rent for the same to the amount of 10*l.* was actually paid for the term of one whole year.

3. W. H. Tupman was duly assessed to the poor rate, but did not himself pay the same in respect of the tenement for one year.

4. In the month of July, 1868, W. H. Tupman paid his share which was demanded of him, and for which he was liable, towards the Improvement Rate and the Lamp Rate levied as hereinafter stated for the parish of St. Sidwell, in respect of his occupation of the house.

5. At the trial of this appeal at the quarter sessions the Court held that W. H. Tupman did not acquire a legal settlement in the parish of St. Sidwell, on the following grounds, viz.:—

That the Improvement Rate and Lamp Rate were neither of them public taxes or levies of the town or parish in which W. H. Tupman inhabited within the meaning of the statute 3rd Will. & M. c. 11. s. 6, nor "parochial rates" within the meaning of the statute 6 Geo. 4. c. 57. s. 2. The order of removal was therefore quashed, but the Court of Quarter Sessions granted the respondents a case, in order that this point might be decided by the Court of Queen's Bench.

6. The Improvement and Lamp Rates are distinct rates, and are levied under the authority of a local Act, 2 & 3 Will. 4. c. 106, which was passed on the 4th of July, 1832, and is entitled "An Act for better paving, lighting, watering, cleansing and otherwise improving the city of Exeter and county of the same city." This Act is to form part of this case, and the following are the sections most material to this question:—

Section 2 provides for the appointment of commissioners, to consist of six members of the common council, the dean and canons residentiary of the Cathedral, and also of persons to be elected by each parish and precinct within the city and county of the city, as provided in the 4th section.

Section 4 is in the following words:—

"And be it further enacted that the commissioners for the execution of this Act to be hereafter appointed, shall be elected by the parishioners and inhabitants of the several parishes and precincts within the city of Exeter and county of the same, and every such parish or precinct respectively shall from time to time be entitled to appoint such person or persons to be commissioners of this Act, as together with the commissioners for the time being acting for such parish or precinct respectively by virtue of the said recited Act and this Act, will make up the number of commissioners which such parish or precinct respectively shall be entitled to appoint, according to the following scale (that is to say): where the amount to which the parishioners and inhabitants of such parish or precinct respectively shall be assessed to the rates hereinafter directed to be made after such assessments shall have been approved and confirmed in manner hereinafter mentioned shall not exceed 100*l.*, such parish or precinct respectively shall be entitled to appoint one commissioner; where such amount shall exceed 100*l.* and not exceed 250*l.* such parish or precinct respectively shall be entitled to appoint two commissioners; where such amount shall exceed 250*l.* and not exceed 400*l.* such parish or precinct respectively shall be entitled to appoint three commissioners; where such amount shall exceed 400*l.* and not exceed 600*l.* such parish or precinct respectively shall be entitled to appoint four commissioners; where such amount shall exceed 600*l.* and not exceed 800*l.* such parish or precinct respectively shall be entitled to appoint six commissioners."

Section 7. "And be it further enacted that when and so often as the inhabitants and parishioners of any of the said parishes and precincts shall be entitled as before mentioned to appoint a commissioner or commissioners, the commissioners for the time being acting in the execution of this Act shall, and they are hereby required to, cause notice in writing to be given by their clerk to the churchwardens or to any two inhabitants or parishioners of such parish or precinct, qualified to vote at the election of commissioners in manner hereinafter mentioned that a person, or two or more persons (as the case may be), is or are required to be elected, to make up the full number of commissioners which such parish or precinct is entitled to appoint, and the inhabitants or parishioners of such parish or precinct shall, within fourteen days next after the delivery of such notice, meet at the church or chapel, or in the usual place of public meetings of such parish or precinct, between the hours of ten and twelve in the forenoon, of which meeting seven days' notice shall be given by the churchwardens of such parish, or by any two inhabitants or parishioners of such parish or precinct qualified to vote as hereinafter mentioned, by affixing the same at the Guildhall of the said city, and also in the case of a parish, at the church door thereof, and at such meeting it shall be lawful for the major part of the inhabitants and parishioners to nominate and elect a person or such number of persons (as may be specified in such notice) to act as a commissioner or commissioners for such parish or precinct."

By sections 40 to 135 the commissioners are empowered to pave and light the streets of Exeter, and provide for watchmen and water pipes.

Section 136 is as follows:— And for raising, securing and paying money to answer and defray the several purposes of this Act, and to defray the charges and expenses of soliciting, obtaining and passing this Act or a proportion thereof (other than and except for the purpose of lighting the said city and county of the same), be it enacted that the said commissioners shall, and they are hereby authorised and required, once in every year to rate and assess, by a just and equitable pound rate or assessment, under the name of the Exeter Improvement Rate, the several landowners and owners and the several tenants and occupiers of all houses, buildings, gardens, tithes and other hereditaments within the said city, in sums not exceeding certain sums therein mentioned.

Section 139. "And be it further enacted that the charges and expenses of lighting, setting up, fixing, providing, maintaining and repairing the lamps by this Act directed to be set up for the purpose of lighting the said streets, ways, passages and places, parishes, liberties, suburbs and precincts of the said city and county of the same city of Exeter, and for otherwise putting this Act into execution in any manner touching and concerning the lighting the said city and county of the same, shall be at all times borne and paid and defrayed by the tenants or occupiers of all houses, buildings, lands, tithes and other hereditaments within the city of Exeter and county of the same, and for that purpose the said commissioners shall, and they are hereby authorised and empowered and required, from time to time once in every year to rate and assess, by a just and equal pound rate or assessment, under the name of 'The Exeter Lamp Rate,' all the tenants or occupiers of all houses, buildings, lands, tithes and other hereditaments within the said city and county of the same in respect thereof" at amounts therein limited.

Section 141. "It shall be lawful for the said commissioners, as often as they shall see occasion, to appoint two or more of the inhabitants of the city and county, or of each parish, precinct or ward within the said city and county, to be assessors of such rates and assessments, and such assessors are required to make such rates and assessments from time to time accordingly, and to deliver to the commissioners two copies of the rates and assessments, made in the manner and according to the form directed by the said commissioners and subscribed by such assessors. And the said commissioners shall, as soon as may be after such rates and assessments are made and delivered to them by such assessors, settle and sign the same, and cause a duplicate thereof, also signed by them, to be delivered to the collectors to be appointed in that behalf. A penalty of 10*l.* is imposed on persons appointed assessors and refusing to take the office, such penalty, when levied, to be paid to the treasurers or treasurer of the said commissioners to be applied to the purposes of the said Act."

Section 142. "No person, who shall have served the office, shall be compellable to serve again for three years, except with the consent of a vestry meeting of any parish in respect of which any such assessor shall be appointed."

Section 150. The commissioners are required yearly to appoint the churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the respective parishes or such other persons as the commissioners shall appoint to be collectors of the said rates and assessments, and that all the said rates shall be paid to the said collectors by the respective tenants or occupiers of houses, &c.

Section 158 enacts that in all cases where any person or persons shall come into or occupy any house, &c., rated or assessed, or liable to be rated or assessed out of, or from which any other person or persons shall have been removed, or which at the time of making such rate or assessment was empty or unoccupied, the person or persons coming in or occupying the same shall be liable to pay such rate or assessment although his, her or their name or names may not be inserted in such rate or assessment in proportion to the time that such person or persons shall occupy the same respectively, and in like manner as if such person or persons had been originally rated or assessed by name in such rate or rates, assessment or assessments, which proportions, in case of dispute, shall be settled and ascertained by the commissioners.

7. Improvement and lamp rates were from time to time made for the parish of St. Sidwell, by assessors appointed by the commissioners in pursuance of the powers given to them in that behalf by the Act, and such rates were collected by persons appointed as collectors by the commissioners by virtue of the Act.

8. The improvement rate for the parish of St. Sidwell, from Lady-day, 1867, to Lady-day, 1868, was produced in evidence, the heading to which is as follows:—

"Instructions to Assessors.

"The assessors are required to insert the Christian and surname of the owner and occupier of every property assessed.

"The assessors will make the assessment by a street list.

"Where there are two or more tenants of houses, and where houses are let for a less term than a year at or under the yearly rent of 5*l.*, the assessors will be very particular in assessing correctly the landlord of such property, who in all such cases will be liable to pay the occupier's as well as owner's proportion of the rate.

"The rate to be returned at the Guildhall, signed by the assessors, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon on the day named in the warrant, under a penalty of 10*l.*

"The collectors of the rate have instructions to give the assessors their best assistance in making the rates.

"The alterations made in the last year's assessment by appeal in your parish may be seen at the clerk's office.

"The Exeter Improvement Rate.

"A rate on the several landlords and owners, and the several tenants and occupiers, of 1*s.* in the pound on the annual rent or value of all houses, buildings, gardens, tithes, lands and hereditaments, other than and except arable, meadow or pasture ground; and of 8*d.* in the pound on the annual rent or value of all arable, meadow or pasture ground, situate within the parish of St. Sidwell, in the city and county of the city of Exeter, made in pursuance of an Act passed in the 2nd & 3rd years of the reign of King William the 4th, intituled 'An Act for better paving, watching, cleansing and otherwise improving the city of Exeter and county of the same city, for one year commencing Lady-day, 1867.'"

No. of Assessment.	Name of Occupier.	Name of Owner.	Description of Property rated.	Name or Situation of Property.	Annual Value.	Amount of Rate.	Amount actually received.		Deficiencies in collection.
							1st Collec.	2nd Collec.	1st Collec.	2nd Collec.
1627	Damerel A.	Foofers of St. Sidwell	House	Hampton Buildings	£ 16	s. 16	s. 4	s. 4	s. 4	s. 4

This rate was signed as follows:—

George Wilson, } Assessors.
J. T. Brown Mason, }

Settled and signed by us,
(Signatures of five of the Commissioners.)

9. A. Damerel was at the time the rate was made the tenant of the premises, but left during the year of rating, and was immediately succeeded in the occupation by W. H. Tupman as tenant.

The Lamp Rate

For the parish of St. Sidwell, from Lady-day, 1867, to Lady-day, 1868, was also produced in evidence, the heading to which was as follows:—

"Instructions to Assessors.

"The assessors are required to insert the Christian and surname of the owner and occupier of every property assessed.

"The assessors will make the assessment by a street list.

"The rate to be returned to the Guildhall, signed by the assessors, at eleven o'clock in the forenoon on the day named in the warrant, under a penalty of 10*l*.

"The collectors of the rate have instructions to give the assessors their best assistance in making the rates.

"The alterations in last year's assessment by appeal in your parish may be seen at the clerk's office."

"The Exeter Lamp Rate.

"A rate on the several tenants or occupiers of 4*d*. in the pound on the annual rent or value of all houses, buildings, lands, tithes and other hereditaments within the parish of St. Sidwell, within the city and county of the city of Exeter, made in pursuance of an Act passed in the 2nd year of the reign of King William the 4th, intituled 'An Act for paving, lighting, watching, cleansing and otherwise improving the city of Exeter and county of the same city, for one year commencing Lady-day, 1867.'"

No. of Assessment.	Name of Occupier.	Description of Property rated.	Name or Situation of Property.	Annual Value.	Amount of Rate.	Amount actually received.		Deficiencies in collection.
						1st Collec.	2nd Collec.	1st Collec.	2nd Collec.
1627	Damerel Aquila	House	Hampton Buildings	£ 16	s. d. 5 4	s. d. 1 4	s. d. 1 4	s. d. 1 4	s. d. 1 4

This rate was signed as follows:—

George Wilson, } Assessors.
J. T. Brown Mason, }

Settled and signed by us,
(Signatures of five of the Commissioners.)

11. A. Damerel was at the time the rate was made the tenant of the premises, but left during the year of rating, and was immediately succeeded in the occupation by W. H. Tupman as tenant.

12. If the Court shall be of opinion that the improvement rate, or the lamp rate, was not a public tax or levy or parochial rate, within the intent and meaning of the Statute 3 Will. & Mary, c. 11. s. 6, and Statute 6 Geo. 4. c. 57. s. 2 respectively, then the order of removal shall be quashed and the order of sessions shall stand confirmed.

Anderson and Mackey for the appellants.—These rates were neither “public taxes or levies” under 3 Will. & M. c. 11. s. 6, nor can they be said to be “parochial rates” within 6 Geo. 4. c. 57. s. 2, so as to confer a settlement. These rates are made by the commissioners, and all that the assessors have to do is to collect them after they are made. They are not, therefore, parish taxes, and the element of notoriety, which is essential to the gaining of a settlement in this way, is wanting, so far as the parish authorities are concerned. In Rex v. Axemouth (1), it was decided that the land-tax was a public tax within 3 Will. & M. c. 11. s. 6, but such a tax differs from those now in question in being an imperial tax chargeable upon the whole country instead of being a local tax charged upon the city of Exeter.

[LUSH, J.—But s. 141 of the local Act, which is set out in the Case, shews that the assessors are to make the rates, and to deliver copies to the commissioners. The persons to be appointed are to be two or more of the inhabitants of the city and county, or of each parish, &c.; and the rate is made upon the landlords, and owners, and tenants, and occupiers of houses, &c., situate within the parish.]

It is submitted that the rate is made by the commissioners; upon its face it appears to be settled and signed by them. It is like the watch-rate, which in Rex v. Christchurch (2), was held not to be sufficient. In that case Bayley, J., said, “The land-tax was holden to be within the Act from the notice of inhabitancy that arises by the parties having been assessed and having paid it. Payment towards a county bridge gives no settlement, because the person pays as an inhabitant of the county and not of the parish.” In St. George's

Hanover Square v. The Guardians of Cambridge Union (3), the property-tax was held to be a sufficient public tax, but that again is an imperial tax. Reliance will be placed by the other side upon Reg. v. Everton (4), which was also the case of a watch-rate, but there the rate was levied by the overseers of the parish. Here any two of the inhabitants of the parish may be appointed by the commissioners to collect the rates.

[LUSH, J.—It comes to this, what is the meaning of the Act? In fact, the rate has been made for the parish.]

Sir J. B. Karslake (MacKellar with him), for the respondents.—The rates are made for the city and county, but the whole of the parish is taxed, and they are sufficiently parochial rates. The Act should be read as making an assessment for each parish. The 136th section shews that it was intended that substantially all the inhabitants should be rated. (He was then stopped.)

BLACKBURN, J.—A rate is made for the whole city, but s. 141 gives power to the commissioners to appoint as assessors two or more of the inhabitants of the city and county, or of each parish, &c. I do not think that they are bound to do so, but they certainly have the option. We will suppose that they do in fact appoint two assessors for each parish. The section then goes on to provide that the assessors are to make the rates and assessments, and to deliver to the commissioners two copies thereof, and the commissioners are to settle and sign the same. Now reddendo singula singulis we find that when the commissioners have appointed assessors for a parochial place, the two assessors may make the rates for the place for which they are appointed, and having been made that it is to be levied in each parish. It appears from the form which is set out in the case that this is what has been done. (His Lordship read the 136th and 150th sections.) The commissioners have therefore the option of appointing assessors, and in

(3) 8 B. & S. 764; s. c. 37 Law J. Rep. (n.s.) M.C. 17.

(4) 2 E. & E. 771; s. c. 29 Law J. Rep. (n.s.) M.C. 165.

(1) 8 East 383.

(2) 8 B. & C. 660.

fact they have done so. Then the question is whether the payment of this tax can be said to be the payment of a public tax within the Act? In Rees v. Bramley (5), Lord Hardwicke, in speaking of the land-tax, said:—"The great doubt has been whether the Legislature did not mean parochial taxes. But this has been long gotten over; and the land-tax has been holden to be within the Act from the notice of inhabitancy that arises by the party's being assessed and paying it." It is said by Mr. Anderson, that although this may be so with respect to the land-tax which is an imperial tax, it is not so with respect to this tax, which is a city tax merely, but no such distinction can be shewn to exist. This is a public rate levied locally in the parish and levied on the persons in the parish, and the effect of levying it must be to give notice to the inhabitants that the rate is levied separately on each parish; it is as much a public tax as an imperial tax levied in the parish would be. In Reg. v. Beerton (4) a doubt was expressed whether the watch rate was a sufficient public tax, because it was not levied upon the whole parish, but it was held, and properly so, to be a public tax or levy of the parish within the 3 Will. and M. c. 11. s. 6. In Rees v. Christchurch (2) the case was quite different; there the watch-rate was not levied on the parish but upon the particular ward, and thus no notice would be given to the people of the parish living in other wards, that the person rated and paying the rates was living in the parish. In the result, I come to the conclusion that a settlement was gained by W. H. Tupman.

MELLOR, J.—I am of the same opinion. The question to be decided is whether W. H. Tupman has been charged with and has paid his share towards the public taxes or levies of the parish. The facts are that he rented and occupied a house in the parish for one year; and in the month of July paid his share which was demanded of him, and for which he was liable, towards the improvement rate and the lamp rate, levied for the parish of St. Sidwell, in respect of his occupation of the house. Now the cases shew that such payment is sufficient in the case of the land-tax; and if so, I think that, a fortiori, it will be sufficient in the present case. It seems to me that W. H. Tupman, by being so charged, and by so making payment, gained a settlement under 3 Will. & M. c. 11. s. 6.

LUSH, J.—I am of the same opinion. There cannot be the slightest doubt that this is a public tax, it having been made for the improvement of the whole city of Exeter. If it would be a public tax if made for the improvement of the parish, a fortiori it would be so if made for the improvement of the whole city. The only question upon which I entertained any doubt was whether it was a public tax of the parish, because that is essential. It is evident that the authorities of the parish would know by the rate itself who are the inhabitants of the particular parish. Looking at the 141st section, I find that very large powers are given to the Commissioners. They may appoint persons to act as assessors, and may require them to make the rate in such a form as the Commissioners might direct. They have the power to make the rate over the whole city, but, for the sake of convenience, it is to be levied upon each parish. I think the rate falls within the purpose of the Act of Parliament, and that the tax is public in its nature, and made upon each parish. I therefore think that a settlement was gained.

Order of Sessions quashed.

Order of removal confirmed.

Attorneys—J. E. Fox, agent for H. W. Hooper, Exeter, for appellants; G. Frederick Cooke, for respondents.

[IN THE COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH]

1870. } REGINA V. THE INHABITANTS OF April 27. } ST. GEORGE-IN-THE-EAST, MID-} DLESEX.

Order of Removal—Wife's Status of Irremovability during Husband's Absence—Husband a Foreigner without a Settlement.

By 9 & 10 Vict. c. 66. s. 1, as amended by 28 & 29 Vict. c. 79. s. 8, no person shall, after the passing of the Act, be removed from any parish in which such person shall have resided for one year next before the application for the warrant. Provided always that whenever any person shall have a wife or children having no other settlement than his or her own, such wife and children shall be removable whenever he or she is removable, and shall not be removable when he or she is not removable.

By 11 & 12 Vict. c. 111. s. 1, the above proviso is repealed, and instead thereof it is enacted that, whenever any person should have a wife or children having no other settlement than his or her own, such wife and children should be removable from any parish or place from which he or she would be removable, notwithstanding the provisions of 9 & 10 Vict. c. 66, and should not be removable from any parish or place from which he or she would not be removable by reason of any provision in that Act.

A woman, after residing for more than a year in the same parish, married an American sailor who had no settlement in England, and lived with him in the parish for a few days. He then left her and went to sea, and during his absence an order was made for her removal from the parish to her maiden settlement. After the making of this order the husband returned:—Held, that the order must be quashed, as the cardinal principle of the Act appeared to be, that where there was no question of the separation of husband and wife, the hardship of removal should, if possible, be avoided, so that the wife having once acquired a status of irremovability, did not lose it by her marriage with one who had no settlement.

Upon an appeal to the Middlesex Quarter Sessions against an order by justices for the removal of Margaret Schooler and her child, aged 4 months, from the parish of St. George-in-the-East, in the Stepney

Union, the order was quashed on the ground of the irremovability of the paupers, subject to the opinion of the Court on the following

CASE.

1. Margaret Schooler is the wife of Samuel Schooler, a native of Boston, in the United States of America, and he has no settlement in England. The order of removal was therefore founded on the maiden settlement of the pauper, in the parish of Limehouse, in the Stepney Union.

2. The pauper's husband earns his livelihood as a sailor. She was married to him on the 7th of October, 1867, and on the 21st of the same month, while residing in the parish of St. George, he left her there and went to sea in the usual course of his occupation as a sailor, but without having made any provision for her maintenance. In the month of May, 1868, she became chargeable to that parish, and continued chargeable to the time of the making of the order of removal, 24th September, 1868, at which time her husband had not returned to her, but he returned to her between the date of the order and the time of the appeal.

3. The pauper's husband had not, at the date of the order of removal, himself resided in the parish of St. George for so long as one year.

4. Previously to her marriage the pauper, Margaret Schooler, had resided in the parish of St. George for three years and upwards, and she was at that time irremovable from such parish by reason of her residence therein, under the provisions of the Acts 9 & 10 Vict. c. 66. s. 1, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 55. s. 1, and 28 & 29 Vict. c. 79. s. 8 (1). After her marriage she continued to reside in the parish up to the date of

(1) By 9 & 10 Vict. c. 66. s. 1. From and after the passing of this Act no person shall be removed, nor shall any warrant be granted for the removal of any person from any parish in which such person shall have resided for five years next before the application for the warrant. Provided always that the time during which such person shall receive relief from any parish, &c., shall for all purposes be excluded in the computation of time hereinbefore mentioned. . . . Provided always that whenever any person shall have a wife or children, having no other settlement than his or her own, such wife and children shall be the order of removal; and she would, if she had remained a feme sole, have then been irremovable from the parish by virtue of such residence.

5. The appellants contended that, as the husband of Margaret Schooler was a foreigner without any settlement or place to which he could be removed, she was not in his absence removable from the parish of St. George, as she had herself acquired a status of irremovability by residence therein. And, further, that as whenever her husband was present with her they would both be irremovable, she was also irremovable in his absence until his death or desertion.

6. The respondents contended that Margaret Schooler, whilst she remained a married woman, lost the status of irremovability which she had acquired by residence as a feme sole, and that as her husband had not acquired a status of irremovability by residence, under the provision of the statutes, she in his absence was removable to her maiden settlement.

7. The Court of Quarter Sessions decided in favour of the appellants and quashed the order of removal on the ground of the irremovability of the paupers.

8. The question for the opinion of the Court of Queen's Bench is whether the pauper and her child were, under the circumstances above stated, irremovable from the parish of St. George. If the Court removable whenever he or she is removable, and shall not be removable whenever he or she is not removable.

By 11 & 12 Vict. c. 111. s. 1, after reciting that by reason of the generality of the expressions used in the last proviso doubts are entertained as to the meaning thereof, and it is desirable to remove such doubts, it is enacted that the last proviso be repealed, and instead thereof the following be enacted. Provided always that whenever any person should have a wife or children having no other settlement than his or her own, such wife and children should be removable from any parish or place from which he or she would be removable notwithstanding any of the provisions of the last Act, and should not be removable from any parish or place from which he or she would not be removable by reason of any provision in the Act.

By 28 & 29 Vict. c. 79. s. 8. From and after the 25th of March, 1866, the period of one year shall be substituted for the period of residence previously required to constitute irremovability.

shall answer this question in the affirmative, the order of sessions is to be confirmed, but if in the negative, the order of sessions is to be quashed, and the order of removal is to be confirmed.

Taylor (Collins with him) for the appellants.—The order of removal was rightly quashed. Marriage with a foreigner does not permanently affect the wife's status of irremovability, but only suspends it while he continues to reside with her. A woman who has married a foreigner without a settlement and is deserted by him may be removed to her maiden settlement just as though she were not married at all—The King v. The Inhabitants of Cottingham (2), and the law ought to be the same with regard to the status of irremovability. The words of 11 & 12 Vict. c. 111. s. 1, are obscure, but they shew that it was the intention of the legislature that where the wife only has a settlement this settlement ought to prevail.

[BLACKBURN, J.—The principle of the Act seems to be that husband and wife shall not be separated. But it does not at all follow that because in the absence of the husband the wife's settlement ought to prevail, that the wife under such circumstances should retain her status of irremovability.]

It is submitted that the former right of the wife revives after the desertion of her husband. He cited The Queen v. Bennett (3) and The Queen v. The Inhabitants of St. Sepulchre (4).

Poland (Poynter with him) for the respondents.—The wife did not retain her status of irremovability after the departure of her husband. It is admitted that the words of the section are not easily understood, but it is submitted that the wife upon her marriage lost the status of irremovability which she had previously acquired. In The Queen v. The Inhabitants of St. Marylebone (5), where the wife of a seaman who had no settlement became chargeable, during her husband's absence on one of his ordinary voyages, it was held that

(2) 7 B. & C. 615.

(3) 23 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 39; s.c. 3 E. & B. 341.

(4) 28 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 187.

(5) 16 Q.B. Rep. 352; s.c. 20 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 61.

the husband's absence under these circumstances was, for the purposes of the wife's removability, equivalent to desertion, and that an order for her removal to her maiden settlement was good, Lord Campbell, C.J., saying (p. 356), "There is no hardship in thus removing the wife; when the husband returns to this country he will find her in the parish to which she has been removed, and he may live with her either in that parish or in any other." In The Overseers of Much Hoole v. The Overseers of Preston (6), an Irishman, having no English settlement, married a woman settled in A., and lived with her in B. for more than five years. He then deserted her, and left the country. It was held that she was removable to B. As for the objection that husband and wife ought not to be separated, it will not be denied, that if the husband had, but the wife had not, a status of irremovability, the wife would be removable in her husband's absence. The test introduced by the statute is whether the head of the family has acquired a status of removability. If the wife is removed, there will be no separation between her and her husband, as he may return to her in any parish he pleases.

BLACKBURN, J.—In this case, though the legislature has used language that, according to the words of the great statesman, was given to conceal the intention, I think we can see our way clearly enough to say that, in this particular case, the sessions have decided rightly. I think we must look at the law as it was before the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 66. At that time a person who had a settlement, however long he or she might have resided elsewhere, would, upon becoming chargeable to the parish, be removed to that place of settlement; but in the case where the husband, having no settlement, married a wife who had a settlement, whilst they resided together neither could be removed, because the wife could not be separated from her husband. Therefore, when the husband was settled, and the wife became chargeable to parish relief, she could not be removed to the place of her maiden settlement. On the other hand, when the husband lived with the wife, and became chargeable, his settlement would be her's, and she would be removed to that place. Then came the enactment of the 9th & 10th of Victoria, which, except so far as regards the period of time necessary in order to acquire irremovability, still remains law, and it says that no person shall be removed from any parish in which such person shall have resided for five years next before the application for the warrant. Then it says, "Provided always that whenever any person shall have a wife or children, having no other settlement than his or her own, such wife and children shall be removable whenever he or she is removable, and shall not be removable when he or she is not removable." The proviso is re-enacted in the 11th & 12th of Victoria, c. 111, as follows: "Whereas by reason of the generality of the expressions used in the last proviso, doubts are entertained as to the meaning thereof"—I may say, that although that recital is right enough, doubts might have been entertained for other reasons than that—"and it is desirable to remove such doubts, be it therefore enacted that the said last proviso be repealed, and that instead thereof the following be enacted" (the learned judge then read the proviso at length).

Then comes the question what is the meaning of this amendment? Mr. Poland asks us to read the words, "having no other settlement than his or her own," as applying to a person having a child or children, and not applying to a person having a wife only, and then it would mean this; when we establish the status of irremovability, we leave the common law principle applicable to such cases, namely, that you shall not separate the husband and wife, untouched, but if the husband has got a settlement, the wife shall be removed to that settlement, and where the husband has got no settlement, we will not touch the question as to whether the wife shall be removable to her own settlement; we leave the rights of the parish and others untouched as regards that, but we direct that if the wife in such a case shall have resided so long as that she has acquired the status of irremovability, that in that case she shall not be removed to her own maiden settlement, but if she has not resided so long, the proviso does not apply. If she has no settlement of her own she shall be tacked on to her husband, shall go if her husband goes, and if he does not go she shall not go. Taking that view of the matter, is the present case within the enacting part of the section? I think yes. We find that in The Queen v. Glossop (7), the Court decided that where a married woman had resided in the same parish for three or four years with her husband, and then her husband dying, she, as widow, continued to reside there one or two years more, so that the two terms together made up the five years, she had acquired the status of irremovability under 9 & 10 Vict. c. 66. Here, this woman has resided before her marriage for more than one year in the parish, and she continued to reside there after her marriage up to the present time. Now where the woman has thus resided, and continues to reside in the same parish, I cannot see, if the case of The Queen v. Glossop (7) be good law, why she is not within the enacting part of the statute.

(6) 17 Q.B. Rep. 548; s. c. 21 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 1.

Then it is said that she falls within the proviso, inasmuch as the husband has not resided for a year without the receipt of relief; so that he would, if he had a settlement of his own, be removed to that place, and she would go with him. That is the argument; but it comes to this: the husband not being removable in fact to any place, having no settlement of his own to which he could be removed, and not being here, you are to send the wife away from her own and her husband's residence to her own place of settlement. Whether the legislature meant to except such a case as the present one from the operation of the proviso or not I cannot say, but if it did mean to do so, it would exactly do what it has done, namely, confine the proviso to the case of a wife, who has no settlement other than her husband's; and say that she is not to be taken away to a place different from her husband's place of residence altogether, merely because the husband is absent from her. If, on the other hand, we adopt the conclusion that Mr. Poland urges upon us, we should have this iniquity: that if the woman had been living in such a state as to be the man's mistress instead of his wife, one state of circumstances would exist; but because she has married, instead of living in sin, she is to be sent away because he had no settlement; whereas she could not be removed if she had been living in a state of concubinage instead of being his wife; and we are asked to say that the legislature has unwarily enacted that in the former case she is to be removable. I think if the legislature had meant this, they would have distinctly said so. As to the supposed case of a husband with a status of irremovability and a wife without one, and the wife becoming chargeable in the husband's absence, it is sufficient to say that this might be a hard case, and when it arises we must deal it, and say how it is to be decided; but probably before that time the law upon the subject will all be altered.

(7) 12 Q.B. Rep. 117; 17 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 171.

MELLORE, J.—I am of the same opinion. The proviso has been several times under consideration, and I always come to it with the same difficulty as before. When I look at the policy of the Act of Parliament which is to obviate the oppression of removing a person who has resided for a year (formerly five years) in a particular district, and breaking up all the associations with that place, I should like to see my way very clearly before I interfered with a policy so plainly founded upon humanity. It appears to me that when a woman who has acquired the status of irremovability marries a man who has no settlement or residence of his own, but who resides with her until, in the exercise of his business, he goes away, intending to return, we should violate the Act of Parliament if we gave the effect to it which is contended for by Mr. Poland. I do not mean to say that these provisos are entirely intelligible, but I think the only sensible construction, or the most sensible construction to be put upon the Act of Parliament, is that which my brother Blackburn has suggested.

HANNEN, J.—I can see no reason for reversing the decision of the sessions.

Judgment for the appellants.

Attorneys—W. H. Sweptone, for appellants;
Stone, Townson & Morris, for respondents.

[CROWN CASE RESERVED.]

1870. }
May 7. } REGINA v. ELIZABETH BROWN.

Concealment of Birth—Secret Disposition—24 & 25 Vict. c. 100. s. 60.

The prisoner put the dead body of her child over a wall which was four and a half feet high and divided a yard from a field. The yard was at the back of a public-house, and entered from the street by a narrow passage. The prisoner did not live at the public-house, and must have carried the body from the street up the passage to the yard. The field was grazed by the cattle of a butcher, and the only entrance to it was through a gate leading from the butcher's own yard. There was no path through the field, and a person in the field could only see the body in case they went up to the wall, close against which the body lay. A little girl, picking flowers in the field, found the body of the child, twenty yards from the gate. There was nothing on or over the body to conceal it:—Held, that there was evidence to go to the jury of a secret disposition of the dead body of the child, and a conviction for endeavouring to conceal the birth of the child, by secretly disposing of its dead body, was confirmed.

CASE reserved by BRETT, J.

The prisoner, Elizabeth Brown, was tried and convicted before me at Newcastle, at the last Spring Assizes for the county of Northumberland, for endeavouring to conceal the birth of her child by secretly disposing of the dead body thereof.

The evidence as to the disposition of the body was a statement by the prisoner that she had put the body over a wall, near which it was found, and statements before the jury by witnesses, that the wall was four and a half feet high, dividing a yard from a field; that the yard was at the back of a public-house, used for the convenience of that house and three other tenements, by the occupiers thereof; that there was no thoroughfare into or through the yard, and no other entrance to it than by a narrow passage from the street; that the prisoner, who did not live at the public-house or at any of the tenements, must have passed from the street into the yard, in order to throw the body over the wall into the field; that a person looking over the wall from the yard would see the child, but persons going through the yard, or using it in the ordinary way, would not see the child—the wall would hide the child from such persons; that the field in which the body was found was a grass field, used by a butcher to graze cattle; that it was a field with no gate into it from any road or from the public-house yard, but with a gate from the butcher's own yard; that there was no public path through the field; that there was no track or path in the field which would take anyone within sight of the body; that no person going into the field in their ordinary occupation would go near the body or see it; that no one in the field would see it unless they went accidentally or on search up to the part of the wall where the body lay; that a little girl, picking flowers in the field, went accidentally to the wall, and found the body; that it was close to the wall, as near to it as it could possibly be; it seemed as if it had been thrown over the wall; there was blood on the wall; the body was lying on its face, at twenty yards from the gate, naked, with nothing on or over it, nothing to conceal it but its situation in the field and the wall.

Upon this evidence it was contended on behalf of the prisoner, that there was no evidence of a secret disposition of the dead body, and the case of Reg. v. Nixon (1) was cited. I left upon this part of the case the following question to the jury:—

Did the wall and the position of the child in the field, and, with regard to the wall, and the mode in which the field and the yard were used, conceal the body from all the world, unless from a person who by searching for the child might find it, or by going out of the way in the field, or by looking over the wall, might accidentally discover it? I told them that if they found an answer in the affirmative, they might find that there was a secret disposition of the body, but that if they found an answer in the negative, they could not, in my opinion, find that there was a secret disposition.

(1) 4 Fost. & F. 1040.

The jury found the prisoner guilty.

I desire the judgment of the Court of Criminal Appeal upon two points—first, whether there was any evidence of a secret disposition of the dead body of the child, within the meaning of the statute; and secondly, whether, if there was such evidence, the form in which the question was left to the jury was wrong in law. If the Court should be of opinion that there was no evidence, or that the form of the question was wrong, then the conviction to be quashed; but if the Court should be of opinion that there was evidence, and that the form of the question was not wrong, then the conviction to stand.

No counsel appeared for the prisoner.

Ridley, for the prosecution, contended that there was evidence to go to the jury, and cited Reg. v. Clarke (2), and Reg. v. Nison (1), cited therein; Reg. v. Sleep (3); Reg. v. Eliza Cooke (4).

[WILLES, J.—Is there any case against you?]

No, it is believed not.

(He was then stopped.)

BOVILL, C.J.—The first point is whether there was any evidence of a secret disposition within the statute. That is a question which depends on the circumstances of each particular case. The most public exposure may be a secret disposition, as for instance, in the middle of Dartmoor, or on the top of a mountain in Scotland in winter. It is for the jury to consider. There was here abundant evidence of a secret disposition. As to the second point, we think the direction to the jury was perfectly correct.

WILLES, J., BYLES, J., HANNEN, J., and CLEASBY, B., concurred, BYLES, J., observing, "I doubt if we have power to question the direction."

Conviction affirmed.

[CROWN CASES RESERVED.]

1870. }
May 7. } THE QUEEN v. JOHN GUTHRIE.

Procedure—Indictment for Abusing Girl between the Ages of ten and twelve—Verdict of Common Assault.

The indictment contained one count and charged that the prisoner in and upon a girl between the ages of ten and twelve "unlawfully did make an assault and her did then unlawfully and carnally know and abuse against the form," &c. The offence of carnally knowing and abusing was disproved, but there was evidence of an indecent assault, which was left to the jury, who found the prisoner Guilty of a common assault:—Held, that the indictment charged an assault as a distinct and separable offence, and that the conviction was good.

CASE reserved by the learned chairman of the Court of Quarter Sessions for the county of Durham.

John Guthrie was tried on an indictment, of which the following is a copy:—

"Durham, to wit, The jurors for our Lady the Queen upon their oath present that John Guthrie on the twenty-fourth day of December, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine, in and upon one Margaret Davidson, a girl above the age of ten years, and under the age of twelve years, to wit, of the age of ten years and three days, unlawfully did make an assault, and her, the said Margaret Davidson, did then unlawfully and carnally know and abuse against the form of the statute in such case made and provided, and against the peace of our said Lady the Queen, her crown and dignity."

There was no other count in the indictment.

The offence of carnally knowing and abusing the girl was disproved, but there was evidence of an assault of an indecent and very violent character, which I left to the jury, who found the accused guilty of a common assault.

The opinion of this Honourable Court is requested as to whether John Guthrie could be properly convicted on this indictment of a common assault.

No counsel appeared for the prisoner.

(2) 4 Fost. & F. 1040.

(3) 9 Cox C.C. 559.

(4) 22 Law Times, N.S. 216.

Edge, for the prosecution.—Two misdemeanors are charged in the indictment, but no objection on the ground of duplicity can now be taken—Nash v. Regina (1). It is legal to convict on either charge—Rea v. Withal and Overend (2). In Rea v. Dawson (3), on an indictment for assaulting a girl with intent to abuse and carnally know, the jury found that the prisoner assaulted with intent to abuse, but negatived the intention carnally to know, and Holroyd, J., held that the averment of intention was divisible.

[WILLES, J.—I see no difference between abusing and carnally knowing.—CLEASBY, B.—No one disputes that if the charge be double you may prove one. The question is whether in this indictment two offences are charged.]

The point in the present case is undecided, but there was a similar one in Reg. v. Banks (4), where on an indictment for feloniously assaulting, and carnally knowing, &c., a girl under ten, it was urged that the prisoner might be convicted of an assault, and Patteson, J., is reported to have said that an assault was not included in that charge, but the facts of that case shewed consent on the part of the girl, and Patteson, J., may have referred merely to the facts of that case. And see Reg. v. Cockburn (5), for a similar ruling. Though the precise point is new, the same principle was decided in Reg. v. Oliver (6), Reg. v. Yeadon (7), Reg. v. Taylor (8). (He was then stopped.)

BOVILL, C.J.—We are agreed that the conviction was right. The indictment charges as a distinct offence that the prisoner “unlawfully did make an assault.” The indictment further alleges that the prisoner “did unlawfully and carnally know,” &c., being a statutable offence. If there were any objection to the indictment it would be for duplicity, but at this stage that is no objection (9). It is only necessary to prove such facts as are material to constitute the offence. The charge of assault could not be sustained if consent were proved, but there was no consent here, and the charge was one of a substantive common law offence. I can see no ground for not finding the prisoner guilty of what is a distinct and separable offence. The cases of Reg. v. Oliver (6), Reg. v. Yeadon (7), and Reg. v. Taylor (8), are abundant to establish the point for which they were cited.

WILLES, J., concurred.

BYLES, J.—I am not free from doubt, but my doubt is not sufficiently strong to justify me in differing from the rest of the Court.

HANNEN, J., and CLEASBY, B., concurred.
Conviction affirmed.

(9) This would be on the ground that this objection was for a formal defect apparent on the face of the indictment, and that by 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100. s. 25, “every objection to any indictment for any formal defect, apparent on the face thereof, shall be taken by demurrer or motion to quash such indictment before the jury shall be sworn and not afterwards.” In Regina v. Ryland, 37 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 10; s.c. Law Rep. C.C.R. 99, the sufficiency of the allegation of the breach of duty in an indictment, charging a neglect to provide food for a child of tender years, was reserved for the consideration and considered by this Court, upon the ground it would seem that the defect though apparent on the face of the indictment was not formal merely; and again in Regina v. Larkin, Den. C.C. 365; s.c. 23 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 123, this Court considered the sufficiency of a count for receiving stolen property, and considered it bad for not alleging a scienter, and held an amendment to have been improperly made after verdict.

(1) 4 B. & S. 935; s.c. 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 94.

(2) East P.C. 517.

(3) 3 Stark. 62.

(4) 8 Car. & P. 574.

(5) 3 Cox C.C. 543.

(6) 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 12.

(7) 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 70; s.c. L. & C. 81.

(8) 38 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 106.

1870. }
 April 27. } THE QUEEN v. WHITBY UNION.

Pauper Lunatic—Order of Maintenance—Irremovability—Removal of Lunatic by Parents—Break in Residence—9 & 10 Vict. c. 66. s. 1; 16 & 17 Vict. c. 97. ss. 97, 102.

A domestic servant, who had acquired the status of irremovability by residence in the R. union, was seized with madness and was removed by her relations from her master's house to the residence of her parents in a different union. Her wages were paid in full, and her master had no intention of receiving her back in his house. After staying with her parents for a single night, she was sent to the workhouse of the second union, and seven days afterwards taken to the County Lunatic Asylum:—Held, that the removal of the lunatic under these circumstances, without any exercise of will on her part, did not constitute a break in her residence, so as to deprive her of her status of irremovability, and that the order for her maintenance under 16 & 17 Vict. c. 97. ss. 97, 102, must be made on the R. Union and not on the union in which was the place of her settlement.

Semble, per Hannen, J., that while the incapacity of the lunatic continued, no change in her residence could take place so as to affect her status of irremovability.

Upon an appeal against an order by justices of Middlesex, whereby the settlement of Esther Marshall, a pauper lunatic, was adjudged to be in the township of Whitby in Whitby union, and the guardians of Whitby union were ordered to pay a certain sum of money for the expenses of the examination of the lunatic and her removal to a lunatic asylum, also a certain sum for her maintenance, &c., therein, up to the date of the order, and also a certain weekly sum for her future maintenance, &c., in the asylum, the order was confirmed, subject to the opinion of the Court on the following

CASE.

1. Esther Marshall is a single woman, aged 28, legally settled in the township of Whitby in the Whitby union. For one year and three months, immediately preceding the 17th of September, 1868, she had been a domestic servant in the service of a Mr. Dunn, of Richmond, in the Richmond poor law union in the county of Surrey, as a yearly servant, and had during this period resided and slept at the house of her master in Richmond.

NEW SERIES, 39.—MAG. CAS.

2. On the night of Wednesday, the 16th of September, 1868, she was seized with a severe attack of mania, and her master thereupon went to the workhouse of the Richmond union, and there informed the master of the workhouse and the gateporter that she was insane and that he was unable to keep her in his house, and he requested them to remove her to the workhouse to be taken care of. The master of the workhouse stated in reply, that he could not interfere in any way as she was still residing in her master's house.

3. The next morning, the 17th of September, the master of Esther Marshall had an interview with the clerk to the guardians of the poor of the Richmond union, and afterwards on the same day attended with his doctor before the board of guardians of the union (who happened to be then sitting at the workhouse) and informed them of the facts before mentioned relating to Esther Marshall, and requested them to remove her to the workhouse in order that she might be properly taken care of. The board, however, stated in reply, that they had no power to interfere in any way, and the master then telegraphed to the parents of the lunatic, who were residing at Ratcliffe in the Stepney union, a distance of about fourteen miles, to come to Richmond to remove her. In the afternoon of this day (17th of September, 1868) her mother and her brother arrived at Richmond. The master thereupon paid the mother her daughter's wages up to that day, and having hired a fly at his own expense, Esther Marshall was removed in it by her relations from the residence of her master at Richmond to the residence of her parents at Ratcliffe in the Stepney union. The master had not the slightest intention or expectation of receiving her back again into his house.

4. Esther Marshall remained at the home of her parents (who were poor persons and in receipt of out-door parochial relief from the township of Whitby) one night only, during which time she attempted to throw herself out of the window. The next morning (the 18th of September) her parents applied to the relieving officer of the Ratcliffe district of the Stepney union, who visited the lunatic and had her removed in due course on the same day to the workhouse of that union. She remained in the Stepney union workhouse for seven days and was then sent to the lunatic asylum for the county of Middlesex on the 26th of September, where she has since remained confined as a pauper lunatic.

5. On the 23rd of October, 1868, the order appealed against was made.

6. Esther Marshall had on the 16th of September, 1868, acquired the status of irremovability from the Richmond union under 9 & 10 Vict. c. 66. s. 1; 24 & 25 Vict. c. 55. s. 1; and 28 & 29 Vict. c. 79. s. 8, by virtue of residence therein for more than a year.

7. It was contended on behalf of the appellants, that as Esther Marshall had on the 16th of September, 1868, acquired a status of irremovability by residence in the Richmond union, the order for her past and future maintenance ought not to have been made upon the guardians of the place of her settlement, but ought to have been made upon the guardians of the Richmond union under 16 & 17 Vict. c. 97. s. 102 (1), and it was further contended that her removal under the circumstances mentioned, did not constitute a break of her residence in Richmond so as to destroy her status of irremovability.

8. It was contended on behalf of the respondents, that the order was rightly made on the guardians of the place of settlement, and further, that the removal of Esther Marshall under the circumstances mentioned did constitute a break of residence so as to destroy her status of irremovability.

9. The Court of Quarter Sessions decided in favour of the respondents and confirmed the order appealed against. The question for the opinion of this Court is whether, under the circumstances above stated, the guardians of the Stepney union were prevented from obtaining an order on the guardians of the Whitby union for the maintenance of Esther Marshall under 16 & 17 Vict. c. 97. s. 97.

10. If the Court shall answer this question in the affirmative, then the order of sessions is to be quashed; but if in the negative, then the order of sessions is to be confirmed.

Taylor (Collins with him) for the respondents.—The order for the maintenance of the pauper under 16 & 17 Vict. c. 97, was rightly made on the guardians of the still in confinement, also to pay to the treasurer, officer, or proprietor of the asylum, hospital, or house the reasonable charges of the future lodging, maintenance, medicine, clothing, and care of such lunatic," &c.

(1) By 16 & 17 Vict. c. 97. s. 97: "It shall be lawful for any two justices for the county or borough in which any asylum, &c., in which any pauper lunatic is or has been confined is situate, or to which such asylum wholly or in part belongs, or from any part of which any pauper lunatic is or has been sent for confinement, at any time to inquire into the last legal settlement of such pauper lunatic, and if satisfactory evidence can be obtained as to such settlement in any parish, such justices shall, by order under their hands and seals, adjudge such settlement accordingly, and order the guardians of the union to which the parish in which such lunatic is adjudged to be settled belongs, or of such parish in case such parish be not in a union or be under a board of guardians, and if not, then the overseers of such parish to pay to the guardians of any union or parish, or the overseers of any parish, all expenses incurred by or on behalf of such union or parish in or about the examination of such lunatic, &c., within twelve months previous to the date of such order; and if such lunatic is

By section 102: "The expenses incurred since the 29th of September, 1853, or hereafter to be incurred in and about the examination, bringing before a justice or justices, removal, lodging, &c., of a pauper lunatic heretofore or hereafter removed to an asylum, &c., under the authority of this or any other Act, who would at the time of his being conveyed to such asylum, hospital, or house, have been exempt from removal to the parish of his settlement or the country of his birth by reason of some provision in the Act 9 & 10 Vict. c. 66, shall be paid by the guardians of the parish wherein such lunatic shall have acquired such exemption if such parish be subject to a separate board of guardians, or by the overseers of such parish where the same is not subject to such separate board, and where such parish shall be comprised in any union, the same shall be paid by the guardians and be charged to the common fund of such union so long as the cost of the relief of paupers rendered irremovable by the last-mentioned Act shall continue to be chargeable upon the common funds of unions," &c.

Whitby Union.' At the time when the pauper was conveyed to the county asylum she was not exempt from removal to the place of her settlement within the meaning of the proviso to 16 & 17 Vict. c. 97. s. 102, for there had then been no such unbroken residence on her part (under the statutes 9 & 10 Vict. c. 66. s. 1, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 55. s. 1, and 28 & 29 Vict. c. 79. s. 8), as to confer upon her a status of irremovability. In The Queen v. The Inhabitants of Whissendine (2), where a pauper lunatic having gained a settlement by estate was removed from the parish where he was residing to the county lunatic asylum under an order of justices, it was held that he had "ceased to inhabit" within the meaning of section 68 of the Poor Law Act, and did not retain his settlement after the removal. The Queen v. St. Giles-in-the-Fields (3) shows that the status of the lunatic, at the time of his conveyance to the asylum, is all that is to be considered.

[BLACKBURN, J., referred to The Queen v. St. Leonard's, Shoreditch (4)].

In order to prevent an absence from a parish from constituting a break in the residence there must be an animus revertendi—The Queen v. Glossop (5). In the present case the three essentials to an absence for a temporary purpose are wanting. There was first no departure for a temporary purpose; secondly, no intention to return; thirdly, no home to return to, inasmuch as the pauper had been dismissed from her master's service. She was not absent from Richmond on a visit, with the intention of returning, so that the case cannot be brought within Leeds v. Wakefield (6).

[BLACKBURN, J.—The pauper was physically absent, without any intention one way or the other.]

Where an actual absence is proved there is a break in the residence unless a clear intention to return can be made out. In

(2) 2 Q.B. Rep. 450; s. c. 14 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 42.

(3) 3 E. & E. 224; s. c. 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 12.

(4) 4 E. & B. 236; s. c. 24 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 41.

(5) 35 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 148.

(6) 7 E. & B. 258; s. c. 26 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 27.

The Queen v. Stapleton (7), the pauper, who resided in one parish where he had a house rented by himself, was hired, and the terms of his hiring required him to reside in another parish, it was held, that his absence from the parish under the hiring, though he intended ultimately to return, constituted a break in his residence. The Queen v. Tacolnstone (8), and The Queen v. Brighthelmstone (9), are to a similar effect.

[BLACKBURN, J.—Was not the absence in all these cases such that, unless there was an intention to return, there must have been an intention to be absent? Was there not, not merely a physical crossing of the border, but an intention to change the residence?]

There is no decision which exactly applies to the facts of the present case, but it is contended that the Court must look only at what was the intention of the mother of the pauper in removing her from Richmond. The mother during the lunacy of her daughter was her natural guardian, and the proper person to exercise any election on her behalf.

Poland and Poynter for the appellants.

—The order was improperly made on the guardians of the pauper's place of settlement. Irremovability is a right created for the benefit of the person who has resided for the necessary period. The right which is given by a term of residence within a particular district can only be lost in two ways, first by the operation of law, as in The Queen v. The Inhabitants of Seend (10), where it was held that the status was lost by the pauper in consequence of an absence from the parish under an order of removal, though she intended to return if the parish would allow her to do so; so also in The Queen v. Halifax (11). It was accordingly found necessary to provide in the Act 12 & 13 Vict. c. 103, that the period of confine-

(7) 1 E. & B. 766; s. c. 22 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 102.

(8) 12 Q.B. Rep. 157; s. c. 18 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 44.

(9) 4 E. & B. 236; s. c. 24 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 41.

(10) 12 Q.B. Rep. 133; s. c. 18 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 12.

(11) 12 Q.B. Rep. 111; s. c. 17 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 153.

ment in a lunatic asylum should be excluded from the computation of the term of residence—The Queen v. Hartfield (12), The Queen v. St. Andrew, Holborn (13). Or secondly, if the status is not lost by operation of law it can only be affected by the voluntary act of the party, and here the pauper was incapable of any exercise of volition. If the argument on the other side is correct, she might lose her status by being carried across the border in a state of insensibility. In The East Retford Union v. The Strand Union (14), where a pauper lunatic, after living by consent apart, and in a different parish from her husband (who was irremovable under 9 & 10 Vict. c. 66), was sent to a lunatic asylum, it was held that she was not irremovable. The term of absence cannot in principle be material, so that it must be argued that if the pauper had recovered the day after she left Richmond and returned, that there would still have been a break in her residence. It must not be supposed that the intention of the master in dismissing his servant can affect her rights. He might dismiss her from his service, but could not remove her from the parish. Nor had the mother any peculiar authority over her child, who was emancipated. In The Queen v. St. Mary, Islington (15), it was held that the maintenance of a pauper lunatic above the age of sixteen is not relief given to the parent, so as to prevent the parent acquiring a status of irremovability.

[BLACKBURN, J.—Suppose that she had been maintained in the asylum for a number of years. Do you say that time makes no difference?]

Without saying what might be the case under such circumstances it is submitted that where the irremovability has been clearly acquired, the onus is upon those who seek to shew that it has been lost. He cited The King v. Sutton (16), and The King v. Sudbrooke (17).

(12) 17 Q.B. Rep. 746; s.c. 21 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 65.

(13) 17 Q.B. Rep. 746; s.c. 21 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 69.

(14) 3 B. & S. 122.

(15) 3 B. & S. 46; s.c. 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 233.

(16) 5 Term Rep. 657.

(17) 4 East 356.

BLACKBURN, J.—I think that the order of the justices must be quashed, and that we must answer the question put to us by saying that under the circumstances the guardians of Whitby union were not liable for the pauper's maintenance. By 16 & 17 Vict. c. 97, it is enacted (the learned Judge read the material parts of sections 97 and 102).

The question comes to be whether, at the time when this woman was sent to the asylum, she was exempt from liability to removal to the parish of her settlement, on the ground that she had remained so long in Richmond as to have obtained a status of irremovability in that union. If so, the order ought not to have been made on the parish of settlement, that is, Whitby. I think that under the circumstances here stated, she had acquired a status of irremovability, and that she had not lost it. It must be remembered that the Act which gives the status of irremovability, now created by one year's residence in the parish, was passed for the benefit of the pauper. The scheme of the legislature was not to give advantages to one parish over another, but to relieve persons, who happen to become poor, from the extreme hardship of being removed from the place where they had acquired all their friends, to the place of their birth and settlement, in which it might be they would be absolute strangers—a hardship which used to fall very heavily upon them. Where the status of irremovability has been once acquired, the question arises, when does it cease? It ceases as soon as the paupers cease to reside in the parish. I take it that where the parties acquire the status of irremovability, the onus is upon those who seek to prove that circumstances have occurred which put an end to it. They must shew the alteration of residence, and if they do, as when the pauper has chosen to reside elsewhere, or where he goes out of the parish and sleeps or dwells for a time in another place, prima facie he must be supposed to have intended to go away, and to have changed his residence. If acts can be shewn to rebut this inference, or to shew that he retained the intention of returning, and that he was resident in the parish, although temporarily out of it on a visit, without any intention to change his residence, the presumption is rebutted, and he is no longer held to have changed his residence. In the present case the unfortunate woman had become insane while in the parish of Richmond, and she did not intend to quit or change her residence. She had no intention of quitting the place, she was incapable of deciding one way or the other. I think that there was nothing here to change the status. I think that the status ought to continue until it is affirmatively shewn to have been lost. As she was incapable of choosing for herself, the mere fact of her being carried across the border of the parish does not change her residence. I do not mean to say that in her condition there can be no change of residence, but I should be inclined to think it can only be where there is a regular guardian appointed for the lunatic, or where a committee is appointed by the Lord Chancellor, that the guardian might choose for the lunatic, and might exercise the right and change the residence. I do not wish to say one way or the other, whether there might not be a case where a person had acted as guardian de facto, something like the way in which an executor de son tort would act for the benefit of the estate, whether, under such circumstances, this guardian would have a right to choose, and act for the lunatic and so change the residence. It is sufficient to say no such question arises here. As to the circumstance of the mother, herself a pauper, receiving the lunatic for one night, and then removing her out of the parish for one night, I should think, judging of it as a question of fact, that the intention must have been to remove her in order that she might get relief in the parish of Whitby, which she had been unable to obtain in Richmond. The mere fact of her being the mother would not give her the power to change the residence of her daughter, even if there was any such intention, which I cannot think. As it seems to me, Mr. Poland was right when he said that if this woman had recovered from her lunacy, and come back to Richmond, the question would be, had anything occurred in the interval which deprived her of the status of irremovability, and entitled the parish of Richmond to cause her to be removed, and that it must be admitted that she herself had done nothing of the kind, and had no intention of doing so, and that no person having any authority to act for her, had made an election and changed her residence. In the question of who shall bear the expenses of the lunatic, the legislature has no interest at all, except for the benefit of the person who has become lunatic; you must look, therefore, to see whether the change of circumstances is such as to deprive the lunatic of the right not to be removed where that right is exercised and claimed for the benefit of the pauper herself, and it seems to me that if the pauper had recovered and returned to Richmond, nothing would have occurred that would have put an end to her status of irremovability. Whether it might be done after a long lapse of time is a question we can decide when the case arises.

MELLOR, J.—I am of the same opinion. Our decision, no doubt, cannot injuriously affect the lunatic one way or the other; but it depends on circumstances which might affect her condition. It appears to me that the object of the legislature in providing for the irremovability of persons who have resided for a long period in a particular parish, was to prevent the oppression which frequently occurred in compelling persons whose whole associations were in the place of residence, going to a distance where they had probably no ties whatever, because, except as Mr. Poland said, that their grandfather or grandmother might have been at some time settled there. But it appears to me, in this particular case, there was no actual and there could be no constructive assent on the part of the pauper to her withdrawal from the parish. As Mr. Poland said, if she had the power of acting according to her own will, although her master might have turned her out of his house, he could not have turned her out of the parish, and she had a right if she chose to remain in it. I think the status of irremovability which is acquired under these Acts of Parliament is for the benefit of paupers, and that some act of theirs in general ought to be shewn before that status can be put an end to; and although in this case there was an actual and physical removal by the mother (which caused me to hesitate for some little time, as to whether the mother, being apparently the natural guardian of the lunatic, although not compellable to maintain her by reason of her own poverty, might not have the power to change her status), yet I am satisfied that there was nothing that took place in the interval which prevented the pauper from returning to Richmond, and there asserting her status of irremovability. It lies, on the other side, to shew that it has been determined, and they have failed to satisfy me that it has, and therefore I come to the conclusion that the rule must be made absolute for quashing the order.

HANNEN, J.—I am of the same opinion. The status of irremovability can only be put an end to by shewing that the residence—the usual residence of the pauper, has been changed. That depends upon intention. If the residence is once established, it must be presumed to continue, until the intention to abandon it is shewn. Now, in this case, the lunatic was incapable of an intention to abandon that which had become her place of residence. At one time I was inclined to think that the fact that the master had prevented his house from continuing to be her place of residence might affect the case. On consideration, I think that is not so. If he had turned her out of his house, that would not make the parish cease to be her place of residence, and if she was absolutely incapable of forming an intention on the subject, the fact that she was taken out of this parish, in order to be taken care of by her parents, would make no more difference in the case than if, as has been put in the course of the argument, she had been carried out in her sleep; and while an incapacity to form an intention on the subject continued, I am disposed to go the length that Mr. Poland says he contends for, that so long as that incapacity continues, no change could have taken place in her residence, because after a person has been in a place for so long a time as the law thinks entitles them to be irremovable, it is to be presumed they have cast in their lot with the inhabitants in that neighbourhood, and that they would be likely to seek to continue to get their living as they had before, amongst those people in the midst of whom they had been resident so long. I repeat, therefore, if you imagine a complete suspension of the power of choosing on the part of the pauper, the inference still continues, that when the disability is removed he will go back to the place in the midst of which he has been living for a considerable period of time. On these grounds, I agree with my Brethren, and the order must be quashed.

Order of Justices quashed.

Attorneys—Stone, Townson & Morris, for Gray & Parmett, Whitby, for appellants; W. H. Sweptone, for respondents.

1870. } ALLEN, appellant, v. THOMPSON,
May 7. } respondent.

Game—Sunday—Snare—"Engine or Instrument"—1 & 2 Will. 4. c. 32. s. 3.

The 1 & 2 Will. 4. c. 32. s. 3, provides, that "if any person whatsoever shall kill or take any game, or use any dog, gun, net, or other engine or instrument for the purpose of killing or taking any game on a Sunday or Christmas Day, such person shall, on conviction thereof, forfeit and pay for every such offence such sum of money, not exceeding 5*l.*, as to the said justices shall seem meet."

The appellant on Friday and Saturday, the 13th and 14th of August, was setting snares made of wire upon land over which, by consent of the owner and occupier, he had the right of sporting. Upon the following Sunday the snares were still set, and on that day two dead grouse were found caught in two of them. The appellant had a proper excise license to kill game:—Held, first, that a snare is an "engine" or "instrument" within the section, and second, that although the appellant was not upon the land on the Sunday, he was liable to be convicted for using the snares on that day for the purpose of taking game.

CASE stated by justices for the North Riding of the County of York, under statute 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43.

1. At a Petty Sessions held at Leyburn in and for the division of Hang West in the North Riding of York, on the 24th of September, 1869, and at an adjourned Petty Sessions held on the 29th of October, 1869, an information preferred by William Thompson, hereinafter called the respondent, against Henry Allen, hereinafter called the appellant, under section 3 of statute 1 & 2 Will. 4. c. 32, charging for that H. Allen on the 15th of August (being Sunday) at the township of Bainbridge in the North Riding, did then and there unlawfully use certain engines or instruments, to wit, snares, for the purpose of then and there killing game, to wit, grouse, in an allotment there situate in the occupation of Christopher Percival, contrary to the form of the statute in that case made and provided, was heard and determined by the justices, and upon such hearing the appellant was duly convicted before them and adjudged to pay a fine of 5s. and 11. 4s. 6d. costs.

4. Upon the hearing of the information it was proved on the part of the respondent, and found as a fact, that the appellant was setting snares on the 13th and 14th of August in an allotment or pasture in the township of Bainbridge. There was no evidence to shew that the appellant was there on the 15th of August, but the respondent went into the allotment on that day, and saw fifty or sixty snares set ready to catch grouse, and found two dead grouse caught in the two snares.

5. It was contended on the part of the appellant, that the setting of the snares on the 13th and 14th of August, and not going on the land to examine them on the 15th of August, was not such a user as is contemplated by section 3 of 1 & 2 Will. 4. c. 32.

6. It was also contended on the part of the appellant that a snare or piece of wire, such as was found set by the respondent, is not an engine or instrument within the meaning of the 3rd section of statute 1 & 2 Will. 4. c. 32.

7. It was admitted that the appellant had a proper excise license for killing game.

8. It is also an admitted fact that the appellant had the consent of the owner and occupier of the land to sport over it.

9. The justices were of opinion:—

(1). That snares were engines or instruments within the meaning of the 3rd section of 1 & 2 Will. 4. c. 32, and were expressly used for and applicable to the destruction of game.

(2). That having the snares set on a Sunday for the purpose of killing game was a user within the meaning of the above-named section.

(3). That the Act of 1 & 2 Will. 4. c. 32, was not an Act for the observance of the Sabbath, but that section 3 of the same Act was for securing and preserving game during certain days and seasons, and that it was a breach of the Act so to use snares on a Sunday, as that game may be killed by them.

The justices gave their determination against the appellant in manner before stated.

10. The questions for the opinion of this Court were, first, whether it was an offence against the 3rd section of 1 & 2 Will. 4. c. 32, to set snares on a Saturday (or any other day except Sunday) and allow them to remain set so as to catch or entrap grouse on a Sunday; and second, whether a snare was an "engine or instrument" within the meaning of the 3rd section of statute 1 & 2 Will. 4. c. 32.

If the Court should be of opinion that the conviction was legally and properly made, and the appellant was liable, then the conviction was to stand; but if the Court should be of opinion otherwise, then the information was to be dismissed.

Holker (MacDonald with him) for the appellant.—A snare is not an "engine or instrument" within this section. The words are, "use any dog, gun, net or other engine, or instrument." The engine or instrument must be ejusdem generis with "dog," "gun," or "net," and must be something of which the offender has manual possession at the time of committing the offence. The snares which had been set by the appellant on the Friday or Saturday, were not so in his possession. It is to be further observed that in the repealed Act 10 Geo. 2. c. 19, the word "snare" is used.

Next the justices were wrong in holding, that the Act was not for the observance of the Sabbath, and were wrong in holding that the appellant had used the snares on the Sunday. Before the words "use any dog," &c., the section contains the words "kill or take any game." Those words imply an actual interference with the game; and the word "use," in like manner, means an actual using of, or control over, the snare at the time. The Act was intended to apply to the case of persons killing or taking game, or using dogs, &c., upon land which was their own, or over which they had a right of sporting, upon Sunday or Christmas day. The appellant did not commit any offence upon the Friday or Saturday, and there is no proof that he was upon or near the land on the Sunday. The most that can be said against him is, that he omitted to take up the snares on Saturday night.

[BLACKBURN, J.—Having the snares set on the Sunday, so that two grouse were actually caught in them, affords pretty good evidence that he intended to use them for taking game on that day. LUSH, J.—Observe the next clause of the same section, which provides for killing or taking game between certain periods. The words in the earlier part were "kill or take any game, or use any dog, gun, net," &c. Suppose on the 1st of February the appellant had set a net for the purpose of taking partridges, and upon the 2nd of February one had been taken; could he not have been convicted of taking a "partridge between the first day of February and the first day of September," although he was not there at the time?]

The information was not for killing or taking the grouse, but for using the snares; he was not bound to take them up on the Saturday night.

[BLACKBURN, J.—Why not? He would clearly be bound to take them up when the close time arrived, and if so, why not on Saturday night, the legislature having intended to prevent the killing or taking of game on Sunday?]

It is submitted that the respondent was bound to prove that the appellant actually used the snares on the Sunday, or, at any rate, that he was watching them, or having the control over them.

No counsel appeared for the respondent.

BLACKBURN, J.—I think that there is no doubt about the conviction being right. The legislature certainly did a curious thing when they mixed up in one section the provisions for preventing the killing and taking game on Sunday and Christmas day, with those relating to the close times when it is not lawful to kill or take game; but there cannot be any doubt that if a man puts down a snare on the Saturday, and game is strangled by means of that snare on the Sunday, he may be convicted of killing game on the Sunday, although he was not present at the time. It is sufficient if he causes the death of the game. Then the appellant is charged with using certain engines or instruments, to wit, snares, for the purpose of killing game. He set snares on the Saturday, and we must take it that he intended that they should continue to catch game while they remained there. So long as he allowed them to remain there, so long was he using them for the purpose of killing game. Upon the other point, I think that a snare is quite as much an engine as a net would be.

MELLOE, J.—I am of the same opinion.

LUSH, J.—I am of the same opinion. According to Mr. Holker it would amount to this, that there could be no such thing as using a snare or engine for any longer time than while a man is actually setting it or superintending it, so that if he sets it and goes away, he would cease to use it. But clearly that cannot be so. It cannot be necessary, in order to make out the fact of using it, that he must stop upon the very spot so as to be able to superintend it. So long as he keeps the snare down he is using it.

Conviction affirmed.

Attorney, W. Prowting Roberts.

[IN THE COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.]

(SECOND DIVISION.)

1870. } PRESTON, appellant, v. BUCKLER,
 June 1. } respondent.*

Beerhouse—Rateable Value—Population Area—"Parish or Place"—3 & 4 Vict. c. 61. s. 1—Township.

*A beerhouse situated in a township having a population of less than 10,000 inhabitants, according to the last parliamentary census, must, if such township be within a parish containing more than 10,000 inhabitants, be rated in one sum to the rate for the relief of the poor of the township in which such house is situate on a rent or annual value of fifteen pounds per annum at the least, or otherwise the license is null and void under the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 61. s. 1—MELLOR, J., hesitante.*

CASE stated by two justices of the West Riding of Yorkshire under the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43.

At a petty sessions holden at Halifax in and for the parish of Halifax, on the 11th of September, 1869, an information was preferred by the appellant against the respondent under s. 1 of the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 61, for that the respondent, at Sowerby, on the 4th of September last, did unlawfully open his house for the sale of beer, he not being then duly licensed so to do, contrary to the form of the statute, &c.

The township of Sowerby, within which the respondent's house is situate, is a township maintaining its own poor, and choosing its own parochial constables and overseers, and in every respect managing its own local affairs, but is within the parish of Halifax. The township contains a population, according to the last census, of 8,746 persons. The house in which the respondent resides, and in respect of which he obtained a license to sell beer, is rated to the relief of the poor of the township at the sum of 13*l.* 10*s.* gross and 11*l.* 10*s.* rateable value. The population of the parish of Halifax, which includes the borough of Halifax, within which parish the township is situate, contains, according to the last census, 128,667 inhabitants. The parish is about 17 miles in length and 15 or 16 miles in breadth, embracing an area of 75,740 acres, and consists of 23 townships, varying in extent from 10,080 acres to 890 acres, and in population from 28,990 to 388, each of which townships elects its own overseers of the poor, who make a levy or rate over their respective townships for the maintenance of the poor therein. Each township is well known by defined boundaries, maintains its own highways by separate highway rates, is separately rated to the county rate, and in every respect manages its own local affairs, and, where necessary, levies local rates. It was contended for the appellant that as the house of the respondent was rated at a less value than 15*l.*, the license was void. The justices held that the license was valid, on the ground that the words "parish or place" in the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 61. s. 1, read by the light of the interpretation clause of 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4. c. 64, which is applied to that Act, included a township maintaining its own poor, and dismissed the information. Against this decision the appellant now appealed.

Argument for the appellant.—The beerhouse of the respondent was situated in a parish of more than 10,000 inhabitants, and the fact that it contains several townships within its limits, does not render the parish any the less the area of population to be taken into account under s. 1 of the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 61 (1). If, in a township of

(1) The 3 & 4 Vict. c. 61. s. 1, reciting 11 Geo. 4. and 1 Will. 4. c. 61, and 4 & 5 Will. 4. c. 85, enacts—"That no license to sell beer or cider by retail under the said recited Acts or Act shall be granted to any person who shall not be the real resident holder and occupier of the dwellinghouse, in which he shall apply to be licensed, nor shall any such license be granted in respect of any dwellinghouse which shall not, with the premises occupied therewith, be rated in one sum to the relief of the poor of the parish, township, or place in which such house and premises are situate on a rent or annual value of 15*l.* per annum at the least, if situated in the cities of London or Westminster, or within any parish or place within the bills of mortality, or within any city, cinque port, town corporate, parish, or place, the population of which, according to the last parliamentary census, shall exceed 10,000, or within one mile, to be measured by the nearest public street or path from any polling place used at the last election, for any town having the like population, and re-

P

* Coram Blackburn, J., and Mellor, J.
 NEW SERIES, 39.—MAG. CAS.

less than 10,000 inhabitants, situated within a parish of more than 10,000 inhabitants, a license to retail beer may be granted in respect of a house of less annual value than 15*l.*, then also in a parish of less than 10,000 inhabitants, situated in a city or corporate town, of a greater population, a license might be granted in respect of a house of the like annual value, which would be contrary to the intention of the Act. In Smith v. Bedding (2), it was held that a beer-house, situated in a hamlet maintaining its own poor, but included in a parish, the population of which, according to the last census, exceeded 2,500, might, under the 15th section of the same Act (3), be kept open turning a member or members of parliament; nor shall any such license be granted in respect of any dwelling-house which shall not, with the premises occupied therewith, be rated in one sum to the rate for the relief of the poor of the parish, township, or place, in which such house and premises are situate, on a rent or annual value of 11*l.* per annum, if situate within any city, cinque port, town corporate, parish, or place, the population of which, according to such last parliamentary census, shall exceed 2,500, and shall not exceed 10,000; or within one mile, to be measured, as aforesaid, from any polling place used at the last election for any town having the like population as last aforesaid, and returning a member, or members, of parliament; nor shall any such license be granted in respect of any dwellinghouse which shall not, with the premises occupied therewith, be rated in one sum to the rate for the relief of the poor of the parish, township, or place, in which such house and premises are situate, on a rent or annual value of 8*l.*, if situated elsewhere than aforesaid; and every license granted contrary hereto shall be null and void."

(2) 35 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 202; s. c. Law Rep. 1 Q.B. 489.

(3) The 3 & 4 Vict. c. 61. s. 15 enacts—"That no person, licensed to sell beer or cider by retail under the said recited Acts, or this Act, shall have or keep his house open for the sale of beer or cider, nor shall sell or retail beer or cider, nor shall suffer any beer or cider to be drunk or consumed in or at such house, at any time before the hour of five of the clock in the morning, nor after twelve of the clock in the night, of any day in the week, in the cities of London or Westminster, or within the boundaries of any of the boroughs of Marylebone, Finsbury, the Tower Hamlets, Lambeth, or Southwark, as defined by an Act 2 & 3 Will. 4. c. 64, intituled 'An Act to settle and describe the divisions of counties, and the limits of cities and boroughs in England and Wales, in so far as respects the election of members to serve in parliament,' nor after eleven of until eleven o'clock at night, although the population of the hamlet itself did not exceed 2,500, and in that case the Court had in view section 1 of this Act.

[BLACKBURN, J.—What I said in my judgment in that case would apply to a city containing a number of small parishes, as, for instance, Norwich, but the question here is whether it follows that it was intended that the Act should so apply to the large northern parishes, almost the size of counties, where a number of townships exist.]

It is submitted that, by the use of the word "parish" next before the word "place," the Act must be construed so to apply—Scott v. Washington (4).

Philbrick, for the respondent. — The population of the township of Sowerby, and not that of the parish of Halifax, regulates the value of the house in respect of which the license is granted. Sowerby is the "place" contemplated by the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 61. s. 1, and not the parish of Halifax. The rateable value of the house is ascertained by reference to the rate for the township, so a township may well be considered to be a place for the purpose of considering the amount of the population. By the 11 Geo. 4. and 1 Will. 4. c. 64. s. 32 (the interpretation clause), "the words 'parish or place' shall be deemed to include any township, hamlet, tithing, village, extra-parochial place, or any place maintaining its own poor."

the clock within any parish or place within the bills of mortality; or within any city, cinque port, town corporate, parish, or place, the population of which, according to the last parliamentary census, shall exceed 2,500, or within one mile, to be measured, as aforesaid, from any polling place used at the last election, for any town having the like population and returning a member, or members, to parliament, nor after ten of the clock in the evening elsewhere, nor at any time before one of the clock in the afternoon, nor at any time during which the houses of licensed victuallers, now are or hereafter shall be closed, on any Sunday, Good Friday, Christmas-day, or any day appointed for a public fast or thanksgiving; and if any such person shall keep his house open for selling beer or cider, or shall sell or retail beer or cider at any time, other than as hereinbefore prescribed and directed, such person shall forfeit the sum of 40*s.* for every offence, and every separate sale shall be deemed a separate offence."

(4) 6 B. & S. 617; s. c. 13 W. R. 939.

BLACKBURN, J.—I am sorry to say that I think the legislature had not sufficiently considered the nature of the different localities when they passed the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 61. By section 1, no license shall be granted to sell beer or cider by retail, under the Acts there recited, to any person "in respect of any dwelling-house which shall not, with the premises occupied therewith, be rated in one sum to the rate for the relief of the poor of the parish, township, or place in which such house and premises are situate, on a rent or annual value of fifteen pounds per annum at the least, if situated in the cities of London or Westminster, or within any parish or place within the bills of mortality, or within any city, cinque port, town corporate, parish, or place, the population of which, according to the last parliamentary census, shall exceed ten thousand," &c. The legislature there say that the rent or annual value of the house on which it is rated by the parish, township, or place, where it is situated, is to regulate the granting of the license, but that that shall be 15*l.* by the least, in London and Westminster, &c., or within any city, cinque port, town corporate, parish, or place, the population of which is over ten thousand. As applied to parishes in the south of England, where the parishes and places are small, it may be good legislation to say we will not regard the small villages, hamlets, and places, but let the parish be the population area, but when applied to the north of England, where the parishes and places are so large as to be big enough for counties, as in the present instance, it is different, and probably the legislature would not have so enacted if they had considered the matter. If the inconvenience of this construction is great the legislature must remedy it. I think the population of the parish of Halifax must regulate the granting of this license, and not that of the township of Sowerby, and therefore the license in this case is void.

MELLOB, J.—I confess I entertain considerable doubt as to whether we are putting the true construction on this enactment, but my doubts are not sufficient to require me to differ from my brother Blackburn. I cannot but think the construction is very inconvenient, but I follow his decision though reluctantly.

Case remitted.

Attorneys—Edwards, Layton & Jaques, agents for Holroyde & Smith, Halifax, for appellant; Emmets, Watson & Emmet, agents for Philbrick & Co., Halifax, for respondent.

[CROWN CASE RESERVED.]

1870. } THE QUEEN v. THE INHABITANTS OF THE UPPER HALF
April 30. } HUNDRED OF CHART AND LONGBRIDGE.*

Bridge—Liability to Repair Hundred Bridge—Highway Act, 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50. s. 5.

A public bridge, repairable by immemorial custom by the inhabitants of a hundred, is not a highway within the meaning of the term highway in 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50. s. 5 (the Highway Act, 1835), and is not repairable, under that Act, by the parish in which it is situated.

By the General Highway Act, 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50. s. 5, it is enacted (inter alia) "that the word 'highways' shall be understood to mean all roads, bridges (not being county bridges), carriage ways, &c.":—Held, that a bridge of the above description was a county bridge, and repairable by the hundred, within the exception of county bridges.

CASE reserved by the Chairman of the Kent Quarter Sessions.

At the general Quarter Sessions of the Peace, held at St. Augustine's, near Canterbury, on the 29th day of June, 1869, James Adams and Charles Tanton, as representing the inhabitants of the Upper Half Hundred of Chart and Longbridge, in the county of Kent, were tried upon an indictment which charged the said inhabitants with permitting one of the hundred bridges to be out of repair.

It was proved, to the satisfaction of the jury, that the bridge in question was situate within the Upper Half Hundred of Chart and Longbridge, that it was out of repair and dangerous, and that from time immemorial the repairs of that bridge, and all other hundred bridges within the Upper Half Hundred, had always been done at the expense of the inhabitants of the Half Hundred, out of a hundred rate, made and levied in the said Upper Half Hundred. Prima facie, everything was proved which would entitle the Crown to a verdict. But it was contended, on the part of the defendants, that since the Highway Act, 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50, hundred bridges are repairable as highways by the parishes in which they are respectively situate, and that the inhabitants of any hundred, or other division of a county, are no longer indictable for the non-repair.

(*) Coram Bovill, C.J., Willes, J., Byles, J., Hannen, J., and Cleasby, B.

The jury found the defendants guilty, and the Court decided upon reserving the point raised for the consideration of the Court for Crown Cases Reserved, and respite the judgment until the decision should be given.

The opinion of the Court is requested upon the following question, namely,—

Whether a public bridge, which has from the time whereof the memory of man runneth not to the contrary, been repaired by a hundred is, since the Statute 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50, not repairable by the said hundred. If the Court shall be of opinion that it is repairable by the hundred the verdict is to stand, if otherwise, the verdict is to be set aside, and a verdict of not guilty entered.

Byron, for the defendants.—The parish in which this bridge is situated is liable to repair it, and not the hundred, since the Highway Act 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50. At common law, parishes were liable to the repair of their highways, but counties were liable to repair county bridges; but, by prescription, the repair of hundred bridges fell upon the hundredors. In stat. 43 Geo. 3. c. 59, the powers given by the prior Act of 13 Geo. 3. c. 78, to surveyors of highways, with respect to highways and bridges, under that Act were conferred upon the surveyors of county bridges. It is recited in that Act that the inhabitants of counties were by law bound to repair, &c., the public bridges commonly called county bridges; and in section 7 it is provided that nothing in that Act shall extend to persons liable to the repair of bridges ratione tenuræ, or by prescription. The 54 Geo. 3. c. 90 recognises the distinction between county bridges and hundred bridges. Sect. 2 recites that it is expedient to extend the 43 Geo. 3. c. 59 to bridges and other works repaired by the inhabitants of hundreds and other general divisions of counties, and enacts that the said Act shall extend as well to bridges repaired by the inhabitants of hundreds, and other general divisions of counties, as to bridges repaired by the inhabitants of counties. Then the 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50 makes highways repairable by the parish; and in sect. 5 enacts that the word "highways" shall be understood to mean all roads, bridges (not being county bridges), carriage ways, cartways, &c." Therefore, it is submitted that bridges repairable by hundredors by prescription are not county bridges, and are highways within the Act of 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50. County bridges and county bridges only are excepted out of that Act—The Queen v. Inhabitants of Merionethshire (1), and The Queen v. The Inhabitants of Breconshire (2). In the 55 Geo. 3. c. 143. s. 1, the 43 Geo. 3. c. 59 is recited, and power is given to surveyors of county bridges "and also to and for the bridge master, or all and every person or persons who may at the passing of this Act be under contract for the rebuilding or repairing of any public bridge built or repaired at the expense of the inhabitant of any such county, hundred or general division as aforesaid," to get stones out of quarries in the county for their repair. In Russell on Ormes, 4th ed. by Greaves, vol. i. p. 544, it is said: "As parishes are bound to repair the public ways within their district, so the inhabitants of a county are prima facie and of common right liable to the repair of all public bridges within its limits, unless they can shew a legal obligation on some other persons to bear the burden. The Statute of Bridges shews that the burden is prima facie on the county, and it is exactly analogous to the liability of the parish to repair a road. But a hundred or parish or other known portion of a county may by usage and custom be chargeable to the repair of a bridge erected within it."

(1) 6 Q.B. Rep. 343; s. c. 13 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 158.

(2) 16 Q.B. Rep. 813; s. c. 19 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 203.

[WILLES, J., referred to Com. Dig. tit. Chimin, b. 2, and to Regina v. Kerrison (3). BOVILL, C.J.—The term county bridges is not a legal term. In an indictment against the inhabitants of a county you do not describe the bridge as a county bridge eo nomine, but you state the circumstances which raise the liability to repair.]

Barrow, for the prosecution.—This bridge is a county bridge, and would be repairable by the county, if it were not, as it is by custom, repairable by the hundred. This is the first time this liability has been questioned since the passing of the 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50.

BOVILL, C.J.—Before the passing of the 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50, there had been one set of statutes applicable to highways, and another set of statutes applicable to bridges. The 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50 does not refer in any way to the statutes relating to bridges. In the interpretation clause (sect. 5) highways are to be understood to mean roads, bridges (not being county bridges), carriageways, cartways, horseways, &c., and it is now argued that under that clause, the term county bridge did not include a bridge repairable by a hundred. If we were dealing with special legal terms, there might be some foundation for that argument, but in reality, the term county bridge is only a compendious term for a public bridge. In an indictment for the non-repair of a bridge, the averments against the inhabitants of a county do not describe it as a county bridge. Prima facie the liability to repair public bridges in a county, is on the inhabitants of the county, but that liability may be cast on inhabitants of a hundred or other division of a county, or on a borough, or on certain persons. All public bridges, therefore, would be county bridges, though not repairable by the county at large. In the statute 43 Geo. 3. c. 49, the term, hundred bridges, does not occur; then in 54 Geo. 3. c. 90, the officers of hundreds have authority extended to them which the county officers had before that Act. In the 55 Geo. 3. c. 143, it was necessary for the purposes of that Act to make the distinction between the two, but as respects highways there was no necessity to distinguish between the county bridges and hundred bridges. I think, therefore, that county bridges in the 5th section of the Highway Act, mean bridges prima facie repairable by the county, though by custom repairable by the hundred. The Highway Act (5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50) consists of affirmative enactments, and contains nothing to take away liabilities expressly imposed by previous legislation. I therefore think the verdict was right and ought to stand.

The other judges concurred.

Conviction affirmed.

Attorneys—Kingsford & Dorman, agents for James Fraser, Ashford, for prosecution; Furley, Hallett & Creesy, Ashford, for defendants.

[CROWN CASE RESERVED.]

1870. }
May 7, } THE QUEEN v. KILHAM.*
June 4. }

False Pretences—Obtaining the use of a Horse—24 & 25 Vict. c. 96. s. 88.

By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96. s. 88, whoever shall by any false pretence obtain from any other person any chattel, &c., with intent to defraud, shall be guilty of misdemeanour. To constitute an obtaining of a chattel, &c., within this section, there must, as in larceny, be an intention to deprive the owner wholly of his property, and merely to obtain the loan of a chattel by false pretences with intent, &c., is not within the section.

The prisoner, by false pretences, obtained from a livery stable keeper a horse on hire for a third person, rode it himself during the time of hiring and returned it to the stables afterwards:—Held, that a conviction for obtaining the horse by false pretences with intent, &c., was bad and must be quashed.

(*) Coram Bovill, C.J., Willes, J., Byles, J., Hannen, J., and Cleasby, B.

CASE reserved by the learned recorder for the city of York.

James Kilham was tried before me at the last Easter quarter sessions for the city of York, on an indictment containing three counts, the first count of which was as follows: "City of York to wit. The jurors for our lady the Queen, upon their oath, present that James Kilham on the thirteenth day of March, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy, in the city of York, unlawfully and knowingly did falsely pretend to Henry Burton, then being an ostler in the service of James Thackray and Edward Thackray, then keeping horses for hire in the city aforesaid, that he, the said James Kilham, was then sent by Mr. Hartley (thereby then meaning a son of Mr. Thomas Gibson Hartley, then living in Davygate in the said city) to order and obtain for hire a horse for him, the said first mentioned Mr. Hartley, to drive on a journey to Elvington, to be ready at half-past nine of the clock the next morning, by means of which said false pretences, the said James Kilham did then unlawfully obtain from the said Henry Burton, a certain horse of the goods and chattels of the said James Thackray and Edward Thackray with intent thereby them to defraud. Whereas in truth and in fact, the said James Kilham was not then sent by the said Mr. Hartley or any son of the said Mr. Thomas Gibson Hartley, then living in Davygate aforesaid, to order and obtain for hire a horse for him to drive on a journey to Elvington, to be ready at half-past nine of the clock the next morning, as he, the said James Kilham, well knew at the time when he did so falsely pretend as aforesaid." There were two other counts slightly varied in form but the same in substance.

The evidence on the part of the prosecution was that the prisoner had called at the livery stables of Messrs. Thackray, who were duly licensed to let out horses for hire, on the evening of the thirteenth of March last and stated to the ostler that he was sent by a Mr. Gibson Hartley to order a horse to be ready the next morning for the use of a son of Mr. Gibson Hartley, who was a customer of the Messrs. Thackray. Accordingly the next morning the prisoner called for the horse, which was delivered to him by the ostler. The prisoner was seen in the course of the same day driving the horse, which he returned to Messrs. Thackray's stables in the evening. The hire for the horse, amounting to seven shillings, was never paid by the prisoner. Mr. Hartley and his son denied that they had authorized the prisoner to hire any horse for them, or that the prisoner had used the horse for any purpose of theirs. The prisoner was found Guilty, but I respited the sentence and admitted him to bail till the opinion of the Court for Crown Cases reserved could be taken.

I desire the opinion of the Court as to whether the prisoner could properly be found guilty of obtaining a chattel by false pretences within the meaning of the statute 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96. s. 88. The case of Regina v. Boulton (1), was relied on on the part of the prosecution.

No counsel appeared for the prisoner.

A. W. Simpson for the prosecution.—I admit that it is to be taken that the prisoner never intended to steal the horse, and the question, therefore, is whether goods which under the circumstances could not be the subject of larceny, can be the subject of false pretences. I submit that they can. There is no decision on the exact point. Burn's Justice, vol. 2, tit. Larceny, p. 276, says, "It is no objection that the moneys have been obtained only by way of a loan [Regina v. Crossley (2)] but perhaps this is true only of moneys, and not of other goods."

[WILLES, J.—Because money is a fungible (3)].

In Regina v. Boulton (1), it was held that a railway ticket was a chattel within 7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 29. s. 53, and a conviction for obtaining by false pretences a ticket whereby the prisoner travelled free, was held good under that statute, though the ticket had to be returned to the company at the end of the journey. But Mr. Greaves, in a note to Russell on Crimes, 4th ed. vol. 2. p. 645, says: "This case was not argued. . . . The decision seems very questionable." In Regina v. Morrison (4), Regina v. Boulton (1) was commented on.

(1) 1 Den. C.C. 508; 19 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 67.

(2) 2 Moo. & R. 17.

(3) Res fungibiles, so called because mutua vires funguntur. See Sander's Justin. lib. 3. tit. 14. In Regina v. Burgon (D. & B. 11) Crompton, J., says: "Where a chattel is lent, the chattel does not pass, but money that is lent passes as much in a case of loan as on a sale. There was no expectation that the same money which was obtained would be returned."

The words which constitute the offence of false pretences in 7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 29. s. 53, do not differ from those in 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96. s. 88, except that the former statute says, "with intent to cheat or defraud any person of the same;" and the latter says only, "with intent to defraud."

The statute 33 Hen. 8. c. 1, was directed against persons deceitfully obtaining the possession of money, &c., by false tokens or counterfeit letters made in any other man's name. Then came 30 Geo. 2. c. 24. In Pear's Case (5) it is said that seven out of eleven Judges "held that neither of those statutes were intended to mitigate the common law, or to make that a less offence which was a greater before." The object of the modern statutes is to enlarge not to narrow the means of punishing cheats.

[WILLES, J.—Did any case arise under 33 Hen. 8. c. 1, which determined that it applied to the case of obtaining the use of a thing only by false tokens, &c. ?]

In a note to 2 East, P.C. 689, it is said that Eyre, B., adverting to 33 Hen. 8. c. 1, and 30 Geo. 2. c. 24, said, "he doubted if there were not a distinction in this respect between the owner's parting with the possession and with the property in the thing delivered. That where goods were delivered upon a false token, and the owner meant to part with the property absolutely, and never expected to have the goods returned again, it might be difficult to reach the case otherwise than through the statutes; aliter, where he parted with the possession only; for there, if the possession were obtained by fraud, and not taken according to the agreement, it was on the whole a taking against the will of the owner; and if done animo furandi, it was felony. MS. Buller, J."

(4) Bell C.C. 167; s. c. 28 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 212.

(6) 2 East P.C. 689.

These distinctions as to what amount of property passed out of the owner are material only in larceny.

Our. adv. vult.

The following judgment was delivered (on June 4) by Bovill, C.J.—We are of opinion that the conviction in this case cannot be supported. The statute 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96. s. 88, enacts that "Whosoever shall by any false pretence obtain from any other person any chattel, money, or valuable security with intent to defraud, shall be guilty of misdemeanour." The word "obtain" in this section does not mean obtain the loan of, but obtain the property in any chattel, &c. This is to some extent indicated by the proviso that if it be proved that the person indicated obtained the property in such manner as to amount in law to larceny he shall not by reason thereof be entitled to be acquitted; but it is made more clear by referring to the earlier statute, from which the language of the 88th section is adopted. The 7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 29. s. 53, recites that "a failure of justice frequently arises from the subtle distinction between larceny and fraud," and for remedy thereof enacts that "if any person shall by any false pretence obtain," &c.

The subtle distinction which the statute was intended to remedy was this, that if a person by fraud induced another to part with the possession only of goods, and converted them to his own use, this was larceny; while if he induced another by fraud to part with the property in the goods as well as the possession, this was not larceny.

But to constitute an obtaining by false pretences it is equally essential, as in larceny, that there shall be an intention to deprive the owner wholly of his property, and this intention did not exist in the case before us.

In support of the conviction the case of The Queen v. Boulton (1) was referred to. There the prisoner was indicted for obtaining by false pretences a railway ticket, with intent to defraud the company. It was held that the prisoner was rightly convicted, though the ticket had to be given up at the end of the journey. The reasons for this decision do not very clearly appear; but it may be distinguished from the present case in this respect, that the prisoner, by using the ticket for the purpose of travelling on the railway, entirely converted it to his own use, for the only use for which it was capable of being applied. The conviction must therefore be quashed.

Conviction quashed.

Attorney—Robert Dale, York, for prosecution.

[CROWN CASE RESERVED.]

1870. }
April 30. } THE QUEEN v. SMITH.*
June 4. }

Receiving Stolen Goods—Partnership Goods—Larceny by Partner—24 & 25 Vict. c. 96. s. 91—31 & 32 Vict. c. 116. s. 1.

The effect of the 31 & 32 Vict. c. 116. s. 1, by which a partner or joint owner in goods is rendered liable to be convicted of stealing goods, in respect of which he is so jointly interested, is not to render the receiver of such goods, knowing the same to have been stolen by such partner, liable to be convicted as such receiver under the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96. s. 91.

A. and B. were in partnership, and B., in fraud of the partnership, disposed of the goods of the firm to the prisoner, who knowingly received the same. The prisoner was indicted and convicted under the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96. s. 91:—Held, that the conviction could not be supported.

Semble, that the prisoner might have been indicted and convicted as an accessory to or after the felony, either at common law or under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 94. ss. 1, 8 (1).

* Coram Bovill, C.J., Willes, J., Byles, J., Hannen, J., and Cleasby, B.

(1) The 31 & 32 Vict. c. 116. s. 1 enacts, If any person, being a member of any co-partnership, or being one of two or more beneficial owners of any money, goods, or effects, bills, notes, securities, or other property shall steal or embezzle any such money, goods, or effects, bills, notes, securities, or other property of or belonging to any such co-partnership or to such joint beneficial owners, every such person shall be liable to be dealt with, tried, convicted, and punished for the same, as if such person had not been or was not a member of such co-partnership or one of such beneficial owners.

The 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96. s. 91. enacts, "Who-

CASE reserved by a learned Commissioner of assize on the midland circuit.

Jesse Smith was indicted for receiving certain goods, the property of George Morton and another, knowing the same to have been feloniously stolen, and was tried before me at the last assizes for the West Riding of Yorkshire, at Leeds. The facts of the case were as follows:—George Morton was in partnership with one R. F. Martin at Leeds, and carried on business in that town as ironmongers, under the firm of "R. F. Martin & Co." The goods sold there were principally supplied by William Morton, of Birmingham, trading under the firm of Haines & Morton. In consequence of certain rumours as to the solvency of his firm, George Morton came to Leeds on the 13th of December, 1869, and made arrangements with his partner, R. F. Martin, to secure the debt due to Haines and Morton by giving a bill of sale of the goods then in the shop, and whilst this document was being prepared George Morton left Leeds and went to Sheffield. During his absence his partner, R. F. Martin, had interviews with the prisoner, and, before the return of George Morton, shut (on 14th of December) up the shop, and in the evening of the following day (15th of December) he hired drays, and in the presence of the prisoner conveyed the whole of the goods to the house of the prisoner (2), who apparently paid 100*l.* for them to R. F. Martin. The goods were proved to be worth considerably more than 300*l.*

From conversations with William Morton, the father of George Morton, it was evident that the prisoner was aware of the intended bill of sale, and that R. F. Martin was disposing of these goods in fraud of his partner, and to prevent the operation of the bill of sale.

It was objected on the part of the prisoner that even if it were proved that R. F. Martin had committed an act of felony soever shall receive any chattel, money, &c., the stealing, taking, obtaining, &c., shall amount to a felony, either at common law or by virtue of this Act, knowing the same to have been feloniously stolen, taken, obtained, &c., shall be guilty of felony," &c.

(2) The prisoner was an auctioneer, and the goods were taken to his place as an auction room.

against his partner, under the provisions of 31 & 32 Vict. c. 116. s. 1, and that he had been guilty of larceny of the partnership goods, yet that the prisoner could not be indicted for receiving such goods, knowing them to be stolen, as that statute had not made such receiving a felony, and that under the provisions of the Larceny Consolidation Act, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96. s. 91, only persons who received goods, the stealing of which amounted to a felony, either at common law or under the provisions of that Act, could be indicted as receivers, and as the stealing by a partner was not a larceny at common law, nor under the provisions of the Consolidated Act, no receiver of such goods could be indicted for a felony. As this was the first case that had occurred since the passing of the Act 31 & 32 Vict. c. 116, and thinking it more prudent that a point of such importance should be decided by a Court of Appeal, I declined to stop the case.

The jury finally found the prisoner guilty of receiving the goods, knowing them to be stolen, and I released the prisoner on good bail to appear at the next assizes, if necessary.

I have now to request the opinion of the justices of either bench, and the barons of the Exchequer, whether this prisoner has been properly convicted.

Waddy (Wilberforce with him) for the prisoner.—This conviction is wrong. The statute of 31 & 32 Vict. c. 116, does not apply to such a case as this. In a case on the Oxford circuit, Martin, B., is reported to have said that the statute is intended to apply to large trading partnerships, such as limited companies, and not to joint ownership of chattels—The Queen v. Talbot (3). The first section of 31 & 32 Vict. c. 116, applies only to members of the partnership, and renders such person liable to be tried and convicted for larceny and embezzlement as if he were not a partner, but it does not extend to other persons or cases.

[WILLES, J.—The words are “every such person,” and not every person. There is no new species of offence created. The object is to bring certain persons within the operation of the criminal law.

It is not intended to create a new species of receiving.]

The 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96. s. 91, applies to the receiving of property stolen, &c., the stealing, &c., of which shall amount to a felony either at common law or by virtue of that Act. At the time of that Act such a fraud as this on a partner was not a felony either at common law or by that Act. Penal statutes must be construed strictly, and not so as to extend them beyond the words of the enactment or to offences not in existence at the time of the passing of the Act—Dwarris on Stat. p. 634, Rex v. Handy (4).

[BYLES, J.—In the 2nd section of the 31 & 32 Vict. c. 116, where the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 126, is extended to embezzlement, it is provided that “the said Act shall henceforth be read as if the said offence of embezzlement had been included therein.” Those words are not used in the first section.]

Hawk. P.O. bk. 1. c. 7. ss. 5, 6. was also referred to.

Campbell Foster for the prosecution.—The effect of the 31 & 32 Vict. c. 116. s. 1, was to make the offence of Martin a larceny. Larceny was an offence at common law known at the time of the passing of the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96. s. 91. Again, Martin having been made liable to be convicted of larceny by the 31 & 32 Vict. c. 116, was guilty of larceny as a bailee under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96. s. 3, and therefore was guilty of an offence against that Act. He was also liable to be convicted of stealing in a dwelling-house, under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96. s. 60.

Our. adv. vult.

The following judgment was now (on June 4) delivered by—

BOVILL, C.J.—The prisoner was convicted for feloniously receiving stolen goods, knowing them to have been stolen contra formam statuti. There was no count charging the prisoner as accessory either before or after the fact. The statement of facts shews evidence of a receipt of goods stolen by one partner of the firm, with knowledge of their being so stolen. It further states facts which might perhaps have been relied upon to

(3) Law Times 494, April 23, 1870.

NEW SERIES, 39.—MAG. CAS.

(4) 6 Term Rep. 286.

Q

sustain a charge of being simple accessory to the felony, if the indictment had contained a count to that effect. We must, however, deal with the only question raised, viz., whether the conviction upon the special charge of feloniously receiving stolen goods can be sustained. The 91st section of 24 and 25 Vict. c. 96, creates the felony charged in these terms "whosoever shall receive any chattel, &c., the stealing, &c., whereof shall amount to a felony either at common law or by virtue of this Act, knowing the same to have been feloniously stolen, &c., shall be guilty of felony, and may be indicted and convicted either as an accessory after the fact or for a substantive felony, and shall be liable, at the discretion of the Court," to a maximum sentence of 14 years' penal servitude.

At the time that Act (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96) was passed, theft by a partner of the goods of his firm did not fall within the criminal law either common or statutory. This defect was supplied by 31 & 32 Vict. c. 116, which, after reciting that it is expedient to provide for the better security of the property of copartnership and other joint beneficial owners against offences by part owners thereof and further to amend the law as to embezzlement, proceeds to enact by the first section that if a partner, or one of two or more beneficial owners, shall steal, &c., any property of such copartnership or such joint beneficial owners, every such person shall be liable to be dealt with, tried, convicted, and punished for the same as if such person had not been or was not a member of such copartnership, or one of such beneficial owners. This enactment is therefore limited in words to the fraudulent partner, and does not directly extend to third persons who deal with the property, though in collusion with such partner. In order to reach such person, either the law as to accessories must be resorted to or it must be shewn that the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96. s. 91, is extended by implication to be read as incorporated in the 31 & 32 Vict. c. 116.

As to the law of accessories we do not suggest any doubt that if a statute creates a felony or misdemeanour, it by implication forbids counselling, aiding, or abetting the offence. This is now provided for in language strongly contrasting with that of the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96. s. 91, as to felony, by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 94, s. 1, that, "whosoever shall become an accessory before the fact to any felony, whether the same be a felony at common law or by virtue of any Act passed, or to be passed, may be indicted, tried, convicted, and punished in all respects as if he were a principal felon." The case of accessories after the fact is provided for in like prospective terms by section 3. Also as to misdemeanours by section 8: "Whosoever shall aid, abet, counsel, or procure the commission of any misdemeanour, whether the same be a misdemeanour at common law or by any Act passed, or to be passed, shall be liable to be tried, &c., as a principal offender." And apart from these enactments the common law would have supplied a remedy, though without the statutory facilities of procedure. As already pointed out, however, the conviction of the prisoner is not as of a simple accessory, whether before or after the fact, and it cannot be sustained upon that footing.

The question, therefore, depends upon whether the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96. s. 91, is extended by inference or implication to the present case. If not, the conviction was wrong, because at the common law receivers of stolen goods, unless they likewise received and harboured the thief, were guilty of a bare misdemeanour for which they were liable to fine and imprisonment (Foster's Crown Law, p. 373), and there could not be a conviction for a misdemeanour upon the present indictment for felony.

The subject of extending statutes by inference to include cases not originally contemplated is one which has given rise to several decisions, the leading characteristic of which is that the earlier statute deals with a genus, within which a new species is brought by a subsequent Act. Thus, choses in action were not originally within 13 Eliz. c. 5, against fraudulent conveyances, that statute being applicable only to property which could be taken in execution, Sims v. Thomas (5); but as to choses in action made subject to execution (5) 12 Ad. & E. 536; s. c. 9 Law J. Rep. (n.s.) Q.B. 399.

by 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, there can be no doubt that by the conjoint operation of that Act and the 13 Eliz. c. 5, such choses in action having become by new enactment a species of the genus property subject to execution, did, without any express enactment to that effect in the later statute, become subject to the operation of the former Act—Norcutt v. Dodd (6), Barrack v. McCulloch (7). So that if the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96. s. 91, is to be read as a general enactment that for the future any person receiving goods stolen with a guilty knowledge that they were stolen, should be liable to be indicted for felony as a receiver, the subsequent statute having introduced a new species of larceny, it might have been contended that the general provision as to receiving in the former statute was by inference extended to the new species of larceny. There are, however, several difficulties in the way of arriving at that result upon the construction of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96—first, the express words of section 91, “either at common law or by virtue of this Act”; secondly, the fact that the statute in pari materia as to accessories does expressly refer to acts “to be passed”; thirdly, the character of the extending enactment, 31 & 32 Vict. c. 116, which deals not so much with property or acts of a particular species as with a class of persons whom it specifies, and against whom only it is in terms directed, namely, partners and part owners, and that the effect is to create a new class of offenders; fourthly, the rule peculiarly applicable to the elaborate criminal legislation of which the statutes under consideration form a part against extending penal enactments by construction. This latter rule may be illustrated by reference to the statute 31 Eliz. c. 12. s. 5, which took away benefit of clergy from an accessory in horse stealing; upon which it was held that the enactment extended only to such persons as were in judgment of law accessories at the time the act was made, namely, accessories at common law, and not to such as are made accessories by subsequent statutes; and therefore a person knowingly receiving a stolen horse, though made an accessory by subsequent statutes, was held not to be ousted of the benefit of clergy by the statute of Elizabeth (Foster, p. 372).

Upon these grounds we think that the statute 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96. s. 91, cannot be extended by construction so as to include a receiver of property stolen by a partner, so as to make such receiver liable in the discretion of the Court to the graver punishment of fourteen years' penal servitude thereby imposed; as the prisoner would be if this conviction were sustained, a circumstance which makes the authority cited from Foster especially applicable.

The conviction must therefore be quashed.

Conviction quashed.

Attorneys—Williamson, Hull & Co., for prosecution.

[CROWN CASE RESERVED.]

1870. }
June 4. }

REGINA v. BUTTLE.*

Perjury — Evidence — Corrupt Practices Prevention Acts—26 Vict. c. 29. s. 7—Protection of Witness.

By the 26 Vict. c. 29. s. 7, no person called before Commissioners of inquiry under the Corrupt Practices Prevention Acts shall be excused from answering any question relative to any corrupt practices at the election under inquiry on the ground that the answer may tend to criminate himself; and if any information, &c., should be at any time thereafter pending in any Court against such witness for any offence under the Corrupt Practices Prevention Acts, committed by him previously to the time of giving his evidence, the Court should, on production of a certificate given to him by the Commissioners, stay the proceedings in such information, &c., and may award the witness his costs. “Provided that no statement made by any person, in answer to any question put by or before such election committee or Commissioners, shall, except in cases of indictments for perjury, be admissible in evidence in any proceeding, criminal or civil.” A witness before such a Commission of inquiry was, after giving his evidence before it, indicted for perjury committed before a judge, on the trial of an election petition in respect of the same election with reference to which he was examined before the Commissioners. Statements made by such witness, in answer to questions put by the Commissioners relative to corrupt practices at such election, were given in evidence against him to prove the indictment for perjury:—Held, that the exception in the proviso to 26 Vict. c. 29. s. 7, as to cases of indictments for perjury, must be considered to mean perjury committed in answers to questions put by the Commissioners on the inquiry, and not to perjury generally, and therefore that the above evidence was not admissible.

* Coram Kelly, C.B., Martin, B., Blackburn, J., Montague Smith, J., and Meller, J.

(6) 1 Cr. & Ph. 100; s. c. 10 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 296.

(7) 26 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 105.

Case reserved by KELLY, C.B.

The prisoner was indicted at the last assizes for the county of Somerset for perjury alleged to have been committed at the trial of an election petition in respect of the borough of Bridgewater, before Mr. Justice Blackburn.

The perjury assigned was "that he had not received money for his vote," and "that he had not received ten pounds for his vote."

Evidence was given of his having been seen in a passage, and at the door of a room in which money was given to several voters for their votes by a person named Allan. And it is possible that with this evidence, though it was by no means conclusive, a conviction might have been obtained. But the counsel for the prosecution then proceeded to prove that upon a Commission to inquire into the existence of corrupt practices at the election in question before certain Commissioners the prisoner was examined as a witness upon oath, and admitted upon such examination that he had received ten pounds for his vote at the election in question, and he further admitted in express terms that he had sworn falsely upon the trial of the election petition before Mr. Justice Blackburn.

It was contended by the counsel for the prisoner that this evidence was not admissible, and that the exception in relation to perjury in the 26 Vict. c. 29. s. 7, applied only to perjury committed before the Commissioners under the Commission, and not to perjury committed upon the trial of the election petition, the judgment or report upon which petition had led to the Commission of inquiry. Inasmuch as it was clear that the prisoner had been compelled under peril of commitment and imprisonment to give evidence before the Commissioners, and consequently, that the evidence which he so gave, and which was perfectly true, was obtained from him by compulsion, if it could be used in evidence against him on a criminal charge, the rule of law that no man is bound to criminate himself would be at once nullified and defeated.

I therefore thought it right to reserve the point whether such evidence was admissible for the consideration of the Court of Appeal. If inadmissible, the verdict of guilty is to be set aside, and a verdict of acquittal entered.

Saunders for the prisoner.—The statements made by the prisoner before the Commission of inquiry were inadmissible in evidence against him. The protection afforded by the proviso to the 26 Vict. c. 29. s. 7 (1), would have been general but

(1) By 26 Vict. c. 29. s. 7, "No person who is called as a witness before any election committee, or any Commissioners appointed in pursuance of the Act, 16 & 18 Vict. c. 57, shall be excused from answering any question relating to any corrupt practice at, or connected with, any election forming the subject of inquiry by such committee or Commissioners, on the ground that the answer thereto may criminate or tend to criminate himself: Provided always, that where any witness shall answer every question relating to the matter aforesaid, which he shall be required by such committee or Commissioners (as the case may be) to answer, and the answer to which may criminate or tend to criminate him, he shall be entitled to receive from the committee under the hand of their clerk, or from the Commissioners under their hands (as the case may be), a certificate stating that such witness was, upon his examination, required by the said committee or Commissioners to answer questions or question relating to the matters aforesaid, the answers or answer to which criminated or tended to criminate him, and had answered all such questions or question; and if such information, indictment, or action be at any time thereafter pending in any Court against such witness for any offence under the Corrupt Practices Prevention Acts, or for which he might have been prosecuted against under such acts committed by him previously to the time of his giving his evidence, and at or in relation to the election concerning or in relation to which the witness may have been so examined, the Court shall, on production and proof of such certificate, stay the proceedings in such last-mentioned infor-for the exception, which is, "except in cases of indictments for perjury." This must be read with a view to carry out the intention of the Act which was to obtain the fullest information on the inquiry by Commission. That object was to ascertain the extent of corruption in the borough, and therefore the fullest protection was given so long as the witness told the truth before them, and it was only in a case of perjury before them that his protection was given. Therefore the protection must be confined to perjury before the Commissioners, and his statements only in such case are admissible against him, and not made admissible to prove that at another time he may have stated what was not true.

Poole for the prosecution.—The exception to this proviso was intended by the legislature to have the wider signification so as to extend to perjury committed on any occasion whatsoever. They did not intend to confine the exception to perjury committed in answers before the Commissioners. When the legislature so intended they knew how to express themselves, and in the 15 & 16 Vict. c. 57. s. 8, which is in pari materia, the proviso is that "no statement made by any person in answer to any question put by such Commissioner shall, except in cases of indictment for perjury committed in such answers, be admissible in evidence in any proceeding, civil or criminal." This statute is referred to in section 7 of 26 Vict. c. 29, and must have been present to the mind of those who framed the latter Act, and as the words have been altered, it must have been intended that the meaning is altered in accordance with them. The object of the change of language may have been to strengthen the hands of the judge who tried the election petition, by leaving the liability to punishment of perjury to attach to persons who committed perjury before him.

mation, indictment, or action, and may, at its discretion, award to such witness such costs as he may have been put to in such information, indictment, or action: Provided that no statement made by any person in answer to any question put by or before such election committee or Commissioners shall, except in cases of indictments for perjury, be admissible in evidence in any proceeding, civil or criminal."

[BLACKBURN, J.—Instead of the object being to give complete immunity, it may have been merely to exclude his own statements as evidence against him.—MARTIN, B.—Does not the maxim nemo tenetur seipsum accusare apply here? The common law without the aid of this proviso would be a sufficient protection.]

No. In the absence of such a proviso there would be no protection—Regina v. Scott (2), Regina v. Skeen (3).

KELLY, C.B.—I am of opinion that this verdict should be set aside. Let us inquire what was the spirit and meaning of this Act of Parliament. It enables certain Commissioners to put questions to individuals touching matters of election, and in execution of their powers they may compel witnesses to answer such questions as they may think fit to put. The legislature has, in effect, said, the witness must answer the questions put, and compels him to do so, but says that if he answers, and that truly, and in so doing exposes himself to a prosecution for bribery or any other act, the Court shall stay the proceedings, and further, any evidence he may give on this occasion shall not be given in evidence against him, but if he answer untruly before them, then he shall have no protection, for he may be indicted for perjury. To say that it was intended that a man should be compelled to answer, and if he answers truly, and thereby furnishes evidence against himself, which may be used against him, is to put powers in the hands of the Commissioners entirely subversive of the maxim of the Common Law, nemo tenetur seipsum accusare. Not only am I of opinion that the above is the plain meaning of the statute, but had it been otherwise I think the legislature would have intended a grievous wrong.

But it is said that in a statute in pari materia the legislature have used words which, if they had been introduced into the section now under discussion, would have expressed clearly that they intended to give the protection we think they have given without those words, and it is urged that the omission of those words was designed, and with a view to remove the protection; but the framers of statutes sometimes do not sufficiently consider what the state of the law actually is at the time they are choosing their language, and as we think the words were not absolutely necessary and the meaning of the section is sufficiently plain without them, I do not attach weight to that argument.

(2) 25 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 128.

(3) 28 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 91.

MARTIN, B.—We are asked to construe the proviso to this section, so as to say that in all indictments for perjury, statements obtained from witnesses by Commissions in inquiries under the powers of this statute, are to be admissible against him. The maxim of the Common Law is that nemo tenetur seipsum accusare, but then the statute law intervenes and says that he shall be bound to give his evidence, but he shall be protected from any evil consequences resulting therefrom and arising out of proceedings, civil or criminal, against him. And I construe this enactment to give effect to that intention.

BLACKBURN, J.—The Common Law says that any person may refuse to answer any question which tends to criminate him, but the legislature here takes away that power or privilege, but then the proviso is, that no statement made by any person in answer to any question put by or before such Commissioners, shall, except in cases of indictments for perjury, be admissible in evidence in any proceeding, criminal or civil. The enactment of the proviso is therefore general, but out of it are excepted cases of indictments for perjury. It is said the exception is also general. If so, however, it would be contrary to the spirit and scope of the rest of the clause; and I think it must be construed so as to confine it to indictments for perjury committed in respect of answers given under this Act. That would seem to give effect to the intention of the Act, but in answer to that, the difference in the language of 15 & 16 Vict. c. 57. s. 8, is pointed out. The present section appears to have been remodelled and altered in its frame, and the words "committed in such answers," are left out. It is urged that the words were left out intentionally, and with a view to restrict the immunity previously enjoyed, but I do not think they were left out by the legislature with such intention. They may have thought that the words were superfluous, and so rejected them.

MELLOR, J. and MONTAGUE SMITH, J., concurred.

Conviction quashed.

Attorneys—Torr, Janeway, Tagart & Janeway, agents for J. H. B. Carlake, Bridgewater, for prosecution; H. A. Reed, agent for Reed & Cook, Bridgewater, for prisoner.

[CROWN CASE RESERVED.]

1870. }
April 30. } THE QUEEN v. KAY.*
June 4. }

Forgery—Warrant, Authority, or Request for the Payment of Money—Building Society—Receipt of Depositor—24 & 25 Vict. c. 98. s. 24.

A building society was in the habit of taking money on deposit at interest, and upon repaying such deposit required, a receipt to be given by the depositor for the amount repaid. The prisoner was convicted of forging one of such receipts, which was in the following form—"Received of the South Lancashire Building Society the sum of 417l. 13s. on account of my share, No. 8071, pp., Susey Ambler, William Kay." Susey Ambler was the depositor, and the prisoner a local agent of the society. By the custom of the society such a document was treated as an authority, warrant, or request to pay the deposit, but not as an order:—Held, that the above document might be described in the indictment as a warrant, authority, or request for the payment of money by procuration within the meaning of the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98. s. 24 (1).

* Coram Bovill, C.J., Willes, J., Byles, J., Hannen, J., and Cleasby, B.

(1) The 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98. s. 24 enacts, "Whosoever with intent to defraud shall draw, make, sign, accept, or endorse any bill of exchange, or promissory note, or any undertaking, warrant, order, authority, or request, for the payment of money or for the delivery or transfer of goods or chattels, or of any bill, note, or other security for money, by procuration or otherwise, for, in the name, or on the account, of any other person, without lawful authority or excuse, or shall offer, utter, dispose of or put off, any such bill, note, undertaking, war-

CASE stated by a learned Commissioner of assize of the midland circuit.

William Kay was indicted for feloniously making by procuration in the name of one Sussey Ambler a security for money, to wit 417l. 13s., without lawful authority or excuse, with intent to defraud. In the second count he was charged as in first count, except that it was stated that he made the security without the lawful authority of the said Sussey Ambler; the third and fourth counts were as the first and second, except that the document was described as a "warrant;" the fifth and sixth counts were as the first and second, but the document was described as an "order;" the seventh and eighth counts were also as the first and second, but the document was described as an "authority for the payment of money;" the ninth and tenth counts were also as the first and second, but the document was described as a "request for the payment of money." In ten other counts the prisoner was charged with feloniously signing by procuration like documents as in the other counts mutatis mutandis, and was tried before me at the last assizes for the West Riding of Yorkshire, at Leeds. The document forming the subject of the indictment was in the following form:—

Thornton, October, 1867.

Received of the South Lancashire Building Society the sum of 417l. 13s. on account of my share, No. 8071.

pp. Sussey Ambler,

417l. 13s.

Wm. Kay.

The prisoner was the local agent at Thornton of a society called "The South Lancashire Permanent Building Society," the head office of which was at Manchester. The society carried on a large business, and was in the habit of taking money on deposit for fixed periods at various rates of interest, but if circumstances were favourable, and the funds of the society rant, order, authority, or request so drawn, made, signed, accepted, or endorsed by procuration or otherwise, without lawful authority or excuse, as aforesaid, shall be guilty of felony; and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the Court, to be kept in penal servitude for any term not exceeding fourteen years, and not less than three years, or to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and with or without solitary confinement."

flourishing, no objection was made to repay money lent on deposit at a date earlier than that originally agreed on, if the depositor gave one month's notice of an intention to withdraw the whole or a part of a deposit.

Sussey Ambler was a depositor in the society, and in August, 1866, she lent to the society, through the prisoner, 460l. for two years, at interest, and received from the prisoner a deposit note for that sum signed by him as agent. In August, 1868, the prisoner informed Mrs. Ambler that the sum of 41l. 8s. was due to her as interest on her loan of 460l. She, however, told him that he was to pay her the 1l. 8s. and put the balance, 40l., to her loan account; he then promised to do so, and obtained from her the receipt he had given her, and afterwards gave her an accountable receipt for 500l. at interest signed by him as agent for the society. In October, 1867, the prisoner sent to the secretary of the society at Manchester the document on which the indictment was founded, and at the same time forwarded his monthly statement of accounts, in which he debited himself amongst other sums with 750l. received from the secretary, and credited himself amongst other payments with a payment to Sussey Ambler, 8071, of the sum of 417l. 13s.

The secretary of the society absconded in 1868 or 1869, and on examination of the accounts of the society, a large deficit was discovered.

The present secretary, W. Wadsworth, was called as a witness for the prosecution, and he proved that if a depositor at a fixed date wished to withdraw the whole or any part of his deposit, a notice of one month was required by the society's rules, but he did not know whether or not that rule had not been frequently dispensed with; he proved that it was the custom of the agents to write to the secretary at Manchester each month, sending in an account of the probable withdrawals of money for which the agent had or ought to have had notice, and that the secretary thereupon sent down to the agent sufficient funds for that purpose; he also proved that in the books of the society it appeared that the sum of 417l. 13s. had been paid in October, 1867, to Sussey Ambler, and produced the receipt before mentioned. He stated that he had carefully searched through the documents, but could find no order for the payment for that sum signed by Susey Ambler, or any document relating to that payment, except the monthly account and the receipt; nor could he find any letter from the agent giving notice that Susey Ambler required a return of a portion of her deposit. He stated that receipts were required, and that it was the duty of the agents not to pay without receipts, and to forward the receipts to the office when the sums would be properly entered in the books of the society.

He also proved that the prisoner was a director of the society in the years 1868 and 1869.

It was objected on the part of the prisoner that, under the provisions of the Forgery Consolidation Act, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98. s. 24, this indictment must fail, for that the document produced was only a receipt for money paid, and that the word "receipt" was not to be found in that section. And that it was clear from the evidence that the money was paid to the prisoner by the secretary before the receipt was handed over by him. I declined to stop the case on the authority of The Queen v. Raake (2), The Queen v. Ittidge (3), and The Queen v. Pulbrook (4), and intimated to the counsel for the prisoner that if the jury were of opinion that by the custom of the society a document like that produced was treated as an authority or request to pay money, I was of opinion that the indictment was good. The counsel for the prisoner thereupon addressed the jury, contending that there was nothing proved which could justify them in saying that the society had ever treated such documents as anything else than simple receipts for money previously paid. I then summed up the case and told the jury that if they were of opinion, from the whole of the facts proved, that the society had recognised such documents as an order or as an authority or as a request to pay money, they should find the prisoner guilty, and that they might take into their consideration the fact that in this case no order or authority or request from Susey Ambler, or pretending to be signed by her, had been discovered amongst the papers of the society. The jury returned a verdict of guilty, saying that by the custom of the society such documents were treated as an "authority to pay," and as a "warrant to pay," and as a "request to pay," but not as an "order." I then directed a verdict of guilty on the counts wherein the document was described as a "warrant," "authority" or request," and discharged the prisoner on good bail to surrender and receive judgment at the next assizes if necessary. And I have now to request the opinion of the Justices of either Bench, and the Barons of the Exchequer, whether, under the circumstances proved at the trial, the document in question can be held to be a "warrant," or an "authority" or a "request to pay money."

No counsel appeared.

Our. adv. vult.

Judgment was now (on June 4) delivered by BOVILL, C.J.—We are of opinion that the conviction in this case was right. The jury found that documents, such as that in question, were by the custom of the society treated as "an authority to pay," as a "warrant to pay," and as "a request to pay" money. We think there is no objection in law to its being so treated. In Morrison's case (5), it was held that a pawnbroker's ticket might be treated as a warrant for the delivery of the goods. In Allen v. The Sea Fire and Life Assurance Company (6), it was held that a credit note, signed by the directors and addressed to the cashier of a company, might be declared upon as a promissory note of the company, and we think that the document in this case might properly be described as a "warrant," an "authority," or "a request to pay" money, and that the conviction must be affirmed.

Conviction affirmed.

(2) 2 Moo. C.C. 126.
(3) 1 Den. C.C. 404; s. c. 18 Law J. Rep. (n.s.) M.C. 179.
(4) 9 Car. & P. 37.

(5) Bell C.C. 158; s. c. 28 Law J. Rep. (n.s.) M.C. 210.
(6) 9 Com. B. Rep. 574; s. c. 19 Law J. Rep. (n.s.) C.P. 305.

[IN THE COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.]

1870. { THE COMMISSIONERS FOR IMPROVING THE HARBOUR OF April 30. { NEW SHOREHAM (appellants)
 AND THE CHURCHWARDENS AND OVERSEERS OF LANCING (respondents).

Poor Rate—Occupation—Port—Harbour—Tidal River Piers.

By an Act of Parliament certain Commissioners (the appellants) were appointed for effecting improvements in the harbour of S. They were authorised and required to deepen and cleanse the channel of the harbour, and to make an artificial entrance with piers, by which ships might pass from the sea into the harbour. Tolls were to be paid in respect of such vessels as entered the harbour, but were not to be received by the appellants to the full amount authorised by the Act until the whole works were completed. The piers were erected, and the channel deepened and cleansed, and the Commissioners received tolls in respect of the vessels which entered the harbour. There was nothing in the Act to shew that they were to be considered as purchasers or owners of the land upon which the works were to be done:—Held, first, as to the channel, that the Commissioners had simply a power to make a right of passage from the sea to the harbour, and that they were not rateable to the poor rates in respect of such right of passage; secondly, that, although they were occupiers of the land upon which the piers stood, yet that the occupation could not be taken to be enhanced in value by the revenue derived from the tolls, inasmuch as an occupier of the piers would get no part of the tolls, or derive any benefit from the harbour, and therefore that the appellants were not liable to be rated to the poor rates, the piers themselves being worth nothing.

CASE stated by order of a judge and by consent, substantially as follows:—

The appellants are the Commissioners for carrying into execution an Act of Parliament, namely, 56 Geo. 3. c. 81, entitled, "An Act for the more effectual security and improvement of the harbour of New Shoreham, in the county of Sussex," passed in 1816.

NEW SERIES, 39.—MAG. CAS.

The respondents are the parish officers of Lancing, in the county of Sussex.

The respondents made a poor rate for the parish of Lancing dated the 10th of September, 1868, in which they charged the appellants as "occupiers" and "owners" of New Shoreham harbour, works, tolls, and dues, on a gross estimated rental of 4,500*l.* and a rateable value of 4,000*l.*, and the sum of 100*l.* as a rate of 6*d.* in the pound.

Against this rate the appellants gave notice of appeal, and the following are the only grounds of appeal necessary to be stated for the purposes of this case, viz.,—

That the Commissioners are not the occupiers of the harbour, works, or other tenements in respect whereof they are in the rate or assessment rated.

That the harbour, works, tenements, tolls, and dues respectively are not rateable to the relief of the poor of the parish.

That the Commissioners are not rateable to the relief of the poor in respect of the harbour, works, tenements, tolls, and dues respectively.

The appeal had been duly entered and respite by consent, and it was admitted that the rate was duly signed and published, and that all formal notices on both sides had been duly given.

1. By an Act of 33 Geo. 2. c. 35 passed in 1759, certain Commissioners were appointed to make a new cut through the sea-beach opposite the village called Kingston-by-Sea, about a mile to the eastward of the town of New Shoreham, and to erect a pier or piers, and to do such other works as should be necessary in order to make and maintain a new and more commodious entrance into the harbour.

2. The various works authorised by the Act were made and executed by the Commissioners, and by section 2, the right and property of all and every the piers and all other works executed in pursuance of the Act, and the property of the ground whereon such piers and works were erected, as well as all such right and property as then belonged and appertained to the harbour of New Shoreham, were thereby vested in the Commissioners.

3. By an Act of 29 Geo. 3. c. 21, passed in 1789, for the purpose of reducing the tolls, authorised by the Act of 1759, it was amongst other things recited (as the fact was) that for the purposes of the Act of 1759, piers had been erected, and a new cut made, but that from various causes the channel took a different direction and then ran into the sea, near half a mile to the eastward of the place where the piers were erected; and that the piers had been washed away, and no other works had since been erected, but that the harbour was then in as good a state as it had usually been for many years past.

R

4. The new channel referred to in the Act of 1789, as near half a mile to the eastward of the original cut authorised by the Act of 1759, afterwards, from various causes, became stopped up, and in 1816, the channel or entrance to the harbour was about a mile to the east of the new entrance, made under the authority of the Act of that year, hereinafter set forth, being the Shoreham Harbour Act, now in force, and by which the appellants are constituted commissioners to carry the same into execution.

5. By the Act of 1816, section 17, the commissioners are authorised to sue and be sued in the name of their clerk or treasurer for the time being.

6. By section 26 of the Act of 1816, the right and property of all the wharves, quays and buildings, and of all timber, iron work, wood and stone, and other materials there, belonging to the commissioners under the herein recited Acts or either of them, or to be purchased for any of the purposes of the present Act, and the property of all and every the works erected in and about the harbour, in pursuance of such Acts, or of the present Act, are vested in the commissioners for the time being.

7. By section 27 of the Act of 1816 the limits of the harbour are defined as extending from Old Shoreham Bridge to the Wish, and 160 yards on the west side of the then intended (and since constructed) western pier, and 160 yards on the east side of the then intended (and since constructed) eastern pier, and extend to the flow of the high water and spring tides on the north and south sides of the harbour from the Wish to Old Shoreham Bridge (save and except the marshes or waste lands lying on either side of the harbour, between the west end of the town of New Shoreham and Old Shoreham Bridge), and by the same section the commissioners are authorised and required to deepen, cleanse, scour and enlarge the channel of the harbour within the limits (which they did) and to make a new pier or piers, with the necessary wharfing, to confine the channel opposite to and near the then intended (and since constructed) entrance into the harbour, which they were thereby required to open, and from time to time to amend or improve as they might see expedient, and also to make the necessary dams, sluices, platforms and other works in the eastern division of the harbour for the purpose of sluicing it, and also such works as should be found requisite to accelerate the closing up of the then entrance of the harbour, and likewise to construct a dredge boat for removing shoals within the limits, and to construct lighthouses, storehouses, storeyards and other buildings, and to make and effect such other works within the limits as should be necessary for improving and preserving the navigation of the harbour, and the use thereof by the persons trading thereto, and to effect various other works as in the section expressed (1).

9. The limits of the port of New Shoreham are much larger than the limits of the harbour, and extend to the parish of Rottingdean on the east, and the parish of Herne on the west, and comprise a sea frontage of about 16 miles.

10. By section 55 of the Act of 1816,

(1) The section also gave powers to "get, dig, take and carry away soil, sand, clay, stones, rock, gravel and other materials proper, requisite and convenient for making, carrying on, altering and continuing the said works and undertakings, in or from any ground of any person or persons, or any waste lands adjoining, or lying contiguous to the said harbour, within the limits aforesaid (not then being the ground whereon any house stands, nor having been for the space of twelve calendar months then next immediately preceding, an orchard, pleasure ground or planted walk, or avenue to a house, and except as hereinbefore mentioned), and also to do and perform all other works, matters and things which shall be necessary or proper for rendering the said harbour safe and commodious, and for executing the purposes of this Act; they, the said commissioners, and the other persons hereby empowered to perform the said works and things, and by other sections, the commissioners are authorised to purchase land for the purpose of improving the harbour, but these powers have never been exercised, nor has any purchase of land or hereditaments been made by the commissioners except a way in the parish of Kingston-by-Sea to the lighthouse, for the purchase of which 5*l.* was paid.

11. Section 78 provides for the subscription and application of 40,000*l.*, and for the annual dividing among subscribers of the money remaining in the hands of the commissioners, together with rates and duties to be received in each year.

13. Section 83 of the Act of 1816 enacts that from and after the whole of the piers, dams, sluices and other works thereby authorised to be made, should be made and completed, there should be paid by every person who should lade or unlade, or import or export any grain, seeds, goods, wares, merchandises, baggage, parcel, or other article, matter or thing whatsoever, within the limits of the port of New Shoreham, the several rates and duties contained and set forth in schedule B. annexed to the Act; and sect. 84 empowers the commissioners to fix reasonable rates upon the lading, unlading, importing, or exporting of any article not enumerated in such schedule.

14. Section 85 of the Act of 1816 provides that until all the works are completed, only one quarter of the rates and duties shall be paid subject to the provision made by section 86, viz., that as soon as the works are so far completed, that vessels of 200 tons may pass and repass in safety, between the piers to be made in pursuance of the Act, at high water; then and thenceforth one half of the rates and duties should be payable.

23. By the 101st section of the Act of 1816, the commissioners are required to hoist and take down a flag on the light-doing as little damage as may be to and upon the premises, and giving or tendering such satisfaction to the owners and occupiers, or any persons interested in any lands, tenements or hereditaments respectively, for any damage that may happen or be occasioned to such lands, tenements or hereditaments as the said commissioners shall for that purpose order, adjudge, direct or appoint, according to the tenour and true meaning of this Act," &c.

house then intended and since built in the parish of Kingston-by-Sea, opposite the entrance of the harbour, and to exhibit lights on or near the shore opposite to the entrance, so as to indicate the depth of water.

24. By the 102nd section of the Act of 1816, it is enacted, that for defraying the expense of the lights and light-keeper, there shall be levied on all ships or other vessels entering the harbour, after the erection of the light or lights, the sum of one farthing upon every foot depth of water which any such ship or vessel may draw on entering the same to the extent of twelve feet, and sixpence for every additional foot which the vessel shall draw at such time above twelve feet.

25. The commissioners under the Act of 1816, in pursuance of the powers contained in section 27, formed a new entrance, and made new piers to confine the channel opposite to and near the entrance, and made the necessary dams and sluices in the eastern division of the harbour, for the purpose of sluicing it, and have since formed a canal basin, these now constituting the eastern arm, and they constructed a light-house in the parish of Kingston-by-Sea, and are rated to the relief of the poor in that parish for it, on an annual value of 8*l.* They have not erected any store-houses, store-yards, or other buildings, but they rent a store-house, yard, and workshop of W. P. Goring, Esq., in the parish of Kingston-by-Sea, for which they are rated in that parish as occupiers irrespective of the profits derived from the before-mentioned rates and duties; "and with a view of preventing persons from taking beach and boulders for ballast from the part of the shore lying west of the entrance to the harbour," which interfered with the commissioners disposing of the ballast obtained from the harbour, they entered into an agreement in the year 1847, to become yearly tenants to Lady Lloyd of her rights of soil, of and in the land covered with sea, beach, or gravel south of the harbour, at an annual rent of 5*l.*, and such agreement still exists, but the commissioners have never removed any beach under the agreement.

26. The piers at the entrance are, for the purposes of this case, to be taken as situate within the parish of Lancing, and form the entrance to the harbour, and afford facilities for entrance to vessels that make use of it.

27. The receipts of the commissioners for rates and duties levied under the Schedule B, and for the rates or light dues authorised by the 102nd section of the said Act, are, for the purpose of this appeal and case only, to be taken at the annual sum of 9,000*l.*, subject to deductions for labour, repairs, materials, and otherwise, and it was agreed that, for the purpose of this appeal and case only, 4,000*l.* should be taken as the net annual revenue or profit, which it was agreed for the purpose of this appeal and case should be deemed to be derived under the 83rd and 102nd sections respectively, videlicet 3,930*l.* under the 83rd section, and 70*l.* under the 102nd section.

The question for the opinion of this Court was, whether the commissioners were rateable upon or in respect of the harbour, piers, and other works, or any or either of them, to be considered within the parish of Lancing, upon the amount of the net revenue or profits derived from the rates, duties, and dues, or any portion thereof, and if so what portion.

If, in the opinion of this Court, the commissioners were rateable in respect of the harbour, piers, and works upon the whole amount of the net revenue or profits, then it was agreed that the rate as to the gross estimated rental should be reduced to 2,250*l.*, and as to the rateable value to 2,000*l.*, being one half of the gross estimated rental and rateable value at which they were assessed as aforesaid.

If this Court should be of opinion that the commissioners were not rateable upon the whole of the net revenue or profits, but only upon some portion thereof, then it was agreed that the commissioners should be assessed and rated to the relief of the poor of the parish of Lancing, at a rateable value of one half of the amount of the net revenue or profits, at or upon which the Court should be of opinion that the commissioners were liable to be rated, and at a gross estimated rental of one-eighth more than such rateable value.

If, in the opinion of the Court, the commissioners were not liable to be rated at all in respect of the harbour, piers, or works, then it was agreed that the rate or assessment appealed against should be amended by striking out the rate or assessment therein made upon the commissioners.

C. Pollock (Archibald and Merrifield with him) for the appellants.—In order to sustain the liability of the appellants to this rate, it must, in the first instance, be shewn that they are in the occupation of land, and not merely of an incorporeal hereditament, a mere easement or right of passage. The old piers and works which were erected by the authority of the Act 29 Geo. 3. c. 21, have been washed away, and no other works have been erected on the same spot since. The payment of rates and duties is provided for by sections 83 and 85 of the Act of 1816; it is submitted that those rates and duties are nothing more than pure tolls arising upon the lading, unlading, importing, and exporting goods, so that the appellants are not rateable in respect of them, qua tolls. It will be said that they are rateable as occupiers of the land which is enhanced in value by reason of the receipt of these tolls. But the appellants have merely a power to impose them, they have no legal property in the land. It may be that they have some property in the pier heads, but certainly not in the channel between them or in the harbour. Under the old Act of 1759, the piers and works were vested in them, but they have now ceased to exist. The only section of the Act of 1816 vesting property in the appellants is section 26; and it is submitted that the respondents have no right to rate the appellants as they have done, on three grounds.

First, because the appellants have no such property as to make them liable to be rated.

Secondly, because the occupation by the appellants is merely ancillary to the purposes of the harbour.

Thirdly, because if the appellants are rateable as occupiers of the land, they are only rateable to the extent of the value of the land, such value being increased by the fact of the piers being there, but not being increased by the actual value of the tolls.

As to the area of the harbour; it is part of a tidal river, and there is no sufficient occupation to make the appellants liable. Being a tidal river, it is a public highway for all the Queen's subjects. By section 27, the appellants are to do as little injury as possible, making compensation as provided, and there are no compulsory powers for purchasing land. In The King v. The Mersey and Irwell Navigation Company (2), it was held that the company were not liable to be rated for land taken for the purpose of the navigation, because they were not occupiers of that land, but had a mere easement in it. The judgment of Bayley, J., is strongly in favour of the appellants.

[LUSH, J.—Here there are no words which can have the effect of divesting the owner of his property, and the new cut which has been made can scarcely be a "work erected in and about the harbour," as mentioned in section 26.]

No; and further, there is no distinction between the cut and the rest of the harbour; the appellants have to dredge the whole. The King v. The Aire and Calder Navigation (3), shews that the trustees of a navigation, who have merely an incorporeal hereditament in the bed of a river, are not rateable to the poor as owners or occupiers of the river.

Next, as to the piers and works. These could only be erected within the flow and ebb of the tide, and are thus part of a public navigable river. The course of the river, the public highway, has changed, and the appellants had powers conferred upon them to divert a public highway; but it is not possible to have the exclusive occupation of a public highway. The King v. The Aire and Calder Navigation (3) decides that persons in whom the navigation of a river is vested, but who have no interest in the soil, are not rateable to the poor rate, in respect of a dam which upholds the water of such river and renders it navigable. Lord Tenterden, C.J., said, "This is an attempt to evade the decision of the Court in the former case of The King v. The Aire and Calder Navigation (3). We there held that the undertakers were not rateable as occupiers of the bed of the river, having merely an easement in it. No rate then could be laid upon them for the water of the river made navigable by them; and if so, none could be imposed in respect of the dam, for to rate the dam because it keeps up the water, would be equivalent to rating the water itself. If the water cannot be rated, neither can the dam which holds it up." This passage is cited for the purpose of shewing that, as the tolls now in question are receivable for the general improvement of the whole navigation of the river, the respondents have no right to fix upon a particular work and say, "we will rate the appellants upon that part as enhanced in value by the tolls." Lewis v. The Churchwardens and Overseers of Swansea (4), is also an authority in favour of the appellants.

(2) 9 B. & C. 95.

(3) 9 B. & C. 820: s. c. 8 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 9.

[LUSH, J.—Suppose the piers were to be let to a fisherman, he would not get the rates and duties, and would not be rateable in respect of them.]

Just so, and even if the appellants were the occupiers of anything more than an easement, they would not be rateable to a greater extent than an ordinary tenant of land improved in value by being available for the purpose of earning the tolls. See The Queen v. The North and South Shields Ferry (5), where the Court said, "We think that in the present case, in rating the landing place, the profit of the tolls cannot properly be brought into the calculation as the profits of the occupation of the landing place; which is, in effect, done by the rate. On the other hand, the existence of the tolls cannot be wholly excluded from consideration; but the land should be rated, not according to the view of the appellants, as land in that situation without reference to the tolls at all, but according to the principle relied on by the counsel for the respondents in the second branch of their argument; and the value should be taken, not as the value of the land merely, but as the value of land as enhanced by being available for the purpose of earning the tolls. This appears to be the true principle, according to the test laid down in the Parochial Assessment Act, as it would be the rent that could be obtained, and which the company would have to pay for the land, for the purpose for which it is available under the circumstances. . . . It has been suggested that the mileage principle might be applied in calculating the rateable value in question, and that a proportion of the profits might be assessed on the two landing places, according to the proportion which their dominions bear to the length of the transit over the river. This principle may be fair in the case of profits derived from the use of land by a canal or railway running through different parishes; but we cannot think it at all applicable to a case where the toll is principally earned, not by any use of land, but by a voyage over a tidal estuary, not performed in any particular course, and where it is not pretended that the parish in which the tidal river is situated, could say that there was any use or occupation of land in their parish."

(4) 5 E. & B. 508; s. c. 25 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 33.

(5) 1 E. & B. 140; s. c. 22 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 9.

Mellish (Gates with him) contra.—The piers and works are clearly vested in the appellants, and in respect of them they must be rateable. They might maintain trespass for any injury done to the piers and works. It would also seem that the word "works" must include the channel which is between the piers, as well as the piers themselves. The appellants had no right to take the full amount of tolls until the new entrance to the harbour and piers were completed, and vessels of 200 tons burthen are able to pass and repass in safety between the piers. The piers are necessary for the formation and existence of the channel. The word "erected" would no doubt seem hardly applicable to the channel, but it is probable that no distinction was intended between the word "made," and the word "erected."

[LUSH, J.—It would be a straining of the words used to make them include the channel; there was no object in vesting the channel in the appellants.]

It is enough to say that the surface is vested in them. Probably the piers are more material than the channel. There can be no doubt that if they were not maintained, the tolls would cease to be received, for the channel could not be available without them. The appellants being the occupiers, are rateable in respect of their occupation, the value being enhanced by the receipt of the tolls. What rent would they give to a person who owned them?

Pollock replied, referring to The Queen v. The Bristol Dock Company (6).

BLACKBURN, J.—I think the great difficulty in this case consists in the application of established principles to the facts before us.

The appellants have powers under their Act to dredge, improve, and work, in various ways, the harbour of Shoreham; and amongst other things (although it is not very explicitly stated in the Act what they are to do), it is clear they are empowered to make an artificial entrance from the sea through the shingle into the old and natural harbour inside, and to dredge and improve the harbour. Then comes a provision, that vessels entering the port or harbour, and going through the entrance, in order to enter the port of Shoreham, are to pay them tolls; and as pointed out by Mr. Mellish, it is provided that the rate of tolls which the Commissioners are entitled to levy is not to amount to the full sum until the works are so far completed as to enable vessels of 200 tons burthen to enter, and if at any time after the works are completed, the entrance is again choked up so that a vessel of 200 tons burthen cannot get in, the rate of toll is to be diminished. The rate of toll payable in respect of each ship depends therefore upon the extent to which the entrance is kept clear and open; and it is plain the formation of this entrance enables an increased number of ships to get into the harbour. Then comes the question, whether the amount of toll thus demandable is, in any way, to be taken into account in estimating the rateable value of the property on shore.

Now it is very clear in law, that tolls of this sort are not the subject of a rate. It is equally clear, however, that when parties occupy land they are rateable, according to the value of that land; and that rates and tolls, though not per se rateable, may be considered as enhancing the value of the occupation of the land, whenever it appears that the occupation is so connected with them as that the tolls or rates are levied on account of the occupation; or, even where although not leviable on account of the occupation of the land, such occupation is nevertheless necessary to the right to demand them. This last case might be the subject of some qualification; but, as a general rule, in either of these cases the rateable value of the land is enhanced. The first question which arises then is—Do the Commissioners occupy the entrance to the harbour in such a way as to afford ground for saying that the rates or dues would not, but for such occupation, be payable? and in my opinion they do not. The power given by the Act of making this new entrance is singularly worded, and is almost contained in a parenthesis. There are also general directions given that in the construction of the works they are to do as little damage as possible, and that they are to make compensation for any damage they may do, but nothing is said as to the ownership of the soil and gravel dug out to form the entrance, and it is evident that those who framed the Act thought that it was but of trifling value. It is further to be observed, that although they are empowered to purchase land for the purposes of their undertaking they have never exercised that power; and I think, therefore, taking it on section 27 only, that though they are to make an excavation for this purpose, they cannot be considered as purchasers and owners of the land in that sense. It is no doubt true that sect. 26 vests in the Commissioners the property in the wharves, quays, and materials; but it is clear that the object of this clause was simply to provide for legal contingencies, and to enable them from time to time to prefer indictments, and to take such other steps for the preservation of the property as might be necessary; and it would be unduly straining the words to hold that the intention was to vest in them the property in this empty space at low water, and a space of land covered with water at high water, which constitutes the entrance to the harbour. I think, therefore, that Mr. Pollock was right in saying that the true construction of the Act of Parliament is that this is not an occupation of land by the Commissioners, but simply the exercise of a right of making a passage there, which in itself would not be rateable.

(6) 1 Q.B. Rep. 535; s. c. 10 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 346.

With regard to the other part of the case, I think the piers on each side of this entrance are works vested in the Commissioners, and I think further, from the very nature of the things, that as long as the Commissioners occupy those piers there is necessarily and essentially an occupation of the land on which the piers stand. Then comes the principal question in the case, can we hold that the occupation of those piers is so connected with the revenue derived from the tolls and duties, as that their rateable value is enhanced by them? and in my opinion the connection between the two things is too remote to enable us to do so. Looking at it as strongly as I can for the respondents the argument would come to be this: Without the entrance as it exists, few, or none, of the tolls could be received, and the piers are necessary as serving to keep open the entrance, and so are instrumental to the right of levying the tolls; if the piers fell into decay, the entrance would be choked up, and it is argued that in such case the tolls would be lost, and that therefore the possession and occupation of them for the purpose of keeping them in repair is to be considered as enhancing the value of the harbour. This, I repeat, is too remote. There are many cases in which certain things are of very great value with reference to the possession of property elsewhere, yet not so as to enhance the rateable value of such property, an example of which is afforded by the case I put in the course of the argument. Suppose an extensive tract of rich fen land, subject at times to be overflowed, and an embankment built to keep the water out. It would be necessary, in order to protect that land, that the embankment should be kept up, and the expense of so doing would be a charge on that land; but I think it would be too much to say that the parish, in which the bank was situate and kept up at an expense and positive loss; should be able to rate it heavier, because without that bank the land inside would be drowned; that also would be too remote. Suppose again a house built by the owner of land close to the boundary; in such case if the adjoining ground was dug away (20 years not having elapsed) the house would probably sink down. The value of the adjoining land, as a means of supporting the house, would be very considerable, and if the owner of the adjoining land chose to dig away the ground, and so make the house tumble down, it would be worth while for the owner of the house to pay a good sum to prevent his neighbour doing so, and I think it would be too remote for the parish to say, "we have a right to charge the occupation of that land as enhanced in value because it gives protection and support to the house." This shews that it is not in every case in which a thing is essential to the continuance of some other thing in statu quo, and is of value or essential to the making of profit, that you can say that that profit is so attached to, and so connected with the occupation as to enhance its rateable value.

I think therefore, understanding the case to be stated on the principle that the piers are worth nothing unless the profits can be taxed, we should answer the question in favour of the appellants.

MELLOR, J.—I am of the same opinion. I think the appellants' construction is the right one in regard to the nature of the acquisition of any right by the Commissioners. They were empowered for the purposes of this harbour to make excavations, and to remove gravel and other materials, and they were, amongst other works, empowered to erect these piers. It appears to me that they did not acquire the actual property in the land, though they may have acquired the right of erecting the piers, of which no doubt they are the occupiers; still it does not appear to me that the rateable value of the occupation is enhanced by the tolls. I proceed very much on the same reasons that my brother Blackburn has stated me at length.

LUSH, J.—I am of the same opinion.

The rateable value of that which is the subject of occupation is defined by the Parochial Assessment Act, as being "the rent at which the same might reasonably be expected to let from year to year, free of all usual tenants' rates and taxes, and tithe commutation rent charge, if any, and deducting therefrom the probable average cost of the repairs, insurance and other expenses, if any, necessary to maintain them in a state to command such rent." Now the only property in the occupation of the Commissioners here is the piers. The tolls, it is agreed, are not of themselves a rateable subject, but then the question is, what might those piers be expected to let for from year to year, deducting the average cost of maintaining them to command the rent. The cost of maintaining them is to be deducted from the annual value. What is the annual value of these piers? The occupier of the piers would get no part of the dues, and derive no benefit whatever from the harbour. This case is very analogous to that put by my brother Blackburn with reference to an embankment. Perhaps one more closely analogous would be this: Supposing there is a valuable mine extending for a mile on the seashore, which mine itself would not be a rateable subject, and supposing the owner of the mine was also the owner of a sea wall, and the maintenance of that sea wall was necessary for the safety of the mine from inundation, could it be said that that sea wall should be rated with reference to the profits of the mine, because, without the maintenance of that sea wall, it would not be possible to work the mine at all? The Commissioners are here in possession of tolls which it is agreed are not of themselves rateable. Then it is said they cannot earn them unless they maintain these piers, as in the proposition I have put as to the mine; yet what connection is there between the sea wall and the mine?

Judgment for the appellants.

Attorneys—W. Clarke, agent for Clarke & Howlett, Brighton, for appellants; A. Edmunds, agent for R. Edmunds, Worthing, for respondents.

[IN THE COURT OF EXCHEQUER.]

1870.

May 26. }

Ex parte TINSON.

Rogue and Vagabond—5 Geo. 4. c. 83. s. 4—Frequenting Street or Highway with intent to commit Felony—Amendment of Commitment—Conviction—Habeas Corpus.

By 5 Geo. 4. c. 83. s. 4, a suspected person or reputed thief, frequenting any river, canal or navigable stream, dock or basin, or any quay, wharf or warehouse near or adjoining thereto, or any street, highway or avenue leading thereto, or any place of public resort, or any avenue leading thereto, or any street, highway or place adjacent, with intent to commit felony, shall be deemed a rogue and vagabond, and may be convicted:—Held, that this does not apply to all streets and highways, but only to streets and highways leading or adjacent to places of the character mentioned in the Act.

Ex parte Brown (1) dissented from; Ex parte Jones (2) approved.

Semble—a street may, in some cases, be itself a place of public resort within the meaning of the Act.

Where a prisoner is brought up under a writ of habeas corpus, and the commitment is insufficient, and the conviction has not been brought before the Court by certiorari, the Court is not justified in looking at the conviction for the purpose of amending the commitment by it, nor in detaining the prisoner in custody until the conviction is brought up by certiorari.

George Tinson was detained in the gaol of the liberty of St. Alban's under a commitment of justices for three calendar months, which alleged the offence to be that he, being a suspected person, did frequent a certain public highway at the parish of Aldenham, in the said liberty, on the 27th day of, &c., with intent to commit felony, contrary to the statute in that case, &c.

A writ of habeas corpus was obtained to bring up the defendant. The return to the writ set out the commitment of the justices.

(1) 21 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 113.

(2) 7 Exch. Rep. 586; s.c. 21 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 116.

NEW SERIES, 39.—MAG. CAS.

Odd, for the prisoner.—No offence with-in the statute is disclosed either by the commitment or the return to the writ. The statute does not apply to streets or highways, unless they lead, or are adjacent to quays and other places of public resort, as described in 5 Geo. 4. c. 83. s. 4 (3). This is clear from the case of Ex parte Elizabeth Jones (2), in which the Court of Exchequer differed from the Court of Queen's Bench, which in Ex parte Brown (1) had decided that the Act applied to all highways. Patteson, J., dissented from the judgment in the last-mentioned case, and he is supported by the later decision in the Exchequer. The Act was intended to apply to persons haunting the streets adjacent to churches, theatres, and other places of public resort, for the purpose of committing felony there. According to this commitment the defendant might have been walking along the street with the intention of committing a felony ten miles off. That would not be within the statute.

Willis, for the committing justices.—To bring a person within the statute there need be no intention to commit a felony in or near the place. It has been found as a fact that the prisoner had the intention to commit a felony, and therefore the Court ought not to presume anything in favorem libertatis. The Act speaks of "any street, highway, or place adjacent," that means any place adjacent to a street. "Any street or highway" is a distinct member of the sentence, and so the Court of Queen's Bench decided. It was not intended that "street, highway, or place adjacent," must be coupled with

(3) 5 Geo. 4. c. 83. s. 4, inter alia, enacts that—

"Every suspected person or reputed thief, frequenting any river, canal or navigable stream, dock or basin, or any quay, wharf or warehouse near or adjoining thereto, or any street, highway, or avenue leading thereto, or any place of public resort, or any avenue leading thereto, or any street, highway or place adjacent, with intent to commit felony, . . . shall be deemed a rogue and vagabond within the true intent and meaning of this Act; and it shall be lawful for any justice of the peace to commit such offender (being thereof convicted before him by the confession of such offender, or by the evidence on oath of one or more credible witness or witnesses) to the house of correction, there to be kept to hard labour for any time not exceeding three calendar months."

what has gone before, so as to apply only to streets and highways leading to the places mentioned, such as a quay, river, or place of public resort. Every public highway is itself a place of public resort, and if the justices had alleged in the commitment, as they in fact did in the conviction, that the public highway in which the prisoner was found was a place of public resort, the commitment would have been clearly good, on the authority of Re Davis (4), where the platform of a railway station was held to be within the Act, and the language of Pollock, C.B., who said that Regent Street might be described as a place of public resort, shews that practically the Court of Exchequer had adopted the view of the Court of Queen's Bench. A thoroughfare may be described as a place of public resort. The conviction, which describes the highway as a place of public resort, can be looked at by the Court—Paley on Convictions, p. 326. The Court can look at the conviction, and if it is sufficient, the prisoner will be detained—The King v. Taylor (5).

[KELLY, C.B.—The conviction is not before us. It should have been brought up by certiorari.]

Odd, in reply.—The return to the writ of habeas corpus sets out the commitment, and not the conviction. The Court cannot look out of the record—Wickes v. Clutterbuck (6), The King v. Oatfall (7), The King v. Chaney (8). In The King v. Taylor (5), the writ of habeas corpus had not been issued, and the prisoner had not been brought up.

[CHANNELL, B.—Does not the case of the Canadian prisoners (9) shew that the return can be amended?]

There is nothing to amend by. The defendant ought not to be sent back to gaol on the chance that the justices may have a valid conviction, which they might have brought before the Court, but have failed to do so.

KELLY, C.B.—I am of opinion that the commitment under which the prisoner is now in custody, is defective and void, and therefore that he is entitled to be discharged. It describes the place frequented by the prisoner as a public highway. I am clearly of opinion that a public highway is not a place the frequenting of which is an offence within 5 Geo. 4. c. 83. s. 4, unless it be leading to or adjacent to a place of the description in the Act mentioned. If the commitment had alleged the highway to be a place of public resort, it might have been sufficient. There is no doubt that the case of Es parte Brown (2) is in point, and directly against the prisoner, but I read the judgment of Lord Campbell with surprise, for his reasons and comments on the Act seem to me contrary to all grammar and all rules of construction. If the words of the statute had been "any street or highway, or avenue leading thereto," the comments would have been correct. We are fortified in our opinion by the later case of Es parte Jones (3), with which I entirely agree. The only doubt which I have had has been created by the case of The King v. Taylor (5), where the conviction being sufficient was held to support the commitment, but there the application was for a writ of habeas corpus, and the conviction was brought before the Court by a writ of certiorari. Here the prisoner has been actually brought up under the writ of habeas corpus, and the conviction has not been brought up. In The King v. Chaney (8), Patteson, J., after considering The King v. Taylor (5), decided upon view of the commitment only, and following that case we may properly direct the prisoner to be discharged.

CHANNELL, B.—I also am of opinion that the prisoner ought to be discharged, and I agree with the construction put upon the words of the statute by the Lord Chief Baron. Looking at the commitment only, the prisoner does not appear to have been brought within the Act. I cannot concur with the decision of the Court of Queen's Bench, but it has long been settled in Westminster Hall, that in matters relating to writs of habeas corpus each Court is to follow its own judgment, and is not bound to follow,

(4) 2 Hurl. & N. 149; s. c. 26 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 178.

(5) 7 Dowl. & Ry. 622.

(6) 2 Bing. 483; s. c. 3 Law J. Rep. C.P. 67.

(7) Fitag. 266.

(8) 6 Dowl. P.C. 281.

(9) 9 Ad. & E. 781

though it may respect, the judgments of other Courts. Taking the two conflicting decisions, a majority of the Judges are in favour of the prisoner. Ought we then to accede to the request that we should look at the conviction? The case which has been cited of The King v. Taylor (5), is clearly distinguishable. There all was in fieri. There were affidavits on both sides, and a certiorari to bring up the conviction was granted. I do not say that the conviction may not be good, but I do not decide on that ground. The application for discharge is now before us and must be finally disposed of, and the commitment, which is the only thing before us, is insufficient to warrant the detention of the prisoner.

CLEASBY, B.—I also am of opinion that the prisoner cannot lawfully be detained under this commitment, because he does not appear to have been on a highway under the circumstances stated in the statute. A highway is merely a place along which people have a right to go, and it is not a place of public resort within the meaning of the statute. In many cases a highway may be a place of public resort, and justices might be justified in so finding, as for example, where things are exposed for sale. If the magistrates had described this as a highway being a place of public resort, I do not say that the commitment might not have been good, or if they had dropped the word highway altogether, and called it simply a place of public resort. But we cannot make the alteration, nor do we say that in all cases a public highway must be a place of public resort.

Prisoner discharged.

Attorneys — Blagg & Edwards, St. Albans, for committing justices; R. Bailey Pugh, Watford, for prisoner.

[CROWN CASE RESERVED.]

1870. }
June 4. } THE QUEEN v. HADFIELD.*

Railway—Obstructing by Altering Signals
—24 & 25 Vict. c. 97. s. 36.

The 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97. s. 36. enacts, that whoever by any unlawful act shall obstruct or cause to be obstructed any engine or carriage using any railway shall be guilty of a misdemeanour.

The prisoner in the night time altered the position of two arms of a semaphore signal on a railway station, so as to change the signal from "all clear" to "danger" and "caution" respectively, and also altered the colour of two distant signals on the line from white to red, thereby changing the signal from "clear" to "danger." The driver of a goods train which under ordinary circumstances would have passed through the station without slackening speed, in consequence of the state of the signals shut off steam and approached the station so cautiously that he could at any moment have come to a stand-still. The mail train following the goods train on the same line of rails, was due at the station half an hour after the goods train so passed through the station:—Held (Martin, B., dissentiente), that the prisoner had caused the engine and train to be obstructed within the meaning of the above section.

CASE reserved by the deputy chairman of the Quarter Sessions for Cheshire:—

The prisoner was tried before me at the Quarter Sessions for the county of Chester, held by adjournment at Knutsford in the said county on the 22nd day of February, 1870, upon the following indictment, which was framed upon the 36th section of the statute 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97.

Cheshire } No. 87. Knutsford Sessions, to wit. } 22nd of February, 1870.

The jurors for our sovereign lady the Queen upon their oath present, that Joseph William Hadfield, on the fourteenth day of January, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy, by a certain unlawful act, to wit, by unlawfully interfering with and changing certain signals in use, upon a certain railway called the Manchester, Sheffield and Lincolnshire Railway, in the township of Dukinfield in the said county of Chester, unlawfully and wilfully did obstruct and cause to be obstructed a certain engine and carriages then using such railway, against the form of the statute in such case made and provided, and against the peace of our said lady the Queen her crown and dignity.

* Coram Kelly, C.B., Martin, B., Blackburn, J., Mortague Smith, J., and Mellor, J.

And the jurors aforesaid upon their oath aforesaid, do further present that the said Joseph William Hadfield, on the day and year aforesaid, unlawfully and wilfully did obstruct and cause to be obstructed a certain engine and carriages, then using a certain railway called the Manchester, Sheffield and Lincolnshire railway, in the said township of Dukinfield and county of Chester, against the form of the statute in such case made and provided, and against the peace of our said lady the Queen her crown and dignity.

On behalf of the prosecution, it was proved that at about eleven o'clock on the night of the 14th of January last, the clerk in charge of the Dukinfield station of the Manchester, Sheffield and Lincolnshire railway locked up all the doors of that station. He had just previously dispatched the last train timed to stop at that station, and had seen that all persons, passengers and others, had left the station. He then arranged the signals for the night. There was a semaphore signal on the platform, having several arms with a separate lever to work each arm, and there were two signals at about 200 yards' distance from and on either side of the station, one on the "up" line and the other on the "down" line, and both worked by levers from the platform at the station. The clerk put out the lights of the semaphore signal, and placed the arms down to indicate the lines "all clear," and the two distant signals he arranged so as to shew white lights also, indicating that the lines were clear. He went to bed on the premises, and in a few minutes heard a knocking at the station door, and immediately afterwards he heard a person, who subsequently turned out to be the prisoner, climbing over a door in the wall of the station. The clerk heard the prisoner walk along the platform towards the semaphore signal and rattle the levers. He then looked out of the window and saw that one arm of the semaphore was at right angles with the post, and another at an acute angle, the former signifying "danger," the latter "caution." He went out and found the prisoner outside the station, near some steps, leading to the door over which he had climbed to get into the station. The prisoner was not sober, and having been told by the clerk that he had been seen meddling with the signals, he ran away, but was followed by the clerk, who overtook him and gave him into custody. On his way back to the station, the clerk saw a goods train, which under ordinary circumstances would have passed through Dukinfield station without slackening speed, moving slowly though the station on the up line, and on arriving at the station he saw that both the distant signals shewed red lights, indicating "danger," and that all the levers of the semaphore had been altered.

It appeared from the evidence of the driver of the goods train, that he had observed the distant signal on the "up" line, shewing the red light, and that in consequence he shut off steam and approached the Dukinfield station cautiously, and that at the station he brought the train "very near to a stand and could have come to a stand at any moment," but seeing no one on the platform he passed on.

It was also proved that the mail train going in the same direction and on the same rails as the goods train, was due at Dukinfield station in about half an hour after the goods train so passed through the station. At the close of the evidence for the Crown it was objected by the counsel for the prisoner that the case was not within the above-mentioned section, as the facts proved did not amount to an "obstruction" within the meaning of the section. I however left the case to the jury, reserving the question hereby raised for the opinion of this Court, and the jury found the prisoner guilty. Judgment was respited, and the prisoner was discharged upon entering into his own recognizance to come up to receive judgment when called upon.

The opinion of the Court for the consideration of Crown cases reserved is requested as to whether, upon the above facts, the prisoner was properly convicted.

No counsel appeared for the prisoner.

Horatio Lloyd, in support of the conviction.—It is submitted that these facts constitute an obstruction within the meaning of the statute.

KELLY, C.B.—I think there was an obstruction within the meaning of the Act. The driver of the goods train, seeing the signals, so nearly came to a stand that he could have stopped at any moment. I think this was as much an obstruction as if the prisoner had put a log of wood on the rails before the goods train.

BLACKBURN, J.—The previous section (section 35) enumerates various acts, which if done maliciously and with any of the intents there mentioned, amount to a felony. One of such acts is the making or shewing, hiding or removing any signal or light upon or near to any railway with intent to obstruct any engine, carriages or trucks using such railway. Then the section now in question (section 36) provides that whoever, by any unlawful act, shall obstruct or cause to be obstructed any such engine or carriage, shall be guilty of a misdemeanour. The prisoner in the present case was a drunken man, and therefore a jury would never have found that he acted as he did maliciously, and with any of the intents mentioned in the statute, but in fact a train was delayed, and the working and machinery of the line put out of order. Now the question is whether that amounts to causing the engine and carriages to be obstructed. Any act which causes the train to be obstructed, though not of a physical character, is I think within the meaning of the section, therefore the conviction ought to be affirmed.

MELLOR, J.—I am of the same opinion. I think that section 36 contemplates and includes the acts specified in section 35.

MONTAGUE SMITH, J.—I am of the same opinion.

MARTIN, B.—I cannot agree with the rest of the Court. I think it is straining the enactment beyond what the words bear, to include such an act as the prisoner committed. An act which only operates on the mind of a careful and watchful driver of a train, so as to induce him to drive slowly, is not, in my opinion, an obstruction within the meaning of this section. We are construing a criminal statute, and I do not think we ought to strain the words beyond their plain meaning, in order to meet a mischief which the framer of the statute did not contemplate. Therefore I think this conviction ought to be quashed.

Conviction affirmed.

Attorneys—Cauliffe & Beaumont, agents for J. R. & R. Lingard & Powell, Manchester, for the prosecution.

[CROWN CASES RESERVED.]

1870. }
May 7. } THE QUEEN v. S. VON SEBERG.*
June 4. }

Evidence—British Ship Register—Merchant Shipping Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 104. s. 106)—Indictment for Wounding with Intent.

On the trial of an indictable offence, committed on board a British ship on the high seas, it is not necessary to prove the register of such ship under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, part 11, or that she belongs to a person qualified to be owner of a British ship according to the terms of that Act.

Upon the trial of an indictment against a sailor for wounding the mate on board a ship on the high seas, the master of the ship, the boatswain, and one of the crew, stated that the ship was a British ship, and that she was sailing under the British flag:—Held, that the ship was sufficiently proved to be a British ship.

Case reserved by Hammen, J.

At the Spring assizes for Cornwall upon an indictment which charged the prisoner with maliciously wounding one W. Bedlington, with intent to do him grievous bodily harm;

* Coram Bovill, C.J., Willes, J., Byles, J., Hannen, J., and Cleasby, B.

It was proved at the trial that the prisoner was a sailor on board the bark, Statesman, and that while on the high seas, on a voyage from Alexandria to Falmouth, he inflicted on W. Bedlington, the mate of the vessel, a dangerous wound with a knife.

The master, the boatswain, and one of the crew of the Statesman, all stated that the vessel was a British ship, of Shields, and that she was sailing under the British flag, but no proof of the register of the vessel or of the ownership was given.

It was objected on behalf of the prisoner that this evidence was not sufficient to establish that the ship was a British ship, and that without proof of the ship having been registered as a British ship, the prisoner could not be convicted.

No counsel appeared.

Cur. adv. vult.

Judgment was delivered on June 4, by BOVILL, C.J.—We think the conviction in this case was correct. The evidence was, in our opinion, sufficient to prove that the vessel was a British ship without proof of her having been registered, and even if it had appeared that she had not been registered we think the prisoner ought still to have been convicted; first, because there is nothing in the Merchant Shipping Act to take away the criminal jurisdiction of the Court, and next, by reason of the provision at the end of sect. 106 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104 (1), which provides that, as regards

(1) By 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104. s. 19, "No ship hereby required to be registered shall, unless registered, be recognised as a British ship."

By sect. 106, "Whenever it is declared by this Act that a ship belonging to any person or body, qualified according to this Act to be owners of British ships, shall not be recognised as a British ship, such ship shall not be entitled to any benefits, privileges, advantages or protection, usually enjoyed by British ships, and shall not be entitled to use the British flag or assume the British national character; but so far as regards the payment of dues, the liability to pains and penalties, and the punishment of offences committed on the punishment of offences committed on board such a ship, she shall be dealt with in the same manner as if she were a recognised British ship (2). The conviction will therefore be affirmed.

Conviction affirmed.

board such ship, or by any persons belonging to her, such ship shall be dealt with in the same manner, in all respects, as if she were a recognised British ship."

Sect. 107. "Every register of, or declaration made in pursuance of the second part of this Act, in respect of any British ship, may be proved in any Court of Justice, or before any person having, by law or by consent of parties, authority to receive evidence, either by the production of the original or by an examined copy thereof, or by a copy thereof purporting to be certified under the hand of the registrar, or other person having the charge of the original; which certified copies he is hereby required to furnish to any person applying at a reasonable time for the same, upon payment of 1s. for each such certified copy; and every such register or copy of a register, and also every certificate of registry of any British ship, purporting to be signed by the registrar or other proper officer shall be received in evidence in any Court of Justice, or before any person having, by law or by consent of parties, authority to receive evidence as prima facie proof of all the matters contained or recited in such register, when the register or such copy is produced, and of all the matters contained in or endorsed on such certificate of registry, and purporting to be authenticated by the signature of a registrar, when such certificate is produced.

(2) Offences peculiar to the "Discipline" clauses of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, ss. 239-259, stand on a different footing. In such cases it is essential to a conviction that the fact that the ship is a British ship be proved by the register or an examined or certified copy under sect. 107.—See Leary v. Lloyd, 29 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M. C. 104.

[CROWN CASE RESERVED.]

1870. }
 June 4, 11. } THE QUEEN v. DAVIS.*

Receiving Stolen Goods—Evidence—Previous Conviction of Receiver—Onus of Proof—Notice—Habitual Criminals Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 99), s. 11.

By the Habitual Criminals Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 99), s. 11, where any person who has been previously convicted of any offence specified in the first schedule hereto and involving fraud or dishonesty, is found in the possession of stolen goods, evidence of such previous conviction shall be admissible as evidence of his knowledge that such goods have been stolen; and in any proceedings that may be taken against him as receiver of stolen goods, or, &c., proof may be given of his previous conviction before evidence is given of his having been found in possession of such stolen goods; provided that not less than seven days' notice shall be given to such person that proof is intended to be given of his previous conviction, and that he will be deemed to have known such goods to have been stolen until he has proved the contrary. On the trial of a receiver of stolen goods, a notice was proved to have been duly given him in the above form, and a previous conviction for larceny was proved against him, and such evidence was relied on as proof of guilty knowledge. The prisoner offered no evidence to rebut such evidence of guilty knowledge:—Held, that in the absence of any enactment in the statute that he should be deemed to have known such goods to have been stolen until he proved the contrary, the notice could not have the effect it purported to have, and that such receiver was not called upon to prove that he had not such guilty knowledge.

CASE reserved by a learned Commissioner of Assize on the South Wales Circuit:—

John Davis was tried and convicted before me at the last Assizes for the county of Glamorgan, upon an indictment charging him with receiving stolen goods knowing them to be stolen. At the trial a notice under the 11th section of the 32 & 33 Vict. c. 99, was proved to have been duly served upon the prisoner. It was further proved that in the year 1867, the prisoner had been convicted of larceny. It was also proved that he had received the goods which were the subject of the indictment, and that those goods were stolen. I told the jury that the legislature must be taken to have intended that the notice should have the operation which, upon the face of it, it purported to have, and that the prisoner ought to be deemed to have known such goods to have been stolen until he proved the contrary. The prisoner was not defended by counsel, but entertaining doubts whether the above direction was right, I reserved a case for the opinion of this Court and admitted the prisoner to bail. The question for the opinion of the Court is, whether my direction to the jury was right.

* Coram Kelly, C.B., Martin, B., Blackburn, J., Montague Smith, J., and Mellor, J.

No counsel appeared.

Our. adv. vult.

Judgment was (on June 11) delivered by KELLY, C.B.—This conviction must be quashed. There is no enactment in the statute to give the notice the effect it purported to have, and to throw the onus of proof of absence of guilty knowledge on the prisoner.

Conviction quashed.

[IN THE COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.]

1870. }
 June 11. } TUBE appellant, GOOD respondent.

Metropolitan Building Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 122), s. 51—Fees due to District Surveyor.

The fees due under the Metropolitan Building Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 122), s. 51, to a district surveyor, one month after the roof of any building surveyed by him in pursuance of the Act shall have been covered in, are payable by whomsoever at that time answers the description of "builder, occupier, or owner," and cannot be charged upon a person subsequently becoming the owner of the premises.

CASE stated by one of the Metropolitan Police Magistrates for the opinion of the Court of Queen's Bench :—

In May, 1866, notice was given by one Savage, a builder, to Joseph Good, the district surveyor of Poplar, and hereinafter called the respondent, of his intention to erect three houses in Lefevre Road, North Bow, under 18 & 19 Vict. c. 122 (Metropolitan Building Act), s. 38.

The houses were duly inspected by the respondent as district surveyor. The roofs of the houses were covered in on the 9th of July, 1866, and on the 6th of August, 1866, the respondent became entitled to receive five guineas as the amount of fees due to him from the builder, owner, or occupier of the buildings so erected under section 51 of the above-mentioned Act.

William Tubb, the appellant, was not the builder, owner, or occupier of the buildings in 1866, but became the owner thereof prior to October, 1869. A proper bill, specifying the amount of the fees due to the respondent, was delivered to the appellant on the 1st of October, 1869, which the appellant refused to pay; whereupon a summons was issued against him, and came on for hearing on the 10th of February, 1870, at the Worship Street Police Court.

The appellant contended that he was not "such owner, &c.," as section 51 of the above-mentioned Act contemplated, and as the summons alleged, he not having been owner in 1866 or 1867.

The magistrate made an order for the payment by the appellant to the respondent of the sum of 5*l.* 5*s.*, subject to the opinion of this Court, as to whether, on the above stated facts, such decision was right in point of law.

Philbrick, for the appellant.—By s. 51 of the 18 & 19 Vict. c. 122 (Metropolitan Building Act, 1855), "one month after the roof of any building, surveyed by any district surveyor, has been covered in, the district surveyor shall be entitled to receive the amount of fees due to him from the builder employed in erecting such building, &c. (the amount of the fees being regulated by s. 49, referring to the first part of the second schedule), or from the owner or occupier of the building so erected; and if any such builder, owner, or occupier refuses to pay the same, such fees may be recovered in a summary manner before a justice of the peace upon its being shewn to the satisfaction of such justice that a proper bill, specifying the amount of such fees, was delivered to such builder, owner, or occupier," &c. The appellant is not liable to the payment of these fees, having succeeded to the ownership after the same became due; and the liability created by the statute is not one which runs with the land, but attaches to the person to whom the service was rendered.

Bush Cooper, for the respondent.—The appellant is chargeable in this instance with the fee as "owner," which term applies to the person entitled to the rents and profits. It was not the object of the Act to make the person liable who merely covers in a building; such process does not of itself render it fit for occupation, and so long as the house is not fit for occupation, no fee is payable. It does not appear that any one was in receipt of the rents or profits arising from the premises in question, previous to the vesting of the ownership in the appellant; and the decision of the magistrate was therefore right.

BLACKBURN, J. (1)—I think it clear that the Act means that these fees are payable, when they become due, by the person who at that time answers the description of "builder, owner, or occupier." In this case the appellant's interest in the premises did not commence until long after the performance of the services in respect of which the fee is claimed, and I think therefore that he is entitled to our judgment.

MELLOR, J.—I am of the same opinion. The liability created by this statute is clearly not one which runs with the land.

LUSH, J., concurred.

Judgment for the appellant.

Attorneys—Appleby & Crowther, for appellant;
S. T. Roberts, for respondent.

(1) Cockburn, C.J., had left the Court.

[IN THE COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.]

1870. { THE QUEEN v. THE INHABITANTS
June 4. { OF THE PARISH OF ST. MARY, { ISLINGTON.

*Order of Removal—Irremovability—
Wife Deserted by Husband—Unemancipated
Child—24 & 25 Vict. c. 55. s. 3—29 & 30
Vict. c. 113. s. 17.*

On the 12th of December, 1867, an order was made for the removal of Lucy L. and her daughter Lucy from the respondent parish to the appellant union. For more than one year next before the application for the order, Lucy L. and her daughter had resided together in the respondent parish; the daughter being eighteen years of age, and unemancipated at the date of the order. About thirteen years before that date Lucy L. and her husband were living, together with their children, in the parish of M. They quarrelled in consequence of his intimacy with another woman, and she, having attempted to stab him, was bound over to keep the peace towards him. He took other lodgings for himself, where he lived with the other woman. In consequence of his wife becoming chargeable, the parish officers of M. threatened him with legal proceedings if he did not maintain her. He agreed to allow her a weekly sum of money, and this he paid up to the date of the application for the order of removal. She remained in the lodgings which the family had occupied before the separation till she removed into the respondent parish, and there resided, as above mentioned, with her daughter. Their place of settlement was in the appellant union:—Held, that Lucy L. was irremovable, inasmuch as she had been deserted by her husband within the meaning of the 3rd section of the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 55, amended by the 29 & 30 Vict. c. 113. s. 17; but that the daughter, being unemancipated and above the age of sixteen years, was removable.

Upon appeal against an order of justices for the removal of Lucy Lawrence and her daughter Lucy from the parish of St. Mary, Islington, to the Poor Law Union of Kingston, in the counties of Surrey and Middlesex, the Sessions quashed the order, subject to the following CASE for the opinion of this Court:—

NEW SERIES, 39.—MAG. CAS.

1. The only questions in this Case are, whether the paupers, or either of them, were irremovable from the parish of St. Mary, Islington, the settlement being admitted to be in the appellant union.

2. Lucy Lawrence, the mother, was the wife of John Lawrence, and Lucy was their daughter, aged eighteen years, and was unemancipated, but John Lawrence and Lucy Lawrence, the mother, had not lived together for about thirteen years past.

3. For more than one year next before the application for the warrant or order of removal, Lucy Lawrence, the mother, had resided in the respondent parish of St. Mary, Islington, and if she had been a widow during that period would have become irremovable from that parish. The daughter Lucy for the same period and longer acted as a daily servant in various families in the respondent parish, but during that time resided with her mother. John Lawrence had during the same period resided in Westminster, and had never resided in the respondent parish of St. Mary, Islington, so as to become irremovable therefrom.

4. About thirteen years ago John Lawrence and Lucy Lawrence, the mother, were living, together with their children, in lodgings in the parish of St. Margaret, Westminster, when various disagreements having arisen between them, in consequence of his having formed an intimacy with another woman, and Lucy Lawrence having attempted to stab her husband, he obtained a warrant against her from the Westminster Police Court, upon which she was bound over to keep the peace towards him. The husband then took other lodgings for himself and the children, and left his wife, Lucy Lawrence, in the lodgings the whole family had previously occupied, where she remained until she removed into the respondent parish. The husband and wife had not lived together since that time, but the husband has continued to live, and is still living, with the woman about whom the disagreement between him and his wife had taken place, and by whom he has since had children.

5. John Lawrence did not at first make his wife any allowance for her maintainance, but she having shortly afterwards become chargeable to the parish officers of St. Margaret, Westminster, they threatened John Lawrence with legal proceedings if he did not maintain her; he then, in order to prevent such proceedings, agreed to allow her 2s. 6d. a week towards her maintenance, which he paid up to the time of the making the order of removal.

T

6. Neither Lucy Lawrence nor the daughter Lucy has any other settlement than the settlement of John Lawrence, which is, as before stated, in the appellants' union.

7. It was contended on behalf of the appellants that each of the paupers was irremovable from the respondent parish, on the ground, firstly, as to Lucy Lawrence, the mother, that she had been deserted by her husband thirteen years ago, and after his desertion had resided for one year in such a manner as would, if she had been a widow, have rendered her exempt from removal, and that she had therefore become irremovable by virtue of the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 55. s. 3 (as amended by the 29 & 30 Vict. c. 113. s. 17); and, secondly, as to the daughter Lucy, that for the following reasons, or some or one of them, she had become irremovable:—

First—That she resided in the respondent parish, as before stated, for more than twelve calendar months.

Second—That she was residing with her mother who was alleged to be irremovable, and therefore became irremovable by virtue of 11 & 12 Vict. c. 111.

Third—That, she being above the age of 16 years, the relief given to her was not relief given to her father, and that her father, not being in receipt of relief, except so far as relief to his wife was relief to him, would not, if residing in the respondent parish, have been removable therefrom.

8. It was contended, on behalf of the respondents, firstly, that neither of the said paupers was irremovable, inasmuch as Lucy Lawrence, the mother, had not become irremovable, as contended for by the appellants, she not having been "deserted" within the meaning of the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 55; and secondly, that the daughter Lucy was removable on the ground that even if her mother had become irremovable, the daughter being under the age of 21 years and unemancipated, and having no other settlement than that of her father, was removable by virtue of 11 & 12 Vict. c. 111, because her father, John Lawrence, was removable.

9. The Court of Quarter Sessions decided both of the appellants' points in their favour, and quashed the warrant or order of removal as to both paupers, but granted a Case.

10. The questions for the opinion of this Court were: First—Whether Lucy Lawrence, the mother, was "deserted" by her husband within the meaning of the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 55. s. 3.

Second—Whether the daughter, Lucy, was irremovable from the respondent parish.

Field, for the appellants in support of the order of Sessions.—First, as to the mother, she comes within the 3rd section of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 55, which provides that "where a married woman shall have been or shall be deserted by her husband, and shall, after his desertion, reside three years in such a manner as would, if she were a widow, render her exempt from removal, she shall not be liable to be removed from the parish wherein she shall be resident, unless her husband returns to cohabit with her." By 29 & 30 Vict. c. 113. s. 17, the period of one year is substituted for the period of three years. It is clear that this is a case of desertion, every element, necessary to establish it, being present. The husband has deserted her, and only contributes to her maintenance because the parish officers insist upon his doing so. The desertion is the act of his will; while he refrains from cohabiting with her, the desertion is complete. This is shown by the latter words of the 3rd section of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 55.

As to the daughter, there is a difficulty in supporting the order of Sessions.

[LUSH, J.—The 9 & 10 Vict. c. 66. s. 3, provides that no child under the age of sixteen years residing with its father or mother shall be removed where the father or mother cannot be removed. Does it not follow that the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 111. s. 1 also applies to children under that age?]

A child of 18 years of age is within the enacting part of the 1st section of 9 & 10 Vict. c. 66, and as the mother is irremovable, it seems the daughter is so too.

Poland, for the respondents.—As to the mother it is submitted that what has taken place does not amount to desertion. The husband does not go out of the way, so that he could not be found, nor did he keep up his household. Even after the wife goes to the respondent parish, she keeps up communications with him and receives the same sum of money which he had agreed to pay. In order to be “deserted” the wife must be as badly off as if she were a widow. [He was not heard upon the question whether the daughter was removable.]

COCKBURN, C.J.—I am sorry that we should be obliged to decide that the daughter is removable when her mother is not, but the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 66. s. 3 expressly mentions the age of 16 years and makes a child under that age irremovable. Here the daughter is 18 years of age, and we must hold that she was removable. As respects the case of the mother, I am of opinion that this is a case of desertion. [His Lordship went through the facts as stated in the case, and then continued:] The separation, therefore, originates with the misconduct of the husband, and continued up to the time of the application for the order of removal. The only question is whether the payment of 2s. 6d. a week makes any real difference, and deprives his act of the character of desertion. I think it does not.

LUSH, J.—I am of the same opinion. The payment of the 2s. 6d. a week was agreed to by the husband under the fear of a prosecution against him as a rogue and vagabond, and does not in any way alter the character of his conduct, so as to prevent it from being a desertion within the meaning 24 & 25 Vict. c. 55. s. 3.

Order of removal quashed as to the mother, but confirmed as to the daughter. Order of Sessions confirmed as to the mother, but quashed as to the daughter.

Attorneys—R. F. Bartrop, Kingston-on-Thames, for appellants; W. Sparling, for respondents.

[IN THE COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.]

SECOND DIVISION.

1870. } JONES v. WHITTAKER.*
June 8.

Billiard License—Prohibition of Exciseable Liquors—Beer—8 & 9 Vict. c. 109—9 Geo. 4. c. 61. s. 37—11 Geo. 4. and 1 Will. 4. c. 51. s. 2—32 and 33 Vict. c. 27. s. 16.

Beer is not an exciseable liquor within the meaning of the prohibition in a billiard license, under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, against allowing the consumption of exciseable liquors in a house licensed for public billiard playing.

By the terms of the license granted for keeping a house for public billiard playing given in the schedule to the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, it is provided that the licensee “do not knowingly allow the consumption of exciseable liquors therein.” By 11 Geo. 4. and 1 Will. 4. c. 57, the excise duty on beer which had previously been charged was repealed; and it was expressly provided that the hereditary duties thereon should not be collected during the reign of his Majesty:—Held, that beer is not an exciseable liquor within the meaning of the prohibition in a billiard license.

Lancashire v. the Justices of Staffordshire (1) followed.

CASE stated by the Stipendiary Magistrate for Manchester, under the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43.

The appellant, on the 10th day of December last, appeared before the above-mentioned magistrate to answer the charge of having “on the 1st day of December, 1869, being then duly licensed to keep a house for public billiard playing, unlawfully and knowingly allowed the consumption of a certain exciseable liquor in his said house, to wit, beer, by certain persons then resorting thereto, against the tenour of the said license, and contrary to the statute in such cases made and provided.”

It was proved that the appellant occupied a house in the city of Manchester, for which he was duly licensed under the

* Coram Mellor, J., and Pigott, B., sitting as Assistant Judge under the Judges Jurisdiction Act, 1870 (33 Vict. c. 6).

(1) 26 L. W. J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 171; s.c. 7 E. & B. 839, sub nom. The Queen v. Lancashire.

3 & 4 Vict. c. 61, and 32 & 33 Vict. c. 27, to sell beer, wine and cider, to be consumed on the premises. The appellant also held a license under the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, to keep the said house for public billiard playing, and such license was in the form given in the schedule to that Act. The appellant kept a billiard table for public use, which was so used by the public, and during the time of play the appellant allowed beer to be consumed on the premises.

It was objected, inter alia, at the hearing of the complaint on behalf of the appellant, that beer was not an exciseable liquor. The objection was overruled and the appellant was convicted, and the question was whether such conviction were right or wrong in law.

Ambrose for the appellant.—The question is whether beer is an exciseable liquor within the meaning of the proviso to the license granted by justices, under the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109. s. 10, to keep a house for public billiard playing. The proviso is that the licensee do not knowingly allow the consumption of exciseable liquors therein by the persons resorting thereto. The form of the license is given in the 3rd schedule to the Act. By section 11, every house kept for public billiard playing is required to be licensed, except a house for which the occupier holds a licensed victualler's license under 9 Geo. 4. c. 61. The appellant holds a license for his house for the sale of beer, &c., under 11 Geo. 4. and 1 Will. 4. c. 5, and has been convicted of an offence against the tenour of his billiard license, under section 12, for selling beer to persons playing at a public billiard table in his house, and it is submitted that beer is not an exciseable liquor, and that, therefore, the conviction is wrong. Beer is not now subject to any duty of excise. In Lancashire v. The Justices of Staffordshire (1), sweet wines, which by the interpretation clause (section 37 of the 9 Geo. 4. c. 61), were then exciseable liquors, as being then chargeable with duty either by customs or excise, were held to be no longer exciseable liquors after the abolition of the duty upon them by 4 & 5 Will. 4. c. 77, although the duty on the license to sell them was still retained. It is true that Mr. Justice Erle differed from the rest of the Court but he was overruled, and the case is on all-fours with the present. The duty on the article is one thing, and the duty on the license to sell it is another.

Hopwood for the respondent.—Beer is an exciseable liquor within the meaning of the prohibition in the billiard license. According to a note in Mr. Oke's Magisterial Synopsis, p. 900, ed. 8, it has been the practice not to license beerhouse keepers for that reason. He mentions the prohibition and adds, "which liquors, according to the opinion of the excise authorities, include beer, ale, porter, cider and perry." An exciseable liquor is a liquor upon which Her Majesty could exercise the prerogative right of taking excise duties, and in fact extends to any liquor under the management of the excise as authorities, as, for instance, by controlling its sale by requiring a license to be taken out by the seller. An excise license is necessary for the seller of beer. The legislature, by their language in different statutes, shew that they consider beer as an exciseable liquor. In the 9 Geo. 4. c. 61. s. 37, which is the Act still in force relative to the licensing of alehouses, and is referred to in the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109. s. 12, and incorporated to a certain extent with the latter Act, beer is expressly mentioned in the interpretation clause as an exciseable liquor, and in the last Act with respect to licensing beerhouses, the 32 & 33 Vict. c. 27. s. 16, beer is classed with exciseable liquors. That section imposes a penalty "where any person licensed under 9 Geo. 4. c. 61, is convicted of keeping his house open for the sale of, or of selling beer, cider, wine, spirits or any other exciseable liquor," at a time when it ought by law to be closed, &c. If an exciseable liquor means a liquor upon which an excise duty can be imposed, then beer is such a liquor. The prerogative right to impose duty on beer still exists, it was only suspended by the 11 Geo. 4. and 1 Will. 4. c. 51 during the reign of his late Majesty. There is nothing to prevent her present Majesty exercising her prerogative right by collecting that duty now. If the contention of the appellant prevails, a person who gets a billiard license can evade the statutes which require him to get an excise license, and the certificate of the magistrates.

Ambrose in reply.—At the time of the 9 Geo. 4. c. 61, beer was subject to an excise duty, and therefore was an exciseable liquor.

MELLOR, J.—I am of opinion that, upon the authority of the case of Lancashire v. The Justices of Staffordshire (1), I must hold that beer is not an exciseable liquor. With regard to the point made by the respondent's counsel, that beer is treated as an exciseable liquor in the 32 & 33 Vict. c. 27. s. 16, by reason of the expression "beer, cider, wine, spirits or any other exciseable liquor," I think that the collocation refers "any other exciseable liquor" to the last antecedent spirits, and throws no light upon the present question. If the expression "other exciseable liquor" had followed immediately upon beer or wine, there might have been more force in that point. Upon the facts I can, however, see no distinction between this case and Lancashire v. The Justices of Staffordshire (1). In that case sweet wines were subject to excise duty at the time of the passing of the 9 Geo. 4. c. 61, and were exciseable liquors at that time. That duty was subsequently repealed, but an excise license was still required by sellers, yet the Court held that sweet wines were no longer an exciseable liquor after the repeal of the duty. So here, beer was liable to an excise duty at the time of the passing of the 9 Geo. 4. c. 61, and was, therefore, included within the term exciseable liquor in that statute; but it is now no longer subject to that duty, and is therefore not an exciseable liquor within that statute, and was not so at the time of the passing of the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, under which the billiard license in the present case was granted. I confess I am unable to follow the reasoning of Erle, J., in expressing his dissent in the case of Lancashire v. The Justices of Staffordshire (1). But it has been argued that the duty on beer is not repealed, and that the effect of the statutes passed at the beginning of a fresh reign, for the purpose of substituting certain duties in the place of the prerogative revenues, is not to abolish the prerogative right to levy the duty, but to keep up the right for a fresh bargain at the beginning of the next reign, but it would be strange if we were not to hold that a sufficient repeal and abolition for the present purpose. I therefore think beer is not an exciseable liquor within the meaning of this license, and the conviction must be quashed.

PIGOTT, B.—I quite agree. Lancashire v. The Justices of Staffordshire (1) is an express authority upon the point raised.

Judgment for the appellant.

Attorneys—E. K. Randall, agent for Cobbett & Co., Manchester, for appellant; Johnson & Weatheralls, agents for Higson & Son, Manchester, for respondent.

[IN THE COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.]

1870. } COPLBY (appellant) v. BURTON
June 28. } (respondent).

Public House—Opening on Sunday during Prohibited Hours—11 & 12 Vict. c. 49—Costs.

A was charged before justices, under 11 & 12 Vict. c. 49, with having opened his house for the sale of wine and beer on Sunday, before half-past twelve. He kept a refreshment room communicating with a railway station; he had a notice thereon as to the penalties incurred in case of persons not travellers having refreshment during prohibited hours; he had ordered his servants to ask persons if they were going by train; eight persons were in the room within the prohibited time; he had questioned six of them, but his servant neglected to question two who came in during A's absence; of the eight persons, four were strangers who went off by a train which started shortly after their entering the room; the others resided about a quarter or half-mile off, and three of them took tickets and went by the train, whilst the fourth had accompanied his son, who went by it. The justices convicted A:—Held, that the conviction was wrong.

The Court in future will, on quashing a conviction of this kind, do so with costs.

This was a CASE stated by justices under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43.

1. At a petty sessions holden by adjournment at Todmorden, in the West Riding of the county of York, on the 9th day of September, 1869, an information preferred by William Burton, sergeant of police (hereinafter called the respondent) against John Copley, a licensed victualler (hereinafter called the appellant), under sec. 1 of the Act 11 & 12 Vict. cap. 49, charging for that he, the said John Copley, on the 22nd day of August then last, at Todmorden and Walsden, in the county of Lancaster, then being a licensed victualler, and the said day being Sunday, unlawfully did open his house for the sale of wine and beer, before half-past twelve o'clock in the afternoon of the said last-mentioned day, to wit, at ten minutes past eleven o'clock in the forenoon, otherwise than as refreshment for travellers, was heard and determined by us, the said justices respectively being then present, and upon such hearing the appellant was duly convicted before us of the said offence, and we adjudged him to pay 1s. penalty and 14s. costs.

2. And whereas the appellant being dissatisfied with our determination upon the hearing of the said information, as being erroneous in point of law, hath, pursuant to sec. 2 of the said statute, 20 and 21 Vict. c. 43, duly applied to us in writing to state and sign a case, setting forth the facts, and the grounds of such our determination as aforesaid, for the opinion of this Court, and hath duly entered into a recognizance, as required in that behalf by the said last mentioned statute.

3. Now, therefore, we the said justices, in compliance with the said application, do hereby state and sign the following case :

4. Upon the hearing of the said information, it was proved and found by us as facts that the appellant's house, which is called the Queen's Hotel, is situate in Todmorden, near to the railway station there, and has a communication with such station by means of a covered gangway, in the sides of which are windows, and which leads into a room called the refreshment room. The respondent, accompanied by a police constable, visited the appellant's premises about ten minutes past eleven, a.m., they having seen men walk along the gangway from the station into the hotel, some of whom they knew to be residents in the same town. The respondent and constable visited the refreshment room of the hotel by the gangway from the station, and found therein eight men, six of the men having each a glass of beer part drunk, and the other two men having a glass of sherry each; they were all standing, and some were smoking; four of these men the officers knew to be residents in the town, and the other four men were strangers to the town. A female usually attends to that room, the appellant taking a general superintendence; he was then in another part of the house, but had been in the refreshment room shortly before the respondent and the constable entered the room, and on two of the four residents coming into the room the appellant, before they were served with any refreshment, enquired if they were going by the train, to which they replied in the affirmative. The officers asked the waiter for the landlord, and she called for him, the officers proceeding into a lobby leading further into the house. Whilst the officers were there waiting for the landlord, the eight men each drank up his ale or wine and went by the gangway on to the station. There was a train due from Lancashire into Yorkshire at thirteen past eleven. The officers did not speak to any of the eight men, nor they to the officers. Two of the four residents resided within a quarter of a mile of the hotel, and the other two within half a mile, and all of them appeared to be healthy and active men. The appellant has resided at Todmorden, and kept this hotel several years. After a short interview between the officers and the landlord, in the course of which the landlord pointed the officers to a printed notice hung in a conspicuous part of the room, the officers told him the names of the four residents, and said they should be obliged to report him to their superior officer, and in reply he said he could not blame them for doing their duty. The officers returned by the gangway to the station, and saw one of the four residents go from the platform into the ticket office, and then return and cross over the rails on to the platform for Yorkshire; he and two other of the four residents and the strangers all went by the train. It was several minutes after the train was due, and ought to have started for Yorkshire, when this resident went into and returned from the ticket office; but a railway official always rings a bell when a train is about a mile distant; the train stops at a station distant a little above two miles from Todmorden, and afterwards about every two or three miles to Wakefield, Leeds, or Bradford. When the train departed one of the four residents left the station, and returned towards his home in Todmorden, he having come to see a son off by the train who resided at a distance, and had been on a visit to his father, and two others of the four were seen by the officers walking in the town of Todmorden between two and three o'clock in the afternoon of the same day.

5. The officers then returned to the hotel, and told the appellant they had seen one of the four men (whose name they mentioned) leave the station and return into the town, and the other three go off by train. The officers had seen some of the four in the town shortly previous to seeing them walk along the gangway into the hotel. When the officers told the names of the four men, whom they knew, they asked the appellant if he considered them travellers. His reply was, that if they either came or went by train he considered them travellers, and he asked the waiter if he had not given her directions not to give out refreshments on Sundays during the prohibited hours, without first asking whether they had come or were going by train. She replied that he had given such directions to her, but she failed to ask the question from the two residents who came in after the appellant left the room. The outer doors to the other parts of the hotel were all closed. The following is a copy of the printed notice before referred to:—

“NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC.

“The following clause is in the new Wine and Beerhouse Licensing Bill, and subjects each person present in a licensed house at illegal hours to a penalty of forty shillings:—‘Where any person licensed under any of the said recited Acts to sell beer, cider, or wine by retail, or any person licensed under the said Act of the ninth year of the reign of King George the Fourth, is convicted of keeping his house open for the sale of or of selling beer, cider, wine, spirits, or any other exciseable liquor, or of suffering the same to be drunk in such house at any time during which such house ought by law to be closed, any person (other than the servants or inmates of such house) present in such house at such time, shall, unless he account for his presence to the satisfaction of the justices, having cognizance of the case, be liable on summary conviction to a penalty not exceeding forty shillings for each offence.’

“Refreshments are supplied in this room on Sundays (during prohibited hours) to those persons only who are travelling to or by train. All those who may fictitiously obtain them will subject themselves to penalties imposed as above mentioned.”

6. None of the four residents had come by train, and none of them were waiting for friends to come by that train, and the train was only a few minutes late.

7. We found, as a fact, that none of these four residents were travellers, and were of opinion and adjudged that none of them required or needed refreshment, and to none of them, especially to the one who did not go by the train, but came from his house to see his son go and then return home, was the ale or sherry, which they drank, refreshment to them in the proper interpretation of refreshment as applied to travellers; that it was in fact tipping, and we were of opinion that they could not nor could any of them have maintained an action against the appellant if he had refused to fill to them respectively the ale and sherry on their tendering the price.

8. The attorney for the appellant argued contrary to the conclusions stated in the seventh paragraph, and cited several decisions in support of his argument, but we held that none of those decisions governed this case, the facts in the several cases cited being different to those found by us in the present case. A fourth magistrate, who sat with us, thought that the information ought to be dismissed.

9. The questions of law arising on the above statement for the opinion of this Court, therefore, are:—

First—Whether the said four residents were all travellers as intended by the Act of Parliament.

Second—Whether the said ale and wine were refreshment taken, and needed by them as travellers.

10. If the Court should be of opinion that the said conviction was legally and properly made, and the appellant is liable as aforesaid, then the said conviction is to stand, but if the Court should be of contrary opinion, then the said information is to be dismissed.

Gray, for the appellant.—The justices are to state the facts and the reasons of their decision, not to state the question of law, and if they do the Court are not bound down to it. The information was for opening the house improperly, but there was no evidence that it was not opened bona fide, on the contrary, the evidence shews it was, and if any person not being a traveller was among those served, he was liable. And the case is on all fours with Peaches v. Colman (1).

Hopwood, for the respondent.—The justices with the witnesses before them, and their local knowledge, may have well concluded that the appellant in truth was intending to evade the law, and, as pointed out in Taylor v. Humphries (2), the Court ought greatly to rely on the local knowledge of the justices. And as respects Peaches v. Colman (1), Willes, J., states that the question there was only whether the justices were bound to convict.

Gray, in reply.

WILLES, J.—I am of opinion that the conviction should be quashed. It is important to give effect to laws providing for the sanctity of the day of rest, but this must be done by fair means, and not by inflicting a penalty where there is no intention to do wrong and a man does his best to serve only bona fide travellers, the statute making an exception as to travellers and letting a bona fide traveller have refreshment. If the landlord opens his house under circumstances where no explanation of it appears, one may conclude that he opens generally, and he might be called on to explain. Such may be the case where the house is out of the way of travellers, and the persons coming to it would most likely be residents in the neighbourhood. But here the place was a refreshment-room at a railway station to which persons would naturally resort when on a journey, and of the persons present four were strangers who went by train, three, who resided near, also went by train, and one, who also resided near, came to see his son off, and the transaction was shortly before a train started. Prima facie, therefore, the house was open to sell drink to travellers, because it was at a railway station, and there was nothing in the persons to shew they were not travellers, and there is no reason to conclude as to the three that they went by train merely to evade the law, and even if they were not bona fide travellers, yet the landlord may have opened honestly for travellers, and what is there to shew that he was aware that they had no business to be there? I agree, if negligence to separate travellers from others be shewn, there is evidence that the house was open to sell drink illegally. Gross negligence or want of precaution in this matter would be evidence of guilt, but there is nothing of the sort here. There was a notice placed conspicuously; there were directions to the servant, and inquiries in fact made; there was an absence of intention to break the law, or of misconduct which would be evidence of a design to evade it; and therefore, passing over the questions in paragraph 9, and addressing myself to paragraph 10, I am of opinion that the conviction was not legally and properly made, and should be quashed, because it appears to me there was no evidence on which the justices could properly convict, no evidence that the appellant did not open his house lawfully to sell refreshments to travellers.

KEATING, J.—I am of the same opinion. No doubt if the facts shewed, and the justices had found, that the appellant's conduct was colourable, that there was no bona fides, and that tipping was going on by his consent, there would be strong evidence to shew that he opened his house illegally. But there is nothing to shew that the landlord knew there was any breach of the law. There was a notice, there were directions to the servants (which were followed out except as to two persons), and the amount of the refreshment and position of the parties standing at the counter having a glass of beer or sherry,—just the position of travellers going by train,—presented nothing to challenge the notice of the landlord, and therefore it seems to me there was nothing to shew knowledge on the part of the landlord that the persons were not bona fide travellers. Their taking tickets was not material, as here it is not a question as to them, but as to the mind of the landlord, and improper knowledge by him, which should be clearly shewn. I think the conviction is wrong, and in so deciding I attend not to the questions submitted by the justices, but to paragraph 10 of the case.

(1) 35 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 118.

(2) 34 Ibid. 1.

MONTAGUE SMITH, J.—I am of the same opinion, and think there is not sufficient evidence to support the conviction. It is not found, and it does not appear by the evidence, that the appellant opened his house except for travellers, and as four were travellers beyond doubt it might have been opened for them, and the justices do not find that he knew that the other four were not travellers, and on the facts I think there is nothing to shew he did know, or that he did not care to know; all the facts are consistent with bona fides. It is said four were seen in the town a few hours after, but the landlord can hardly be bound to inquire as to the length of a man's journey, and persons going by railway are prima facie travellers.

[Gray asked for costs.]

WILLES, J.—The decided cases have either been so misunderstood or not acted on, and we have had to reverse so many convictions under this statute, that though we shall not give costs in this case as we do not desire to act without giving warning, in future we shall give them. We desire it to be distinctly understood that the burthen of proof is on the prosecution, and that in future, in quashing the conviction in these cases, we shall do so with costs.

Conviction quashed.

Attorneys—Richards & Walker, agents for James Stansfield, Todmorden, for appellant; Shaw & Tremallen, agents for A. G. & T. Eastwood, Todmorden, for respondent.

NEW SERIES, 39.—MAG. CAS.

1870.
May 11, 12; } THE QUEEN v. THE JUSTICES OF SURREY.
June 30. }

Highway—Notices preliminary to Order for Stopping up Highway—Certiorari—Person aggrieved—27 & 28 Vict. c. 101. s. 21; 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50. s. 85.

By 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50. s. 85, justices are empowered to view highways which it is proposed to divert or stop up, and to certify that they are unnecessary, upon proof that a notice in a prescribed form has been affixed at the place and by the side of each end of the highway from which the same is proposed to be diverted or stopped up. By 27 & 28 Vict. c. 101. s. 21, the proceedings under the former Act may be adopted for the purpose of certifying that a highway is unnecessary for public use. Three roads, each in a separate parish, formed one system, and consisted of three limbs, running from three turnpike roads at the points A, B, and C, and meeting at a central point D, so as to form a figure like that of the capital letter Y. The justices, purporting to act under 27 & 28 Vict. c. 101. s. 21, made three certificates as to each of the three highways. The roads referred to in the certificates were described, one as running from D to A, another as running from D to B, and a third as running from D to C. The certificates also recited that the requisite notices had been given. It appeared that a notice was placed at the points A, B, and C, but not at the central point D. The certificates having been affirmed on appeal to the sessions,—Held, that a certiorari must issue for the purpose of quashing the orders of sessions, as each of the three orders related to a separate highway, one end of which was at D, so that the prescribed notices had not been given, and the certificate was invalid.

The applicant for the certiorari resided in the neighbourhood of the highways to which the certificates related:—Held, that, by reason of his residence, he was in the condition of a person grieved, and entitled to the certiorari as of right.

Rule for justices of Surrey, and the highway board for the district of Blackheath, to shew cause why a certiorari should not issue to bring into Court the orders made at the December Quarter Sessions, 1869, upon four appeals, touching the enrolment of four certificates made by two justices of Surrey, and also the certificates themselves, upon the ground that the certificates were void, and that the notices required by the statutes had not been affixed at the places required by law.

U

It appeared that the certificates and orders were under 27 & 28 Vict. c. 101. s. 21 (1); and each of them, after reciting an application from the highway board, requiring the justices to view the highway mentioned in it which the board considered unnecessary for public use, and that the justices had viewed it, and were of that opinion, and that they had directed the notices required by the statute to be given, and that they were satisfied that they had been given, certified that the highway named in the certificate was unnecessary for public use.

(1) By 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50. s. 84, the chairman of a vestry may direct the surveyor of highways to apply to two justices to view any highway the vestry may deem expedient to divert or stop up. By s. 85:—"If it shall appear upon such view of such two justices that any public highway is unnecessary, the said justices shall direct the surveyor to affix a notice in the form and to the effect of schedules (No. 19) to this Act annexed, in legible characters, at the place and by the side of each end of the said highway from whence the same is proposed to be turned, diverted, or stopped up," and also to insert a notice in the newspaper, &c. "And the said several notices having been so published, and proof thereof having been given to the satisfaction of the said justices," and a plan having been delivered to them, &c. "the said justices shall proceed to certify under their hands the fact of their having viewed the said highway as aforesaid," . . . and that the same is unnecessary.

By 27 & 28 Vict. c. 101. s. 21:—"When any highway board consider any highway unnecessary for public use, they may direct the district surveyor to apply to two justices to view the same, and thereupon the like proceedings shall be had as where application is made under the Highway Act, 1835 (5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50. ss. 84-91), to procure the stopping up of any highway, save only that the order to be made thereupon, instead of directing the highway to be stopped up, shall direct that the same shall cease to be a highway which the parish is liable to repair, and the liability of the parish shall cease accordingly; and for the purpose of such proceedings under this enactment such variation shall be made in any notice, certificate, or other matter preliminary to the making of such order as the nature of the case may require."

The rule was obtained on affidavits by one Elliot, who appeared to be of Pain's Hill, Bromley, Surrey, in the neighbourhood of the highways to which the certificates related.

Robinson, Serjt., and Thesiger shewed cause against the rule (on May 11).—This question arises under s. 21 of 27 & 28 Vict. c. 101, which provides that if a highway board consider a highway unnecessary for public use, it may apply to two justices, who may direct that it shall cease to be a highway which the parish is liable to repair. The section refers to 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50; and by s. 85 of that Act, the justices who view the highway are to direct the surveyor to affix a notice by the side of each end of the highway to be stopped up. It is said that this direction has not been complied with in the present instance, and therefore that the whole proceedings are bad. But it is submitted that this is not so. A notice was put up at the end of each of the roads where it joined the turnpike road, and it was not necessary that any should be put up at Benbow Corner, where they all met. Practically, all the three roads constituted only one road, and although the justices thought proper to make three separate certificates, all might have been included in one, as is provided by s. 86 of 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50. The justices have found that the roads were unnecessary; and it is clear that no one could pass along them without seeing two of the notices, although there was none at Benbow Corner. The order was properly made, and, upon appeal, the sessions ordered the certificates to be enrolled. That being so, this Court will not interfere—See The Queen v. Dayman (2); The Queen v. The Sheffield, Ashton-under-Lyne, and Manchester Railway Company (3). Again, in such a case, the Court will not receive affidavits—See, per Coleridge, J., in The King v. The Justices of Cambridgeshire (4). And further, the writ of certiorari is discretionary, and this is not a case in which the Court will, in its discretion, allow the writ to go—See The Queen v. The Manchester and Leeds Railway Company (5). In The Queen v. Newborough (6), Lush, J., and Hayes, J., refused to grant a certiorari to bring up an order of justices for the expenses of special constables, although the constables had not been appointed in the manner pointed out by the Act. Much more ought it to be refused in this case.

(2) 26 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 128.

(3) 11 Ad. & E. 194; s. c. 9 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 13.

(4) 4 Ad. & E. 111.

Gates, in support of the rule.—The notices have not been affixed at the places required by law. It is quite clear that Benbow Corner must be treated as one end of each of the three highways, and there is nothing in the statute to dispense with a notice there. The orders have, therefore, been made without jurisdiction, and are so far prejudicial to the applicant, who is a resident in the neighbourhood of the roads, that he is entitled to a certiorari.

Cur. adv. vult.

The judgment of the Court (7) was (on June 29) delivered by BLACKBURN, J.—This was a rule originally moved to shew cause why a certiorari to remove into this Court for the purpose of quashing them, the orders of sessions made upon four appeals touching the enrolment of four certificates made by two justices of Surrey, relating to four highways in the four parishes of Alfold, Dunsfold, Bromley, and Hascomb.

The rule was refused as to the Alfold highway, but by inadvertence it was drawn up as to all four. This was admitted on the argument, and, so far as relates to the road in that parish, the rule must be discharged. But as to the other three certificates, the Court took time to consider, on a point which it is not easy to make intelligible without reference to a map. The roads in those three parishes formed one system, running from three turnpike roads, and forming a figure like that of a capital letter Y. The spot where the three limbs of this road met was called Benbow Corner. The three ends where the limbs met the respective turnpike roads may be conveniently designated as A, B, and C.

The two justices made three separate certificates. The first described the road to which it referred as a road running "from Benbow Corner" to A. The second described the road to which it referred as running "from Benbow Corner" to B. The third described the road to which it referred as running "from Benbow Corner" to C.

Each certificate, after reciting an application from the highway board requiring them to view the highway mentioned in it, which the board considered unnecessary for public use, and that they had viewed it, and were of that opinion, and that they had directed the notices required by the statute to be given, and that they were satisfied that they had been given, certified that the highway named in the certificate was unnecessary for public use.

A separate appeal was lodged against the enrolment of each of these three certificates, but by agreement among the parties the three appeals were consolidated, and one jury tried the three; they found in favour of the highway board, and the quarter sessions consequently enrolled the three certificates, and ordered that the roads should cease to be highways which the parishes were liable to repair.

These certificates were made under s. 21 of the Highway Act, 1864 (27 & 28 Vict. c. 101), which directs that "the like proceedings shall be had as when an application is made under the Highway Act, 1835, to procure the stopping of any highway," mutatis mutandis.

This refers us to 5 & 6 Wm. 4. c. 50. ss. 84-91. By s. 85 it is provided, that after holding their view, the two justices shall direct the surveyor "to affix a notice in the form and to the effect in the schedule (No. 19) to this Act annexed, in legible characters at the place and by the side of each end of the said highway, from whence the same is proposed to be turned, diverted, or stopped up," and in newspapers, and on the church doors, &c. "And such notices having been so published, and proof thereof having been given to

(5) 3 Ad. & E. 413.

(6) 38 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 129.

(7) Cockburn, C.J., Blackburn, J., and Mellor, J.

their satisfaction, the justices shall proceed to certify."

We think it clear that the actual publication of the prescribed notices is made a condition precedent to the jurisdiction of the two justices, the obvious object of the legislature being to secure that everyone interested in the preservation of the highway should be aware of what was about to be done before it was done; and we also think it clear that the legislature have prescribed that the notices shall be placed at each end of the highway, so as to secure to every one who comes upon it the opportunity of reading the notice.

In the present case the highways which it was proposed to declare no longer repairable by the parishes formed one system, consisting of three limbs, joining the points A, B, and C, and meeting at a central point—Benbow Corner. The certificates described each limb of this system as a road from Benbow Corner to A, B, and C, respectively. All the notices were correctly given, except those required to be placed at each end of the road. As to these, in fact, a notice was placed at each of the three ends where the road joined the turnpike, the points A, B, C; but it was admitted that no notice was put up at Benbow Corner.

It was argued that the justices might have treated the whole system of highway from the three turnpikes as one highway, and included it in one certificate; but whether they could have done so or not, they have not done so, and each of the three orders must be treated as good or bad, just as if it was the only one; and each relates to a separate highway, one end of which was at Benbow Corner, and at that end of such highway no notice was affixed.

It was then argued that what really was done gave notice to the public quite as effectually as what the statute prescribed, as no one could pass along by Benbow Corner without passing two notices, one at each turnpike road, and so getting every information which he would have got had the notice been affixed at Benbow Corner; and that the applicant, in fact, knew of all that was done; and that there had been an appeal by a party grieved to the sessions; and that it is only after the verdict of the jury was found against the appeal that he applies to this Court for a certiorari. And it was urged that the writ of certiorari was not of right, and that this Court, in its discretion, would not issue it to give effect to an objection certainly not affecting the merits.

On this we took time to consider, as the question to what extent the Court is bound to grant a certiorari, or may in its discretion withhold it, is one of great importance.

It is quite clear that, except when applied for on behalf of the Crown, the certiorari is not a writ of course. The Court must be satisfied on affidavits that there is sufficient ground for issuing it, and it must in every case be a question for the Court to decide, whether, in fact, sufficient grounds do exist. But in the present case we are satisfied that in fact no notice was affixed at Benbow Corner, and that, therefore, the orders complained of were made without jurisdiction, and the question arises whether this Court ought to refuse the certiorari.

In the very analogous case of prohibition a distinction is taken, thus expressed by Cockburn, C.J., in Forster v. Forster (8). He says: "I entirely concur in the proposition that, although the Court will listen to a person who is a stranger, and who interferes to point out that some other Court has exceeded its jurisdiction, whereby some wrong or grievance has been sustained, yet that is not ex debito justitiæ, but a matter upon which the Court may properly exercise its discretion, as distinguished from the case of a party aggrieved, who is entitled to relief ex debito justitiæ, if he suffers from the usurpation of jurisdiction by another Court."

The same distinction between an application by a party aggrieved and by one who comes merely as a stranger to inform the Court, is taken as to certiorari in Arthur v. The Commissioners of Sewers (9), where one of the judges said "that a certiorari was not a writ of right, for if it was it could never be denied to grant it, but it has often been denied by this Court, who, upon consideration of the circumstances of cases, may deny it or grant it at discretion; so that it is not always a writ of right. It is true where a man is chosen into an office or place, by virtue whereof he has a temporal right, and is deprived thereof by an inferior jurisdiction who proceed in a summary way, in such case he is entitled to a certiorari ex debito justitiæ, because he has no other remedy, being bound by the judgment of the inferior judicature."

(8) 4 B. & S. 199; s. c. 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 314.

(9) 8 Mod. 331.

Where the party grieved has by his conduct precluded himself from taking an objection, the Court will not permit him to make it, as in The Queen v. The South Holland Drainage Committee (10).

In other cases where the application is by the party grieved, so as to answer the same purpose as a writ of error, we think that it ought to be treated, like a writ of error, as ex debito justitiæ; but where the applicant is not a party grieved who substantially brings error to redress his private wrong, but comes forward as one of the general public having no particular interest in the matter, the Court has a discretion, and if it thinks that no good would be done to the public by quashing the order, it is not bound to grant it at the instance of such a person. Thus in The Queen v. Newborough (6), where the application was made for a certiorari to bring up an order on the treasurer of the county of Carnarvon to pay 95*l.* 1*s.* 3*d.*, being the amount of certain allowances to, and expenses incurred in respect of special constables, but not till after the treasurer had paid the money and his accounts had been allowed at the sessions, so that the applicants, though ratepayers, could obtain no benefit from quashing the order, as the money could never be recovered back, Lush, J., and Hayes, J., then sitting in the Bail Court, thought they were not bound to grant the certiorari, though the order was informal and probably void. And we think they were right; but, as is distinctly stated by my brother Lush, the question would have been different, if the order had not been acted upon, and the money paid, and the accounts allowed.

We find no case inconsistent with this distinction, which we think is a sound one, and therefore we think that, in exercising our discretion, we must see whether the present applicant is in the condition of a person grieved, applying for the certiorari to remove an order made without jurisdiction which affects his interests; and we think he is.

(10) 8 Ad. & E. 429.

In The King v. Taunton, St. Mary's (11), an indictment for not repairing a highway had been removed by certiorari, and the question was whether the prosecutors were parties grieved, so as to entitle them to costs. Lord Ellenborough says: "Certainly a person does not answer to the character of a person grieved who is only in common with the rest of the subjects inconvenienced by the nuisance; but here it appears that those persons have, by reason of their local situation, a peculiar grievance of their own."

This is exactly the position of the present applicant. And the continued existence of these orders at the quarter sessions would make it difficult to get a grand jury to find a bill of indictment against the parish, which, after all, would be an inconvenient mode of raising the objection to the validity of these orders.

The rule must therefore be made absolute so far as regards the three roads, but, as the rule must be discharged as to the other, without costs.

Rule absolute, without costs.

Attorneys—J. & M. Pontifex, agents for H. F. Day, Godalming, for prosecution; F. F. Smallpeice, agent for W. H. M. & F. F. Smallpeice, Guildford, for defendants.

1870. { THE WEST LONDON EXTENSION
May 12. { RAILWAY COMPANY (appellants)
v. THE ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE OF FULHAM UNION (respondents).

Arbitration and Award—Power to give Costs—Reference of "Matter in Dispute" —Baines' Act, 12 & 13 Vict. c. 45. s. 13.

By 12 & 13 Vict. c. 45. s. 13, power is given to any Court of quarter sessions before which any appeal (except against a summary conviction, &c.) shall be brought, to order, by consent, that the matter or matters of such appeal be referred to arbitration to such person or persons, and in such manner and on such terms, as the Court shall think reasonable and proper. Upon appeal to quarter sessions against a poor-rate, it was ordered that the "matter in dispute" should be referred to an arbitrator to inquire into and arbitrate thereon. By his award the arbitrator ordered that the appeal should be dismissed, and that the appellants should pay the respondents their costs of the appeal:—Held, that the award was irregular, and must be referred back to the arbitrator, as the order of sessions did not confer upon him the power of awarding costs.

(11) 3 M. & S. 462, 472.

[For the report of the above case, see 39 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. p. 178.]

[IN THE COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.]

1870. } STANLEY (appellant) v. MORT-
June 23. } LOCK (respondent).

Turnpike Road—Liability to Toll—Leaving a Carriage upon the Road—3 Geo. 4. cap. 126. s. 41.

The 41st section of 3 Geo. 4. c. 126, imposes a penalty on any person who, inter alia, "shall leave upon a turnpike road any horse, cattle, beast or carriage whatsoever," "whereby the payment of all or any of the tolls shall or may be evaded:—Held, that to constitute the offence of leaving a carriage within that section the carriage must be left waiting on the road.

Where therefore a carriage was driven on a turnpike road to within a short distance of a toll gate, when the owner got out and walked through the gate, and the carriage, instead of waiting, was driven back to the owner's residence,—Held, that such owner could not, for so acting, be convicted under the said 41st section of leaving the carriage on the road, whereby the payment of toll was evaded.

CASE stated by Justices for the county of Cambridge, pursuant to 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43.

At a petty sessions at Caxton, in the said county, on 12th of October, 1869, the appellant was convicted by the said justices, on an information preferred under 3 Geo. 4. c. 126. s. 41, charging the appellant that he did, on 25th of September, 1869, leave upon the turnpike road, from Royston, in the county of Hertford, to Wandesford Bridge, in the county of Huntingdon, a certain carriage or waggonette, drawn by two horses, by reason whereof the payment of tolls at the Old North Road gate was evaded, contrary to the said statute of 3 Geo. 4. c. 126, for regulating turnpike roads.

Upon the hearing of the said information, it was proved that there was a turnpike road situated in the parish of Longstowe, in the county of Cambridge, on the road leading from Royston to Wandesford Bridge, and that the respondent was the person duly appointed to collect the tolls at the said gate.

The case set out various provisions of the local Act, 3 Geo. 4. cap. 68, under which the tolls payable on the said road were collected, but they are not material for the purposes of this report.

It was also stated in the case that it was further proved that the said turnpike gate was situated about 100 yards from the Old North Road railway station, on the Bedford and Cambridge Railway, and that the appellant was, on the 25th of September, 1869, with some of his friends, driven by his coachman in a waggonette, drawn by a pair of horses, along the said road to within about 140 yards of the said turnpike gate, and that the said appellant and his friends then got out of the waggonette and walked through the said turnpike gate to the said railway station, carrying with them some small articles of luggage, but that the heavy portions of their luggage had been previously sent through the gate in a cart, the person in charge of which had paid the proper toll.

The waggonette was in charge of the appellant's coachman, and was by him driven back to the appellant's house. The said waggonette had, on the day in question, been driven upwards of a quarter of a mile in one direction, along the said turnpike road, between the appellant's lodge gate and the toll gate.

No toll was paid by the said appellant, nor demanded from the appellant, in respect of the said waggonette, because it was known to the respondent that the appellant wished to raise the question now raised.

The appellant left by the train, and did not return that day.

On these facts, the justices were of opinion that there was nothing in the provisions of the local Act, 3 Geo. 4. cap. 68, to exempt the appellant from the payment of the toll; that the said local Act was passed prior to, and was itself amended and controlled by the general Act, 3 Geo. 4. cap. 126; that the appellant was not within the exemption allowed by section 32 of such general Act, and therefore that the appellant was, under the circumstances above stated, liable, under section 41, to pay toll for the said waggonette.

The question of law arising on the above statement of facts was, whether or not, under section 41 of 3 Geo. 4. cap. 126, the appellant was rightly convicted of leaving the said waggonette on the said road, whereby the payment of toll at the said gate was evaded.

Graham, for the appellant.—There was no leaving of the waggonette on the road, within the meaning of sec. 41 of 3 Geo. 4. c. 126. That section enacts, amongst various offences for which a penalty is to be incurred, the following:—"If any person shall fraudulently or forcibly pass through any such toll gate with any horse, cattle, beast or carriage, or shall leave upon the said road any horse, cattle, beast or carriage whatsoever, by reason whereof the payment of any tolls or duties shall be avoided or lessened; or shall take off, or cause to be taken, any horse or other beast or cattle from any carriage, either before or after having passed any toll gate, or having passed through any toll gate, shall afterwards add or put any horse or other beast to any such carriage, and draw therewith upon any part of any turnpike road, so as to increase the number of horses or other beasts drawing the said carriage after the same shall have passed through any toll gate, whereby the payment of all or any of the tolls shall or may be evaded." The latter words, "whereby the payment of all or any of the tolls shall or may be evaded," govern all the preceding part. No toll was here evaded by the appellant's carriage being stopped short of the toll gate, but only the liability to pay toll was avoided. That difference is pointed out in Veitch v. Trustees of the Exeter Turnpike Road (1). The appellant here did not leave the carriage, but the carriage left him, it being driven back to the appellant's house.

(1) 27 Law J. Rep. (n.s.) M.C. 116.

[WILLES, J. — "Leave" within the meaning of the 41st section means "leave awaiting."]

Yes, and here there was no such leaving.

Naylor, for the respondent.—In this case the appellant's waggonette had gone more than 100 yards along the said turnpike road, and therefore the appellant by getting out and leaving his carriage, after having so used the road, evaded the toll within the meaning of section 41 of the statute.

[KEATING, J. — Suppose, instead of getting out of the carriage, the appellant had turned his carriage round, and driven home?] He would still have been liable to toll. The implication from Veitch v. Trustees of the Exeter Turnpike Road is that if the appellant in that case, instead of going only eighty-four yards along the road before he turned off, had gone 100 yards, the decision would have been different. If a person does not use the road for 100 yards he is not liable to toll, even although he drives his carriage through the toll gate—The Queen v. Gerrard (2). In that case, Phipson v. Harvett (3) is cited as shewing the liability where more than 100 yards of the road is used. The toll, therefore, was incurred by the appellant's having travelled more than 100 yards on this said turnpike road, and his leaving his carriage was only the mode by which he evaded paying the toll he had so incurred.

Graham, in reply.—The charge in the information against the appellant is for leaving the carriage, and not for evading paying a toll which had been incurred by using the road for more than 100 yards. Such point cannot now be raised.

WILLES, J.—I am of opinion that this conviction must be quashed. We must take the information, and see if the offence there charged has been committed. That offence is that the appellant did leave upon the turnpike road therein specified a certain carriage or waggonette drawn by two horses. The facts, as proved, were that the appellant, wanting to go to the Old North Road Railway Station, was driven in his waggonette more than 100 yards upon the turnpike road in question, and when within about 140 yards of the turnpike gate he got out and left his carriage, directing his coachman to drive home, and did not return to his carriage, but went through the toll gate to the railway station, and then left by the train. He did not leave the carriage in the sense of leaving it on the road to await for him, but all he did was to leave the carriage. The real question therefore is, whether the expression, "leave a carriage upon a road," means in the statute merely quitting a carriage whilst it is on the road, or whether it means leaving a carriage waiting on the road. I think that the last is the meaning according to the true construction of the statute. Such a construction avoids the consequences which would otherwise arise if the first of these meanings were to be given to the words in the Act. One of such consequences would have been that any person who, having driven on a turnpike road, found himself afterwards inclined to leave his carriage and walk, would still be bound to pay toll. The case coming within these words of the enactment would probably be where a person has taken the horses or some of them out of the carriage and has gone through the toll gate with them, leaving the carriage or horses, as the case may be, waiting on the road. But without, however, going further, it is sufficient to say that leaving a carriage within the meaning of this statute means leaving it waiting on the road, and that in the absence of anything like that in the present case, this conviction ought to be quashed.

(2) 26 Law J. Rep. (n.s.) M.C. 148.

(3) 1 Cr. M. & R. 473; s. c. 4 Law J. Rep. (n.s.) Exch. 36.

KEATING, J.—I am of the same opinion. It is not necessary to determine some of the questions which were raised during the argument. All we have to do is to say whether the conviction was right, that is, whether the facts were such as strictly to bring the appellant within the words relied on of the 41st section of 3 Geo. 4. c. 126. I say strictly, because the section is penal. Now I agree with my brother Willes as to the construction of the words in that section. I think "leave upon the road any carriage" does not import simply quitting the carriage, but leaving the carriage waiting on the road whilst the occupier of it goes through the toll gate. The facts of this case shew that there was no leaving of the carriage on the road within the meaning of the enactment, according to the construction we have put on it, and therefore the conviction was wrong.

MONTAGUE SMITH, J.—I am of the same opinion. To support this conviction, this offence must be, according to the statute, leaving a carriage on the road, whereby payment of toll was evaded. The offence therefore consists of two things—first, leaving a carriage on the road, and, secondly, the effect of that leaving must be the evasion of the payment of toll. It appears to me that the overt act in this case was not established. Leaving a carriage on the road, within the meaning of the Act, seems to me to mean leaving a carriage waiting on the road. If a man gets out of a carriage, and the carriage does not remain after he has left it, such leaving is not a leaving within the meaning of the 41st section. It is not necessary to determine what it is which comes within that section. As I understand it, if a carriage were left on the road whilst the owner went through the toll gate, and got what he wanted in the adjoining town, and then returned to such carriage which had been so kept there until he returned, such leaving might be a leaving within that section. But it is unnecessary for us to determine that, or to determine whether toll may be taken of a person who has passed upwards of 100 yards along a road, but has not gone through a toll gate. That last seems not to be imposed by the Act; indeed, if Mr. Naylor be right, the information need not have been laid under the 41st section, but simply for not having paid toll. It is, however, sufficient to say that the conviction was wrong.

Conviction quashed.

Attorneys—J. & C. Cole, agents for E. Foster, Cambridge, for appellant; F. & T. Smith & Sons, agents for H. Mortlock, Caxton, for respondent.

IN THE COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.]

1870. { THE QUEEN ON THE PROSECUTION
June 11. { OF THE GUARDIANS OF THE HENLEY UNION (appellants)
v. THE GUARDIANS OF THE ABINGDON UNION (respondents).

*Order of Removal—Irremovability—
Break of Residence—9 & 10 Vict. c. 66
—24 & 25 Vict. c. 55.*

The pauper, a bastard, was born in the appellant union, where his mother afterwards married, the pauper living with and being maintained by her and his stepfather there until their subsequent removal to the respondent union in June, 1861, where they have since resided, and whither he removed with them. In 1862, being then upwards of 15 years of age, the pauper was elected and admitted a pupil in the "School for the Indigent Blind," in St. George's Fields, Southwark, the said school being a charitable institution supported by voluntary subscriptions, out of the funds of which the pupils are gratuitously clothed, maintained and educated. On the 19th of June, 1868, being then upwards of 21 years of age, he was discharged in accordance with the regulations of the school, and returned to his mother and stepfather, by whom he was maintained and lodged as before, until March, 1869, when he became chargeable to the respondent union. An order having been obtained for his removal to the appellant union,—Held, that he had acquired the status of irremovability, and therefore could not be removed.

On appeal against an order of two justices for the removal of Walter Hopkinson from the Abingdon Union, in the counties of Berks and Oxford, to the Henley Union, the sessions quashed the order, subject to the following CASE.

The pauper, Walter Hopkinson, was born in the parish of Rotherfield Greys, in the county of Oxford, in the appellants' union of Henley-on-Thames, on the 13th of January, 1847, being the bastard child of one Jane Hopkinson, a single woman, then residing in Rotherfield Greys.

On the 10th of November, 1858, Jane Hopkinson, the pauper's mother, was married to one William Roberts at Henley-on-Thames. She continued to reside with her husband at Henley-on-Thames for more than a year after her marriage, and then removed with him to Reading, where they resided till the 16th of June, 1861, when they removed to Littlemore, in the county of Oxford, in the respondent's union, where they have resided ever since. The parish of Littlemore is not the parish of settlement of the said William Roberts.

The pauper lived with his mother and stepfather, and was maintained by them until the 5th of August, 1862, when he was duly elected and admitted a pupil at the "School for the Indigent Blind," in St. George's Fields, Southwark, being then about 15 years and six months old. The said school, which is maintained for educational purposes only, is a charitable institution supported by voluntary contributions, and is under the management of a committee. The pupils are elected by the votes of the subscribers, and are lodged, clothed, fed and taught out of the funds of the institution. They are discharged by the committee when they are sufficiently instructed, or when they attain the age of 21 years, and are also removable for misconduct.

The pauper remained at the school as a pupil until the 19th of June, 1868, when he was discharged by order of the committee, being then more than 21 years old. During his residence there the pauper was wholly supported, maintained, lodged and fed out of the funds of the school, and neither his mother nor stepfather contributed to his support during such residence, but he went to them at Littlemore and stayed with them for five weeks in the summer of each of the years 1863, 1864, and 1865, and for six weeks in the summers of 1866 and 1867; the last of such visits terminated in the autumn of 1867. During each of these periods he was supported, maintained, lodged, washed for and fed by his mother and stepfather.

After his discharge from the school, the pauper returned to Littlemore, being then over 21 years of age, having no other place to return to; and remained at Littlemore with, and was supported, clothed, lodged and fed by his said mother and stepfather till the month of March, 1869, when he became chargeable to the respondents' union, never having done any act to acquire any settlement other than his birth settlement aforesaid.

On the 10th of May, 1869, the guardians of the respondents' union obtained an order for the pauper's removal to the appellants' union, against which this appeal was made, and upon the hearing of such appeal, the above facts were admitted or proved, and the Court thereupon drew the inference that there was an animus revertendi in the pauper, and adjudged that the pauper had, under the circumstances, constructively resided with his mother and stepfather in the said parish of Littlemore for more than one year next before the making of the said order without receiving relief, and was therefore irremovable therefrom.

If the Court should be of opinion that the above inference and the judgment of the justices were right in law respectively, the order of the justices is to be confirmed with costs; if otherwise, the order of sessions to be quashed, and the order of removal confirmed with costs.

Pater appeared for the appellants; but the Court called upon Harington (J. B. W. Bros with him) for the respondents.—The pauper's mother and stepfather were under no obligation to receive him on his discharge from the School for the Indigent Blind; and therefore no question of animus revertendi can arise, inasmuch as he had no home of his own to return to—The Queen v. Glossop (1).

[BLACKBURN, J.—In that case the return of the servant depended on a very remote contingency. COCKBURN, C.J.—Is there any legal distinction between the home of a person in the rightful sense of the term and a home into which he is adopted? The pauper lived continually with his mother and stepfather up to the time of his admission into the school, and returned to them with their full concurrence when his connection with the school ceased.]

Even supposing the residence of his mother and stepfather to have been in the first instance his home, his absence from it during the time he remained at the school was a break of residence. This is not like the ordinary case of a child placed away from home for educational purposes at the charges of his parents; the school in this instance was a charitable institution, out of the funds of which the pauper was entitled to be supported, and was during his connection with it for all purposes his home.

COCKBURN, C.J.—I am of opinion that the facts of this case disclose a constructive residence by the pauper in the home of his mother and stepfather. Up to the time of his admission into the school for the blind he resided with them, and it is clear that he always intended, whenever his connection with the school should cease, to return to them, as eventually he did. I see no distinction between a charitable institution, as this school appears to be, and a school in the ordinary sense of the term, and clearly the placing of a child away from home for educational purposes cannot be considered as constituting a break of residence.

BLACKBURN, J.—I am of the same opinion. It is clear that up to the 5th of August, 1862, when the pauper was removed to this institution, his home was that of his mother and stepfather; and I see nothing which warrants us in saying that the pauper ever changed or intended to change that home for another. On the contrary, the circumstances of the case seem to lead to an entirely different conclusion. The pauper ceased to reside with his mother and stepfather, only because an opportunity of education in this school (whether a charitable institution or not makes no difference) was afforded him; and, which seems to me a strong fact in the case, whenever he obtained his annual leave of absence he invariably returned to his former habitation for the purpose of spending his holiday. The sessions have drawn the inference that there was an animus revertendi on the part of the pauper, and we must take it that there was evidence to support that inference.

MELLOR, J.—I am of the same opinion. It is clear that an understanding existed between the pauper, his mother, and stepfather, that their place of residence should be his also, and abundant evidence of that understanding is furnished by the fact of his repeatedly returning to it at the intervals when his absence from the school was permitted.

(1) 35 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 148; s. c. Law Rep. 1 Q.B. 227.

LUSH, J.—As between the pauper, his mother and stepfather, it is clear that an understanding existed that their place of residence should be his; and therefore I think that, upon the facts, the sessions were right in drawing the conclusion they did.

Order of sessions confirmed.

Attorneys—Pattison, Wigg & Co. for appellants;
Dale & Stretton for respondents.

[IN THE COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.]

1870. } THE BRUTON TURNPIKE TRUSTEES,
June 11. } appellants, v. THE WINCANTON
HIGHWAY BOARD, respondents.

Turnpike Road Trust—Application of Tolls.

By a turnpike Act it was enacted that the trustees should apply the moneys arising from tolls, &c., in the first place in defraying the expenses of obtaining the Act, and "in the next place in paying and discharging all interest now due, and owing, and which shall hereafter become due and owing upon any mortgage, &c., of the tolls hereby granted, and in defraying the expenses of building toll-houses, &c.; and in defraying the expenses of altering, improving, repairing, &c., the said roads." The trustees provided for interest accruing in respect of money borrowed upon security of the tolls, and arrears of interest, and no balance remained in their hands which was available for repairs. The road being out of repair, an order of justices under 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50. s. 94, was made upon the trustees to pay a sum for its repair to the surveyor of the Highway Board:—Held, distinguishing The Queen v. Hutchinson (4 E. & B. 200; s. c. 24 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 25), that the order of the justices was wrong.

CASE stated by justices, under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43.

At a Petty Sessions holden for the Petty Sessional Division of Wincanton on the 27th September, 1869, an information was preferred by Benjamin Atwell, the surveyor of the Wincanton Highway Board (the respondents), against the trustees of the Bruton Turnpike Road (the appellants), charging that portions of a certain public highway defined in the information, being part of the appellant's turnpike road, were out of repair, and that the appellants were chargeable with the repairs thereof. The justices thereupon issued a summons against the clerk of the said appellants to shew cause why an order for the payment of the costs of the repairs of the said turnpike road should not be made upon him as clerk, as aforesaid.

Upon the hearing of the case, the clerk to the appellants objected that the justices had no power to make the order without first enquiring into the state of the funds of the trust, and ascertaining that the appellants had in their hands funds applicable for the purpose. Evidence was then given on the part of the appellants that after providing for the interest then accruing in respect of moneys borrowed on the security of the tolls, and for arrears of interest, and also for current simple contract debts then owing by the trust, there would be no balance in the hands of the treasurer. It further appeared that the deficiency was caused by the appellants having recently, and since the issuing of the summons, paid arrears of interest to the amount of 127l. 6s. 6d. It was also stated and found as a fact that the unsound condition of the turnpike road in question had been long known to the appellants, who had declined to repair the same upon the ground that they had no funds for the purpose in hand; and the respondents contended that upon the proper construction of section 12 of the Bruton Turnpike Roads Act (hereinafter set out), the trustees had no authority to pay arrears of interest in priority to the current necessary expenses for the repair of the road, but that an adequate portion of the money so apportioned by them to such arrears, ought to have been expended in repairs.

The justices made an order upon the appellants for the payment of 58l. 18s., which was found to be the costs of repairs, and 12l. 10s. for the costs of the respondents.

The question for the opinion of the Court was whether the appellants were bound to apply an adequate portion of the moneys arising from the tolls to the necessary annual current expenses of maintaining the road in repair in preference to apportioning such moneys to the payment of arrears of interest which had been carried over from the previous years.

Pinder, for the appellants.—This is a proceeding under 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50 (General Highway Act), sect. 94, and the question is whether the appellants as trustees of the Bruton Highway were justified in providing for the payment of arrears of interest in preference to the performance of necessary repairs of the road; the funds in their hands being insufficient for both purposes. By 1 Will. 4. c. lxvi. (Bruton Turnpike Act), s. 12, the tolls, &c., are to be applied, in the first place, in payment of the costs incurred in passing the Act, "and, in the next place, in paying and discharging all interest now due, and owing and which shall hereafter become due upon any mortgage or security of the tolls or duties hereby granted or made payable, and in defraying the expenses of building or erecting toll-houses, toll-gates, and toll-bars, with suitable out-building thereto, and of removing or altering the same or any of them, and in defraying the expenses of altering, raising, widening, improving, repairing and preserving the said roads; and lastly in reducing, paying off and discharging the several principal sums of money due on any such mortgage or securities as aforesaid, and also all other debts and sums now due, and owing and hereafter to become due and owing." The order appealed against was made by the justices upon the authority of The Queen v. Hutchinson (1), where out of the moneys in hand or afterwards to be received the trustees were directed, in the first place, to pay the costs of passing the Act, and to apply the remainder (after defraying certain specified expenses) "from time to time in keeping down the interest of the principal moneys advanced or borrowed on account of the roads, or which may be borrowed on the credit of the Act, and in amending, making, altering, widening, improving and keeping in repair the said roads;" and lastly in the repayment of the principal moneys. There the Court held that the words "keeping down the interest" meant paying the annual interest as it accrued, and did not include the payment of arrears. The Act under which the present question arises expressly directs the payment of all interest due and to become due, and subsequently in the same clause provides for the repairs, &c., of the road; but without giving either branch of expenditure priority over the other; the cases are therefore distinguishable.

F. Bailey, for the respondents.—The Queen v. Hutchinson (1) is conclusive in favour of the order of the justices. Moreover, in delivering judgment in The Queen v. The Trustees, &c., of the South Shields Turnpike Roads (2), Lord Campbell, C.J., in delivering judgment, points out that since the decision in The Queen v. White (3) 13 & 14 Vict. c. 79. s. 4, has made a new appropriation of the funds of turnpike trustees by directing 5 per cent. on the amount of their debt due before the passing of 12 & 13 Vict. c. 87, to be set apart as a sinking fund after the payment of the interest on any moneys owing on account of the tolls, and all other annual liabilities.

Pinder, in reply, referred to the Wearside District Highway Board v. Bambridge (4).

BLACKBURN, J.—I am of opinion that the appellants are entitled to judgment. The section in question, after providing for the costs of obtaining the Act, directs in the second place the payment and discharge of "all interest now due and owing, and which shall hereafter become due upon any mortgage or securities of the tolls and duties granted or made payable," and then, without giving one head of expenditure priority over another, proceeds to provide, amongst other things, for the expenses of repairs; thus, as it

(1) 4 E. & B. 200; s. c. 24 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 25.

(2) 3 E. & B. 599; s. c. 23 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 134.

(3) 4 Q.B. Rep. 101; s. c. 12 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 31.

(4) 35 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 173; s. c. Law Rep. 1 Q.B. 396.

seems to me, leaving the trustees a discretion as to the order of disbursement of the moneys in their hands. In The Queen v. Hutchinson (5) the words "keeping down the interest" were held to mean the payment of the annual interest as it accrued, and not to include the payment of arrears; but the present Act distinctly authorises the payment of interest due and hereafter becoming due. I regret to say, therefore, that the justices were wrong in their construction of the Act.

MELLOR, J., concurred.

LUSH, J.—There is a material difference between the way in which this matter is dealt with in these two Acts. "Keeping down the interest" can apply only to current interest, but the terms "all interest now due and owing, and which shall hereafter become due" are much more extensive, and I think upon the true construction of the Act the appellants were justified in the course they took.

Judgment for the appellants.

Attorneys—Dyne & Harvey, agents for H. Dyne, Bruton, for appellants; Whites, Renard & Floyd, for respondents.

(5) 4 E. & B. 200; a. c. 24 Law J. Rep. (n.s.) M.C. 25.

INDEX

TO THE REPORTS OF CASES

CONNECTED WITH

THE DUTIES AND OFFICE OF MAGISTRATES.

MICHAELMAS TERM, 1869, TO MICHAELMAS TERM, 1870.

- ABANDONING CHILDREN—so as to endanger life. See Children.
- ACQUITTANCE OR RECEIPT. See Forgery.
- AIDING AND ABETTING—in an attempt to rape. See Indictment.
- ALE AND BEER HOUSE—value where the house is in a township of less than 10,000 inhabitants, but in a parish of more—A beerhouse situated in a township having a population of less than 10,000 inhabitants, according to the last parliamentary census, must, if such township be within a parish containing more than 10,000 inhabitants, be rated at one sum to the rate for the relief of the poor of the township in which such house is situate on a rent or annual value of fifteen pounds per annum at the least, or otherwise the license is null and void under the 3 & 4 Vict. c. 61. s. 1. —Mellor, J., hæsitante. Preston v. Buckler, 105 — Conviction for second offence under 32 & 33 Vict. c. 27. s. 17. See Conviction.
- Sunday Trading. See Public House.
- AMENDMENT—of commitment. See Habeas Corpus.
- APPEAL—when it lies. See Highway.
- Service of notice of appeal. See Excise.
- Imprisonment for non-payment of costs of appeal. See Debtor and Creditor.
- ARBITRATION—power to award costs on reference by sessions of matter in dispute—An order of sessions for a reference of the "matter in dispute" to an arbitrator to inquire into and arbitrate thereon, does not give the arbitrator power to award costs. West London Extension Rail. Co. v. Assessment Committee of Fulham Union (Q.B. 178), 149
- ASSAULT—Conviction for, on indictment for carnally abusing a girl between ten and twelve. See Indictment.
- Ouster of jurisdiction of justices. See Jurisdiction.
- BASTARDY—Costs on appeal. See Debtor and Creditor.
- BEERHOUSE. See Ale and Beer House.
- BILLIARDS—license: prohibition of exciseable liquors: beer not an exciseable liquor—By the terms of the license granted for keeping a house for public billiard playing given in the schedule to 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, it is provided that the licensee "do not knowingly allow the consumption of exciseable liquors therein." By 11 Geo. 4. and 1 Will. 4. c. 57, the excise duty on beer which had previously been charged was repealed; and it was expressly provided that the hereditary duties thereon should not be collected during the reign of his Majesty:—Held, that beer is not an exciseable liquor within the meaning of the prohibition in a billiard license.—Lancashire v. The Justices of Staffordshire followed. Jones v. Whittaker, 139
- BILLS OF SALE ACT—False affidavit under. See Perjury.
- BRIDGE—liability to repair as a highway or as a county bridge—A public bridge repairable by immemorial custom by the inhabitants of a hundred, is not a highway within 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50. s. 5, which enacts "that the word 'highways' shall be understood to mean all roads, bridges (not being county bridges), carriage-ways," &c.; but such bridge is a county bridge, and repairable by the hundred, within the exception of county bridges. Reg. v. The Inhabitants of the Upper Half Hundred of Chart and Longbridge, 107
- BUILDING SOCIETY. See Forgery.
- CERTIORARI. See Highway.
- CHILDREN—abandonment and exposure of, endangering life—The prisoners were convicted on an indictment which charged that they did abandon and expose a child, under the age of two years, whereby the life of the child was endangered.

The indictment was framed on the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100. s. 27. One of the prisoners was the mother of the child, which was illegitimate, and both the prisoners put the child in a hamper at S., wrapped up in a shawl, and packed with shavings and cotton wool, and the mother took the hamper to the booking office of the railway station at M., and left it, having paid the carriage of it to G. The hamper was addressed to the lodgings of the father of the child at G. She told the clerk at the office to be very careful of it, and to send it by the next train, which was due in ten minutes from that time. Upon the address were the words written, "With care; to be delivered immediately." The hamper was carried by the passenger train, and was delivered at its address in a little less than an hour from leaving M. On its being opened the child was found alive. The child was taken by the relieving officer the same evening to the union work-house, where it lived for three weeks afterwards, when it died from causes not attributable to the conduct of the prisoners, or either of them. It was proved to have been a delicate child:—Held, by a majority of the Judges, that the conviction was right. Reg. v. Falkingham, 47 — Conviction for assault on indictment for carnally abusing. See Indictment.

COUNTERFEIT—procedure on trial for knowingly having counterfeit coin in possession after a previous conviction for uttering. See Practice.

COMMITMENT—amendment of. See Habeas Corpus.

CONCEALMENT OF BIRTH—secret disposition of the dead body—Prisoner put the dead body of her child over a wall, which was four and a half feet high, and divided a yard from a field. The yard was at the back of a public-house, and entered from the street by a narrow passage. Prisoner did not live at the public-house, and must have carried the body from the street up the passage to the yard. The field was grazed by the cattle of a butcher, and the only entrance to it was through a gate leading from the butcher's own yard. There was no path through the field, and a person in the field could only see the body in case they went up to the wall, close against which the body lay. A little girl, picking flowers in the field, found the body of the child, twenty yards from the gate. There was nothing on or over the body to conceal it:—Held, that there was evidence to go to the jury of a secret disposition of the dead body of the child, and a conviction for endeavouring to conceal the birth of the child, by secretly disposing of its dead body, was confirmed. Reg. v. Brown, 94

CONVICTION—for second offence where former offence not ejusdem generis—In August, 1869, and after the passing of 32 & 33 Vict. c. 27, S., a beer-house keeper, was convicted for keeping her house open for the sale of beer on Sunday, before half-past twelve o'clock in the day time. On the 6th of October, 1869, she was convicted for refusing to admit a constable to her premises:—Held, that the justices had power, under

s. 17 of 32 & 33 Vict. c. 27, to treat this as a second offence, and under 4 & 5 Will. 4. c. 85. s. 7, to order that S. should be disqualified from selling beer, &c., by retail for the space of two years. Ex parte Short, 63

— See Habeas Corpus. Poison. Vaccination.

CORRUPT PRACTICES PREVENTION ACTS. See Perjury.

COSTS—Enforcing costs on appeal. See Debtor and creditor.

— upon order of reference by sessions. See Arbitration.

— on quashing conviction. See Public House.

COUNTY BRIDGE. See Bridge.

DEBTOR AND CREDITOR—imprisonment for non-payment of costs on appeal to quarter sessions—Default in payment of costs ordered to be paid by respondent in an appeal to sessions against an affiliation order is a default in payment of a sum of money recoverable summarily before a justice of the peace within the exception of the Debtors' Act, 1869, and such defaulting respondent is not protected by the Act from imprisonment. Reg. v. Pratt, 73

DEPOSITIONS—Signature by justices. See Evidence.

DISTRICT SURVEYOR—Fees. See Metropolitan Building Act, 1855.

EMBEZZLEMENT—prosecution by illegal society—A society in the nature of a friendly society, but having rules—(not enrolled or certified under the Friendly Societies Acts)—certain of which are in restraint of trade, and therefore void, is not an illegal society in the sense that it is disabled from prosecuting a servant for embezzlement. Reg. v. Stainer, 54

EVIDENCE—deposition of person deceased, or so ill as to be unable to travel: signature of justice—By 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42. s. 17, the depositions of the witnesses produced on the examination before justices against a person charged with an indictable offence, "shall be read over to, and signed, respectively, by the witnesses," and "shall be signed also by the justice or justices taking the same;" and if, upon the trial of the person accused, it shall be proved that any person whose deposition shall have been taken as aforesaid is dead, or so ill as not to be able to travel, then, after proof of certain matters, "if such deposition purport to be signed by the justice or justices before whom the same purports to have been taken, it shall be lawful to read such deposition in evidence in such prosecution, unless it shall be proved that such deposition was not in fact signed by the justice purporting to sign the same." By the schedule (M) to the Act, the caption runs, "the examination of C. D. and E. F. taken, &c.;" and the conclusion is, "the above depositions of C. D. and E. F. were taken and (sworn) before me at — on the day and year first above mentioned." On the trial of a person committed by justices under the above section a deposition of a deceased witness appeared to be the second of four depositions made at the same hearing, all of which were pinned together, each occupying more than one piece of paper. The justices had not signed either of the sheets on which the depositions were written, except the last, and that sheet did not contain any part of the deposition in question, but their signatures were appended at the end of the last deposition to a statement in the form copied from schedule M. "The above depositions (naming the several witnesses, and amongst them the deceased) were taken and sworn before us also."—Held, that such depositions were properly received in evidence, and that it is not necessary that the separate deposition of each witness should be signed by the justices, but that it is sufficient if the depositions are signed as a body by the justices, according to the conclusion of schedule M. to the Act. Reg. v. Parker, 60

EVIDENCE (continued)—of ship being a British ship upon indictment for wounding with intent—On the trial of an indictable offence, committed on board a British ship on the high seas, it is not necessary to prove the register of such ship under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, part 11, or that she belongs to a person qualified to be owner of a British ship according to the terms of that Act. And upon the trial of an indictment against a sailor for wounding the mate on board a ship on the high seas, the master of the ship, the boatswain, and one of the crew, having stated the ship was a British ship, and was sailing under the British flag, it was held, the ship was sufficiently proved to be a British ship. Reg. v. Von Seberg, 133 — of previous conviction under Habitual Criminals Act. See Receiving Stolen Goods.

Excise—service of notice of appeal; and of notice of hearing—Service in Court of notice of appeal against an adjudication under the Excise Act (7 & 8 Geo. 4. c. 53) upon the clerk to the justices in their presence is a good service on the justices themselves. Reg. v. Eaves, 70

Service of the notice of the time for hearing the appeal on a clerk in the office of excise is not a good service under 4 Vict. c. 20. s. 30, that section requiring service to be made on the person laying the information. Ibid.

Excisable Liquors. See Billiards.

FACTORY—slate quarry: meaning of term "premises"—A slate quarry occupying with its accessories a large tract of land, uninclosed and approachable by no definite road or entrance, and furnished with covered sheds to which the rough blocks of material when raised are conveyed and there converted by a manufacturing process into slates, flags and other saleable articles, is not within the meaning of the term "premises" in the 30 & 31 Vict. c. 103. s. 3. sub-section 7. Kent v. Astley, 3

FALSE PRETENCES—obtaining the use of a horse—By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96. s. 88, whoever shall by any false pretence obtain from any other person any chattel, &c., with intent to defraud, shall be guilty of misdemeanour. To constitute an obtaining of a chattel, &c., within this section, there must, as in larceny, be an intention to deprive the owner wholly of his property; and merely to obtain the loan of a chattel by false pretences with intent, &c., is not within the section. Reg. v. Kilham, 109

The prisoner, by false pretences, obtained from a livery stable keeper a horse on hire for a third person, rode it himself during the time of hiring, and returned it to the stables afterwards:—Held, that a conviction for obtaining the horse by false pretences with intent, &c., was bad, and must be quashed. Ibid.

FORGERY—antedating one's own deed—A, by deed bearing date on the 7th of May, 1868, conveyed on that day certain lands to B in fee. Subsequently, on the 26th of April, 1869, C produced a deed, bearing date the 12th of March, 1868, purporting to be a demise of the same land for a long term of years, as from the 25th of March, 1868, from A to C. It was found by the jury that the alleged lease was executed after A's conveyance to B, and ante-dated for the purpose of defrauding B:—Held, that A and C were guilty of forgery. Reg. v. Ritson, 10

— acquittance or receipt for money: clearance ticket: friendly society—A friendly society had branches in various towns. A member belonging to one branch could not be received into the court of another branch as a clearance member without a writing called a "clearance" certifying that he had paid all the dues and demands of the branch to which he belonged, and authorising the other branch to receive him:—Held, that such "clearance" was not an acquittance or receipt for money within section 23 of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98; and a conviction for forging such document was quashed. Reg. v. French, 68

— warrant, authority, or request, for the payment of money: building society: receipt of depositor—A building society was in the habit of taking money on deposit at interest, and upon repaying such deposit required a receipt to be given by the depositor for the amount repaid. The prisoner was convicted of forging one of such receipts, which was in the following form:—"Received of the South Lancashire Building Society the sum of 417l. 18s. on account of my share, No. 8071, pp. Sussey Ambler, William Kay." Sussey Ambler was the depositor, and the prisoner a local agent of the society. By the custom of the society such a document was treated as an authority, warrant, or request to pay the deposit, but not as an order:—Held, that the above document might be described in the indictment as a warrant, authority, or request for the payment of money by procuration within the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98. s. 24. Reg. v. Kay, 118

FRIENDLY SOCIETY—when an illegal society and incapable of prosecuting. See Embezzlement.

— See Forgery.

GAME—taking on Sunday: snare: “engine or instrument”—The 1 & 2 Will. 4. c. 32. s. 3, provides that “if any person whatsoever shall kill or take game, or use any dog, gun, net, or other engine or instrument for the purpose of killing or taking any game on a Sunday or Christmas Day, such person shall, on conviction thereof, forfeit and pay for every such offence such sum of money, not exceeding 5*l.*, as to the said justices shall seem meet.” The appellant on Friday and Saturday, the 13th and 14th of August, was setting snares made of wire upon land over which, by consent of the owner and occupier, he had the right of sporting. Upon the following Sunday the snares were still set, and on that day two dead grouse were found caught in two of them. The appellant had a proper excise license to kill game:—Held, first, that a snare is an “engine” or “instrument” within the section; and, second, that although the appellant was not upon the land on the Sunday, he was liable to be convicted for using the snares on that day for the purpose of taking game. Allen v. Thompson, 102

HABEAS CORPUS—amendment of commitment—Where a prisoner is brought up under a writ of habeas corpus, and the commitment is insufficient, and the conviction has not been brought before the Court by certiorari, the Court is not justified in looking at the conviction for the purpose of amending the commitment by it, nor in detaining the prisoner in custody until the conviction is brought up by certiorari. Ex parte Tinson, 129

HABITUAL CRIMINALS ACT—onus of proof of previous conviction. See Receiving Stolen Goods.

HIGHWAY—right of ploughing up surface of footpath: limited dedication—The appellant was convicted under 5 & 6 Wm. 4. c. 50. s. 72, for destroying and injuring the surface of a highway, by ploughing it up. It appeared that a footway ran through a field of which the defendant was occupier. There was no evidence of the existence of this footpath before living memory, and no evidence of any limited dedication of the way to the public. It was proved, however, that within living memory it had been used as a footway by the public, and that the appellant and the previous occupier had, during all this time, ploughed it up in the manner now complained of:—Held, that the conviction was wrong, for the proper inference from the facts was, that the exercise of the right of ploughing up the path had been coeval with the user of the way by the public. The way must therefore be considered as having been dedicated and accepted by the public, subject to the inconvenience of being occasionally ploughed up, and that there was no legal objection to such a limited dedication of a way. Mercer v. Woodgate, 21 proceedings” under 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 58]—By 27 & 28 Vict. c. 101. s. 21, when any highway board consider any highway unnecessary for public use, they may direct the district surveyor to apply to two justices to view the same, and thereupon the like proceedings shall be had as when application is made under the Highway Act, 1835, “to procure the stopping up of any highway, save only,” &c. And by section 2, that Act is to be construed as one with the Highway Act, 1862, which by section 42 of that Act is to be construed as one with 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50. By 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50. s. 85, the proceedings for stopping up and diverting a highway are provided for, and by section 88 an appeal to Quarter Sessions is given to any person injured or aggrieved by an order to stop up any unnecessary highway under that Act:—Held, that an appeal to Quarter Sessions lay under 27 & 28 Vict. c. 101. s. 21, against the making of an order of sessions directing that a highway should cease to be a highway which the parish is liable to repair. Reg. v. Justices of Surrey, 49

—order of sessions that highway shall cease to be a highway which the parish is liable to repair: appeal under 27 & 28 Vict. c. 101. s. 21: like NEW SERIES, 39.—MAG. CAS.

— notices preliminary to order for stopping up highway: certiorari: person aggrieved]—By 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50. s. 84, justices are empowered to view highways which it is proposed to divert or stop up, and to certify that they are unnecessary, upon proof that a notice in a prescribed form has been affixed at the place and by the side of each end of the highway from which the same is proposed to be diverted or stopped up. By 27 & 28 Vict. c. 101. s. 21, the proceedings under the former Act may be adopted for the purpose of certifying that a highway is unnecessary for public use. Three roads, each in a separate parish, formed one system, and consisted of three limbs, running from three turnpike roads at the points A, B, and C, and meeting at a central point D, so as to form a figure like that of the capital letter Y. The justices, purporting to act under 27 & 28 Vict. c. 101. s. 21, made three certificates as to each of the three highways. The roads referred to in the certificates were described, one as running from D to A, another as running from D to B, and a third as running from D to C. The certificates also recited that the requisite notices had been given. It appeared that a notice was placed at the points A, B, and C, but not at the central point D. The certificates having been affirmed on appeal to sessions, —Held, that a certiorari must issue for the purpose of quashing the orders of sessions, as each of the three orders related to a separate highway, one end of which was at D, so that the prescribed notices had not been given, and the certificate was invalid. Reg. v. The Justices of Surrey, 145

The applicant for the certiorari resided in the neighbourhood of the highways to which the certificates related:—Held, that, by reason of his residence, he was in the condition of a person aggrieved, and entitled to the certiorari as of right. Ibid.

Y

— See Bridge.

IMPRISONMENT FOR DEBT—Non-payment of costs on appeal. See Debtor and Creditor.

INDICTMENT—form of: surplusage: false declaration—An indictment charged the prisoner with the offence of making a false declaration before a justice, that he had lost a pawnbroker's ticket, "whereas in truth and in fact he had not lost the said ticket, but had sold, lent, or deposited it, as a security to one S. C., &c."—Held, that the allegation "but had sold, lent, or deposited it, &c.," did not render the indictment ambiguous or uncertain, but was pure surplusage, which might be rejected and need not be proved. The Queen v. Richards overruled. Reg. v. Parker, 60 — aiding and abetting a felon: aiding in attempt to rape—An indictment against H. and W. charged H. with rape, and W. with aiding and abetting the said rape. They were found not guilty of those charges, but the jury found H. guilty of attempting to commit the rape charged, and W. of aiding and abetting H. in the attempt.—Held, that W. was rightly convicted of misdemeanour. Reg. v. Wyatt, 83

— abusing girl between ages of ten and twelve: verdict of common assault—The indictment contained one count, and charged that the prisoner in and upon a girl between the ages of ten and twelve "unlawfully did make an assault and her did then unlawfully and carnally know and abuse against the form," &c. The offence of carnally knowing and abusing was disproved, but there was evidence of an indecent assault, which was left to the jury, who found the prisoner guilty of a common assault.—Held, that the indictment charged an assault as a distinct and separable offence, and that the conviction was good. Reg. v. Guthrie, 96

— Surplusage. See Perjury.

IRISH POOR—desertion by husband: removal of wife and children—The wife and unemancipated children of an Irishman, all born in Ireland, becoming chargeable to an English parish by reason of the desertion of the husband, cannot, in his absence, be removed to the Irish settlement of the wife under the 8 & 9 Vict. c. 117, s. 2. That section makes no provision for such a case, but contemplates their removal to the husband's place of settlement only, as members of his family, and with him. Poor-Law Commissioners for Ireland v. Select Vestry of Liverpool, 25

IRREMOVABILITY. See Irish Poor. Order of Removal. Pauper Lunatic.

JURISDICTION OF JUSTICES—title to land in question: excess—The power given to justices by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 42, of summarily hearing and determining charges of assault and battery is by s. 46 ousted in any case where a question as to the title to land arises, and they cannot in such a case convict the defendant for using more violence than was necessary. Reg. v. Pearson, 76

LARCENY—taking: mock auction: influence of threat—Prosecutrix entered a sale-room, where a mock auction was being held. Prisoner was auctioneer, and knocked down a piece of cloth to prosecutrix for twenty-six shillings, for which she had not bid, as he knew. Prosecutrix denied that she had bid; prisoner asserted that she had, and must pay for it before she could leave. Prosecutrix tried to go out of the room, when a confederate standing between her and the door also said that she had bid, and prevented her leaving. She then in fear paid the money, and took away the cloth which was given to her.—Held, that these facts constituted a larceny, as they sufficiently shewed that the money was obtained from the prosecutrix against her will. Reg. v. Macgrath, 7

LICENSE. See Ale and Beer House. Billiards.

LOCAL BOARD. See Public Health Act.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT ACT—general district rate: railway not constructed under parliamentary powers not rateable upon reduced scale—Under the Local Government Act, 1858 (21 & 22 Vict. c. 98), s. 55, which enacts that the occupier of land used only as a railway constructed under the powers of any Act of Parliament for public conveyance shall be assessed in respect of the same in the proportion of one-fourth part only of such net annual value thereof, a line of railway which though actually worked and used under the provisions of different Acts of Parliament, was originally constructed by private agreement, without any parliamentary powers, is not rateable upon the reduced scale, but upon the full annual value. The North-Eastern Rail. Co. v. The Local Board of Leadgate, 65

MAINTENANCE. See Order of Maintenance. Pauper Lunatic.

MERCHANT SHIPPING ACT—Proof of ship being a British ship. See Evidence.

METROPOLITAN BUILDING ACT, 1855—fees due to district surveyor—The fees due under the Metropolitan Building Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 122), s. 51, to a district surveyor, one month after the roof of any building surveyed by him in pursuance of the Act shall have been covered in, are payable by whomsoever at that time answers the description of "builder, occupier, or owner," and cannot be charged upon a person subsequently becoming the owner of the premises. Tubb v. Good, 135

MISDEMEANOUR—Conviction for, on indictment for perjury. See Perjury.

NOTICE OF APPEAL—service of upon clerk to the justices. See Excise.

NUISANCE—information by inhabitant under 23 & 24 Vict. c. 77, s. 13: summons without previous notice to abate nuisance—Under 23 & 24 Vict. c. 77, s. 13 (amended by 29 & 30 Vict. c. 90, part 2), a justice of the peace upon the complaint of any inhabitant of any parish or place of the existence of any nuisance on any private premises in the same parish or place, may issue a summons requiring the person by whose act, default, permission, or sufferance, the nuisance arises, &c., or if such person cannot be found or ascertained, the owner or occupier of the premises on which the nuisance arises, to appear before justices, &c., without proof of the service of a previous notice to abate the nuisance. Cocker v. Cardwell, 28

ORDER OF MAINTENANCE—wife chargeable to union without her husband: wife leaving husband through his misconduct: offer of husband to receive his wife back—By the Poor Law Amendment Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 122), s. 33, when a married woman requires relief without her husband, the guardians of the union or parish, or the overseers of the parish, as the case may be, to which she becomes chargeable, may apply to the justices having jurisdiction in such union or parish in petty sessions assembled, and thereupon such justices may summon such husband to appear before them, to shew cause why an order should not be made upon him to maintain his wife; and upon his appearance, or in the event of his not appearing, upon proof of due service of such summons upon him, such justices may, after hearing such wife upon oath, or receiving such other evidence as they may deem sufficient, make an order upon him to pay such sum, weekly or otherwise, towards the cost of the relief of the wife, as after consideration of all the circumstances of the case shall appear to them to be proper, &c. A husband having been summoned before justices under this section, it appeared that his wife had, about sixteen years previously, left his house, owing to his ill-usage, and had ever since lived separate from him. At the hearing of the summons she was still suffering from injury which she had received from him before their separation. He now offered to receive back his wife and promised not to ill use her, but she refused to go back, and there was medical evidence to shew that it would be dangerous for her to return to cohabitation:—Held, that the justices had jurisdiction, notwithstanding the husband's offer, to make an order, under the above section, upon him for the maintenance of his wife. Thomas v. Alsop, 43

ORDER OF REMOVAL—wife's status of irremovability during husband's absence: husband a foreigner without a settlement—A woman, after residing for more than a year in the same parish, married an American sailor who had no settlement in England, and lived with him in the parish for a few days. He then left her and went to sea, and during his absence an order was made for her removal from the parish to her maiden settlement. After the making of this order the husband returned:—Held, that the order must be quashed, as the cardinal principle of the Acts relating to irremovability appeared to be, that where there was no question of the separation of husband and wife, the hardship of removal should, if possible, be avoided, so that the wife having once acquired a status of irremovability, did not lose it by her marriage with one who had no settlement. Reg. v. The Inhabitants of St. George-in-the-East, 90

—irremovability: wife deserted by husband: unemancipated child—On December 12, 1867, an order was made for the removal of Lucy L. and her daughter Lucy from the respondent parish to the appellant union. For more than one year next before the application for the order, Lucy L. and her daughter had resided together in the respondent parish; the daughter being eighteen years of age, and unemancipated at the date of the order. About thirteen years before that date Lucy L. and her husband were living, together with their children, in the parish of M. They quarrelled in consequence of his intimacy with another woman, and she, having attempted to stab him, was bound over to keep the peace towards him. He took other lodgings for himself, where he lived with the other woman. In consequence of his wife becoming chargeable, the parish officers of M. threatened him with legal proceedings if he did not maintain her. He agreed to allow her a weekly sum of money, and this he paid up to the date of the application for the order of removal. She remained in the lodgings which the family had occupied before the separation till she removed into the respondent parish, and there resided, as above mentioned, with her daughter. Their place of settlement was in the appellant union:—Held, that Lucy L. was irremovable, inasmuch as she had been deserted by her husband within the meaning of the 3rd section of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 56, amended by 29 & 30 Vict. c. 113. s. 17; but that the daughter, being unemancipated and above the age of sixteen years, was removable. Reg. v. The Inhabitants of St. Mary, Islington, 137

—irremovability: break of residence—The pauper, a bastard, was born in the appellant union, where his mother afterwards married, the pauper living with and being maintained by her and his stepfather there until their subsequent removal to the respondent union in June, 1861, where they have since resided, and whither he removed with them. In 1862, being then upwards of fifteen years of age, the pauper was elected and admitted a pupil in the "School for the Indigent Blind," in St. George's Fields, Southwark, the said school being a charitable institution supported by voluntary subscriptions, out of the funds of which the pupils are gratuitously clothed, maintained, and educated. On the 19th of June, 1868, being then upwards of twenty-one years of age, he was discharged in accordance with the regulations of the school, and returned to his mother and stepfather, by whom he was maintained and lodged as before, until March, 1869, when he became chargeable to the respondent union. An order having been obtained for his removal to the appellant union, —Held, that he had acquired the status of irremovability, and therefore could not be removed. Reg. v. Guardians of the Alington Union, 153

— Irremovability. See Irish Poor. Pauper Lunatic.

PARTNERS—Receiving partnership goods stolen by partner. See Receiving Stolen Goods.

PAUPER LUNATIC—order of maintenance: irremovability: removal of lunatic by parents: break in residence—A domestic servant, who had acquired the status of irremovability by residence in the R. Union, was seized with madness and was removed by her relations from her master's house to the residence of her parents in a different union. Her wages were paid in full and her master had no intention of receiving her back in his house. After staying with her parents for a single night, she was sent to the workhouse of the second union, and seven days afterwards taken to the County Lunatic Asylum:—Held, that the removal of the lunatic under these circumstances, without any exercise of will on her part, did not constitute a break in her residence, so as to deprive her of her status of irremovability, and that the order for her maintenance under 16 & 17 Vict. c. 97. ss. 97, 102, must be made on the R. Union and not on the union in which was the place of her settlement. See, per Hannen, J., that while the incapacity of the lunatic continued, no change in her residence could take place so as to affect her status of irremovability. Reg. v. Whitby Union, 97

PERJURY—false affidavit under Bills of Sale Act: misdemeanour: indictment: surplusage—Prisoner was indicted for wilful and corrupt perjury in making a false affidavit before a Commissioner for taking oaths in the Court of Queen's Bench, for the purpose of getting a bill of sale filed under the Bills of Sale Act, 1854:—Held, a misdemeanour though not wilful and corrupt perjury. Reg. v. Hodgkiss, 14

Held also, that the conclusion of the indictment for perjury, "that so the defendant did commit wilful and corrupt perjury" might be rejected as surplusage, and therefore that a conviction for the misdemeanour was right upon such an indictment. Ibid.

— evidence: Corrupt Practices Prevention Acts: protection of witness—By 26 Vict. c. 29. s. 7, no person called before Commissioners of inquiry under the Corrupt Practices Prevention Acts shall be excused from answering any question relative to any corrupt practices at the election under inquiry on the ground that the answer may tend to criminate himself; and if any information, &c., should be at any time thereafter pending in any Court against such witness for any offence under the Corrupt Practices Prevention Acts, committed by him previously to the time of giving his evidence, the Court should, on production of a certificate given to him by the Commissioners, stay the proceedings in such information, &c., and may award the witness his costs. "Provided that no statement made by any person, in answer to any question put by or before such election committee or Commissioners, shall, except in cases of indictments for perjury, be admissible in evidence in any proceeding, criminal or civil." A witness before such Commissioners of inquiry was, after giving his evidence before it, indicted for perjury committed before a Judge, on the trial of an election petition in respect of the same election with reference to which he was examined before the Commissioners. Statements made by such witness, in answer to questions put by the Commissioners relative to corrupt practices at such election, were given in evidence against him to prove the indictment for perjury:—Held, that the exception in the proviso to 26 Vict. c. 29. s. 7, as to cases of indictments for perjury, must be considered to mean perjury committed in answers to questions put by the Commissioners on the inquiry, and not to perjury generally, and therefore that the above evidence was not admissible. Reg. v. Buttle, 115

PLEADING. See Indictment.

POISON—sale of to person unknown: medicine: bona fides—Under the Pharmacy Act, 1868, 31 & 32 Vict. c. 121. s. 17, a chemist who bona fide believes he is dispensing a prescription given by a medical man to a person named at the foot of the prescription cannot be convicted for selling poison to a person unknown to him, but must be taken to have dispensed a medicine according to the proviso to s. 17. Berry v. Henderson, 77

A chemist cannot be convicted of selling poison to a person unknown, and also for selling poison in a bottle not labelled "poison" in respect of the same sale. Ibid.

POOR. See Irish Poor. Order of Removal. Pauper Lunatic.

POOR RATE—occupation of port, harbour, and tidal river piers—By an Act of Parliament certain Commissioners were authorised and required to deepen and cleanse the channel of a harbour, and to make an artificial entrance with piers, by which ships might pass from the sea into the harbour. Tolls were to be paid in respect of such vessels as entered the harbour, but were not to be received to the full amount authorised by the Act until the whole works were completed. The piers were erected, and the channel deepened and cleansed, and the Commissioners received tolls in respect of the vessels which entered the harbour. There was nothing in the Act to shew that they were to be considered as purchasers or owners of the land upon which the works were to be done:—Held, first, as to the channel, that the Commissioners had simply a power to make a right of passage from the sea to the harbour, and that they were not rateable to the poor rates in respect of such right of passage; secondly, that, although they were occupiers of the land upon which the piers stood, yet that the occupation could not be taken to be enhanced in value by the revenue derived from the tolls, inasmuch as an occupier of the piers would get no part of the tolls, or derive any benefit from the harbour, and therefore that the appellants were not liable to be rated to the poor rates, the piers themselves being worth nothing. The Commissioners for Improving the Harbour of New Shoreham v. The Churchwardens and Overseers of Lancing, 121

PRACTICE—procedure on trial for knowingly having counterfeit coin in possession after previous conviction for uttering—Upon the trial of an indictment for the felony of having committed a misdemeanour within either of sections 9, 10, or 11 of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99 relating to the unlawful possession and uttering of counterfeit coin after a previous conviction for a misdemeanour within those sections, the prisoner must be arraigned upon the subsequent offence, and evidence respecting the subsequent offence must first be submitted to the jury, and the previous conviction must not be inquired into until after the verdict on the charge of the subsequent offence. Reg. v. Martin, 31

— under the Habitual Criminals Act. See Receiving Stolen Goods.

PRISON—liability of borough to expense of enlarging county gaol: repairs, alterations, additions, and improvements in or to prison—By 5 & 6 Vict. c. 98, s. 18, a borough with a separate Court of Sessions, sending its prisoners to the county gaol without any special contract, shall pay the expense incurred in the conveyance, transport, maintenance, safe custody and care of every such prisoner, according to the time he shall remain in custody there, at the average daily cost of each prisoner according to the whole number of prisoners confined in the prison, including in such expenses all expenses of "repairs, alterations, additions, and improvements in or to the prison":—Held, that any such borough is bound to contribute, in the proportion above mentioned, not only towards the cost of the necessary and ordinary repairs of the county gaol, but towards the cost of enlarging it, according to the provisions of the Prison Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 126). Reg. v. The Mayor, &c., of Wigan, 68

PUBLIC HEALTH ACT—notice to pave streets not being highways—A notice by a local board of health to the owner of houses abutting upon a street not being a highway, to sewer, level, pave, flag and channel the same, in pursuance of the Public Health Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 63), s. 69, is not invalid by reason of the plans and sections of the required works deposited under the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 61, s. 16, including narrow strips of land in front of the houses, not open to or used by the public. Hall v. Potter, 1

PUBLIC HOUSE—opening on Sunday during prohibited hours: costs—A was charged before justices, under 11 & 12 Vict. c. 49, with having opened his house for the sale of wine and beer on Sunday, before half-past twelve. He kept a refreshment room communicating with a railway station; he had a notice thereon as to the penalties incurred in case of persons not travellers having refreshment during prohibited hours; he had ordered his servants to ask persons if they were going by train; eight persons were in the room within the prohibited time; he had questioned six of them, but his servant neglected to question two who came in during A's absence; of the eight persons, four were strangers who went off by train which started shortly after their entering the room; the others resided about a quarter or half-mile off, and three of them took tickets and went by the train, whilst the fourth had accompanied his son, who went by it. The justices convicted A:—Held, that the conviction was wrong. Copley v. Burton, 141

The Court in future will, on quashing a conviction of this kind, do so with costs. Ibid.

RAILWAY—obstructing by altering signals—The prisoner in the night time altered the position of two arms of a semaphore signal on a railway station, so as to change the signal from "all clear" to "danger" and "caution" respectively, and also altered the colour of two distant signals from white to red, thereby changing the signal from "clear" to "danger." The driver of a goods train, which under ordinary circumstances would have passed through the station without slackening speed, in consequence of the state of the signals shut off steam and approached the station so cautiously that he could at any moment have come to a standstill. The mail train following the goods train on the same line of rails, was due at the station half an hour after the goods train so passed through the station:—Held (Martin, B., dissentiente), that the prisoner had caused the engine and train to be obstructed within the meaning of section 36 of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97. Reg. v. Hadfield, 131

— when not rateable on reduced scale. See Local Government Act.

RATE. See Local Government Act. POOR RATE.

RECEIPT—for money. See Forgery.

RECEIVING STOLEN GOODS—receiving partnership goods stolen by partner—The statute 31 & 32 Vict. c. 116, s. 1, by which a partner or joint owner in goods is rendered liable to be convicted of stealing goods, in respect of which he is so jointly interested, does not render the receiver of such goods, knowing the same to have been stolen by such partner, liable to be convicted as such receiver under the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 91. Reg. v. Smith, 112

A and B were in partnership, and B, in fraud of the partnership, disposed of the goods of the firm to the prisoner, who knowingly received the same. The prisoner was indicted and convicted under the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 91:—Held, that the conviction could not be supported. Ibid.

Semble, that the prisoner might have been indicted and convicted as an accessory to or after the felony, either at common law or under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 94, ss. 1, 3. Ibid.

RECEIVING STOLEN GOODS (continued)—evidence: previous conviction: onus of proof: notice: Habitual Criminals Act, 1869—By the Habitual Criminals Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 99), s. 11, where any person who has been previously convicted of any offence specified in the first schedule hereto, and involving fraud or dishonesty, is found in the possession of stolen goods, evidence of such previous conviction shall be admissible as evidence of his knowledge that such goods have been stolen; and in any proceedings that may be taken against him as receiver of stolen goods, or, &c., proof may be given of his previous conviction before evidence is given of his having been found in possession of such stolen goods: provided that not less than seven days' notice shall be given to such person that proof is intended to be given of his previous conviction, and that he will be deemed to have known such goods to have been stolen until he has proved the contrary. On the trial of a receiver of stolen goods, a notice was proved to have been duly given him in the above form, and a previous conviction for larceny was proved against him, and such evidence was relied on as proof of guilty knowledge. The prisoner offered no evidence to rebut such evidence of guilty knowledge:—Held, that in the absence of any enactment in the statute, that he should be deemed to have known such goods to have been stolen until he proved the contrary, the notice could not have the effect it purported to have, and that such receiver was not called upon to prove that he had not such guilty knowledge. Reg. v. Davis, 135

ROGUE AND VAGABOND—frequenting street or highway with intent to commit felony—By 5 Geo. 4. c. 83, s. 4, a suspected person or reputed thief, frequenting any river, canal or navigable stream, dock or basin, or any quay, wharf or warehouse near or adjoining thereto, or any street, highway or avenue leading thereto, or any place of public resort, or any avenue leading thereto, or any street, highway or place adjacent, with intent to commit felony, shall be deemed a rogue and vagabond, and may be convicted:—Held, that this does not apply to all streets and highways, but only to streets and highways leading or adjacent to places of the character mentioned in the Act. Ex parte Tinson, 129

Ex parte Brown dissented from; Ex parte Jones approved. Ibid.

Semble, a street may, in some cases, be itself a place of public resort within the meaning of the Act. Ibid.

SETTLEMENT—public tax or levy under 3 Will. & M. c. 11. s. 6: improvement rate and lamp rate—Under an Improvement Act for the city of E., authority was given to levy certain improvement and lamp rates. Commissioners were appointed under the Act, who were empowered to rate and assess, by a just and equitable ground rate, the several landowners and owners, and the several tenants and occupiers of all houses, &c., within the city. Power was given to the commissioners to appoint two or more inhabitants of the city or of each parish, &c., within it, to be assessors of the rates, and they were required to make such rates, and to deliver copies thereof to the commissioners who were to settle and sign the same. The churchwardens and overseers of the poor of the respective parishes were to be the collectors of the rates. T. rented a dwelling-house in the parish of S. within the city, and paid his share towards the improvement rate and the lamp rate made under the powers given by the Act:—Held, that these rates were public taxes or levies of the parish within the meaning of statute 3 Will. & M. c. 11. s. 6, and that T. gained a settlement in the parish of S. Reg. v. The Guardians of the Poor of the St. Thomas' Union, 83

TRADES UNION. See Embezzlement.

TURNPIKE ROAD—repair: insufficiency of trust funds: contribution from highway rates: apportionment—By a special Turnpike Roads Act, the trustees were authorised to expend the sum of 850*l.* upon the repair of the thirty-five miles of road within their trust. This sum was insufficient for the repairs, and they applied to justices to make an order upon the surveyors of highways for the parish of P., through which a portion of the road passed, for the payment of a sum of money towards the repairs of such road. They required an order for the payment of 115*l.* 8*s.* 6*d.*, which sum they arrived at by apportioning the 850*l.* according to a mileage proportion, which would give 27*l.* 4*s.* 8*d.* to P., and then deducting that sum from 142*l.* 13*s.* 2*d.*, the estimated amount necessary for the repair of the road in P. The cost of repairing the road in P. was higher than the cost in other parishes, owing to the traffic being much heavier, and if the apportionment had been made after taking into consideration such additional cost, the sum apportioned to P. would have been 89*l.*:—Held, that the mode of calculation adopted by the trustees was wrong, and that the justices were right in ordering the payment of 53*l.* 13*s.* 2*d.*, the difference between the above sum of 89*l.* and the estimated cost of the repairs for the year in P. Trustees of the Brighton Turnpike Trust v. Surveyors of Highways of Preston, 33

TURNPIKE TOLL—manure carried by dealer: exemption—Under 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 18. s. 1, which provides that no turnpike toll shall be demanded in respect of any horse or carriage conveying manure for land, artificial manure carried by the dealer to the farmer in the dealer's cart is exempt from toll. Foster v. Tucker, 72 —liability to toll for leaving a carriage upon the road—The 41st section of 3 Geo. 4. c. 126, imposes a penalty on any person who, inter alia, "shall leave upon a turnpike road any horse, cattle, beast, or carriage whatsoever, whereby the payment of all or any of the tolls shall or may be evaded:—"Held, that to constitute the offence of leaving a carriage within that section the carriage must be left waiting on the road. Where therefore a carriage was driven on a turnpike road to within a short distance of a toll gate, when the owner got out and walked through the gate, and the carriage, instead of waiting, was driven back to the owner's residence,—Held, that such owner could not for so acting be convicted under the 41st section of leaving the carriage on the road, whereby the payment of toll was evaded. Stanley v. Mortlock, 150 — application of tolls—By a Turnpike Act it was enacted that the trustees should apply the moneys arising from tolls, &c., in the first place in defraying the expenses of obtaining the Act, and "in the next place in paying and discharging all interest now due, and owing, and which shall hereafter become due and owing upon any mortgage, &c., of the tolls hereby granted, and in defraying the expenses of building toll-houses, &c.; and in defraying the expenses of altering, improving, repairing, &c., the said roads." The trustees provided for interest accruing in respect of money borrowed upon security of the tolls, and arrears of interest, and no balance remained in their hands which was available for repairs. The road being out of repair, an order of justices under 5 & 6 Will. 4. c. 50. s. 94, was made upon the trustees to pay a sum for its repair to the surveyor of the Highway Board:—Held (distinguishing The Queen v. Hutchinson), that the order of the justices was wrong. The Bruton Turnpike Trustees v. The Wincanton Highway Board, 155

VACCINATION—certificate of medical practitioner: omission to procure vaccination of child: second offence—On the 30th of March, 1869, A. was convicted for disobeying an order of a justice to cause his child to be vaccinated within seven days from the date of such order. Subsequently the registrar of births and deaths gave him notice to procure the vaccination of his child, which he failed to do; and on the 29th of April another information came on to be heard against him, when he was ordered to have the child vaccinated within seven days from the date of such order. At the hearing he produced a certificate in the form given in schedule B to the Act 30 & 31 Vict. c. 84, and signed by a medical practitioner, certifying that the child was not in a fit state to be vaccinated, and postponing the vaccination until the 20th of June. He did not obey the order made upon him, and on the 13th of May, 1869, another information under 30 & 31 Vict. c. 84. s. 31, came on to be heard against him for disobedience of such order. He again produced the certificate above mentioned, but he was convicted:—Held, first, that the justices were not deprived of the jurisdiction to convict him by reason of the former conviction; and secondly, that the certificate was not a bar to the proceeding, but that the justices had jurisdiction to consider whether it was given bona fide or not, and that if they thought it was not, they might consider that A. had shewn no reasonable ground for his omission to carry the order into effect. Allen v. Worthy, 36

WINE AND BEER-HOUSE—alehouse: general annual licensing meeting: adjournment: certificate: res adjudicata—B, who was the holder of a license granted to him under 3 & 4 Vict. c. 61, for the sale of beer in a beerhouse occupied by him, gave the proper notices required by 32 & 33 Vict. c. 27, of his intention to apply for a certificate to obtain a license for the sale of beer in the said house. He made his application at the General Annual Licensing Meeting, but the certificate was refused upon the ground that he came within the 3rd sub-section of the 8th section of 32 & 33 Vict. c. 27. The meeting was held upon the 20th of August, and was adjourned till the 17th of September. On the 25th of August, D gave notice that he should apply at the adjourned meeting for a certificate in respect of the same house which he alleged was occupied by him. The justices refused to entertain the application, as they had already refused the certificate on the application of B. Upon appeal to the quarter sessions, the appeal was dismissed without hearing it on the merits:—Held, upon a rule for a mandamus to enter continuances and hear the appeal, first, that the refusal to grant the certificate to B, upon a ground personal to him, did not prevent D from making an application for a certificate in respect of the same house; secondly, that the notices having been given by D 21 days before the adjourned meeting at which the application was made by him, the requirements of section 7 of 32 & 33 Vict. c. 27, were so far complied with, therefore, that the rule for a mandamus must be absolute. Regina v. the Justices of the West Riding of Yorkshire, 17 — Conviction, as for a second offence, for refusing to admit constable after conviction for keeping house open during prohibited hours on Sunday. See Conviction.

WOUNDING—with intent. See Evidence.

TABLE OF CASES.

-
- Allen v. Thompson, 102
 — v. Worthy, 36
 Berry v. Henderson, 77
 Brighton Turnpike Trust v. Preston Highways, 33
 Bruton Turnpike Trustees v. Wincanton Highway Board, 155
 Cocker v. Cardwell, 28
 Copley v. Burton, 141
 Foster v. Tucker, 72
 Hall v. Potter, 1
 Jones v. Whitaker, 139
 Kent v. Astley, 3
 Mercer v. Woodgate, 21
 New Shoreham Harbour Commissioners v. Lancing Overseers, 121
 North Eastern Rail. Co. v. Leadgate L. B., 65
 Poor Law Commissioners for Ireland v. Liverpool, Vestry of, 25
 Preston v. Buckler, 105
 Regina v. Abingdon Union, 153
 — v. Brown (C.C.R.), 94
 — v. Buttle (C.C.R.), 115
 — v. Chart & Longbridge, upper half hundred of (C.C.R.), 107
 — v. Davis (C.C.R.), 135
 — v. Eaves, 70
 — v. Falkingham (C.C.R.), 47
 Regina v. French (C.C.R.), 58
 — v. Guthrie (C.C.R.), 95
 — v. Hadfield (C.C.R.), 131
 — v. Hodgkiss (C.C.R.), 14
 — v. Kay (C.C.R.), 118
 — v. Kilham (C.C.R.), 109
 — v. Martin (C.C.R.), 31
 — v. M'Grath (C.C.R.), 7
 — v. Parker (C.C.R.), 60
 — v. Pearson, 76
 — v. Pratt, 73
 — v. Ritson (C.C.R.), 10
 — v. St. George's-in-the-East (inhabitants), 90
 — v. St. Mary, Islington, 137
 — v. St. Thomas, Devon, Guardians of, 83
 — v. Smith (C.C.R.), 112
 — v. Stainer (C.C.R.), 54
 — v. Surrey, Justices of, 49, 145
 — v. Von Seberg (C.C.R.), 133
 — v. West Riding, Justices of, 17
 — v. Whitby Union, 97
 — v. Wigan, &c., Mayor of, 68
 — v. Wyatt (C.C.R.), 83
 Short, ex parte, 63
 Stanley v. Mortlock, 150
 Thomas v. Alsop, 43
 Tinson, ex parte, 129
 Tubb v. Good, 135
 West London Exten. Rail. Co. v. Fulham Union Assess. Com. (Q.B. 178), 149

PRINTED BY SPOTTISWOODE & CO.,

New-street Square; 29 Chancery Lane; 30 Parliament Street; and 38 Royal Exchange.

THE
LAW JOURNAL REPORTS

FOR THE YEAR 1870:

CASES IN THE COURT OF Probate,
IN THE COURT FOR Divorce and Matrimonial Causes,

REPORTED BY GEORGE HENRY COOPER, Esq. BARRISTER-AT-LAW, AND
GEORGE CALLAGHAN, Esq. BARRISTER-AT-LAW;

AND ON APPEAL THEREFROM
TO THE House of Lords,

REPORTED BY
EDMUND STORY MASKELYNE, Esq. BARRISTER-AT-LAW.

MICHAELMAS TERM, 1869, TO MICHAELMAS TERM, 1870.

PROBATE AND MATRIMONIAL.
NEW SERIES, VOL. XXXIX.

LONDON:
PRINTED BY SPOTTISWOODE AND CO. NEW-STREET SQUARE.
PUBLISHED BY EDWARD BRET INCE, 5, QUALITY COURT, CHANCERY LANE.

MDCCCLXX.

CASES ARGUED AND DETERMINED

IN THE Court of Probate,

IN THE COURT FOR

Divorce and Matrimonial Causes,

AND IN THE HOUSE OF LORDS ON APPEALS FROM THOSE COURTS.

COMMENCING WITH

MICHAELMAS TERM, 33 VICTORIÆ.

PROBATE. }
1869. } BECKETT v HOWE AND
Nov. 6, 16. } OTHERS.

Will—Execution—Signature not seen by witnesses—Acknowledgment.

A asked B to witness his will. He subsequently asked C if he would sign a paper (not mentioning its character) for him, and said he should wish B to be also present at the same time. A few evenings afterwards they met by appointment. A produced a paper from his pocket and (alluding to the death of his wife) observed,—“They were aware that there had been a change in his circumstances which involved an alteration in his affairs.” He then so folded the paper that they could not see his signature or any other writing upon it, but they believed that they were signing his will:—Held, that the circumstances warranted the presumption that the signature of the testator was on the paper when the witnesses signed, and that there was a sufficient acknowledgment of it.

The plaintiff, as the executor named therein, propounded the will, dated July, 1868, of Henry John Long, who died in March, 1869, and the defendants, the next of kin, contested its validity, on the ground that it was not executed according to the provisions of 1 Vict. c. 26.

The will, which was in the handwriting of the deceased, covered the three first sides of a sheet of paper and a few lines on the top of the fourth side. Beneath was written: “Witness my hand—Henry John Long;” and then followed the attestation clause:—“In witness whereof we the undersigned have, at the request of the testator, in his presence, and in the presence of each other, severally subscribed our names.
NEW SERIES, 39.—PROB. AND M.

Witness our hands } HENRY PRESTAGE.
ISAAC OAKLEY.”

The cause was heard before Lord Penzance, on Saturday, November 6th. The evidence was as follows:—

Isaac Oakley.—I am an engineer, living at Bermondsey. I knew the testator. On the 12th July, 1868, as we were walking home together, he asked me if I would step across to Mr. Prestage’s to sign his will. I said I would. He said he would let me know the evening. A few days afterwards I went by appointment to Mr. Prestage’s. The testator took a paper from his pocket. I did not take particular notice of it. He unfolded it, and then again folded it in the way he wanted it to lie when we signed it. Before we signed, he said we were of course aware that the death of Mrs. Long had necessitated an alteration in his affairs. He then moved the paper towards Mr. Prestage and said, “Sign here.” He had covered up everything except the place where we were to sign. Mr. Prestage and I signed the paper in his presence. He then took the paper and put it in his pocket, saying, he did not suppose we should hear any more of it.

B

Cross-examined.—I cannot say if the words, "witness our hands," were on the paper or not; I did not see them. I saw no writing whatever. I do not recollect the word "will" being used that evening at all.

Henry Prestage.—On a Tuesday evening in July, 1868, I was walking with the testator. He said, "I want you to sign a paper for me." He said further, "I should wish Mr. Oakley to be also present, and your house being near I shall ask him to meet us there." On the Thursday evening following he came to my house. When Mr. Oakley arrived, the testator said, "You are aware that there has been a change in my circumstances which involves an alteration in my affairs." I replied, "Yes, I am aware of it." I then saw him take a paper from his side pocket, and he kept moving it about or adjusting it for a minute or so. I saw there was writing on it. Having folded it he placed it before us and said, "Now, Mr. Prestage, you had better sign first." I accordingly signed the paper and then Mr. Oakley. The testator then refolded the paper and said, "I don't suppose you will hear anything more of this." When I signed my name I do not remember seeing any writing on the paper. I cannot say whether the words "witness our hands" were there or not; I am not certain. (As folded before the Court the words in question could have been seen on the paper.) The will and signature are in the handwriting of the testator.

Cross-examined.—The paper was so folded that I could not see any writing whatever, when I signed.

The witness was recalled, and in answer to questions put to him by the Court, said, he inferred from what the testator said about an alteration of his affairs that he was signing his will.

Dr. Tristram, for the plaintiff (on Nov. 6), submitted that all the circumstances warranted the presumption that the signature of the testator was on the paper at the time the witnesses signed, and that there was a sufficient acknowledgment of it. He referred to Gwillim v. Gwillim (1).

Dr. Spinks (with him Searle), for the defendants, contra. The attestation clause is imperfect. It does not shew that the testator was aware that he should sign or acknowledge his signature in the presence of the witnesses. Before such an acknowledgment can be held sufficient it must be first shewn that the signature was on the will.

[LORD PENZANCE.—In Gwillim v. Gwillim (1) it was held that it is not necessary to have distinct evidence that the name was on the will when the witnesses signed.]

There the testator asked the witnesses to attest the will, and there was no attempt at concealment. Here there was an actual concealment which rebuts the presumption of acknowledgment.

[LORD PENZANCE.—But is it clear that the testator desired to conceal the signature?]

The witnesses would have learned nothing even if the part of the will which was written on the top of the page had been exposed to them. The folding of the paper therefore in the manner described shewed concealment.

Owr. adv. vult.

Judgment was given on November 16 as follows:—

LORD PENZANCE.—The Court took time in this case to consider the former decisions, with the view of seeing whether any cases had been decided which in any way qualified the doctrine that was pronounced by Sir Cresswell Cresswell, in Gwillim v. Gwillim (1). The question is, whether a will has been properly executed, and the facts are these: The testator said to one of the attesting witnesses, some few days before the date of the execution of the will, that he wished him to come on a particular day to witness his will, and to the other attesting witness he likewise said that he wished him to sign a paper, not mentioning what it was; and that he wished him to be present at the same time as the other attesting witness. In accordance with this arrangement, a meeting was fixed by the testator for a particular evening. Both witnesses attended, and the testator produced the paper, which he carefully folded up, so that they could not see anything that was upon it, and having made the remark to them that, owing to the death of his wife, it was necessary to alter his affairs, he asked them to sign their names to it. The question is, is that a due execution? The witnesses did not see the signature of the testator on the paper, and he never said that it was there, but he did directly tell one of the witnesses of the character of the paper he was going to execute, and he told them both indirectly the same thing the evening they attended for the execution; for he gave them to understand that, owing to the death of his wife, he was about to make some new testamentary disposition. The doctrine of Gwillim v. Gwillim (1) is, that if a man produce a paper to witnesses, and give them to understand that it is his will, and get them to sign their names as witnesses, both being present at the same time, that is an acknowledgment of his signature, always supposing that the signature was there at the time. Whether that is right or wrong, the Court does not proceed to inquire. It is founded on two cases in the Privy Council, which were referred to by Sir Cresswell Cresswell in his judgment, and he arrived at this determination: that provided a man acknowledges the paper to be his will, and his signature is on it at the time, that is an acknowledgment of his signature. I think the facts in this case come up to that requirement. I think that what passed was tantamount to his saying that it was his will, and I think the signature was on the will at the time. It may be said, what evidence is there that the signature was there at all? If it were necessary to prove by any direct evidence that the signature was there, I might have some difficulty in holding that it was. But here again I refer to Gwillim v. Gwillim (1). There the learned Judge, from the whole appearance of the document and the circumstances of the case, was satisfied of the existence of the signature, and there was quite as much in this case to lead to the conclusion that the signature was on the paper at the time of execution as there was in the case of Gwillim v. Gwillim (1). "If it were necessary," said Sir Cresswell Cresswell, "to have direct evidence that the name of the testator was on the will, when he acknowledged it by asking them to witness his will, the proof of the execution would fail; but that certainly is not necessary, for the contrary was decided in Cooper v. Bockett" (2). And then, after referring to the other case in the Privy Council, he continued: "I am therefore at liberty to judge, from the circumstances of this case, whether the name of the testator was on the will at the time of the attestation or not. It is hardly likely that this testator, who knew that there must be two witnesses to the will, did not also know that he must sign it before they did, and either sign it, or acknowledge it in their presence." Word for word the case here. It is hardly likely that the testator did not know that he should either sign or acknowledge his signature in the presence of the witnesses, for there is quite sufficient to shew that he knew what was the ordinary process of will-making. The learned Judge proceeded: "Then, if I look at the position of the words, I find at the top of the third page, 'My will and testament, 1856, March 31st;,' under that comes, 'Brange, March 31st, 1856,' that being the time and place at which the old ladies say they were asked to sign the will; under that comes, 'John Gwillim,' and then the word, 'witness,' a little below, on the left-hand side, where one would expect to find it. I cannot therefore but think that the name of the testator was written at that time, and that by asking those old ladies to witness his will, he did acknowledge his signature." I think that these remarks apply exactly to the present case, and must hold that the will was properly executed.

1 Sw. & Tr. 200; s.c. 29 Law J. Rep. (n.s.) Prob. M. & A. 31.

[Dr. Spinks asked that the defendants might be allowed their costs out of the estate, the inquiry having arisen from the acts of the testator.

LORD PENZANCE.—There were no merits in the case. I cannot allow the defendants' costs out of the estate.]

Proctors—Rothery & Co., for plaintiff;
Attorneys—Ingle, Goody & Co., for defendants.

MATRIMONIAL.

1869.

Nov. 23.

MILLER v. MILLER.

Restitution; Husband's suit for—Unfounded charges in wife's answer—Wife possessed of separate income—Wife condemned in costs of suit—20 & 21 Vict. c. 85. s. 51.

The husband filed a petition for restitution of conjugal rights. The wife, in her answer, charged him with cruelty of a gross and indecent kind, but at the hearing her counsel admitted that he had no case. The wife had a separate income of 760l. per annum. She had induced her husband to give up his practice as a surgeon in the country, and had put him to expense by the unfounded charges in her answer:—The Court, under these circumstances, condemned her in the costs of the suit.

This was originally a suit promoted by the husband for restitution of conjugal rights. The petition also alleged that the respondent was in receipt of an income of about 800l. per annum, settled to her separate use, and included a prayer that she might be ordered to pay out of her separate estate the costs of and incidental to the suit. The respondent, in her answer, alleged that the petitioner had been guilty of acts of violence towards her, and of other acts of cruelty of a gross and indecent kind, and prayed that the petition might be dismissed. At the hearing, which took place on the 14th of July, 1869, counsel for the respondent admitted that he had no case. The Court decreed restitution of conjugal rights, and reserved the question of costs. The respondent being abroad, it had not been possible to serve the decree upon her.

The matter now came before the Court, on the petitioner's application, that the respondent might be condemned in the costs of the suit.

From the affidavits filed in support of the application it appeared that in 1864 the petitioner, a surgeon, yielding to the wishes of his wife, who represented that her income (760l.) was more than adequate for their mutual requirements, disposed of his practice in the country and came to London; that on withdrawing from cohabitation in 1866 she took with her all such plate and other articles as had been her property before marriage, or that she had acquired afterwards, and that since that time he had derived no benefit whatever from her separate property; that by the charges of cruelty and indecency contained in her answer she had materially increased the costs of the suit; and that his present means of livelihood as a consulting surgeon were slender and precarious, and wholly insufficient to enable him to pay and discharge the said costs.

Dr. Spinks (with him Dr. Tristram), for the petitioner, submitted that the case was one in which the wife ought to be condemned in the costs of the suit. The fullest power was given to the Court in the matter of costs by the 51st section of the Divorce Act, and though there was no case directly in point which could be cited in support of the application, there were several in principle:—Gennie v. Glennie and Bowles (1), Carstairs v. Carstairs and others (2), Robinson v. Robinson and Lane (3), Wells v. Wells and Cottam (4). In Milford v. Milford (5), the wife's appeal to the House of Lords was dismissed with costs, and in Morgan v. Morgan and Porter (6), the wife was virtually condemned in the costs of a portion of her answer. In the Ecclesiastical Courts the wife was a privileged suitor, but the reason was that, as a general rule, she had no property of her own:—Wilson v. Wilson (7), D'Aguilar v. D'Aguilar (8). Where the reason of the rule has ceased to exist, the rule should also cease.

Dr. Deane (with him E. Browning), for the respondent.—The Divorce Act has been ten years in force, and if the Court had the power under the 51st section which is now contended for, it is reasonable to suppose that there would have

(1) 3 Sw. & Tr. 109; s. c. 32 Law J. Rep. (n.s.) Prob. M. & A. 17.

(2) 3 Sw. & Tr. 538; s. c. 33 Law J. Rep. (n.s.) Prob. M. & A. 170.

(3) 1 Sw. & Tr. 400; s. c. 29 Law J. Rep. (n.s.) Prob. M. & A. 178.

(4) 3 Sw. & Tr. 593; s. c. 33 Law J. Rep. (n.s.) Prob. M. & A. 72.

(5) 37 Law J. Rep. (n.s.) Prob. M. & A. 77.

(6) 38 Law J. Rep. (n.s.) Prob. M. & A. 41.

(7) 2 Consis. Rep. 203.

(8) 1 Hag. 773.

been cases decided adversely to the wife. Milford v. Milford (5) is the only case in point, but that was a vexatious appeal. Morgan v. Morgan and Porter (6) is consistent with Glennie v. Glennie (1), and in Garston v. Garston (not reported) the Court declined to condemn the wife in costs, though at the very time she was putting the husband to expense in a suit for nullity on the ground of impotence, which she afterwards abandoned, she was also preparing a suit for judicial separation on the ground of adultery.

Dr. Spinks, in reply.—There were merits in Garston v. Garston, and it was because of those merits that the Court declined to make the order.

LORD PENZANCE.—I had no recollection at first of what took place in Garston v. Garston on the subject of costs. I recollect now, when the case has been mentioned more fully, some of the circumstances of it, and I do not recognise in those circumstances any ground for condemning the wife in costs. Each case must, no doubt, stand upon its own merits so far as the exercise of the discretion of the Court is concerned. The legal question involved in the argument to-day is, first of all, whether the Court has power to make this order? and secondly, whether, if it has the power, it will exercise it in proper cases? It cannot be doubted that it has the power, for the section (51st of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85) says, in perfectly plain words, "The Court on the hearing of any suit, proceeding or petition under this Act, and the House of Lords on the hearing of any appeal under this Act, may make such order as to costs as to such Court or House respectively may seem just: provided always, that there shall be no appeal on the subject of costs only." The next question is, whether the power ought ever to be exercised in the manner proposed? I see no reason why it should not. I see no reason why, if a wife has separate property, she should be permitted to enter into any amount of litigation, however frivolous or vexatious, and then be allowed to retire from Court free from any portion of the burden which she has cast upon her husband. It is contrary to natural justice that she should be allowed to do so. The only reason why a wife stands in a different position from other suitors is, that the law presumes the wife has no property. The law presumes that all the property is in the hands of the husband, and so the matter stood in former times; but under the auspices of Courts of Equity, the wife has achieved the power of holding property to her separate use, and to the extent to which she has separate property the reason of the rule which made her a privileged suitor ceases. There is no reason why, under such circumstances, she should not litigate on the same footing as any other suitor. Of course the Court will bear in mind, in using the discretion vested in it, certain other considerations, one of which is referred to in Carstairs v. Carstairs and others (2). It is there stated that it was the rule of the House of Lords to see, before the husband got a divorce from the wife, that some provision was made for the maintenance of the wife, and in no case was it likely to make an order on her for costs where the effect would be to absorb her means of livelihood. The Court must therefore look, not only to the fact that the wife has separate property, but also to the amount of that property, before it will make an order upon her for costs. In this case the wife has considerable separate property. I do not know what the costs may be, but I presume they are not very heavy, and I can have no hesitation in making an order upon her to pay them.

Attorneys—Rowland Miller, for petitioner;
Alfred Jones for respondent.

PROBATE. } In the goods of JAMES 1869. } SEBASTIAN GILL.
Nov. 16. }

Will—Reference to "written directions affixed to Will"—None affixed—Insufficient reference.

A executed, in 1866, a will which referred to written directions, which he intended to form part of the will. This paper, which began, "To my executors,—I have written the following directions for your guidance with respect to many things and goods not mentioned in my will, which said will very probably will be found at William Weedon's, Esq., solicitor," was further subsequently executed by him according to the provisions of the Wills Act. In 1868 he executed a second will, which revoked all previous wills, and contained the following clause: "All my books, pictures, sketches, guns, rods, goods and chattels in and about the rooms I shall occupy at the time of my decease, I wish my executors to dispose of faithfully and conscientiously according to the written directions left by me, and affixed to this my will, trusting, as I unhesitatingly do, in their honour and integrity." Nothing was affixed to the will, which remained in the possession of Mr. Weedon, the solicitor who prepared it, and the only paper of written directions forthcoming was that which the testator intended to form part of the will of 1866:—Held, that it was not incorporated by the reference in the will of 1868, and that as an executed testamentary paper it was revoked by such will.

James Sebastian Gill, late of Reading, in the county of Berks, gentleman, died leaving a duly executed will and codicil. The will, which was dated the 2nd of November, 1868, and revoked all former wills and codicils, contained the following clause:—

"All my books, pictures, sketches, guns, rods, goods, and chattels in and about the rooms I shall occupy at the time of my decease, I wish my executors to dispose of faithfully and conscientiously, according to the written directions left by me, and affixed to this my will, trusting as I unhesitatingly do in their honour and integrity."

The will was prepared by Mr. Weedon, solicitor, of Reading. In doing so he used as a draft a former will, which the testator executed on the 9th of August, 1866, and which referred in almost similar terms to a paper of written directions which he intended to form part of his will. This paper was further executed by him, according to the provisions of the Wills Act, on the 12th of August, 1866, and ran as follows:—

"To my executors,—

"Rev. F. T. Gill, &c., and

"R. Haynes Lovell, &c.

"I have written the following directions for your guidance with respect to many things and goods not mentioned in my will, which said will very probably will be found at Wm. Weedon's, Esq., solicitor, Reading. . . . Give some little remembrance to Mrs. and Miss Barnes, not forgetting the servants at the lodge." The paper then provided for the distribution of a number of articles, to wit, books, pictures, sketches, folio-stand and folio book of engravings, fishing-tackle and rods, herbarium (to be given to an institution in Reading), gun, sword, card-box, camp bedstead and washhand-stand, wearing apparel and clothing; and concluded: "But above all I forbid you to spend much money on my funeral, for it is only for the benefit of the undertaker who lays you under the sod or stone. 40l. (forty pounds) quite sufficient for any decent funeral."

The will of 1868 remained in the possession of Mr. Weedon from the time of its execution until the death of the testator. No written directions were affixed to it. Search was made among his papers, and the only document which was found was the paper of directions which he intended to form part of the will of 1866.

The above facts were verified by affidavits.

C. A. Middleton moved the Court to decree probate of the will and codicil with the paper of instructions dated August, 1866, as incorporated by reference. It was further well executed as a testamentary paper, and as such was entitled to probate. He referred to

In the goods of Mary Sunderland (1);
In the goods of Lady Truro (2);
In the goods of James Gordon Duff
(3); Stewart v. Stewart (4)

LORD PENZANCE.—I am of opinion that this paper cannot be incorporated with the will. What the testator did was this: In August, 1866, he made a will, according to the statement of the attorney, something similar to that now in existence. At

(1) 35 Law J. Rep. (n.s.) Prob. M. & A. 82; s. c. 1 Law Rep. P. & M. 178.

(2) 35 Law J. Rep. (n.s.) Prob. M. & A. 89; s. c. 1 Law Rep. P. & M. 201.

(3) 4 Notes of Cases 474.

(4) 3 Sw. & Tr. 192.

the date of its execution he wrote a paper beginning thus:—"I have written the following directions for your guidance (that is, his executors) with respect to many things and goods not mentioned in my will," and he went on to provide for the distribution of a great number of articles belonging to him. That was intended to form part of the will of 1866, and was duly executed as a testamentary document. In 1868 he made a new will in which he revoked all former wills, and in that will there is a clause which directs "all my books, pictures, guns, rods, goods and chattels, in and about the rooms I shall occupy at the time of my decease," to be disposed of by the executors "according to written directions left by me and affixed to this my will." Well, the will is found, but nothing is affixed to it, and nothing is discovered corresponding to the directions he has described. The Court is then asked to go back to the directions affixed to the former will. I see great difficulty in doing that. In fact it is impossible. It is extremely probable that the testator made a fresh list, or more than one, and that he afterwards tore them up as often. If, indeed, the existing list had answered to the tenor of the list described in the will, there might have been something to say, but it does not, for it disposes of many articles which cannot be said to answer the description of "articles in and about my rooms." I am of opinion, therefore, that the directions cannot form part of the will of 1868. Then, it is said that the directions, which were well executed, are not revoked, and therefore may be admitted to probate. But it is quite clear that there being language in the will of 1868, revoking all other former wills, if there is not a special reference, excepting the directions, they must be revoked too. The motion, therefore, must be refused.

Attorneys—Pitman & Lane, agents for Clarke & Weedon, Reading.

PROBATE. }
1869. } OLIVER AND ANOTHER v. JOHNS
Nov. 30. } AND OTHERS.

Will—Execution—Signature of testator not seen by witness—Acknowledgment—Attestation by witnesses.

A asked B, in the presence of C, to witness her will, which lay open on the table. B signed the will, but did not observe A's signature. B then handed the pen to C, but did not see him sign his name. The will was prepared by C. The attestation clause stated that it was signed by the witnesses in the presence of each other, and C had also prepared other wills:—Held, a good execution; the circumstances warranting the presumption that A's signature was on the paper when B signed, and that C, who was aware of the requirements of a will, signed before B left the room.

The testatrix, Jenefer (alias Jane) Johns, late of St. Austell, in the county of Cornwall, spinster, deceased, died in March, 1868, leaving a will, dated 18th April, 1863. It had the following attestation clause: "Signed and published as and for the last will of the said Jane Johns, who signed the same in our presence, and who in each other's presence do sign as witnesses, the day and year above written;" and purported to have been witnessed by Jane Jenkins and Richard Glanville. Glanville had since died.

Jane Jenkins deposed as follows as to the execution of the instrument: I knew the deceased Jenefer Johns. I recollect having been asked by Richard Glanville to go to her house. I saw the paper (the will) there. The deceased said it was her will, and asked me to put my name to it. I signed my name. I did not see her signature. Richard Glanville and Miss Geach (since dead) were also present. I did not see Glanville write his name. I gave him the pen after I had signed, and directly came away.

Cross-examined: The paper was open when I signed. I saw no name on it. I cannot swear that the signature was not there. When I signed I walked straight out of the room.

On re-examination the witness, who was short-sighted, stated that she had not had her spectacles on when she signed.

[It was proved that Glanville, who was a grocer, had made other wills.]

Pritchard, for interveners, who were allowed to come in and prove the due execution of the will, referred to Beckett v. Howe and others (1), and submitted that there had been a sufficient acknowledgment of her signature by the deceased.

Dr. Swabey, for the defendants, admitted that there was a sufficient acknowledgment if the signature were on the paper when the witnesses signed, but contended that it rested on the parties setting up the will to satisfy the Court affirmatively of the fact. Here there was no such proof. Further, it was essential to due execution that the witnesses should have attested and subscribed in each other's presence. It was held not to be necessary in Faulds v. Jackson (2), but in a later case, Casement v. Fulton (3), it was decided otherwise.

LORD PENZANCE—after referring to the principle laid down in Gwillim v. Gwillim (4), and followed in Beckett v. Howe and others (1), continued,—I am satisfied that the signature of the testatrix was on the paper when the witnesses signed, and that there was a sufficient acknowledgment of it. As regards the witnesses signing it in each other's presence, without meaning to decide the point, the conclusion which I come to is that they did sign in each other's presence. It is true that the witness says they did not; but inasmuch as she put the pen into Glanville's hand, that he had prepared the will, that he had prepared the attestation clause, which states that the witnesses signed in each other's presence, and had also prepared other wills, the reasonable conclusion is that when she put the pen into his hand, he signed his name, and before she left the room. The reasonable conclusion is that the will was properly executed, and the Court so pronounces.

Attorneys—Emmett, Watson & Emmett, for the interveners; Westall & Roberts, agents for R. Harfield, Southampton, for defendants.

(1) Ante, page 1.

(2) 6 Notes of Cas. Suppl. 1.

(3) 5 Moore P.C. 130.

(4) 1 Sw. & Tr. 200; s.c. 29 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 31.

PROBATE.
1869. } In the goods of E. L. COOPER.
Nov. 23.

Administration, with Will annexed—Executor resident abroad and bankrupt—Small Estate—Grant to Legatee—20 & 21 Vict. c. 77. s. 73.

Where the executor of a will was bankrupt and resident in Australia, the Court granted letters of administration, with the will annexed, to one of the legatees, but required that before the letters issued, the written consent of the next of kin and the persons entitled to the undisposed of residue, should be brought in and filed in the Registry.

Elvira Louisa Cooper, late of Bernard Street, in the county of Middlesex, spinster, deceased, died in August, 1869, having made her last will and testament dated July 22, 1865, whereof she appointed John Johnson sole executor. In December, 1868, Johnson, who had in 1866 executed an assignment of his property for the benefit of his creditors, was adjudicated a bankrupt, and in January, 1869, he left England for Australia. He is now believed to be living at Ballarat, Victoria, and is not, it was alleged, likely to return. The value of the estate was under 300*l.*, and the legatees were the mother and sisters of the deceased.

Searle moved the Court, under these circumstances, to decree letters of administration, with the will annexed, to Alice Grace Cooper as one of the residuary legatees, under the 73d sec. of the Probate Act.

LORD PENZANCE.—There are no residuary legatees appointed by the will. It is not necessary, however, to make out that the applicant is residuary legatee. I can make the grant to anybody under section 73; but before it issues, you must bring into the Registry the written consent of the next of kin and the persons entitled to the undisposed of residue.

Attorneys—Benham & Tindell.

MATRIMONIAL.

1869.

Dec. 7.

KELLY v. KELLY.

Judicial separation—Undue exercise of marital authority—Cruelty.

The wife being seriously ill, was advised by her medical attendant to leave home for a time. The husband refused. Having become worse, she left home without his consent, and stayed away some months, which she passed with her relations. On her return home she was deposed by her husband from her natural position as mistress of his house; she was deprived of the use of money entirely; all that she required had to be put down on paper, and her husband provided it if he thought proper. Having refused to tell her husband on one occasion of going into town everywhere that she had been, an interdict was placed on her going out at all; those whom she desired to see were forbidden the house, and she was prohibited from writing any letters unless the husband saw them before they were posted. Under this treatment her health again broke down:—Held, an undue exercise of marital authority, and to constitute legal cruelty.

This was a suit for judicial separation, instituted by the wife by reason of the cruelty of her husband. The respondent, a clerk in holy orders, filed an answer, in which he denied the cruelty, and alleged that the acts complained of were done in the legitimate assertion of his rights as a husband. The case was heard in the Michaelmas sittings, and occupied the Court for several days. The facts are fully stated in the judgment, which the Court took time to consider.

Dr. Deane (with him Inderwick) appeared for the petitioner.

Mr. Kelly conducted his own defence.

LORD PENZANCE now delivered the following judgment:—The peculiar and distinguishing feature of this case is the adoption by the respondent of a deliberate system of conduct towards his wife, with the view of bending her to his authority. A man who sets about to achieve this end by purposely rendering a woman's daily life unhappy is in danger of overstepping his rights, as he is pretty sure to fall short of his duties. The respondent in this case has, in my judgment, done both. Without disparaging the just and paramount authority of a husband, it may be safely asserted that a wife is not a domestic slave, to be driven at all cost, short of personal violence, into compliance with her husband's demands. And if force, whether physical or moral, is systematically exerted for this purpose in such manner, to such a degree, and during such length of time as to break down her health and render serious malady imminent, the interference of the law cannot be justly withheld by any Court which affects to have charge of the wife's personal safety. In cases of this kind everything depends on degree. Many acts, which are venial in themselves, become reprehensible when they take their places as parts of a system. Others, justifiable on occasions, lose their justification when continuously and purposely repeated. In considering a charge of cruelty, therefore, the conduct of the parties inculpated can only be justified, or the reverse, as a whole; and if, upon a general review, the Matrimonial Court is of deliberate opinion that cohabitation could not be resumed with safety to the wife, it is bound by the dictates of common sense, as well as upon principles repeatedly avowed and acted upon in a long series of decisions, to step in and forbid its resumption. No doubt in cases such as the present, where the personal violence used is of a trifling character, it behoves the Court to be sedulous in inquiry and slow in conviction. It should be entirely satisfied that the conclusion of the wife's danger is clearly reached, and on reliable evidence. Moreover, the decisions of my predecessors have imported this further proposition as a condition of the Court's interference, that the troubles of the wife are not owing to her own misconduct. "If," said the Court in Dysart v. Dysart (1), "a wife can insure her own safety by lawful obedience and by proper self-command, she has no right to come here, for this Court affords its aid only when the necessity of its interference is absolutely proved." I do not stop to inquire how far this last proposition would stand the test of cases that might possibly arise in which the safety of a weak, misguided, infirm woman, incapable of self-command, might be gravely imperilled by continued cohabitation. For the decision of this case I fully adopt this condition, and setting out on the above principles, I proceed to inquire, what has Mrs. Kelly suffered, from what cause, and with what result upon her health?

(1) 1 Robert. 140.

There is little variance or dispute about the leading facts. Towards the close of the year 1867 Mr. Kelly informed his wife that a sum of 5,000*l.* which had been bequeathed to her by her sister had been in great part lost by the investments he had made of it. Unable to obtain from her husband a clear idea of her rights and those of her son under her sister's will, she wrote to her brother-in-law, Colonel Thornbury, to see the will for her and explain it. This he did, and wrote her the result, telling her that the money was in law at the entire command of her husband, and that her son had no rights in the matter. Some further correspondence passed between the petitioner and Colonel Thornbury, and between the petitioner and her brother. These letters falling into the hands of the respondent were vehemently resented by him, and were directly or indirectly the cause of much, if not most, that followed. About the same time the petitioner's son quarrelled with his father, and was obliged to quit the house. The petitioner, to some extent, took the son's part, which increased the resentment of the respondent. From these circumstances the respondent took up the idea, which he afterwards allowed to fill his whole mind, that his wife was plotting and conspiring against him. He commenced opening her letters, and calling her a vile traitor and apostate. He told her that "no modest woman would associate with her more than with a prostitute," "that she had given her confidence to another man," &c. He refused to sit at meals with her, he insisted on occupying a separate bedroom, he told the servants to take orders from him, and not from his wife, he forbade her to visit the poor in the district, to which she had been accustomed, and desired her not to attend the ministration of the sacrament. Some months passed in this way. The respondent kept apart from his wife all day except at family prayers, and even then he appears to have had little or no communication with her except in the way of rebuke and reproach. At length, in the month of May, 1868, the petitioner became ill, her appetite wholly failed, she lost the senses of taste and smell, and towards the end of the month felt a sensation of numbness in her arm, which gave reason to fear paralysis. She consulted Dr. Drysdale. He advised her to leave home. Her husband refused, and on the 29th of June, having become worse, she left her home without his consent. I am satisfied from the medical testimony that at this time the occurrences which had taken place, and the isolation and reproaches to which she had been subjected, had so preyed upon her nervous system and general health that serious consequences were to be feared, if she were not for a time withdrawn from the life she was leading. Mrs. Kelly stayed away nearly four months, which she passed with her relations. The respondent wrote her many letters, in which he enlarged upon her sin. He expressed no care for her health, and none that she should return. In October she returned. Between that time and the January following, when she finally left home, she was purposely submitted to the following treatment. She was entirely deposed from her natural position as mistress of her husband's house. She was debarred the use of money entirely; not only were the household expenses withdrawn from her control, but she was not permitted to disburse anything for her own necessary expenses; every article of dress, every trifle that she required, had to be put down on paper, and her husband provided it if he thought proper. Having refused on one occasion of going into the town to tell her husband everywhere that she had been, an interdict was placed on her going out at all. At one time the doors were locked to keep her in, at another a man-servant was deputed to follow her; at another the respondent insisted on accompanying her himself whenever she wished to go abroad. On these occasions he appears to have occupied the short time they were together in what he called putting her sin before her in strong, coarse, and abusive terms, applying to her the same epithets and language as would be applicable to a woman who had been guilty of adultery. He took no meals with her; he occupied a separate bedroom; he passed no portion of the day, however small, in her society. They met, as before, only at family prayers, and if he spoke to her at all it was only to give some directions or to reproach her. Save on one or two occasions she saw no one. Those whom she desired to see were forbidden the house. She was absolutely prohibited from writing any letters unless the husband saw them before they were posted. She was thus, as far as the respondent could achieve it, practically isolated from her friends. Meanwhile, the care of the household was confided to a woman, hired for the purpose, who was directed not to obey Mrs. Kelly's orders without the respondent's directions. In short, she was treated like a child or a lunatic, and in this light she was actually regarded by the woman just mentioned, when she first came to her place; and this, be it remembered, though she had passed the mature age of 60 and had been married to the respondent for 27 years. With no occupation, debarred the society of her husband and her son at home, and that of her friends abroad, withheld from the performance of her household duties, subordinated to servants, penniless, and, so far as her husband could effect it, friendless, the daily life of this lady was little better than an imprisonment, the solitary silence of which was broken only by the language of harsh rebuke, foul words, and epithets of insult, indignity, and shame. What wonder that, under so grievous an oppression, her health again gave way? She could not eat, she hardly slept at all, she was subject to constant trembling and fainting, she woke involuntarily screaming at night, and her nervous system was so shattered that the medical witnesses declared paralysis or even madness to be imminent.

Now, upon this testimony it is important to observe that there was no contradiction. The respondent did not, even upon his own oath, deny or qualify the petitioner's evidence as to her state of health. On this head (the most important in the whole case) the respondent confined himself to the suggestion that her miserable condition was brought about, not by his treatment, but by vexation at the discovery of her own treachery. Her actual condition and danger he did not call in question, and yet it is to a repetition of this treatment, with its almost inevitable results, that the respondent expects this Court to order Mrs. Kelly to return. That it should be asked to break in upon his rights as a husband by depriving him of his wife's society, or, I should rather say, of her presence under his roof, is to him a matter of surprise and indignation, for, as he truly says, he has not beaten her. He has, indeed, on two or three occasions, made her feel that his superior physical strength was always ready to be exerted to constrain her movements, but he has inflicted no bruises and done no visible bodily hurt. Such a view of the law, if correct, would be little to its credit, and to coincide with it would be to abrogate the first duty in these matters of the Matrimonial Court—the protection of the wife's health and safety. These, then, are the things which Mr. Kelly did, and these the results upon his wife's health. The remaining question is, Why did he do them? His answer, I believe, would be to bring his wife to penitence and submission. But penitence for what, and submission to what? Although he has never in his numerous letters, so far as I can discover, stated with great clearness what it was that he wished her to do, it is, I think, to be sufficiently gathered from them that he desired her to admit that she had suspected him of fraud, and had traitorously conspired with others to fasten that charge upon him. For this he would have her express remorse and contrition, suing for his pardon, and humbly confessing her guilt. Mrs. Kelly refused to do so, because she says she never did in fact suspect him of anything false and dishonourable, and never did take counsel with others to bring the charge of it against him. Writing on the 1st of August, 1868, she says, "I could not tell a lie in this matter. I did not design any treachery, and I will never say I did." And further on, "I am sorry I did not ask your leave to see the will. I had a right to do so, but had I at all thought of its vexing you I would not have acted as I did. Surely, now, as what has taken place cannot be recalled, it would be better to bury the past in oblivion; let bygones be bygones; forgive and forget mutually, and seek to spend the little time that remains of this life on earth together in peace. . . . I promise on my part to do all in my power towards this object, but my position must be such as not to cause a scandal. If you will not do this, will you tell me what you do wish, and what is to be the end of it?" Writing again on the 14th of September, 1868, she said, "I never thought you had done anything dishonourable, and certainly I never tried to prove it. . . . You are under a complete delusion as to my conduct. My desire is to act towards you with the submission, obedience, and even affection of a wife."

It would be difficult for a wife to play her part in so critical and painful a situation in a more becoming manner. Surely such language as this should have satisfied any reasonable man. It did not satisfy Mr. Kelly, because, as it appears to me, he had suffered his mind to become filled and mastered by notions utterly extravagant, both as to the authority of a husband and the legitimate means of enforcing it. He invokes the theory of the law that the wife should be subject to the husband, but he forgets to add this qualification—"in all things reasonable." He asserts that he is within the law if, refraining from physical violence, he only puts such pressure on his wife as shall force her to obey him. But, again, he should add—"provided the means used to exert moral pressure be reasonable." But what if reasonable means are insufficient, and a wife still holds out against her husband's lawful will? The answer is that the law can neither do nor sanction more. The law, no doubt, recognises the husband as the ruler, protector, and guide of his wife. It makes him master of her pecuniary resources; it gives him, within legal limits, the control of her person; it withdraws civil rights and remedies from her save in his name. Conversely, the law places on the husband the duty of maintaining his wife, relieves her from all civil responsibilities, and excuses her even in the commission of great crimes when acting under her husband's orders. By these incidental means it has fenced about and fostered the reasonable supremacy of the man in the institution of marriage. In so doing it is thought by some that the law is acting in conformity with the dictates of nature and the natural characteristics of the sexes. Be that as it may, the subordination of the wife is doubtless in conformity with the established habits and customs of mankind. With all these advantages, then, in his favour, the law leaves the husband, by his own conduct and bearing, to secure and retain in his wife the only submission which is worth having—that which is willingly and cheerfully rendered. And if he fail, this Court cannot recognise his failure as a justification for a system of treatment by which he places his wife's permanent health in jeopardy, and sets at naught, not only his own obligations in matrimony, but the very ends of matrimony itself, by rendering impossible the offices of domestic intercourse and the mutual duties of married life. The cruelty of the respondent is established, and the Court decrees a judicial separation with costs.

Attorneys—Gregory, Rowcliffes, & Rawle, agents for Duncan, Square & Co., Liverpool, for petitioner; the respondent in person.

PROBATE.
1869.
Dec. 21.

In the goods of PORTER.

Will—Contingent Will—Test.

A test for ascertaining whether a will is contingent is the question whether the disposition of property is dependant upon the happening of some event or calamity referred to in the will, or whether the imminence of such event or calamity is merely a reason for making the will. In the former case the will is contingent; in the latter it is not.

Lieutenant-Colonel Porter, on the 25th of September, 1862, executed in England a will, which commenced thus:—

"Being obliged to leave England to join my regiment in China, and not having time to make a will, I leave this paper, containing my wishes and desires, should anything unfortunately happen to me while abroad. I wish everything that I may be in possession of at that time, or anything appertaining to me hereafter, whether in land, goods, chattels, or money, to be equally divided between my two children, T. C. A. Porter and E. C. Porter, share and share alike; and should either of them die, then the survivor to inherit the whole."

He then appointed the grandmother and an uncle of his children trustees and guardians of their persons and property.

Colonel Porter left England for China in 1862 and returned in 1863 to England, where he died in 1869 without having made another will, leaving the said children, who were minors, his only next of kin.

C. A. Middleton moved the Court to grant probate of the will to the grandmother and uncle of the deceased's children as their testamentary guardians.—The question is, whether or not the will is a contingent will. I submit that it is not contingent. The introductory sentence does not, per se, make the will contingent. It only assigns a reason for not then making a more formal will. The words, "everything that I may be in possession of at that time," no doubt refer to the time when the deceased should be abroad; but the words, "or anything appertaining to me hereafter," imply a more extended time, i. e. a time subsequent to his return. He cited In the goods of Martin (1), In the goods of Dobson (2).

LORD PENZANCE.—I am obliged, and very reluctantly, to refuse this application. It appears to me that this will is contingent. In looking at the cases which bear upon the point, there appears to be this distinction between them: The majority of them are cases in which a testator refers to some possible impending calamity in connection with his will; and the question is, whether in referring to the imminence of that calamity he intends to limit the operation of his will to the period during which that calamity can happen. If the language used can, by reasonable construction, be considered to mean that the testator refers to this calamity, or to the period of time in which it may happen, as a reason for making his will, then only is the will not contingent. But if a testator refers to a calamity or the possible occurrence of an event in language which is mixed up with the disposition of his property, so that he makes the disposition of his property depend upon that event, then the Court must hold the will to be contingent, because if it did not it must violate the language of the will. Here the only question is, in which category does this instrument fall. Passing in review the previous cases, the first are, In the goods of Winn (3), and Roberts v. Roberts (4). In both of these the will was held to be contingent, and in both the disposition of property was only to take effect in the event of something happening which did not happen. The strongest case is one cited in the last edition of Williams on Executors, In the goods of Thorne (5). In that case the testator directed his property to be disposed of in a certain way—"in the event of my death while serving in this horrid climate, or in the event of any accident happening to me." That will was held to be contingent, the facts being that though the man did not die abroad, he was invalided and reached England only just in time to die. There are two other cases in which the Court held a will not to be contingent, but in both of them the language used in the will may be referred to the intention of the testator merely to give a reason for making his will. In the case In the goods of Martin (1), the event of the testator's death is given as a reason for making the will. The question here is, whether that is the case in the paper before me. The first sentence alone would have placed it in that category, "Being obliged to leave England to join my regiment in China, and not having time to make a will, I leave this paper containing my wishes and desires, should anything unfortunately happen to me while I am abroad." If

(1) 36 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. & M. 116; s. c. Law Rep. 1 Prob. & M. 380.

(2) 35 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. & M. 54; s. c. Law Rep. 1 Prob. & M. 88.

(3) 2 Sw. & Tr. 147.

(4) 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. & M. 46; s. c. 2 Sw. & Tr. 337.

(5) 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. & M. 131.

the will had stopped there this Court might have said those words were merely intended to give the testator's reason for making a will. The words which create the difficulty are these, "I wish everything that I may be in possession of at that time," &c. The words "at that time" clearly refer to the time when something should unfortunately happen to him abroad, and the disposition of his property was to take effect at the time of his death abroad. It is said that the subsequent words, "and anything appertaining to me hereafter," enlarge the scope of the will. I do not think so. It is plain that what the testator meant was this: I wish everything I have in my possession at the time of my death abroad to be disposed of in a certain way, "and also anything which may come to me after my death." The words "at that time," in my opinion tie up the disposing part of the will to a period of time when a certain event was to happen, viz., "his death abroad." The Court, therefore, holds the will to be contingent.

Middleton.—Will your Lordship allow the testator's children to elect the persons mentioned in the will as their joint guardians, and decree administration to them as such guardians?

LORD PENZANCE.—Yes.

Attorney—A. G. Blake, Croydon.

MATRIMONIAL.

1869.

Nov. 17.

PARKINSON v. PARKINSON.

Desertion—Deed of Separation agreed to a year afterwards, and fully executed—Wife's Right to Relief.

A husband deserted his wife. A year afterwards, through the intervention of a mutual friend, a deed of separation was agreed to by which the husband covenanted to make the wife an allowance, and charged it upon his reversionary interest in a sum of money. The deed was fully executed, but no part of the allowance was paid:—Held, that the wife had bargained away her right to relief, and could not establish the charge of desertion without cause for two years.

Nott v. Nott distinguished.

This was a petition by the wife for dissolution of marriage on the ground of the husband's adultery, coupled with desertion without cause for two years and upwards. There was no appearance by the respondent.

The parties were married in New Zealand in 1861. They returned to England in the following year and lived with the respondent's mother. The respondent had been an officer in the army, but sold out in 1864. In August, 1865, he deserted his wife, and from that time until the case came on for hearing cohabited with another woman. Some time after the desertion, Mr. Paine, a mutual friend, saw the respondent and remonstrated with him upon his conduct. The result was, that a deed of separation was drawn up by which the respondent covenanted to make his wife an allowance of 150*l.* a year, which he charged upon his reversionary interest in a sum of 5,000*l.*, and she on her part agreed to live separate and apart from him. This deed, which was dated the 16th of April, 1866, was executed by the husband and wife, and by Mr. Paine, as a trustee on her behalf, but no part of the allowance was ever paid by the respondent, nor did he in any way contribute to his wife's maintenance.

Mrs. Parkinson, in the course of her examination, stated that she had no wish to live apart from her husband, and that she had been told the object of the deed was simply to secure her a maintenance. Mr. Paine also stated that he understood the deed was not to prejudice her right to a divorce.

Dr. Swabey, for the petitioner, submitted that under the circumstances the deed was no bar to her right to a dissolution of marriage, and referred to Nott v. Nott (1).

[THE JUDGE ORDINARY.—Is it not a similar case to Crabb v. Crabb (2)? The deed is fully executed, and the wife has agreed to live separate and apart from her husband. The principle of the decision in Nott v. Nott (1) was, that the wife had not agreed to live separate and apart.]

(1) 36 Law J. Rep. (n.s.) Prob. & M. 10; s. c. Law Rep. 1 P. & D. 251.

(2) 37 Law J. Rep. (n.s.) Prob. & M. 42; s. c. Law Rep. 1 P. & D. 601.

There was an inchoate desertion in the month of August, 1865. The deed was simply a device on the husband's part to induce the wife to live apart, and it has never been acted on. The case is therefore within the decision in Nott v. Nott (1). The only difference between them is this, in the one case the husband was destitute, here the wife was destitute.

THE JUDGE ORDINARY.—The Court is satisfied as to the adultery, but the question is, whether the facts of the case would justify it in holding that there has been a desertion without cause for two years. There is no doubt that the husband left the wife in 1865, and under such circumstances, that if he had never seen her again and they had no more to say to one another for two years, a case of desertion would have been completed. But in the following year, 1866, Mr. Paine, who was a trustee under certain family deeds, and a friend both of the husband and of the wife, went to the husband and remonstrated with him for having left his wife, and discussed with him the question of making some provision for her. The result of that discussion was that the husband agreed to enter into a deed and covenant to pay his wife 150*l.* a year, and that deed was fully and completely executed. It was executed by the husband, it was signed by the wife, and it was executed by a trustee on her behalf. The husband had not the means of paying the money, but he had a reversionary interest in 5,000*l.*, and it was covenanted that the allowance should be made a charge on that reversion. There is no doubt that the legal effect of that deed was such that the wife obtained a distinct money benefit under it. She, on her part, agreed to live separate from her husband, and the trustee covenanted for her to the like effect. It is now suggested that the Court should enquire into what was intended by her when she executed the deed. But it is clear that such evidence is inadmissible. The question, then, is, whether a woman who enters into an agreement that her husband shall live apart from her can be said to have been deserted without just cause. I repeat the opinion I formed in Crabbe v. Crabbe (2), that she cannot. The case of Nott v. Nott (1) does not apply. The ratio decidendi in Nott v. Nott (1) was that the wife never agreed to live separate and apart from the husband. The making of a deed was contemplated, and some of the parties executed it, but the party whose execution was to make it an efficient and binding act was the trustee who covenanted for the wife, and he never signed it, so that the deed was never completed. In this case the Court is reluctantly obliged to deal with the facts as they are, and to hold that the wife has bargained away her right to relief on the ground of desertion, and that the charge of desertion for two years is not established. She is entitled to a decree of judicial separation on the ground of adultery if she applies for it.

The case was adjourned in order that the petitioner might be consulted.

Attorneys—Chapman, Clarke, & Turner.

MATRIMONIAL. } HEBBLETHWAITE v. HEBBLE-1869. } THWAITE (The Queen's Dec. 18. } Proctor intervening).

Adultery, Evidence of—Competence of Witness to give Evidence of his or her Adultery—Privilege of Witness to refuse—32 & 33 Vict. c. 68. s. 3.

The proviso in 32 & 33 Vict. c. 68. s. 3, that "no witness, whether a party to the suit or not, shall be liable to be asked, or bound to answer, any question tending to shew that he or she has been guilty of adultery," does not render inadmissible the evidence of a witness that he or she has committed adultery.

The witness may claim the protection of the statute or give the evidence, but a party to the suit cannot object to its admission.

In this case, after a decree nisi for dissolution of marriage on the ground of the wife's adultery had been pronounced, the Queen's Proctor intervened, and amongst other charges alleged that the husband had committed adultery with a woman named Clara Phillips. The husband traversed the charges, and the issues came on for trial by a special jury.

The Attorney-General (Sir R. P. Collier) (J. F. Collier with him), for the Queen's Proctor, called Clara Phillips as a witness to prove the alleged adultery.

Dr. Spinks (Inderwick with him), on behalf of the husband, referred to 32 & 33 Vict. c. 68, s. 3 (1), and objected that the witness could not be asked any question tending to shew that she had committed adultery with Mr. Hebblethwaite.

The Attorney-General.—The objection cannot be taken by a party to the suit. The witness may claim the protection of the statute, and refuse to give evidence as to her adultery, but if she does not object to give it the evidence is admissible.

Dr. Spinks.—If that be so, the words "liable to be asked or" are surplusage. They were probably inserted for the purpose of excluding the inference of guilt which might be drawn if a witness could be asked questions imputing adultery and should refuse to answer.

THE JUDGE ORDINARY.—I am clear as to the intention of the legislature, although I cannot say that the language used in the statute is not capable of the interpretation put on it by Dr. Spinks. The general intention was to protect the witnesses whose evidence was rendered admissible by the statute. The provision was not intended to apply to the evidence by which the case of either side might be supported independent of the evidence of the parties. It was not intended to narrow the sources of evidence for or against a petitioner or respondent, but to protect the witnesses, and I doubt whether it is competent to counsel to take advantage of it. It is the duty of the judge to see that the witnesses have the protection given them by the statute. The words, "No witness shall be liable to be asked or bound," clearly refer to the position of the witness, and their meaning is this: When a person is called into the witness-box, and it is proposed to question him or her for the purpose of obtaining a statement that he or she has been guilty of adultery, the witness may claim the protection of the statute, and say that he or she is not desirous of being interrogated on the subject. I think the words, "No witness shall be liable to be asked," are not surplusage, because without them a string of questions might be put one after the other to a witness who would have to refuse to answer them one by one, whereas with those words it becomes the duty of the Judge to refuse to allow any of the questions to be put as soon as the witness claims the protection of the statute.

The JUDGE ORDINARY then told the witness that she was not bound to answer any question tending to shew that she had committed adultery.

[The witness said that she did not object to give evidence, and was examined.]

The jury found that Mr. Hebblethwaite had not committed the alleged adultery.

The decree nisi was afterwards made absolute.

Attorney—James Carter Dalton.

(1) Which enacts—"The parties to any proceedings instituted in consequence of adultery, and the husbands and wives of such parties, shall be competent to give evidence in such proceeding. Provided that no witness in any proceeding, whether a party to the suit or not, shall be liable to be asked or bound to answer any question tending to shew that he or she has been guilty of adultery, unless such witness shall have already given evidence in the same proceeding in disproof of his or her alleged adultery."

MATRIMONIAL.
1869.
Nov. 3. } CONSTABLE v. CONSTABLE.

Alimony Pendente Lite—Wife's petition—No answer—Right of husband to cross-examine witnesses called in support of petition—Practice.

The wife filed her petition for alimony, pendente lite. The husband filed no answer thereto:—Held, that he was not entitled to cross-examine witnesses called in support of the petition.

The wife filed her petition for alimony, pendente lite, on the 5th of October, 1869. The husband filed no answer to such petition. On the 28th October the petitioner gave the usual notice required by Rule 89 (Rules and Regulations, 1866) of her intention to move the Court, on the 3rd of November, for alimony, pendente lite, and to call witnesses in support of her petition.

The petitioner presented herself as a witness, and deposed to the respondent's income, as set forth in her petition.

Bosanquet, for the respondent, claimed the right to cross-examine her.

Holl, for the petitioner, objected.—Not having answered, the respondent is not entitled to be heard.

[LORD PENZANCE.—The respondent might have stated his case by filing an answer on oath, but not having done so, he cannot now be heard.]

Bosanquet asked that the case might be adjourned, to enable the respondent to file an answer.

[LORD PENZANCE.—An adjournment would simply entail further expense. He took his own course with his eyes open, and must abide the consequences.]

It was admitted by the wife that before instituting her suit for restitution of conjugal rights, she had received, under an agreement entered into with her husband, an allowance of 14s. per week.

LORD PENZANCE.—The Court is unwilling in cases of this kind to increase the amount that was paid by mutual consent. There is no doubt that the object of the suit is to get increased alimony, but as the husband has not thought proper to come here and state his case in the ordinary way, the Court must pay some attention to the evidence of the wife.

NEW SERIES, 39.—PROB. AND MAT.

Alimony, pendente lite, at the rate of 16s. per week, was allotted.

Attorneys—Miller & Miller, agents for John Suckling, Birmingham, for petitioner; Ralph Docker, for respondent.

PROBATE.
1869.
Nov. 6; Dec. 14. } GRANT v. GRANT.

Will—Parol evidence—Appointment of Executor—"I appoint my said nephew, J. G., Executor"—Wife's nephew resident with Testator and Brother's son of same name.

A testator appointed his "said nephew, Joseph Grant, executor" of his will. His wife's nephew of that name had resided with him for many years, and managed his business. There was also living a nephew (a brother's son) of the same name. Both claimed probate of the will:—Held, that parol evidence was admissible to shew the relation and circumstances in which the respective parties stood to the testator, and the sense in which he habitually used the word "nephew," when speaking of his wife's nephew. And the evidence shewing that the wife's nephew was the person meant, probate of the will was decreed to him accordingly.

John Grant, late of Rugby, in the county of Warwick, dealer in marine stores, deceased, died on the 22nd of February, 1868, having duly executed his last will and testament, with a codicil thereto, dated respectively the 18th February, 1868, and 21st February, 1868. After bequeathing certain legacies to his nieces, the will continued: "I bequeath to my nephew, Joseph Grant, the sum of 500*l.*, and all the stock and household effects in the house where I now live, and I devise to my said nephew, Joseph Grant, his heirs and assigns, the said house and premises where I now live. * * * I appoint my said nephew, Joseph Grant, executor of this my will." By the codicil he also appointed his nephew, James Grant (since deceased), executor of his will.

D

Joseph Grant, the plaintiff, a nephew of the testator's wife, had lived with him for many years, and assisted him in his business. There was also a nephew of the same name—Joseph Grant—a son of the testator's brother. Both claimed probate of the will. The case now came before the Court on petition; and the question was, whether parol evidence was admissible to shew that the person intended by the testator was his wife's nephew.

Field (Dr. Middleton with him) for the plaintiff.—The word "nephew" has not a strict signification. It is derived from nepos, the original meaning of which word is a descendant. In the translations of the Bible a brother or sister's son is never called "nephew;" and in Shakespeare the wife's nephew is frequently designated "nephew."

[LORD PENZANCE.—It cannot be denied that in common parlance a man's wife's nephew is commonly called his "nephew."]

That being so, the word is equivocal, and once you establish that it is equivocal, and find two persons each coming within the designation, parol evidence is admissible to explain intention. "Nephew" has no legal signification; it is never used in the Legacy Duty Office. He referred to the Epistle to the Colossians, iv. 10; the Book of Genesis xxix. 13; the Book of Job xviii. 19; the Book of the Prophet Isaiah xiv. 22; the first Epistle to Timothy v. 4; Shakespeare, "Richard II.," "Richard III.," "Much ado about nothing;" Hawkins on the Construction of Wills; Wigram's Extrinsic Evidence, Proposition 5; and Miller v. Travers (1).

Dr. Swabey (Chapman with him) for the defendant:—The word "nephew" has a strict and primary meaning. It is restricted to the sons of a brother or sister. There is therefore no ambiguity, because when we come to deal with extrinsic circumstances we find only one person answering the description. The law recognises the strongest possible difference between relationship by affinity and consanguinity, hence the rule in the Legacy Duty

Office. The words in the will, in their strict and primary sense, are sensible to extrinsic circumstances, and parol evidence is therefore inadmissible. He referred to Johnson's, Richardson's, and Webster's Dictionaries; Blackstone's Table of Consanguinity; Wigram's Extrinsic Evidence; Propositions 1, 2, & 3; Miller v. Travers (1); Smith v. Lidiard (2); James v. Smith (3).

Field in reply, referred to Adney v. Greatrex (4).

Cur. adv. vult.

Judgment was delivered, on Dec. 14, as follows:—

LORD PENZANCE.—The question in this case is the proper construction of a will. The facts to be found in the affidavits make the testator's real meaning abundantly clear. The question is, how far and to what extent these facts can be properly used by the Court to aid in construing the will. The words to be construed are, "I appoint my said nephew, Joseph Grant, executor," &c. In the former part of the will, "my nephew, Joseph Grant," is named as a legatee. To construe this provision and apply it to the proper individual some evidence is necessary to ascertain whether the testator had a nephew named Joseph Grant. It turns out that there was living at the date of the will a son of the testator's brother, whose name was Joseph Grant. It further appears that there was also living another Joseph Grant, who was a nephew of the testator's wife, and consequently, in ordinary parlance, a "nephew" of the testator. If the word "nephew" can be properly construed by the Court to include his wife's nephew, so that there are two persons to either of whom the words of description might be applied, it is not denied that some further parol evidence would be admissible to ascertain which of the two the testator meant, and it is clear that if this field of inquiry is once entered upon, the facts will abundantly shew that his wife's nephew, who lived with him, and not his own nephew, with whom he

(2) 3 Kay & J., 252.

(3) 14 Sim. 214.

(4) 38 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 414.

(1) 8 Bing. 244.

had no intimacy, was the person intended. But here it is contended that the word "nephew" cannot possibly be construed to include the nephew of the testator's wife. It is said that the Court is bound by the primary signification of words used in a will, and that nothing but the primary signification in its strictest sense can be resorted to, unless that signification would produce some absurdity or render the meaning insensible. A proposition of this kind is, no doubt, to be found in Sir James Wigram's book; but a great deal turns upon the question what is meant by the expression "primary signification." It will not do to carry it too far. When a man makes his will, it is fair to presume that he uses ordinary language in its ordinary sense, and if the original signification of a word is scrupulously followed in all cases, to the exclusion of that which by the common consent and use of mankind it has in process of time acquired, the Court would be carried in some cases a long way from the testator's intention in the endeavour strictly to follow it.

Furthermore, the use and custom of particular counties and places affix to certain words and terms particular meanings. Evidence of such meanings has always been permitted in the construction of written contracts, and why not in that of a will? Thus, in the case of Richardson v. Watson (5), the testator had devised "the close in the occupation of Watson." Watson occupied two closes. It was contended that the word "close," though primarily and strictly applicable to an enclosure or field, was popularly applied to a farm; and Lord Wensleydale, a great authority on niceties of construction, said:—"No doubt evidence might be given to shew that Watson occupied two closes, and, generally speaking, evidence might be given to shew that the testator used the word 'close' in the sense which it bore in the county where the property was situate as denoting a farm." Now, if the popular use of a word in a particular locality may be proved and accepted, why is the popular use of the word all over the county to be rejected?

Another thing has to be considered when the Court is dealing with a personal description. It may be that the testator has been in the habit of applying a particular designation to an individual. And if the evidence may be referred to, it is plain in this case that the testator did constantly use the word "nephew" to designate his wife's nephew. If this designation, then, so used is not at variance with its ordinary and popular meaning, it seems unreasonable to reject it wholly in favour of some primary meaning which excludes that individual. The strength of such evidence ought, no doubt, to determine whether the Court can act upon it or not in each particular case, but what I am now considering is, not its effect, but its admissibility. It may be that the word "nephew," when used as the description of a class who are to take benefit under a will, must be construed to include only the sons of brothers or sisters of the testator, and in James v. Smith (3) it appears to have been so construed. But this does not appear to me to preclude a wider signification being attached to the word when used as an additional description of a person specified by name, to whom the word is in an ordinary and popular sense applicable. Upon the whole, then, I am of opinion that so much of the evidence as shews the relations and circumstances in which the respective parties stood to the testator, and the sense in which he habitually used the word "nephew" when referring to Joseph Grant, his wife's nephew, is admissible in placing the Court in the position of the testator, and thus enabling it to understand the meaning of his language. And the Court construes the appointment of executor to have been intended to apply to Joseph Grant, the nephew of the testator's wife, and decrees probate to him accordingly.

Proctors—Shephard & Skipwith, agents for F. Fuller (attorney), Rugby.

Attorneys—F. T. Dubois, agent for W. Cowdell, jun., Hinckley, for defendant.

PROBATE. }
 1869. } In the goods of FRASER.
 Dec. 21. }

Probate—Paper simply revoking a Will
 —1 & 2 Vict. c. 26. s. 20.

An instrument which disposes of no property, but simply declares an intention to revoke a previous will is not a will or codicil, and is therefore not entitled to probate.

Thomas Fraser duly executed his will in 1866. Before his death in 1869, while temporarily residing in Florence, he duly executed, in accordance with the Wills Act, the following memorandum of cancellation, which was written at the foot of the last sheet of the will:—

"Florence, October 19th, 1869.

"This will was cancelled this day, in the presence of Dr. Roderick Fraser, physician, Florence, and Margaret Riley, nurse, who witnessed the signature of Thomas Fraser, Esq., both being present, and signed it as witnesses.

"Thomas Fraser.

"Rodk. Fraser, M.D.

"Margaret x Riley, nurse.
 her mark."

Dr. Tristram moved for a grant of administration to the widow of the deceased, with the paper writing dated October 19th, 1869, annexed. He cited the cases of In the goods of Hicks (1), and In the goods of Hubbard (2).

LORD PENZANCE.—I think this case goes further than the previous cases. I had serious doubts in In the goods of Hicks (1), where there were words declaring an intestacy, but ultimately I was induced to grant probate. In this case what the Court has got before it is nothing but a paper stating that the deceased revoked a former will. The 20th section of the Wills Act enacts "that no will or codicil, or any part thereof, shall be revoked otherwise than as aforesaid, or by another will or codicil executed in manner hereinbefore required, or by some writing declaring an intention to revoke the same, and executed in the manner in which a will is hereinbefore required to be executed, or by the burning," &c. The statute draws a distinction between wills and codicils and "some writing." I am clearly of opinion that this is some writing declaring an intention to revoke a previous will, and being only a writing of that character, it cannot be called a will: it disposes of nothing; it throws no light on the testamentary intentions of the deceased; it does not declare an intestacy; it simply revokes one particular paper. The application, therefore, must be refused.

Proctors—Fielder & Sumner.

PROBATE. } RAYSON v. PARTON AND 1869. } PAGE
 Dec. 21. } (JOHNSON INTERVENING).

Practice—Costs of heir-at-law intervening—Costs of issues found distributively.

An heir-at-law, who intervenes in a suit and opposes a will, is entitled to costs if the will is pronounced against.

When issues are found distributively, the party condemned in costs is not liable for the costs of the issues found in his favour, if they are separable from the other costs.

The defendants propounded the will of C. Johnson who died in 1868, leaving a will made in 1867, by which, after bequeathing some small annuities to his nieces, he left the residue of his property, which was principally realty, of the value of about 12,000*l.*, to the defendants, and appointed them executors. The plaintiff, as one of the next-of-kin, opposed the will, and pleaded incapacity, undue influence, fraud, and that the deceased did not know and approve of the contents of the will. The heir-at-law, an infant, had not been cited to see proceedings, but had obtained leave to intervene, and gave notice that he intended only to cross-examine the witnesses called by the defendants. The issues were tried before the Court by a special jury, in December, 1869. The jury found the issues of incapacity, and that the testator did not know

(1) 38 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. & M. 65; s. c. Law Rep. 1 Prob. & D. 683.

(2) 35 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. & D. 27; s. c. Law Rep. 1 Prob. & M. 53.

and approve of the contents of the will, in favour of the plaintiff, and the other issues in favour of the defendants; and the Court pronounced against the will and condemned the defendants in the costs of the plaintiff and the heir-at-law, giving the defendants leave to move on the question of costs.

Bayford, for the defendants, moved accordingly.—First, The defendants ought not to be condemned in the costs of the two issues of undue influence and fraud which were found for them.

[LORD PENZANCE.—How can you draw a distinction between the evidence as directed to different issues? The evidence went to all the issues.]

Much evidence was directed specially to proof of the two issues which were found for the defendants. Secondly, The defendants ought not to be condemned in the costs of the heir-at-law, as he intervened voluntarily; the defendants opposed his intervention. As he gave notice that he only intended to cross-examine the witnesses, the defendants could not have recovered costs from him if he had failed. The effect of his intervention was materially to prolong the trial and increase the costs.

Searle, for the heir-at-law, was not called upon to argue.

LORD PENZANCE.—As to the first point, if there were any substantial part of the evidence given with respect to the pleas of undue influence and fraud which differed from the rest of the evidence, the executors ought not to be cast in the costs of it, but applying all the facts to the issues as they stood, I should say that the whole evidence applied to all the issues, and that no part was separable from the rest. As to the heir-at-law, I think it is not a fair view of his position to say that he has increased these costs. The defendants did not seek to bind him, and he was not therefore bound to have come in at the trial. He might have stood aside and have said, I will let you take your verdict as to the personalty, and at the proper time I will come in and bring my action on the realty, so that the whole case, as regards the realty, would have had to be gone through again, and the defendants would have had to pay the costs of both proceedings. It seems to me that it would be setting a bad example if this Court were to say to an heir-at-law: If you choose to come in and litigate the realty at the same time as the personalty and so make it one and therefore a less expensive proceeding, you shall not have your costs, but you shall have them if you stand aside and make the executors go over the same ground again. It seems to me that the heir-at-law has done that which is most desirable in the interests of the defendants. He has carried on the contest with them in much the least expensive way. The order, therefore, must be confirmed, condemning the executors in the costs of the suit with the costs of this motion.

Attorney—T. Simey, for plaintiff.

Proctors—W. G. Jennings, for defendants; E. W. Crosse, for intervenor.

MATRIMONIAL.

1869.

Dec. 7.

PARKINSON v. PARKINSON.

Amendment—Wife's petition—Failure to prove desertion—Petition allowed to be amended by addition of charge of cruelty.

On the hearing of her petition for dissolution of marriage, the wife proved the adultery of the husband, but failed to establish the charge of desertion:—The Court allowed her subsequently to amend her petition by adding a charge of cruelty, but intimated that strict proof would be required to support it.

This was a petition by the wife for a dissolution of her marriage by reason of her husband's adultery and desertion. At the hearing, which took place before the Judge Ordinary, on November 17th, she failed to establish the charge of desertion, and the case was adjourned (Vide ante, p. 14), in order that she might be consulted as to whether she would apply for a decree of judicial separation, to which she was entitled on the ground of the respondent's adultery.

Dr. Swabey, on her behalf, now moved the Court to allow her to amend her petition by adding a charge of cruelty. In support of the application he relied on affidavits which were filed, and from which it appeared that in September last the petitioner was, for the first time, informed that a complaint from which she had suffered for the greater portion of her married life, and from which she still suffered, was syphilis, and that she was ignorant that the wilful communication of such a complaint by her husband constituted legal cruelty until November last, when, being in Court, awaiting the hearing of her own petition, she heard it so laid down in another case. On the following day she mentioned the facts to her solicitor.

The Court allowed the petition to be amended by adding a charge of cruelty, but intimated that strict proof would be required to support it at the hearing.

Attorneys—Chapman, Clarke & Turner, for petitioner; Lewis & Lewis, for respondent.

PROBATE. } TICHBORNE v. TICHBORNE.
1870. } In the goods of DAME HENRIETTE
Jan. 25. } FELICITÉ TICHBORNE.

Administrator pendente lite acting under order of Court of Chancery—Interference of Court of Probate—20 & 21 Vict. c. 77. s. 70.

An administrator pendente lite, acting under an order of the Court of Chancery, which directed the personal estate of the intestate to be applied in payment of her debts and funeral expenses in a due course of administration, advertised for sale the unrealised portions of the estate, consisting chiefly of personal ornaments and family relics. The estate, exclusive of such articles and things, was insufficient to meet the debts proved and claimed, but the plaintiff, in order to prevent the sale, was willing to deposit in the Registry a sum sufficient to cover the deficiency:—The Court, though deeming the offer of the plaintiff a reasonable one, declined to restrain the administrator from proceeding with the sale, and intimated that as a rule it would not interfere with an administrator acting under an order of the Court of Chancery.

This was an administration suit in which the plaintiff and defendant contested the right to a grant of administration to the personal estate and effects of Dame Henriette Felicité Tichborne, deceased.

In a suit pending between the same parties in the Court of Chancery, Mr. Richard Humphreys was appointed receiver of the personal estate of the deceased, and on the 29th of June, 1869, he was also appointed administrator pendente lite by the Court of Probate (vide 38 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. & M. 55, 70). An administration suit was subsequently instituted in the Court of Chancery, and in such suit Stuart, V.C., on the 26th of July, 1869, made an order directing the usual accounts to be taken, and "that the intestate's personal estate be applied in payment of her debts and funeral expenses in a due course of administration." It was found, on the account being taken, that the debts of the deceased amounted to 1,255*l.* 17*s.* 10*d.*, and the assets, exclusive of certain plate, jewellery, linen and books, to 1,034*l.* 3*s.* 7*d.* The assets being insufficient to meet the claims against the estate, the administrator, with the sanction of the chief clerk of the Vice Chancellor, to whom the matter had been referred, advertised a sale of the plate, &c., above mentioned, being the unrealised portions of the estate.

Dr. Tristram, for the plaintiff, now moved the Court to restrain the administrator pendente lite, from proceeding with the sale until further order. It was true he was clothed with the general powers of an administrator, but he was subject to the immediate control of the Court, and should act under its directions (20 & 21 Vict. c. 77. s. 70). The articles advertised for sale were personal ornaments and family relics, and the plaintiff was willing to deposit in the Registry the sum of 300*l.* to meet the alleged deficiency in the assets.

The Solicitor General (Sir J. D. Coleridge) (Bayford with him), for the administrator, opposed the motion. To grant it would bring the Court into conflict with the Court of Chancery. Further, the estate was insolvent and the sooner it was realised the better.

Bridge, for the creditors, also opposed the motion.

Dr. Tristram, in reply.—The plaintiff cannot interfere in the administration suit in the Court of Chancery. He is therefore compelled to apply to the Court of Probate to exercise its powers in controlling the administrator pendente lite.

LORD PENZANCE.—There is no doubt that the Court can control the proceedings of an administrator pendente lite. But in this particular case it happens that the relations of the deceased are squabbling as to who is entitled to the administration, that the creditors of the deceased are meanwhile unpaid, that an administration suit has been in consequence instituted in the Court of Chancery, and that it is in obedience to an order made in that suit that the administrator is now acting. I do not think, under those circumstances, that it would be right I should interfere with him. On the other hand, I think the proposal made by the plaintiff is a very reasonable one, and I cannot imagine that the forms of the Court of Chancery will prevent him from applying to it, and having the sale prevented. But in matters of this kind it is important that I should adhere to some principle, and that principle I think should be this—not to interfere with the administrator when there is an administration suit pending in the Court of Chancery, and when the administrator is acting under an order made by the Court of Chancery in such suit. I must therefore refuse this application.

Motion rejected with costs of administrator, but not costs of creditors.

Attorneys—Walter & Moojen, for plaintiff; Dobinson & Geare for administrator.

MATRIMONIAL.
1870.
Feb. 1.

TAYLOR v. TAYLOR AND WOLTERS.

Dissolution of Marriage—Practice—Application of Damages.

In a suit by a husband for dissolution of marriage, the Court refused to order any part of the damages assessed to be settled on the wife, but directed them to be applied, first, to the payment of such part of the petitioner's costs as he should not recover from the co-respondent, and subject thereto, to be settled upon the issue of the marriage.

This was a petition by a husband for dissolution of marriage, claiming damages. The damages had been assessed by a jury at 150*l.*, and a decree nisi had been pronounced, the co-respondent being condemned in costs.

Inderwick now moved the Court to make the decree absolute, and to order that the damages should be applied to the payment of such of the petitioner's costs as should not be recovered from the co-respondent.

Cunningham, for the respondent, asked the Court to order that the damages should be settled upon the respondent and a child, the only issue of the marriage. A legacy of 100*l.*, which had been left to the wife, had been applied in purchasing furniture, which was now in the possession of the petitioner. He cited Keats v. Keats (1), Latham v. Latham (2), Narracott v. Narracott (3). He also asked the Court to order that the respondent should have the custody of the child.

LORD PENZANCE.—Each case must depend on its own circumstances. The Court has to deal with the sum of 150*l.* awarded as damages. The first duty of the Court is to see that the petitioner gets his costs. That sum will therefore be first applied to the payment of the petitioner's costs, as between attorney and client, or at least so much of them as he fails to obtain from the co-respondent. With regard to the remainder, which may amount to 100*l.*, all that the Court can do is to order it to be settled upon the child. The wife has no claim to any part of the damages. As to the money the wife brought into the common stock, the Court cannot travel back into that matter. The husband must have the custody of the child, the respondent being allowed to see it once a month.

Attorneys—J. McDiarmid, for petitioner; T. N. Lede, for respondent.

(1) 28 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. & M. 57.

(2) 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. & M. 163.

(3) 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. & M. 132.

PROBATE. }
 1870. }
 Feb. 8. } In the goods of DUGGINS.

Will—Attestation—Name of Witness written by another—1 Vict. c. 26.

An attesting witness must himself subscribe the will.

It is not essential that a witness should sign his own name, provided it is clear that his subscription is intended as an act of attestation.

The name of A., an attesting witness to a will, was at his request subscribed by B., who was present at the execution:—Held, that as A. had not subscribed, and B.'s subscription was not intended as an act of attestation, the will was not duly executed.

Edward Duggins died in 1867. On the 20th of October, 1860, he made a will and signed it in the presence of William Williams and William Edwards, whose names appeared on the will as attesting witnesses. W. Williams duly subscribed the will, but the name of W. Edwards was, at his request, written by his wife, Susannah Edwards, who was present at the execution of the will.

Charles moved the Court for probate. Under the circumstances the subscription of the name of W. Edwards by his wife, may be taken as his subscription.

[LORD PENZANCE.—In the goods of Cope (1) is an authority directly in point against you. The only distinction between that and the present case is that in the former the name of the attesting witness was written by another person, at the request of the testatrix, whilst in this case it was written at the request of the witness.]

Then it is submitted that Susannah Edwards may be considered an attesting and subscribing witness. It is not necessary that a witness should sign his own name, provided he signs with the intention of attesting the will—In the goods of Oliver (2). The case of Pryor v. Pryor (3) is at first sight against this contention, but it is distinguishable from the present case by the fact that there the person whose name was signed was not present at the time.

LORD PENZANCE.—I think that this application cannot be granted. The will is signed by the testator, in the presence of two witnesses, and so far the statute no doubt is satisfied. But the statute also requires that the witnesses shall attest and subscribe the will. One of the attesting witnesses, William Williams, did so attest and subscribe the will, but Edwards did not subscribe—he did not write his name, nor put his mark on the will, nor did he in fact touch it. Upon the authority of the case I have quoted, I am of opinion that some other person writing the name of a witness is not sufficient to satisfy the words of the statute. The same section, which provides that a testator shall subscribe the will at the foot or end thereof, goes on to say that it shall be done by the testator or by some other person in his presence and by his direction. Provision is made for some one else writing the name of the testator, but no such provision is made with regard to the attesting witnesses. I think, therefore, the will has not been attested by William Edwards. Then it is suggested that the attesting witness is not William Edwards, but Susannah Edwards. To make that out it would be necessary to shew that the signature of William Edwards was either the signature of Mrs. Edwards, or that, if it were not, she subscribed it as her signature, with the intention of attesting the will. There have been cases in which a witness has inadvertently signed the name of another person instead of his own, and the will has been held to have been duly subscribed. In such cases, when the Court is satisfied that this has been done inadvertently, it would not be right to hold that the witness had failed to attest the will. But that is very different from holding that a person, who never intended to sign the will as an attesting witness, did so because she has written the name of another person. I am bound, therefore, to reject this application.

Attorneys—Johnson & Weatheralls, agents for W. P. Williams, Newport.

(1) 2 Robert. 335.

(2) 2 Spinks 57.

(3) 29 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. & M. 114.

PROBATE. }
 1870. } In the goods of JOHN SAVAGE.
 Feb. 15. }

Probate—Codicil—Will not forthcoming
 —1 Vict. c. 26. s. 20.

The testator made a codicil to his will and gave it to his son to keep. On his death the will was not forthcoming:—Held, that the codicil not having been revoked by any of the modes indicated in the statute, it was entitled to be admitted to proof.

Black v. Jobling (1) affirmed.

John Savage, late of Beaufort Buildings, Bath, in the county of Somerset, gentleman, deceased, died on the 9th of January, 1870. There was reason to believe that he had made a will, but the only executed testamentary paper found after his death was a codicil, which ran as follows:—

"This is a codicil to my will. After the death of my dear wife, save and except the Colly estate, containing 800 acres more or less, I give all the land I have in the parish of Tetbury to my son William absolutely, and I also give to my son William the Vale of Neath Debenture Stock, value 1,000*l.*, to cover the bond I have given to Robert Holdsworth and Francis Savage, my son, as trustees of his marriage settlement, for securing the sum of 600*l.* and interest. Witness my hand this 2nd day of August, 1869, at Mappowder, Dorsetshire."

It appeared from the affidavits that the testator was on a visit with his son, the Rev. William Savage, at Mappowder, in August, 1869, and that on or about the 2nd of that month he handed to his son an envelope, saying, "There, you keep it." The envelope was opened on his death, and was found to contain the codicil. It further appeared that in December, 1869, he shewed his son, Francis Savage, a rough draft of a will which was found unexecuted among his papers, and that when asked by his son, "What have you done with the original will?" he replied, "To tell you the truth, I have burned it."

Pritchard moved the Court to grant administration, with the codicil annexed, to Francis Savage, one of the natural and lawful children, and one of the next of kin of the deceased.—The codicil not having been revoked in any of the modes indicated by the statute (1 Vict. c. 26. s. 20), is entitled to be admitted to proof—Black v. Jobling (1).

LORD PENZANCE.—I think the grant ought to go. The question involved was raised in the case of Black v. Jobling (1), in which the Court took the trouble to review the previous decisions in the matter. Before the statute (1 Vict. c. 26), the principle was that the codicil fell to the ground on the revocation of the will, but if the party could establish that the testator intended the codicil to stand by itself, notwithstanding the revocation of the will, the Court would then give effect to it. It will be recollected that at that time the Court used to go largely into the question as to what papers the testator intended to constitute his will. But then came the statute, and it in so many words enacted that "no will or codicil, or any part thereof, shall be revoked otherwise than as aforesaid" (marriage), "or by another will or codicil executed in manner hereinbefore required, or by some writing declaring an intention to revoke the same, and executed in the manner in which a will is hereinbefore required to be executed, or by the burning, tearing, or otherwise destroying the same by the testator, or by some person in his presence and by his direction, with the intention of revoking the same." Therefore, if after the statute it were to be held that a codicil was revoked by the mere fact that the will to which it was made a codicil was revoked, the Court would be going in the teeth of the clear language of the Act; and consequently, if this were the first case that had arisen since the passing of the Act, I should have no doubt that the statute governed it, and that the codicil being left unrevoked by any of the modes indicated in the statute, it should be admitted to proof. There has, however, been a decision on the point; but in Black v. Jobling (1), I pointed out that that decision was hardly satisfactory. There are two cases on the subject decided by Sir Herbert Jenner Fust. The first

(1) 38 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. & M. 74; s.c. Law Rep. 1 P. & D. 685.

NEW SERIES, 39.—PROB. AND MAT.

is In the goods of Halliwell (2). In that case the Court did not seem to have had its attention called to the words of the statute, and upheld the codicil on the ground that it was the only substantive testamentary paper of the deceased. The next was the case of Clogstoun v. Walcott (3), and there the language of the judge was as follows:—"Nothing can be clearer than that, when the deceased destroyed the will, he expected that the destruction would have no effect upon the codicils. . . . Under the old law, the effect of destroying a will was, by presumption, to defeat the operation of the codicils to that will; but by the present law there must be an intention to destroy." The statute does not say anything about an intention to destroy. The statute says that the codicil shall not be destroyed other than by one of the several modes which it specifies. When the matter came before Sir Cresswell Cresswell in Grimwood v. Coxens (4), these cases were cited, and the Court said, "I think it has been established by the cases cited at the bar, that previous to the passing of 1 Vict. c. 26, a codicil was prima facie dependent on the will, and that the destruction of the latter was an implied revocation of the former; and, moreover, that Sir H. J. Fust was of opinion that no alteration of this principle was made by the passing of the statute." That certainly is not what Sir Herbert Jenner Fust said. He said there was an alteration and that it consisted in this, that the statute made it necessary there should be an intention to destroy. That was the way in which the case was handled in Grimwood v. Coxens (4), and it seemed to me, therefore, that the matter had not been properly considered. I said as much in Black v. Jobling (1), but upon looking at that case again I thought that perhaps the matter had not been made sufficiently clear as to what the intention of the Court was. The result is that, in my judgment, the words of the statute are imperative; and those decisions to which I have referred do not appear to me to have proceeded on any consideration of the statute, or any argument as to how the imperative words of the statute could be got rid of. I think that in this case, the testator having left behind him a paper properly executed as a testamentary paper, that paper, no doubt, being in the form of a codicil, it still must stand, unless he has revoked it in some of the modes indicated by the statute. If the testator destroyed his will, and left the codicil still standing, the natural inference is that he intended it to remain. I do not, however, proceed on his intention. I proceed on the words of the statute, which says that a will or codicil shall be revoked only in a certain manner, and as this codicil has not been revoked in either of the modes specified, I think it is entitled to be admitted to proof.

Grant as prayed accordingly.

Proctor—G. R. Longden.

PROBATE.
1870.
Feb. 1.

In the goods of BULLAR.

Administration — Practice — Grant to Attorney.

When the person entitled to administration is in England, a grant will not be made to his attorney unless the estate consists solely of property held in trust.

H. Bullar died in 1869, leaving a will whereby he appointed his four sisters universal legatees. The executor named in the will was dead.

The deceased at the time of his death was a trustee in a great many cases. He left property other than that held in trust.

The Solicitor General (Sir J. D. Coleridge), on behalf of the legatees, moved for a grant of administration with the will annexed to a Mr. Murray as their attorney.

[LORD PENZANCE.—It is contrary to the practice of the Court to make a grant to an attorney where the persons entitled to the grant are in this country.]

It would be impossible for ladies to act in the trusts which would devolve on them if they were to take the grant. Mr. Murray is willing to act if the grant is made to him.

(2) 4 Notes of Cas. 400.
(3) 5 Notes of Cas. 623.
(4) 2 Sw. & Tr. 364.

LORD PENZANCE.—It would be contrary to the practice of the Court to grant this application. There are four persons, each of whom is entitled to the grant, who say we will none of us take it, but ask the Court to make it to a person who has no interest. The Court has occasionally made such a grant where there has been only a trust, but it would be contrary to the practice to grant the present application. There can be no objection to your clients taking the grant, and then appointing Mr. Murray to act as their attorney. I reject the application.

Application rejected.

Proctors—Brooks and Dubois.

PROBATE. }
1870. } In the goods of WILLIAM HICKS.
Feb. 15. }

Will—Estate left unadministered by Executor—Grant de bonis non (with will annexed) to Administrator of Executor—Parties entitled in priority abroad.

A died, having appointed B executor of his will. B proved the will, and died leaving part of the estate unadministered. The Court made a grant de bonis non (with the will annexed) to the administrator of B, the parties entitled in priority being abroad and difficult to be found; but required that security should be given to the amount of their share of the property.

William Hicks, late of Shere, in the county of Surrey, gentleman, deceased, by his will, dated February 12th, 1842, gave and bequeathed all his estate and effects unto and equally between his brother, Robert Hicks, and his sister, Mary Anne, the wife of William Ewen, share and share alike; and he nominated his said brother and sister executor and executrix of his will.

The testator died February 8th, 1854, a bachelor without a parent living, leaving Robert Hicks, his natural and lawful brother and only next of kin, and Catherine Ewen and Frances Anne Ewen, the daughters of his sister, Mary Anne Ewen, who predeceased him, his lawful nieces, and the only persons entitled in distribution with Robert Hicks in the event of an intestacy.

Probate of the will was granted on the 12th of May, 1854, by the Prerogative Court of Canterbury to Robert Hicks, the surviving executor. Robert Hicks died in January, 1864, a widower and intestate, leaving part of the estate of his testator unadministered; and on December 20th, 1869, letters of administration of his personal estate and effects were granted by the Principal Registry to Robert Hicks the younger, one of his natural and lawful children and one of his next of kin. Catherine Ewen and Frances Anne Ewen were married and resident abroad—the one in South America, the other in the United States of America. They had not been heard of for some time, and there was reason to suppose that they were dead.

O. A. Middleton moved the Court to decree letters of administration (with the will annexed) of the personal estate and effects of William Hicks left unadministered to Robert Hicks, the administrator of his executor. He referred to Savage v. Blythe (1).

LORD PENZANCE.—I think the application ought to be granted. The person who seeks the grant represents three-fourths of the estate, and there is also an obvious convenience in the grant de bonis non going to the administrator of the person who has proved the will, but who has left the estate unadministered. Upon the whole circumstances of the case, taking into consideration that the persons having the priority are abroad and difficult to be found, perhaps dead, the Court, I think, ought to make the grant as prayed; but security must be given for one-fourth of the property.

Grant accordingly.

Attorney—Smallpeice.

MATRIMONIAL. }
 1870. }
 Jan. 19, 20, 21; } KELLY v. KELLY.*
 Feb. 9. }

Judicial Separation—Undue Exercise of Marital Authority—Moral Cruelty.

If force, whether physical or moral, is systematically exerted to compel the submission of the wife in such a manner, to such a degree, and during such length of time, as to break down her health and render serious malady imminent, the interference of the law cannot be justly withheld by any Court which affects to have charge of the wife's personal safety.

Per Channell, B. (with the concurrence of Hannen, J.)—affirming the proposition as above laid down by the Judge Ordinary—The object of the Matrimonial Court in exercising its jurisdiction in decreeing judicial separation for cruelty, is to free the injured consort from a cohabitation which has been rendered, or which there is imminent reason to believe will be rendered, unsafe by the ill-usage of the party complained of. It is obvious that the modes by which one of two married persons may make the life or the health of the other insecure are infinitely various, but as often as perverse ingenuity may invent a new manner of producing the result, the Court must supply the remedy by separating the parties. The most frequent form of ill-usage which amounts to cruelty is that of personal violence; but the Courts have never limited their jurisdiction to such cases alone. And a wife does not lose her title to the protection of the Court merely because she has proved unable to bear with perfect patience and with unflinching propriety of conduct the ill-usage of her husband.

In this case a decree of judicial separation on the ground of cruelty to the wife was pronounced by the Judge Ordinary on December 7, 1869 (ante, p. 9). The respondent appealed against the decision, and the case was argued by him before the full Court on the 19th, 20th and 21st of January.

* Before the full Court: Lord Penzance (Judge Ordinary), Channell, B., and Hannen, J.

Dr. Deane and Inderwick appeared for the petitioner, but were not called on.

On the 9th of February judgment was delivered as follows:—

CHANNELL, B.—This is an appeal to the full Court from a decision of the Judge Ordinary. Lord Penzance is desirous that my brother Hannen and myself should first state our views. I proceed therefore to deliver our joint opinion.

The appeal is by the Rev. James Kelly against a decree whereby the Judge Ordinary, on the petition of the appellant's wife, Frances Kelly, decreed in favour of the petitioner for a judicial separation from her husband on the ground of cruelty. Mr. and Mrs. Kelly were married in Ireland in the year 1841. There was issue of the marriage—a child, deceased, and a son, now living, who was born in 1845. With the exception of a visit made by Mrs. Kelly to Wales and Ireland (to which visit we propose hereafter to refer), Mrs. Kelly lived under the same roof with Mr. Kelly from the time of the marriage until January, 1869. Since that time Mr. and Mrs. Kelly have ceased to cohabit, Mrs. Kelly having left her husband's home and claimed from this Court the decree for judicial separation now appealed against. There is some evidence that on one or two occasions Mr. Kelly laid hands on Mrs. Kelly against her consent. But the evidence is so slight on this head that we think it safer to treat the case (as it was considered by the Judge Ordinary) as one in which there is an absence of any proof of such physical violence towards the wife on the part of the husband, as could justify a decree. The question then arises whether the decree is erroneous in holding that although there was not such actual physical violence on the part of the husband towards the wife, there is shewn to be that cruelty which will entitle her to ask this Court for a decree for judicial separation.

The appellant seeks the reversal of the decree on two grounds; first, that the Judge Ordinary has erred in point of law in the definition which he has given of cruelty, and secondly, that the evidence does not establish that the appellant has been guilty of legal cruelty. The passages in the judgment of the Judge Ordinary, in which he has laid down the principles upon which his decision is based, are the following:—

"The peculiar and distinguishing feature of this case is the adoption by the respondent of a deliberate system of conduct towards his wife, with the view of bending her to his authority

"If force, whether physical or moral, is systematically exerted for this purpose in such a manner, to such a degree, and during such a length of time as to break down her health and render serious malady imminent, the interference of the law cannot be justly withheld by any Court which affects to have charge of the wife's personal safety." "Moreover," says his Lordship, "the decisions have imported this further proposition as a condition of the Court's interference, that the troubles of the wife are not owing to her own misconduct."

We are of opinion that the above cited passages contain an accurate and, so far as was necessary for the determination of the case, a complete statement of the law on the subject. It would be difficult to frame a definition of legal cruelty, which should be applicable to all the cases which may arise. The object of the Matrimonial Court in exercising its jurisdiction in decreeing judicial separation for cruelty is to free the injured consort from a cohabitation which has been rendered, or which there is imminent reason to believe will be rendered, unsafe by the ill-usage of the party complained of. It is obvious that the modes by which one of two married persons may make the life or the health of the other insecure are infinitely various, but as often as perverse ingenuity may invent a new manner of producing the result, the Court must supply the remedy by separating the parties. The most frequent form of ill-usage which amounts to cruelty is that of personal violence; but the Courts have never limited their jurisdiction to such cases alone, as will be clearly seen by reference to some of the authorities which we proceed to cite.

In giving his judgment in the case of Curtis v. Curtis (1) the late Judge Ordinary, Sir Cresswell Cresswell, quoted largely from the decision of Lord Stowell in Evans v. Evans (2). Evans v. Evans was a case in which the wife, complaining of some trifling acts of violence committed by the husband, mainly relied on an apprehension of such violence if cohabitation continued as would render that cohabitation unsafe. His Lordship, however, considered the question with reference to the effect of the husband's treatment on the health of the wife, and he used the following language, afterwards adopted by Sir Cresswell Cresswell in Curtis v. Curtis (1):—

"Proof must be given of a reasonable apprehension of bodily hurt. I say an apprehension, because assuredly the Court is not to wait till the hurt is actually done, but the apprehension must be reasonable, not arising merely from diseased sensibility of mind." So in Harris v. Harris (3), "There must be something that renders cohabitation unsafe, or is likely to be attended with injury to the person or to the health of the party." Again, in Waring v. Waring (4), "The usual principles require that such complaints should be supported by proofs of violence and ill-treatment endangering, or at least threatening, the life, or person, or health of the complainant." In Holden v. Holden (5) it is laid down that it is not necessary that the conduct of the wife should be entirely without blame, for the reason which would justify the imputation of blame to the wife would not justify the ferocity of the husband.

We think that the judgment appealed against is in conformity with the law as previously laid down, and we now proceed to consider whether the facts proved in evidence establish that the appellant was guilty of cruelty in the sense attributed to that word in the authorities referred to.

After a very anxious and careful consideration of the evidence, we are satisfied

(1) Sw. & Tr. 192; s. c. 27 Law J. Rep. (n.s.) Prob. & M. 73.

(2) 1 Consis. Reps. 37.

(3) 2 Consis. Reps. 148.

(4) Ibid. 153.

(5) 1 Consis. Reps. 453.

that the acts imputed to Mr. Kelly, as stated in the judgment of the Judge Ordinary, are established. What are those acts? First, as to Mr. Kelly's conduct before his wife left his roof for Wales and for Ireland. As to those acts we quote the language of the Judge Ordinary, in which we entirely concur, and which we consequently adopt. It is unnecessary to quote the evidence in support of this enumeration, it is sufficient to say that, in our opinion, every sentence we quote is warranted by satisfactory proof:—

"He opened her letters. He called her a vile traitor and apostate. He told her that no modest woman would associate with her. That she had given her confidence to another man. He refused to sit at meals with her; he insisted on occupying a separate bedroom; he told the servants to take orders from him, and not from his wife. He kept apart from his wife all day." We purposely omit the statement that he desired her not to attend the administration of the sacrament as we accept Mr. Kelly's explanation on this point, that what he did was not in the exercise of any authority over his wife, but only by way of advice. Mrs. Kelly left home on or about the 29th of June, 1868. She travelled with her relations in Wales, and afterwards paid a visit to other relations in Ireland, and she was away for nearly four months. She left home without her husband's consent (to this circumstance we shall afterwards advert), and she returned in October, 1868. What was Mr. Kelly's conduct to her on her return? Again we quote the language of the Judge Ordinary, whose view of the evidence we entirely adopt:—

"Mrs. Kelly was purposely subjected to the following treatment: She was entirely deposed from her natural position as mistress of her husband's house. She was debarred the use of money entirely. Not only were the household expenses withdrawn from her control, but she was not permitted to disburse anything for her own necessary expenses; every article of dress, every trifle that she required had to be put down on paper, and her husband provided it if he thought proper.

"Having on one occasion of going into town, declined to tell her husband on her return every house to which she had been, an interdict was placed on her going out at all. At one time the doors were locked to keep her in; at another a man-servant was deputed to follow her; at another the respondent insisted on accompanying her himself whenever she wanted to go abroad.

"On these occasions he appears to have occupied the short time they were together in what he called putting her sin before her in strong, coarse, and abusive terms, applying to her the same epithets and language as would be applicable to a woman who had been guilty of adultery. He took no meals with her; he occupied a separate bedroom; he passed no portion of the day, however small, in her society. They met, as before, only at family prayers, and if he spoke to her at all, it was only to give some directions, or to reproach her. Save on one or two occasions she saw no one. Those whom she desired to see were forbidden the house. She was absolutely prohibited from writing any letters, unless her husband saw them before they were posted. She was thus, so far as the appellant could achieve it, practically isolated from her friends. Meanwhile, the care of the household was confided to a woman, hired for the purpose, who was directed not to obey Mrs. Kelly's orders without the respondent's directions. In short, she was treated like a child or a lunatic, and in this light she was actually regarded by the woman just mentioned, when she first came to the place; and this, be it remembered, although she had passed the mature age of sixty, and had been married to the respondent for seven and twenty years."

What was the effect of this treatment on Mrs. Kelly's health? My brother Hannen and myself are quite satisfied upon the medical evidence, and upon the evidence of Mrs. Kelly herself, that the treatment she experienced from Mr. Kelly before she left for Wales, had such an effect upon her health as to cause change of air and scene, and absence from her husband to be necessary, and that from the treatment she suffered after her return from Ireland, her health was so broken down, that to continue subject to the same treatment for any length of time would not only have seriously imperilled her health, but would have exposed her to the highly probable consequence mentioned by the medical men, viz. paralysis or madness. It was, if we may say so, well observed by the Judge Ordinary that the state of Mrs. Kelly's health, her actual condition and danger were not denied by the appellant. He contented himself with ascribing it to vexation at the discovery of what he called her own treachery, and not to his treatment of her, thus differing the cause, but not controverting the fact. Mr. Kelly has strenuously contended on the hearing of his appeal, that the wife's conduct has been such as to explain away what otherwise might appear to be cruelty on his part, and to lead fairly to the view that her conduct on various occasions justified him in the exercise of his marital rights, in acting towards her as he has done. It will be right, therefore, to review the acts of Mrs. Kelly, and to see how far they give the appellant the excuse or justification he sets up. One circumstance much relied on occurred as long ago as the year 1850. It would appear from letters of Mrs. Kelly, put in evidence by Mr. Kelly, that she had, under the influence of jealousy, suspected Mr. Kelly of improper connection with a lady, a resident under the same roof. Of this suspicion she appears to have been relieved by Mr. Kelly's own statement. Her language is, "When you put the case before me in plain words, I shrank from the thought of such a suspicion of either of you."

Mrs. Kelly was assured of her husband's forgiveness, but in effect told that she had lost his confidence for ever. In the endeavour to regain it, and sorrowing for having entertained a groundless suspicion, she retracted the charge and expressed the utmost contrition and remorse at having made it. We think that this correspondence does not tend to support the appellant's case. So far as it throws light on the characters of the parties, it proves that Mrs. Kelly, satisfied by her husband's assurance that she had done him injustice, did all she could to shew her penitence and regain his affection and confidence, while it shews, on the other hand, that Mr. Kelly was severe and slow to forgive. Whether he ever did restore her to his confidence can only be inferred from the events out of which the present suit has arisen, but it may be concluded from the manner in which the appellant has preserved and used this correspondence, twenty years after its date, that nothing has occurred in the intervening period on which he can found an accusation against her. The appellant has enumerated twenty-five overt acts (as he terms them) of his wife, on which he relies as justifying his conduct towards her. We do not propose to examine them all in detail; some of them are entirely unfounded, others are too trivial to require notice, and others, indeed, the greater number, cannot serve as a justification of the appellant's conduct, for they were the consequences of it. It may well be that Mrs. Kelly, smarting under the harsh treatment which her husband inflicted on her, did not at all times preserve her temper, and she may on some occasions have done things which we should condemn, and she would herself regret; but a wife does not lose her title to the protection of this Court merely because she has proved unable to bear, with perfect patience, and with unflinching propriety of conduct, the illusage of her husband.

We now proceed to examine such of the charges against Mrs. Kelly, as appear to us to call for notice. The first is, that she abetted her son in prematurely and against his father's wishes leaving the paternal roof; the second, that she encouraged her son in disobedience to his father. The son of the appellant, a young man over twenty-one, had become dissatisfied with his position at home, and desired to earn a livelihood by undertaking the duties of a tutor. It is no part of our task to determine whether he was justified in taking the steps he did, or whether they were such as deservedly to bring upon him the penalty of being cast off by his father as an "unnatural son," and excluded from the paternal roof. Mrs. Kelly does not appear to have abetted or encouraged him to act against his father's wishes, although, no doubt, she played the part which usually belongs to the mother in such cases. She endeavoured to excuse the son to his father, and to make his conduct appear less blameworthy than his father considered it. The third charge is that she made excuses for her son having an immoral book in his possession. Of this there is no proof. The fourth charge is that she endeavoured in effect to make her husband a bankrupt. This accusation illustrates the spirit of exaggeration which pervades the whole of the appellant's charges against his wife. Mr. Kelly desired that a portion of his wife's money in settlement should be invested in a house. Mrs. Kelly at one time, at her husband's request, wrote a letter to her trustees, in which her assent to the investment was implied. She afterwards expressed her dissent, but upon being reminded of her previous letter, she ultimately withdrew her opposition, and the matter was carried out as Mr. Kelly wished. His mode of argument is this: "If she had persisted in her refusal, I should have been liable to be sued by the owner of the house for refusing to carry out an agreement I had entered into. I might have become liable to pay damages and costs which I should not have been able to pay, and in that case I should have been obliged to become bankrupt, therefore my wife is guilty of having endeavoured to bring about that result." There is not the slightest ground for imputing to the petitioner an intention in any way to injure her husband, much less to bring about so remote an event as his bankruptcy. She appears to have thought the investment an injudicious one and opposed it, but withdrew her opposition when it was pointed out to her that she had induced her husband to act on her previous implied assent. The fifth and sixth charges contain the gravamen of the appellant's accusation against his wife, and the facts upon which they are founded seem mainly to have given rise to the animosity which he has manifested towards her. They require therefore a somewhat fuller examination. These charges are as follows:—

"5th. She deliberately and defiantly traversed my authority in keeping up a correspondence with a repudiated connection of mine. 6th. She planned with that connection to test whether I had not committed a breach of trust, so that my own child might prosecute me." The dissension between the appellant and his son has already been referred to. On the occasion of a quarrel between them, the father used angry and abusive language to his son, who immediately wrote a letter to Colonel Thornbury, the husband of his father's sister, in which he gave his version of what had occurred, and asked his uncle's advice. Colonel Thornbury wrote in answer a letter, than which nothing could be more kind or judicious. He soothed the son's anger, endeavoured to restore a kindly feeling towards his father, by pointing out excuses for his ebullition of temper, and counselled in the most absolute terms, patience and submission on the part of the son to his father's will, and finished his letter with an invitation to his nephew to return with him to Switzerland after the termination of a visit which he, Colonel Thornbury, proposed in a short time to make to Mr. Kelly. Mr. Kelly unfortunately became acquainted with this correspondence by opening a pocket-book of his son's in which a copy of his letter and Colonel Thornbury's answer were contained. Mr. Kelly made copies of these letters and replaced the pocket-book where he found it. When Colonel Thornbury paid his promised visit, the appellant reproached him with having written as he had to his son, read to him the draft of a long letter such as he thought ought to have been written, and not succeeding in convincing Colonel Thornbury that he had done wrong, he finally informed him, that if he did not see his failure of duty to him in writing as he had to his son, all intercourse between their respective families must be severed. This decision the appellant communicated to his wife. It is clear that while Colonel Thornbury was at Liverpool, Mrs. Kelly informed him that she had recently learned from her husband that a sum of 5,500*l.*, which had been left to her by her sister some years before, had been invested by him in securities which had proved almost worthless. Desiring to know what her own and her son's legal interest in this legacy was, Mrs. Kelly wrote the following letter to Colonel Thornbury :—

"The Elms,

"Wednesday, February 5th.

"My dear Friend,—It has occurred to me, that if you have leisure and would take the trouble of going to Doctors' Commons and paying 1s. (12 stamps enclosed), you could see my sister's will. She died in /56. I think I should like to know if I am right in my recollections of its purport. But if you are busy, never mind it. I saw Clara to day; she told me to tell you that Mr. Kelly has written to say there is a vacancy in a merchant's office which he will keep open for Bruce for a few days, terms as usual, 100l. for five years. This would be better than letting him return to Zurich, as he could throw it up if anything better offered. Ned bids me say his father has refused his consent to his going; in fact he had, before Ned's communication, been applied to and put no obstacle in the way. I grieve to say matters are no better. Though I wish Fred had taken the Doctor's advice, and tried at least to make concessions, but I cannot prevail on him, and so the die is cast. I can only look up for support in this time of deep distress. It will be a great comfort to poor dear Clara if Bruce remains. I have only a moment to add that you must not think of taking up your time with our affairs unless you have full leisure.

"Yours affectionately,

"Frances Kelly."

Unfortunately Mr. Kelly became acquainted with this correspondence also, by opening with a key of his own which happened to fit a drawer in which his wife had locked the letter up. He copied it, as he says, for consideration and restored it to its place in her drawer. It is upon this correspondence that the appellant bases his charge against his wife of "treachery," of "conspiring" with her "wicked accomplice" Thornbury to prove her husband guilty of a "heartless breach of trust, so that his own child might prosecute him."

This accusation is repeated in a variety of ways, in a series of voluminous letters, written and read by the appellant to his wife. In vain has Mrs. Kelly repudiated the charge of harbouring suspicion that her husband had done anything morally wrong, or of having intended to cause her son to take proceedings against him.
NEW SERIES, 39.—PROB. AND M.

But the appellant has remained inexorable; and, from the time of his discovery of this correspondence with Colonel Thornbury, commenced and persisted in the series of acts, which cannot be properly designated by any milder term than persecution, and which ultimately led to the institution of the present proceedings. It is difficult to conceive what end the appellant purposed to bring about. It seems that nothing would satisfy him, unless his wife would acknowledge the justice of all the terms of opprobrium which he had heaped upon her. Whether even the most abject confession of guilt, in the sense in which he imputed it, would have mitigated his resentment, may well be doubted.

Mrs. Kelly, however, persisted in denying that she had intended any treachery to her husband, and refused to acknowledge that she had intended any wrong against him. We think that she was justified in this refusal. It was natural that a woman should think that money which had been left to her sole and absolute use was in some way subject to her control, and that she should desire to ascertain her right with reference to it, with a view of saving what remained from the imprudence of her husband. It was necessary, for this purpose, that she should invoke the assistance of some one; and, having regard to the origin and circumstances of her husband's quarrel with Colonel Thornbury, we cannot look upon her appealing to that gentleman—her husband's brother-in-law—rather than to a stranger or an attorney, as deserving of severe reprehension, certainly not as justifying the appellant's subsequent conduct. Mrs. Kelly states that she believed she had received the sanction of a clergyman, a friend of her husband, to the course she adopted in writing to Colonel Thornbury; and although that clergyman afterwards explained that he had not intended to convey such an idea to Mrs. Kelly's mind, we see nothing in the circumstances to make us doubt Mrs. Kelly's statement.

F

The 7th charge is thus expressed, "She was a party to the imputation of a fraudulent design to me by her brother." This is wholly unfounded. Mrs. Kelly did not, directly or indirectly, impute a fraudulent design to her husband: she was merely the recipient of a letter from her brother, in which he expressed a fear that the appellant might raise money by mortgaging the house which he had resolved on purchasing out of his wife's trust estate, against her wishes. It does not appear that Colonel Minchin meant that Mr. Kelly would do so fraudulently; but even if he had, Mrs. Kelly was no party to the imputation by the mere receipt of her brother's letter.

The 8th charge is, that after her son left home she burnt the letters she received from him, to prevent the appellant seeing them. Mrs. Kelly states that she did this to prevent further irritation between the father and son, which the letters might have produced, and this appears to us a reasonable and sufficient answer. The 9th charge is, that she defiantly, before the servants, withheld from the appellant a silver spoon. This is one of those instances to which we have referred, in which Mrs. Kelly appears to have acted in a manner which cannot be justified, though it may be excused, and the matter is of so trivial a nature, that we enter into the details with repugnance. After the appellant's son had been refused permission to enter his father's house, Mrs. Kelly had in her charge a spoon which belonged to her son. The appellant sent a servant for it. Mrs. Kelly refused to give it up, on the ground that it was her son's. The appellant then endeavoured to break into his wife's bedroom, to take the spoon from her, and, in so doing, cracked the panel of the door. Mrs. Kelly seems to have felt she could not with propriety persist in her refusal, and the spoon was given up. The violence of the appellant deserves to be condemned with at least as much severity as the petulance of his wife.

We now arrive at the last of the charges to which we propose to refer—10th. "When her health required her to have change of air and scene, she refused to have the same with me, and, instead, clandestinely decamped, remaining away nearly six months." We have already stated our opinion that the appellant, by his treatment of the petitioner, had so injured her health that her life or reason would have been endangered by her continuing with him. Dr. Drysdale advised that change of air and scene were essential. On the 11th of June the appellant gave his consent to Mrs. Kelly leaving home. On the following day he wrote, "I entirely retract the consent given to you last evening, to your going away from your husband's protection and control." To this the petitioner replied, "I do entreat you to abide by your decision of last night, and let me go for a little while. If my nerves were strengthened I would return and be able to bear what at present I feel I cannot, of living as I now do, speaking to no one. The result will, I am satisfied, be that I shall go out of my mind. Do let me go for a little, I beg of you." The appellant, in answer to this appeal, absolutely refused to allow her to leave home unless with him. The following are the terms in which he conveyed his determination:—"As regards change of air, it is possible you may have it, but it must be with your husband if I can secure a suitable place. Meanwhile (that is, while we are exposed to the observation possibly of strange servants), to avoid scandal, I will force myself to sit at table with you, traitorous and unnatural as your conduct has been towards me." The petitioner shortly afterwards left home and went to her relations, with whom she travelled in Wales and Ireland, and after an absence of four months, during which a correspondence was maintained between her and her husband, violent and abusive on his side, conciliatory on hers, she returned home in improved health, soon to be again the victim of a repetition and aggravation of the treatment she had previously experienced.

We think that in leaving her home, the petitioner was influenced solely by a well-founded belief that if she did not do so her life or reason would be imperilled, and we therefore hold that it was justifiable.

We deem it unnecessary to follow the appellant through the remainder of his charges against his wife. We have examined them all with attention, and in almost every instance the answers to them which Mrs. Kelly has given, in her letters to the appellant and in her evidence, appear to us satisfactory, and in those few cases in which her conduct may not be entirely free from blame, the observation that we have already made is applicable, that her acts were the consequence and not the cause of her husband's ill-treatment, and whether taken separately or collectively afford no justification for it.

In conclusion, we have no doubt whatever that the law was correctly laid down in the hearing of this case; that the evidence warranted the conclusion of legal cruelty drawn from it, and assured as we are of the extreme peril to which Mrs. Kelly's health was exposed, without any adequate fault of her own, we think that the interference of this Court was justified and necessary, and that the appeal should be dismissed.

LORD PENZANCE.—On the legal principles involved in this case I have nothing to add to or withdraw from the expressions used in the judgment under appeal. I forbear to cite cases. In my judgment the principles of every case in which the Court has decreed separation on account of cruelty apply to this case. But as conclusions wide of the truth, and much broader than the judgment warrants, have been sought in argument to be drawn from the words there used, I would add something by way of fuller and further expression.

In determining whether a case is made out for the intervention of the Court, reliance is not to be placed on any one feature of the case to the exclusion of the rest. It is not to be said, from anything which the Court has here decided, that this or that is denied to the husband or permitted to the wife. The health and safety of the wife is no doubt the leading consideration. Still it is necessary that due regard should be had, not only to the degree in which that safety or health appears to have been compromised or placed in jeopardy, but to the clearness with which this fact is established in evidence. So, again, it is necessary that the acts of the husband by which the wife's health or safety is said to have been thus threatened should not only be proved, and the alleged consequences plainly deduced from them, but their motives examined and their causes considered. And, finally, the conduct of the wife herself, by way of provocation, must not only be taken into the account, but her demeanour under even unmerited oppression or unprovoked cruelty must be studied by the Court. It is upon the sum of these considerations that the Court can alone decide whether a case is made for a decree.

The appellant affirms that a new law has been made to meet his case, and that it will form a dangerous precedent. I hope not. To the best of my judgment it is the case which is new and not the law. I have searched the recorded decisions of the Matrimonial Courts in vain for a case, the features of which in any considerable degree resemble the present. It has no parallel in the past, and as to becoming a precedent it is hardly likely to find one in the future. So much injustice, so much perversion of mind, such abiding rancour for so trifling a cause, so much deliberate oppression under provocation so slight—moral chastisement so severe, administered with so much system, maintained with such tenacity up to the brink of so perilous a danger to health, with so utter a disregard of consequences, and all to extort confession of acts never committed, and force repentance without consciousness of wrong, will probably never be exhibited again. That such a case should recur, it would be necessary that to an inflexible will should be added the power of self-deception in an inordinate degree, so that the promptings of angry resentment should be mistaken for the voice of duty, and that while religion should be put forward to sanction and even enjoin a harsh and cruel retaliation, the leading precepts of religion, humility and forgiveness, should be altogether forgotten or but little heeded.

Appeal dismissed.

Attorneys—Gregory, Rowelliffes & Rawle, agents for Duncan, Squarey & Co., Liverpool, for petitioner; the respondent in person.

PROBATE. } In the goods of ROBERT RAINE
1870. } PEEL.
March 15. }

Will—Executor, appointment of—Error as to Christian Name—Ambiguity.

The testator by his will appointed "Francis Courtenay Thorpe, of Hampton, gentleman," one of his executors. The only person answering the description was a youth of twelve, the son of Francis Corbet Thorpe, of Hampton, gentleman, who, previous to the execution of the will, had been asked by the testator and consented to be one of his executors and trustees:—Held, that there was no ambiguity to entitle the Court to inquire into the intention of the testator so as to ascertain which of the two—the father or son—he meant to be executor.

Robert Raine Peel, late of Hampton, in the county of Middlesex, gentleman, deceased, died on February 9th, 1869, leaving a will dated January 28th, 1869, in which he appointed "Francis Courtenay Thorpe, of Hampton aforesaid, gentleman," with two others, his executors and trustees. The only person answering the description of "Francis Courtenay Thorpe, of Hampton, gentleman," was a minor of the age of twelve, the son of Francis Corbet Thorpe, gentleman, of Hampton.

The testator, in January, 1869, before he executed his will, asked Mr. Francis Corbet Thorpe to be one of his executors and trustees in conjunction with the two other gentlemen, whom he afterwards named executors, and Mr. Thorpe consented thereto. It also appeared from the affidavit of Mr. J. Taylor, jun., who drew the will from instructions given by the testator, that beyond all doubt he intended to appoint Mr. Thorpe one of his executors, and that "Courtenay" was inserted by mistake as one of Mr. Thorpe's names.

Dr. Spinks moved the Court to decree probate to Mr. Francis Corbet Thorpe as one of the executors named in the will. He submitted that the description in the will was not applicable to a youth of twelve. There was, therefore, an ambiguity, and the Court was at liberty to look into the facts to ascertain what the intentions of the testator were.

LORD PENZANCE.—If the Court is at liberty to look into the facts, there is no difficulty whatever in deciding that the person the testator really meant was the father; but the question is whether the Court is so at liberty. So far as I can see, the description, "Francis Courtenay Thorpe, of Hampton aforesaid, gentleman," is a description that does apply to this youth of twelve. He has the Christian names therein given; he lives at Hampton, and he is a gentleman, and I can see no ground on which the Court can entertain the question as to what the testator meant. He has given a description which, when it comes to be applied to the facts, corresponds with an existing person, and does not correspond with any other existing person. There is, therefore, no ambiguity, and the Court is not at liberty to exercise its discretion or to investigate the question which of the two the testator meant. Probably the testator has not expressed his real meaning, but the Court cannot inquire whether he has done so or not. Whatever my reluctance may therefore be, I am bound to refuse the application.

Application refused.

Attorney—John Taylor.

MATRIMONIAL. }
1870. } NEWMAN v. NEWMAN.
MAR. 17, 22. }

Wife's Petition for Dissolution of Marriage—Unreasonable Delay—20 & 21 Vict. c. 85. s. 31—Decree.

The marriage took place in 1844. In 1848 the husband was guilty of incestuous adultery; and in 1850 he and the wife separated. Yielding to the entreaties of her mother, the wife abstained from instituting her suit until after her mother's death, which occurred in 1868:—Held, to constitute unreasonable delay, but decree granted on consideration of all the circumstances of the case.

This was a petition by the wife for dissolution of marriage, on the ground of her husband's adultery with her sister. The respondent did not appear. The marriage took place in 1844; the adultery with which the husband stood charged was committed in 1848, and in 1850 he and his wife separated. At the hearing of the petition before the Judge Ordinary on Thursday, March 17th, the petitioner (a schoolmistress) was called, and the explanation which she gave of the delay in instituting the proceedings was that her mother was very reluctant to expose the scandal which had occurred, and that, yielding to her entreaties, she had refrained from instituting the suit until her mother's death, which occurred in 1868.

Kemp (with him Keeble) for the petitioner.

The charge in the petition was proved, but the Court took time to consider whether the petitioner had been guilty of such unreasonable delay as deprived her of the right to a decree.

Cur. adv. vult.

On the 29th of March the following judgment was delivered—

THE JUDGE ORDINARY.—In this case the petitioner proved, to the satisfaction of the Court, that many years ago her husband was guilty of incestuous adultery with her sister. That was followed by a separation between the husband and the wife. The wife no longer lived with him; and, according to the statement of the wife, the intimacy between him and his sister-in-law was continued afterwards, and they appeared to have lived together. But a long time has elapsed. The events to which she speaks occurred near twenty years ago, and she admitted fairly at the hearing that the reason why she had not applied to this Court before was that her mother was very averse to having the matter disclosed, and that she had yielded to her mother's wishes. At the time of the hearing, I expressed an opinion that it constituted "unreasonable delay," because it amounted to this, that a party having a good cause did not come into Court on account of the pain which the disclosure would occasion to the feelings of her family. I adhere to the opinion that that is "unreasonable delay." But the Act does not say that in all cases where there is unreasonable delay the decree shall be refused. Although there may have been unreasonable delay, still the Court may grant a decree. Therefore, the question really is, whether, assuming unreasonable delay, the Court, under all the circumstances of the case, ought to withhold the decree? There was, no doubt, before the passing of the Divorce Act, a class of cases which did invite criticism in respect of unreasonable delay—cases where the husband's honour had been wounded, and he had put up with his own disgrace. In such cases, the House of Lords acted on the principle, "Vigilantibus, non dormientibus, jura subveniunt." That is a class of cases to which, no doubt, the discretionary bar would not apply; but, looking at all the circumstances of this case, I don't think it right to withhold the decree, and I shall therefore make the decree nisi, with costs.

Decree nisi with costs.

Attorney—E. Moss, for petitioner.

MATRIMONIAL.
1869.
Dec. 21.

YEATMAN v. YEATMAN AND RUMMELL.

Stay of Proceedings—Costs—Non-payment of costs by Husband who has failed in a Suit—Fresh Suit for other Adultery.

Non-payment of the costs of a suit for dissolution of marriage, in which the husband, the petitioner, has failed, is not a ground for staying proceedings in a suit by him for dissolution on the ground of fresh adultery.

This was a suit by a husband for dissolution of marriage. The petitioner had previously instituted another suit for dissolution of marriage, charging adultery with a different co-respondent, in which he had failed, and had been condemned in costs: These costs had not been paid.

Searle, for the respondent, moved the Court to order the proceedings to be stayed until the petitioner should pay the costs of the former suit.

A Court of Common Law will stay proceedings in an action until the plaintiff pays the costs of a previous action, if it is satisfied that the cause of action is the same in both, and that the proceedings are likely to harass the defendant. Here, both the suits instituted by the petitioner are for the same cause, viz., the alleged adultery of the respondent. He cited Prowse v. Locksley (1), Hoare v. Dickson (2), Cobbet v. Warner (3).

LORD PENZANCE.—I have looked into the authorities and I find, that when a plaintiff having failed in one action brings another for the same cause, the Court will order him to pay the costs of the former proceedings before he goes further. That is not the case here. The petitioner is asking for the same remedy as in the former suit, viz., to get rid of his wife; but on the ground of adultery with a different co-respondent, and it cannot be said, therefore, that the cause of action is the same. I refuse the application.

Application refused.

Attorney—S. Edwards, for respondent; the petitioner in person.

MATRIMONIAL.

1870.

March 8,
22, 29.

MILLER v. MILLER.

Husband's suit for Restitution — Wife ordered to return to Cohabitation — Wife abroad, and Address unknown — Substituted Service of Order — Order not obeyed — Sequestration against Wife's separate Estate — Practice.

In a suit by the husband for restitution of conjugal rights, a decree was made that the wife should return to cohabitation. The wife was abroad; her address was kept secret by her friends, and personal service of the decree could not be effected. Substituted service on her attorney was in consequence allowed, and the decree remaining unobeyed, the Court, without requiring a previous writ of attachment to issue, granted a writ of sequestration against the wife's separate estate, for the purpose of enforcing obedience to its order.

This was originally a suit for restitution of conjugal rights brought by the husband. The respondent, in her answer, made certain charges against her husband, which at the hearing she withdrew. The Court decreed that she should return to cohabitation, and subsequently condemned her in the costs incurred by the husband in the suit (ante, p. 4). The respondent was abroad, and had not obeyed the decree of the Court, which, with the order as to costs, was served, by permission, on her attorney.

Dr. Spinks (with him Dr. Tristram), on behalf of the petitioner, moved the Court (March 8th) to order a writ of sequestration to issue against the separate estate of the respondent, for the purpose of compelling her to obey its decree by returning to cohabitation.

Dr. Deane (with him Henning and E. Browning), for the respondent, opposed the motion.—The Court is asked to issue the writ against certain specified property, but that property is in the hands of third persons as trustees, and cannot be affected by it—Dent v. Dent (1); Clinton v. Clinton (2); Orrispin v. Cumano (3).

(1) 3 B. & S. 826; s. c. 32 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 227.

(2) 7 Com. B. Rep. 164; s. c. 18 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 158.

(3) 36 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 94; s. c. Law Rep. 2; Q.B. 108.

[LORD PENZANCE.—What the Court has to look at is whether a general writ of sequestration should not issue, with the view of bringing the respondent to reason. When it is issued, the sequestrator may or may not be able to seize the property, but with that the Court has now nothing to do.]

By the practice of the Court of Chancery the writ of sequestration must be preceded by a writ of attachment—Morgan and Chute's Chancery Statutes and Orders (Order 29, Rule 3), 539; Braithwaite's Record and Writ Practice, 239-241; Seton on Decrees, 3rd ed., 1,224. The practice was modified in the case of ecclesiastical decrees by 2 & 3 Wm. 4. c. 93. s. 2; and exception has also been made in the case of debtors by the Debtors Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 62. s. 8)—Sykes v. Dyson (4). There have been cases—Hodgson v. Hodgson (5)—in which, on a plaintiff coming before the Court and representing that an attachment would be worthless, that form has been dispensed with; but these cases were ex parte, and if they had been gone into it would have been difficult to shew jurisdiction. The party must shew that he is in a position to issue an attachment.

[LORD PENZANCE.—Is he not so here?]

No; he is not in a position to ask for an attachment until the order of the Court has been personally served on the respondent—Hope v. Carnegie (6).

[LORD PENZANCE.—It is very unreasonable to say, if a party keeps abroad, that you cannot issue a writ of attachment because you have not served him with the order of the Court, and that you cannot issue a writ of sequestration because you have not issued a writ of attachment. The legislation to which you have referred is in the opposite direction.]

(1) 36 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. & M. 61; s. c. Law Rep. 1, P. & D. 366.

(2) Law Rep. 215; P. & D. 1.

(3) 38 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. & M. 28; s. c. Law Rep. 1, P. & D. 622.

(4) 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 288; s. c. Law Rep. 7; Eq. Cas. 228.

(5) 23 Beav. 604.

Dr. Spinks, in reply.—We must take it as decided in this Court that it has the power to issue a writ of sequestration without a previous attachment. Dent v. Dent (1); Clinton v. Clinton (2). In Hope v. Carnegie (6), the lady was abroad, but it does not appear that her address was not known. Here it is otherwise; the respondent has, ever since the decree, remained abroad, and her address is kept secret by her family and her solicitor. If, under such circumstances, personal service were to be held necessary, it would be utterly impossible to enforce a decree of the Court. But section 53 of the Divorce Act empowers the Court to make rules for its practice, and under Rule 16 (Rules and Regulations, 1866), where an order cannot be personally served, application may be made to the Court to allow substituted service, and that is what has been done here.

Cour. adv. vult.

LORD PENZANCE (March 22).—This case involved the question whether the Court could properly issue a writ of sequestration with a view of compelling a party to the suit to obey its order. That question depended upon another, and it was this—whether Courts of Equity, whose powers in this respect are by the Probate Act conferred upon this Court, have or have not been in the habit of issuing writs of sequestration for such a purpose. It was not denied that they had; but it was said that it was the universal practice in Courts of Equity, before such an order could be made, that it should be preceded by the issuing of a writ of attachment. Now it would certainly be a very unfortunate state of things if that were so, because it would lead to the necessity for issuing a writ of attachment, which in many cases would be a mere idle proceeding, as a preliminary to taking the only step which would be of any use; for if a person who was in contempt were out of the jurisdiction, the issuing of a writ of attachment would be of no avail. What Courts of Equity have been in the habit of doing is this, to look upon this writ of sequestration as a further measure to be resorted to if the writ of attachment, which is the ordinary method of enforcing its orders and decrees, should prove unsuccessful. Where the writ of attachment would be productive of any benefit, it would first be tried before they resorted to a writ of sequestration; but it would be rather singular if, where a writ of attachment would be entirely useless, they should insist upon it before granting a writ of sequestration. Upon looking into the cases I do not find that the proposition as regards the practice of Courts of Equity which has been contended for has been maintained. In the case of Hodgson v. Hodgson (5) a decree was made ordering the defendant to pay a certain sum of money into Court, and to pay the costs of the suit. Previous to the decree the defendant had gone to Australia. The plaintiff, by mistake, issued an attachment into the county of Westmoreland, instead of into the county of Lancaster, in which the defendant had resided before going abroad, and a return had been made of non est inventus. The Court was then moved that a writ of sequestration might issue, without a return to an attachment in the county of Lancaster, and the Master of the Rolls said:—"It would be an idle form to issue another attachment. Take the order." I am quite of the same opinion as the Master of the Rolls; it would have been a very idle proceeding indeed to have issued an attachment under such circumstances. Again, in Butler v. Mathews (7), the question was whether, the party being out of the jurisdiction, the Court should proceed and take the bill pro confesso. The Master of the Rolls said:—"To obtain a decree pro confesso you must proceed with the greatest care." The case stood over for consideration, and two cases having been produced, in which it was held that when a defendant was out of the jurisdiction an attachment need not be issued, the order was made. That, no doubt, is only an analogous case, but it proceeded on the same principle that where a writ of attachment would be of no use, it need not issue. In the case of In re the East of England Bank (8), which is a more recent case and very much to the purpose, application was made to Vice Chancellor Sir R. T. Kindersley for a writ of sequestration, without attachment, against Mr. W. Hall who had been placed upon the list of contributories to the bank, and who was abroad. The learned Judge said, "If the practice is, that in order to obtain a writ of sequestration you must first get a writ of attachment, the effect is, that there is no provision for sequestration in the case of persons who are not resident in England;" and he made the order for a writ of sequestration to issue without any previous writ of attachment. That is a direct authority in favour of what appears to me to be the more sensible course to pursue. I shall order the issue in this case of a writ of sequestration, it being understood that the Court does not now enter into the question as to what property may or may not be affected by it. That is a question which may arise hereafter, and when it does it will have to be argued. I do not decide it now. The writ of sequestration will issue with costs.

(6) 38 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) 410 Chanc.; s. c. Law Rep. 7; Eq. Cas. 263.

[Subsequently (on March 29) Dr. Tristram said that the application for the writ was on the ground of non-compliance with the decree of the Court, and for non-payment of costs, and that it had been since ascertained that the costs were paid the day before the motion, and the petitioner was therefore not entitled to the writ on that head.

LORD PENZANCE.—It was not granted for that, but for the disobedience of the wife to the monition of the Court in not returning to cohabitation.]

Attorneys—R. Miller, for petitioner; A. Jones, Smith & Co., for respondent.

(7) 19 Beav. 549.

(8) 10 Jur. (n.s.) 1093.

PROBATE }
 1870. } ROBERTSON v. SMITH AND
 Jan. 25. } OTHERS.
 Feb. 15. }

Will—Codicil beginning "I hereby make a free gift to A. B.," &c.—Probate.

The testator, shortly before his death, executed a paper which began, "I hereby make a free gift to A. B., of," &c. The Court being satisfied that he intended the operation of the paper to be dependent on his death, granted probate of it as a codicil to his will.

The testator, Frederick Craven, late of St. John's Villas, Holloway, in the county of Middlesex, died on the 8th of November, 1868. He made a will on the 29th of July, 1868, and added a codicil thereto on the 12th of October, 1868. On the 7th of November, 1868, he being then in a very weak condition, the following paper was prepared at his request, and executed by him in the presence of two witnesses:—

"I hereby make a free gift to Martha Robertson of sixty pounds, and to John Virtue of fifty pounds, being the sum deposited by me with the Islington branch of the London and County Bank.

"The cross x of Frederick Craven,
 "J. Tarrant, } Witnesses.
 "John Virtue, }

Miss Robertson, the plaintiff, propounded it as a second codicil. The defendants, who were the executors, pleaded that it was not duly executed, and that the deceased did not make it as a second codicil.

Littler, for the plaintiff.

Tindal Atkinson, for the defendants.

At the hearing, on Friday, January 28, Mr. Virtue, the legatee and attesting witness, said that he was asked to draw the paper by Mrs. Smith, with whom the deceased lodged, on the 7th of November, 1868; that the deceased was then in a low state, and that when Miss Robertson observed, "Mr. Virtue has called about the money, of which I am to have 60*l.* and he 50*l.*," the deceased replied in a low tone "Yes." Mr. Virtue then wrote out the paper and read it twice over to the deceased, the second time when the second attesting witness came in. The deceased then put his mark to it in their presence. Mrs. Smith deposed that when Miss Robertson spoke to him about the deposit note, he replied it was in his box at the bank, and that he then called to Miss Robertson and said "I should like Mr. Virtue to have 50*l.* and you the rest to do the burial." The medical man who attended the deceased stated that he was paralysed, but conscious.

Curr. adv. vult.

LORD PENZANCE (on Feb. 15).—The Court took time to consider its judgment in this case, in which the question was whether the paper propounded was of such a character as to be testamentary. The paper, which is dated November 7, 1868, is in these terms:—"I hereby make a free gift to Martha Robertson of 60*l.*, and to John Virtue of 50*l.*, being the sum deposited by me with the Islington branch of the London and County Bank." That was signed by the testator in the presence of two witnesses. It has long since been determined that the language of a paper is not sufficient to determine absolutely whether the paper is of a testamentary character or not. To make it testamentary the intention of the writer must have been that the gifts or dispositions contained in it should be dependent on his death. The question then is how you are to get at that intention. The Court has long since decided that if the language of the paper is insufficient, you may investigate the question of a testator's intention by parol evidence; and looking to the facts in this case, I have no doubt that the testator did intend that those gifts should be dependent on his death. This was a sum which he had in the bank, and the Court has no doubt that by this disposition he did not intend to strip himself absolutely of it, if, contrary to all expectation, he had survived. The Court, therefore, pronounces for the instrument; costs of both parties to come out of the estate.

Attorneys—Digby, Sharp & Large, for plaintiff;
 A. Digby, for defendants.

PROBATE.
1870. } In the goods of WILLIAM
March 8, 29. } GRAY.

Will—Revocation by later Will—Proof by Declarations of Testator.

The testator made a will in 1831. A few years before his death in 1863, he produced to two acquaintances a paper dated 4th June, 1847, which he alleged to be his will, and got one of them to make a copy of it. This paper was in substance the same as the will of 1831. It had the name of the deceased and the names of two attesting witnesses at the bottom of it, but neither of the persons to whom it was shewn could speak to any of the signatures. The copy which the deceased signed in their presence was forthcoming, but the original document could not be found:—The Court held that there was no evidence of its existence as a will, and granted probate of the will of 1831.

The testator, William Gray, late of Manchester, died on the 23rd of August, 1863. By a will, which bore date April 18th, 1831, he named his wife universal legatee, but appointed no executor. About three years before his death he produced to two persons of the name of Scott a paper dated the 4th of June, 1847, which he alleged to be his will, and at his request William Scott copied it, except the name of the deceased, which was at the foot or bottom of it. The paper purported to be a will, and had the names of two attesting witnesses—Samuel Kay, senior (who was the deceased's solicitor), and Robert Robinson, his clerk—both since deceased. The testator signed the copy in the presence of the Scotts. No search was made among his papers until the death of his widow in 1869, and the only testamentary papers then forthcoming were the will of 1831 and the copy of the alleged will of 1847. The Scotts were unable to depose to the writing of any of the signatures to the original document which the deceased had produced to them, and no draft or other record of such a will could be found in the office or books of Mr. Kay. In both wills the disposition of the property was the same.

Bayford moved the Court to grant administration (with the will of 1831 annexed) of the personal estate and effects of the deceased William Scott to the executors of his widow. There was no sufficient evidence of the execution of the will of 1847. If there were, the principle of dependent relative revocation would apply, and the copy would be entitled to probate.

Our. adv. vult.

LORD PENZANCE (ON March 29).—The testator made a will many years ago, before the Wills Act came into operation; that will is still existing, and is, no doubt, a valid will, unless it has been revoked. The way in which it is said it may have been revoked is by a second will made in 1847, but that will is not forthcoming. The first question is, whether it ever existed. Before the Court can hold an existing will to be revoked by another, it must have evidence of the existence of that other will as a valid document. In this case the paper itself is not in existence, and all that the Court knows about it is simply this:—Some time before his death, the testator called upon two persons of the name of Scott, and produced a paper which he spoke of as his will, and asked one of them to copy it. The copy before the Court is all in the handwriting of Scott, and is apparently a will, and there are at the bottom of it the names of two attesting witnesses, who were existing persons—the solicitor of the deceased and his clerk. Scott did not copy the name of the testator, his statement to the Court being that the testator desired to sign it himself; and from it the Court would be led to the supposition that the testator thought that by having a copy made of his will, which had the names of two attesting witnesses at the bottom of it, and by signing that copy, he could make a good will. It is clear that he could not. But the question is, is there evidence of the original document itself existing as a valid will? Scott, who made the copy, does not state in his affidavit that he is able to depose to the original paper being signed in the handwriting of the deceased, and what is more, he does not profess to depose even to the writing of the two witnesses. The result, therefore, is this—A paper is produced with the name of the testator and the names of two witnesses, but no proof of the writing of any of them, except the statement to Scott by the testator that it was his will. Is that enough to satisfy the Court of the existence of the document as a will? I am constrained to hold that it is not. It has been already held at common law that a statement by a testator that he has made a will cannot be evidence of its execution. That is a question, perhaps, that may have to be considered at a future period. There may be cases in which it would be impossible to exclude such evidence, but up to the present it has been held that such statements are inadmissible, and therefore this statement by the testator as to the execution of this will is not evidence. But suppose it to be admissible, does it go far enough? I think not. The Court ought to have some evidence beyond the statement of the testator as to the paper having been duly signed by two persons as witnesses. In the absence of evidence of writing, it seems to me that proof of the will of 1847 fails, and that failing, all the other questions fall to the ground, and nothing stands in the way of the original will being proved.

Proctor—A. Ayrton.

PROBATE.
1870. } In the goods of G. G. MERCER.
May 10, 17.

Will—Original in India—Copy referred to and confirmed by Codicil—Probate.

The testator made his will in India and deposited it with a bank at Calcutta. While temporarily resident in Scotland he executed a codicil, in which he referred in distinct terms to a copy of the will. This copy he produced to the witnesses at the time he executed the codicil, and he deposited both papers in the hands of his executor:—Held, that the copy was incorporated by the codicil, and probate of the copy-will and codicil was granted, without production of the original will.

George Græme Mercer, formerly of Futtighur, in the East Indies, died, while temporarily resident in Scotland, on the 29th of October, 1869. He made in India a will, in which he appointed executors, and deposited it with the Bank of Bengal at Calcutta, where it still remains. On the 21st of August, 1869, he duly executed a codicil, which commenced thus:—“This is a codicil to the last will and testament of G. G. Mercer, formerly of Futtighur, in India, presently residing temporarily at Ballertin, in Perthshire, retired indigo planter, dated the 7th of November, 1865, and of which I, along with this codicil thereto, execute a copy, and homologate and confirm the same in all particulars, except in so far as altered or revoked by this codicil.” After revoking certain legacies, he nominated two executors for England and the island of Jersey, conjointly with the executors named in his will, and finally ratified and confirmed his said will. At the time of the execution of this codicil he produced and shewed to the witnesses a document, which he informed them was a copy of his will. Further, there was this memorandum in his handwriting at the bottom of it:—“This is the copy of my will or testament referred to in the codicil, signed by me, this 21st day of August, 1869, G. G. Mercer.” He subsequently executed two other codicils, and delivered all three papers, with the copy-will, to one of the English executors, telling him, at the same time, that the document was a correct copy of his will.

Inderwick (on May 10) moved the Court to grant probate of the three papers and the copy-will, as incorporated therewith, to the executors named in the first codicil.—It would be difficult to obtain the original will, and immediate probate was required.

Cur. adv. vult.

LORD PENZANCE (on May 17) held that the codicil incorporated the copy-will, and decreed probate of it, with the other papers. Such a course, he said, would save time and trouble, the original will being in India and perhaps not easily accessible.

Attorneys—Thomas & Hollams.

PROBATE. }
1870. } GREENHALGH v. BATES.
March 22, 29. }

Will—Residuary Legatees—Vested Interest—Right to grant de bonis non.

The testator left by his will to his wife a life interest in his real, leasehold and personal estates, with permission to consume such portion of the personal estate as was consumable by nature. On her death or re-marriage, he gave his real and leasehold estates and such personal estate as then remained unconsumed to his children in equal shares, their executors, administrators and assigns, with a proviso that if all and every his children died before obtaining a vested interest under the will, the property should go in equal shares to his then next and nearest of kin, and the then next and nearest of kin of his wife. The testator's only child survived him, but died in his mother's lifetime and previous to her re-marriage. The wife died leaving part of the estate unadministered:—Held, that the child did not take a vested interest under the will, and administration was granted to the next of kin of the testator.

John Greenhalgh, late of Failsworth, Lancashire, died on the 7th of April, 1856, leaving a will dated the 17th of September, 1855, in which he appointed his wife, Mary Greenhalgh, executrix. The material parts of the will were as follows:—

"This is the last will and testament of me, John Greenhalgh, of Failsworth, in the county of Lancaster, shopkeeper. I give, devise and bequeath all and singular the real, leasehold, and personal estate and effects (except such as may be vested in me only as trustee or mortgagee) of which I shall be seized or possessed, or otherwise entitled to at my decease, unto my wife, Mary . . . Upon trust, so long only as she shall continue my widow, to use and enjoy my furniture and household and other effects, and to consume such of the said personal estate and effects as are consumable by nature, and to receive and apply the income arising from the said real, leasehold and personal estates for the maintenance of herself, and the maintenance, education and bringing up of all and every my present and future children and child. And upon or immediately after the decease or second marriage of my said wife, I give, devise and bequeath my real and leasehold estates, and my personal estate and effects then remaining unconsumed, unto all and every my present and future children and child, and, if more than one, in equal shares, and their respective heirs, executors, administrators and assigns, as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants, according to the nature and tenure of the said estate and effects respectively. Subject, nevertheless, to, and in the event of the second marriage of my said wife, I hereby charge the same with the payment to her during the remainder of her life of an annuity or clear yearly sum of fifteen pounds by equal quarterly payments, the first of which shall be due on the day of such her second marriage . . . If all and every my children and child shall happen to die before attaining a vested interest under this my will, then I give, devise and bequeath my real, leasehold and personal estates and effects, subject as herein mentioned, unto the then next and nearest of kin of myself, and the then next and nearest of kin of my said wife in equal shares as tenants in common, and not as joint tenants, and their respective heirs, executors, administrators and assigns, according to the nature and tenure thereof respectively."

The testator left surviving him one child, John Greenhalgh, who died a bachelor and under age, on the 16th of June, 1856. Mary Greenhalgh, the widow and executrix, proved the will in April, 1856. On the 27th of April, 1858, she married John Bates, and she died on the 1st of September, 1869, leaving part of the estate of the deceased, John Greenhalgh the elder, unadministered. Samuel Greenhalgh, the plaintiff, claimed the grant de bonis non, as the natural and lawful brother, and one of the next and nearest of kin of the testator at the time of the second marriage of Mary Greenhalgh, and at the time of the death of John Greenhalgh the younger. The defendant, John Bates, claimed the grant as the representative of John Greenhalgh the younger, through his mother, Mary Bates, by reason that under the will the whole property, subject to the life interest of Mary Bates, vested in John Greenhalgh the younger, on the death of his father. The question was, what interest John Greenhalgh the younger took under the will?

Bayford, for the plaintiff, admitted that, if the gift to the children after the decease or second marriage of the wife had stood alone, the estate would have vested absolutely in the child on the death of the testator; but the gift over to the next of kin of himself and the next of kin of his wife, contemplated the possibility of the death of the child or children in the lifetime of the widow, or before her second marriage. The words "vested interest" could not be taken in their ordinary sense, but meant an interest to arise on the death or second marriage of the widow. The gift over therefore took effect, and the plaintiff was entitled to the grant. He referred to Re Baxter's Trusts (1), and In re Edmondson's Estate (2).

Dr. Tristram, for the defendant, submitted that if a testator, in his will, makes use of words which are sufficient to establish in an individual a vested interest in property on the testator's death, he cannot divest that individual in a subsequent part of his will, except in clear and distinct terms. Such an interest, he contended, had been established by the testator in his son, and was not taken away by the subsequent part of the will. He referred to Cassamayer v. Strobe (3); 2 Jarman on Wills, 748 (ed. 1861); Roper on Legacies, 584; and Re Thompson's Trusts (4).

Cur. adv. vult.

LOED PENZANCE (on March 29).—The Court reserved for consideration this case, which depends entirely upon the construction of a will. The testator's will was shortly this:—He provided that his widow should continue to use and enjoy, so long as she remained his widow, his furniture and household and other effects, with authority to consume such of the personal estate and effects as were consumable by nature, and to receive and apply the income arising from the real, leasehold and personal estates for the maintenance of herself and the maintenance, education and bringing up of all and every his existing and future children and child. It went on to provide that, after her death or second marriage, his real and leasehold estates and his personal estates and effects then remaining unconsumed, should go to his children; and then came the clause which is the subject of the present contention—"If all and every my children and child shall happen to die before attaining a vested interest under this my will, then I give, devise and bequeath my real, leasehold and personal estates and effects, subject as herein mentioned, unto the then next and nearest of kin of myself and to the then next and nearest of kin of my wife, in equal shares, as tenants in common and not as joint tenants, and their respective heirs, executors, administrators and assigns, according to the nature and tenure thereof respectively."

The events that happened were these:—The testator died, leaving a widow and one child. The child died a bachelor and under age in 1856; and the widow, two years afterwards, re-married. The question is, whether, under this clause, the child did or did not die before attaining a "vested interest" within the meaning attached to those words by the testator in his will? It is not denied that the terms of the will in the anterior part create, according to the rules laid down in Courts of Equity, a vested interest in the child at the death of the testator; but it is contended on the other side that the words "vested interest," as used by the testator in the proviso, were not used by him in a technical sense, but mean a vested interest in possession to arise on the death or second marriage of the mother. That is the question. Counsel on both sides referred me to several cases in the Courts of Equity in which this question was very largely discussed. The rules of construction in force in Courts of Equity on this head are somewhat technical, but the result amounts to this—that in each case the Court must construe the will by what it believes to be, on the whole phraseology of the will, the

(1) 10 Jurist, N.S., 845.

(2) Law Rep. 5 Eq. 389.

(3) 8 Jurist, 19.

(4) De Gex & G., 667.

true meaning of the testator. Approaching the question in that spirit, my opinion is that the testator did not refer to a vested interest of the technical character to which I have adverted, but to a vested interest to arise on the second marriage or death of his wife. The event for which the testator was providing was the second marriage or death of his widow. So long as she remained unmarried, his intention clearly was that she should use and enjoy all his furniture and household and other effects, consume such of the personal estate and effects as were consumable by nature, and receive and apply the rents and profits arising from the rest of his property. On her second marriage or death, he intended the provisions in favour of his children to come into operation, and the gift over was, I think, intended to take effect if at that time no child existed to take the benefit of such provisions. What also commends this construction is that the personal property left to the children was so much as was unconsumed on the death or second marriage of the widow, and until one or other of such events happened, the amount of the gift would be uncertain. I am of opinion that the person entitled to administration is the next of kin of the testator, namely, the plaintiff. I may add that it is only by consent of both parties that I have undertaken to decide this question, because I think it would be inconvenient for this Court, in a mere dispute as to a right to administration, to decide a question of construction which more properly lies within the province of a Court of Equity. It was suggested, however, that the property is small, and that it is improbable the matter will be further litigated.

The costs of both parties will be paid out of the estate.

Proctors—A. Ayrton, for plaintiff; G. C. Ring, for defendant.

MATRIMONIAL.
1870.
Mar. 19, 22.

PRITCHARD v. PRITCHARD AND BEAN.

Practice—Matrimonial Suit—Co-Respondent removing his Effects—Peremptory Order for Payment of Damages—Writ of fi. fa.

In a suit by the husband for dissolution of marriage on the ground of the wife's adultery, damages to the amount of 500l. were assessed against the co-respondent. The Court granted a decree nisi, and condemned him in costs. On affidavits, shewing that the co-respondent was removing his effects, and evading service of a peremptory order for payment of the damages, the Court allowed a writ of fi. fa. to issue forthwith, without requiring personal service of the order.

The questions at issue in this suit, which was the husband's petition for dissolution of marriage, on the ground of the wife's adultery with the co-respondent, were tried before the Judge Ordinary and a special jury on the 26th of February, 1870. A verdict was returned in favour of the petitioner; the damages were assessed at 500l., and the Judge Ordinary pronounced a decree nisi, with costs.

Affidavits were subsequently filed to the effect that the co-respondent, a coal-agent, had removed his furniture and effects from his house at Hampstead to the house of his mother-in-law, and that the costs and damages had not been paid, nor security given for them. Under these circumstances—

Dr. Spinks, on behalf of the petitioner, moved (on March 19th) for an order upon the co-respondent to pay the damages at once to the petitioner, or into Court.

The JUDGE ORDINARY directed that an order should issue to the co-respondent to pay the damages to the petitioner within two days from the date of the service of the order, and further ordered that in the event of the damages not being paid to the petitioner within that period, a writ of fi. fa. should issue forthwith.

On a further affidavit (March 22nd) that the co-respondent was evading service of the order, the Court directed the writ of fi. fa. to issue forthwith, without a personal service of the order.

Attorneys—Wells & Sykes, for petitioner; W. D. S. Cooper, for respondent; Lambert & Burgin, for co-respondent.

PROBATE. }
1870. } MORTIMER v. PAULL AND PAULL.
May 5. }

Practice—Testamentary Suit—Executor willing to act—Refusal to appoint Administrator pendente lite.

In a testamentary suit in which there was no dispute as to the appointment of the executor, and one of them was willing to act, the Court refused to appoint an administrator pendente lite, unless it could be shewn that there was something requisite to be done in relation to the estate which the executor, before probate, could not do.

The testator, Charles Mortimer, by his will dated the 22nd of December, 1868, appointed the plaintiff, Charles Edward Mortimer, and Henry Paull executors. He subsequently executed two codicils, dated respectively the 23rd of December, 1868, and the 31st of August, 1869. In the second codicil he revoked the bequest of half the residue to his daughter, Mrs. Paull, and gave the whole to his son, the plaintiff, but did not, by either of the codicils, alter the appointment of executors. After the death of the testator, the defendants entered a caveat, and the plaintiff propounded the will and two codicils. The defendants did not oppose the will and first codicil, but pleaded the usual pleas in opposition to the second codicil. The questions at issue were ordered to be tried before the Court and a special jury.

Indernick, for the defendants, moved for the appointment of an administrator pendente lite.—The testator was under covenant to certain trustees to pay over a certain sum of money and transfer a certain amount of stock. A bill was filed by the trustees in the Court of Chancery for the purpose of enforcing the covenant. There was no answer to the suit, and some one ought to be appointed to discharge the claims. It was true the plaintiff was willing to act in his character of executor, to get in the estate and pay the claims against it, but his co-executor, the defendant, declined to act until it was determined what papers were entitled to probate.

Searle, for the plaintiff, opposed the application. The defendants had already applied to the Court of Chancery for the appointment of a receiver, and their application was refused, because there was an executor, whose appointment was not disputed, willing to act. Further, the powers of an executor before probate were much larger than those of an administrator pendente lite.—Williams on Executors, Vol. I., p. 291.

LORD PENZANCE.—The defendants ask for the appointment of an administrator pendente lite for the purpose of discharging certain functions in relation to this property. An application for a receiver was made by them to the Court of Chancery, and the Court refused the application because there was an executor, whose appointment was not disputed, willing to act. When they come to this Court they are met with the same answer: You do not want an administrator, inasmuch as there is a person who, by the terms of the testator's will, is empowered by law to discharge the very function for which you want the administrator pendente lite, and that person is prepared to discharge that function. If that be so, I am quite clear that the Court ought not to appoint an administrator pendente lite, but if the defendants can shew that there is something requisite to be done in respect of this property, which the executor before probate cannot do, they will then have laid the foundation for the appointment of some one who can. The Court is always ready to appoint an administrator pendente lite when there is a need shewn for it, and that will arise when there is something required to be done which the executor cannot do.

Motion refused with costs.

Attorney—W. H. Waller, for plaintiff.
Proctors—Toller & Sons, for defendants.

PROBATE. }
 1870. }
 April 26. } In the goods of WILLIAM HARRIS.
 May 3. }

Probate — Two Wills: one limited to Property in England, the other to Property in Tasmania.

The testator died leaving two wills—one limited to property in England, the other to property in Tasmania, and he appointed different executors in each. The Court granted probate of both papers as together constituting the will of the deceased, to the executors named in the English will.

The testator, William Harris, died at Leamington Priors, Warwickshire, on the 7th of August, 1869. He executed two wills, dated the 24th of May, 1867, and the 16th of July, 1867. In the first, he disposed only of his property in Tasmania, and appointed three persons resident in Hobart Town executors, with directions to transfer the residue of his property in Tasmania to the executors of his English will, to be by them invested. The second will commenced thus:—"This is the last will and testament of," &c., "so far as regards my property in England, I having by a separate and distinct will disposed of my property in the colony of Tasmania, and which will I ratify and confirm by this will; and I desire that the same may not be annulled, interfered with or affected by this will." He then disposed of his property in England, and appointed different executors from those in the first will. The second will was proved in the District Registry at Birmingham, on the 15th of October, 1869; but on the other will being presented for probate in the proper office at Hobart Town, it was refused, on the ground that both papers constituted the will of the deceased, and that therefore probate of both together should be taken.

Pritchard now moved the Court to revoke the probate already issued of the will of July, 1867, and decree probate of both papers as together constituting the will of the deceased. A similar order was made in the case (not reported) of In the goods of Bishop Wilson (November, 1866); but In the goods of Coods (1) a different rule was adopted.

The COURT, having referred to the papers connected with the grant made In the goods of Bishop Wilson, directed the probate of the will of the 16th of July to be revoked, and decreed to the executors named therein probate of both papers as together constituting the will of the deceased.

Attorneys—Church, Sons & Clarke.

PROBATE. }
 1870. }
 April 26. } In the goods of MARY WILLIAMS.
 } (In the goods of J. H. MORGAN.)

Administration — Citation to Husband to take grant of Wife's Estate—Applicant without direct interest.

In an administration suit in Chancery it became necessary for the purposes of the suit, that a personal representative of A, the wife of B, should be appointed. The Court, at the instance of C, who had no direct interest, allowed a citation to issue to B to take administration of his wife's estate, or to shew cause why it should not be granted to C.

James Hungerford Morgan, late of Tenby, in the county of Pembroke, a lieutenant in the Royal Marines, died on the 15th of April, 1851, a bachelor and intestate, leaving Mary Morgan, his sister, and Thomas Sleeman, Elizabeth Briggs, Mary Sleeman, and James Sleeman, the children of another sister, the only persons entitled in distribution to his property.

Letters of administration of his personal estate were granted to Mary Morgan, who died in January, 1852, without having distributed the property, and leaving a will in which she appointed Mary Sleeman, her niece, sole executrix. Mary Sleeman took probate of the will, intermarried with William Williams in 1857, and died in September, 1863. She took possession of a portion of James H. Morgan's probate, but disposed of it as if it belonged to the testatrix, Mary Morgan. In December, 1867, administration of the unadministered goods of James H. Morgan was granted to Thomas Sleeman, and in September, 1868, a suit was instituted by James Sleeman in the Court of Chancery, for the administration of the estate of James H. Morgan. For the purposes of this suit it was necessary that a representative of the estate of Mary Williams should be appointed.

(1) 36 Law J. Rep. (n.s.) Prob. & M. 129; a. c. Law Rep. 1 Prob. & D. 449.

Dr. Spinks now moved the Court, on behalf of James Sleeman, to allow a citation to issue, calling upon William Williams to take administration of the goods of his wife, or shew cause why the grant should not be made to James Sleeman. He referred to In the goods of Mary Keane (1), In the goods of George Johnson (2).

LORD PENZANCE.—It seems to follow, from the necessity of the case, that some method should be devised to litigate the question, whether and to what extent the estate of Mary Williams is indebted to that of James H. Morgan, and for that purpose a representative of Mary Williams must be appointed. The applicant has no direct interest, but he has an indirect one, and if the husband will not take the grant, the applicant ought to be entitled to it. At present, however, I have no constat of the proceedings in Chancery. When they are brought in, the citation will issue, and after it has been returned it will be for consideration whether the grant to the applicant shall be limited, and if so, to what extent.

Attorneys—T. White & Sons.

PROBATE. }
1870. } In the goods of the REV. J.
May 10. } G. RYDE.

Practice—Scotch Confirmation sealed in England—Additional Property discovered in England—Fresh Inventory, and additional Confirmation sealed in Registry.

On the death of the testator, a domiciled Scotchman, his widow filed in the Commissary Court at Jedburgh an inventory of his estate, distinguishing which part was situate in Scotland and which in England, and the value of each, and she was decreed and confirmed executrix dative to the deceased. The confirmation was sealed in England under the provisions of the Confirmation and Probate Act. Subsequently additional estate was discovered in England. Thereupon the executrix filed a fresh inventory of such estate in the Commissary Court, and obtained an eik or additional confirmation:—The Court ordered the eik to be sealed in the Registry.

The Rev. John Gabriel Ryde, a domiciled Scotchman, died at Melrose, Roxburghshire, on the 7th of December, 1868. He left a will in which he gave certain property to his wife, but did not appoint an executor or dispose of the residue of his estate. The widow filed in the Commissary Court at Jedburgh an inventory of the estate, distinguishing which part was situate in Scotland and which in England, and the value of each, and on the 4th of March, 1869, the Commissary of Roxburghshire decreed and confirmed her executrix dative to the deceased.

This confirmation was sealed in the Registry of the Court of Probate in England on the 24th of March, 1869. In July, 1869, a sum of 10,722l. 14s. 7d. became payable in England to the estate of the deceased. The widow filed in the Commissary Court at Jedburgh a further inventory, containing, in addition to the property included in the first inventory, that which subsequently accrued to the deceased's estate, and thereupon an eik or additional confirmation, under seal of the Commissary, issued to her on the 26th of February, 1870. The duty on the additional inventory had been paid, and "caution" found in respect of the pro-party therein contained. The seal of the Court was refused to be attached to the eik in the Registry, on the ground that the whole of the property contained in the additional inventory was situate in England.

(1) 1 Hag. 692.

(2) 2 Sw. & Tr. 595.

Dr. Spinks (with him Pritchard) moved the Court to order that the seal of the Court be attached to the additional confirmation. He submitted that the applicant having followed all the directions of the Confirmation Act (21 & 22 Vict. c. 56) was entitled to have the additional confirmation sealed. Section 15 required that the inventory should include the whole of the personal estate in the United Kingdom; and the value thereof, and section 16 incorporated the 48 Geo. 3. c. 149. s. 38, which expressly provides that "if at any subsequent period a discovery shall be made of any other effects belonging to the deceased, an additional inventory or additional inventories of the same shall within two calendar months after the discovery thereof be in like manner exhibited, &c., &c." It further inflicted a penalty of 20*l.* for neglect of the provision, and the executrix had no alternative but to file the additional inventory. This case is distinguishable from In the goods of Gordon (1), In the goods of Wingate (2), and In the goods of Hutcheson (3).

LORD PENZANCE.—I think this application ought to be granted. For my own part I should have been well content if in those former cases, saving only the first—In the goods of Gordon (1), the Court had held that the confirmation might be sealed. Still, if the present case were, in all its circumstances, like those cases, I should feel myself bound to follow the decision of my predecessor. But I do not think that the previous cases do determine this case for the reasons pointed out by counsel. In this case there exists what did not exist in the previous cases—an original inventory and confirmation made under the provisions of the statute, which coupled the Scotch and the English estates together, treating them as the subject of one grant, and that confirmation afterwards sealed in England. That being so, and the intention of the Confirmation Act, referring as it does to the previous Acts regarding probate, being that where an additional portion of the estate is subsequently discovered, a fresh inventory should be filed of such additional estate, and should, so to speak, be drawn back to the original confirmation, I think that that ought to be done now when the property is discovered which would have been done in the first instance had its existence been then known. There is, as I have said, a feature in this case which certainly did not exist in either of the cases referred to. The Court, therefore, is not bound by those decisions, and the application may be granted. It might be inconvenient if the Court were to decide otherwise. I see no harm in the seal being put to the grant; whereas, if the Court were to decide otherwise, it might subject the parties to great difficulty in ascertaining what their proper duty in the matter was.

Attorney—D. E. Forbes.

MATRIMONIAL.

1870.

May 17;

June 7.

ST. PAUL v. ST. PAUL AND FARQUHAR.

Divorce—Settlements, alteration of—Income of Guilty Wife—Total Income allotted to Maintenance of Children.

On the marriage of the parties the father of the respondent (the wife) brought into settlement a sum of 3,000*l.*, in which the first life-interest was given to the respondent. Her conduct was bad, and after her marriage with the petitioner had been dissolved, she intermarried with the co-respondent, an officer in the army. The Court ordered that the total income derived from the fund in settlement should be applied, during the lifetime of the respondent, to the maintenance of the three children of the marriage.

A decree nisi for dissolution of the marriage on the husband's petition was

- (1) 2 Sw. & Tr. 622.
- (2) 2 Sw. & Tr. 625.
- (3) 3 Sw. & Tr. 165; s.c. 32 Law J. Rep. (n.s.) Prob. M. & A. 25.

pronounced on the 1st of May, 1868. The Queen's Proctor subsequently intervened, but the intervention failed, and the decree was made absolute. The respondent afterwards intermarried with the co-respondent, an officer in the army. On her marriage with the petitioner, her father settled a sum of 3,000*l.*, the first life-interest being given to the respondent, the second to the petitioner, the fund ultimately to go to the children of the marriage, of whom there were three—all girls and young. The matter now came before the Court on the petition of Mr. St. Paul that the settlement might be varied either by giving him one-third and the children two-thirds of the income derived from the fund, or applying the whole income to the maintenance and education of the children. The conduct of the respondent was bad, and the petitioner, an attorney by profession, had no property of his own.

Dr. Deane (with him W. G. Harrison), in support of the petition, referred to March v. March and Palumbo (1).

Pritchard, for the respondent, submitted that to make either order would go far beyond the principle laid down in March v. March and Palumbo (1). As in that case so here also, the whole property came from the respondent's friends. The first object of the settler was her support, and it might happen that she would be left unprovided for by her existing husband.

Cur. adv. vult.

On the 7th of June judgment was given as follows—

LORD PENZANCE.—The Court took time to consider this case with a view to determining what should be done by way of alteration of the settlements. Alternative propositions were laid before the Court by the learned counsel for the petitioner, the husband. One was to the effect that a certain portion of the wife's property should be made over to him, and the remainder to the children; the other was, that the whole of it should be made over to the children.

The property, which consists of 150*l.* a year, was settled by the wife's father at the time of the marriage; the wife was given the first life-interest in it, after that a life-interest to the husband, and then to the children. The circumstances of the case disclosed the worst possible conduct on the part of the wife. She formed an intimacy with the co-respondent, deceiving her husband as to its true character; she treated him with the greatest ignominy and contempt, and finally she went away with the co-respondent, whom she has since married. Therefore, the Court has no hesitation whatever in dealing with this sum of 150*l.* a year brought into settlement by her father, in such a way, during her life, that no portion of it shall go to her. But when the question arises whether any part of it shall be given to the petitioner, seeing that the fund is not very large, and that there are three children, the proper conclusion appears to be that the whole of it should go to the children. The Court will make an order to that effect, and in accordance with the alternative proposition suggested by the petitioner. The Court, of course, only deals with the fund during the respondent's lifetime. When she dies, the petitioner will have a life-interest in it, and with that of course the Court would not interfere.

Dr. Deane.—A year's dividends are now due on the fund.

LORD PENZANCE.—The order will extend to all dividends now due and receivable by the trustees.

[His Lordship, on reconsideration, doubted whether he had power to deal with the dividends in arrear. The order was, in consequence, limited to "income accruing from and after the date of the order."]

Order accordingly.

Attorneys—Purkis & Perry, for petitioner; Clark, Woodcock & Ryland, for respondent and co-respondent.

(1) 36 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. & M. 28; s. c. Law Rep. 1 P. & D. 440.

MATRIMONIAL. }
 1870. }
 June 7. } SYKES v. SYKES AND SMITH.

Divorce—Settlements—Covenant by Father of Petitioner to pay Respondent an Annual Sum on Petitioner's Death—Power to Deal with—22 & 23 Vict. c. 61. s. 5.

On the marriage of the parties, the father of the petitioner covenanted to pay to the respondent the annual sum of 100l. after the death of the petitioner. The marriage was dissolved by reason of the respondent's adultery. The Court ordered that the money should be applied for the benefit of the child of the marriage, but held that it had no power to deprive the respondent of her right under the covenant on the death of the child.

This was an application on behalf of the petitioner, in whose favour the Court had made the decree absolute dissolving the marriage, on the 25th of January, 1870, for an order confirming the registrar's report as to the alteration of the settlement, and to relieve the father of the petitioner from a covenant he had entered into on the marriage, "to pay to the respondent the annual sum of 100l. after the death of the petitioner, and during the joint lives of himself and the said respondent, or until the said respondent should marry again." There was one child of the marriage, a daughter, born in 1860. No question arose as to the alteration of the settlements proposed in the registrar's report.

Dr. Tristram, for the petitioner, asked that the money covenanted to be paid to the respondent by his father, might be applied for the benefit of the child, and that in the event of the death of the child during the respondent's life, it might go upon the trusts of the settlement as if the respondent were dead. He referred to Calwell v. Calwell and Kennedy (1); and Gill v. Gill and Hogg (2).

Searle, for the respondent.—There is no objection to the money being applied for the benefit of the child, but the Court has no power to deprive the respondent of her interest under the covenant after the death of the child.

- (1) 3 Sw. & Tr. 259.
 (2) Ibid. 640; s.c. 33 Law J. Rep. (N. S.) Prob. M. & A. 43.

LOED PENZANCE.—The plain object of the legislature in enacting the section under which these applications are made, was that where a woman has committed adultery, the Court should have power to divert money, to which she may be entitled under settlement, from her for the benefit of the husband or child, but after they are dead, the Court can deal no longer with the settlements. The Court has no power to relieve the father of the petitioner from the obligation of the covenant. The application in that respect must be refused.

Attorneys—B. F. Watson, for petitioner; Cookson, Wainwright & Co., for respondent; Dawes & Sons, for co-respondent.

PROBATE. }
 1870. }
 May 10, 17. } In the goods of E. S. HILL.

Administration (with Will annexed) de bonis non—American domicile—Grant in America to Person not entitled by English Law—American Grant followed.

A died domiciled in America, and by her will appointed B, her father, sole executor and residuary legatee. B died, leaving part of the estate unadministered. On the application of his executors, who were all domiciled in America, administration of the unadministered estate of A was granted to C by the Court in America. The Court, following the American grant, allowed a grant of administration (with the will annexed) of the personal estate of A in this country, to go to C.

Eleanor Sarah Hill died, domiciled in America, in 1864, and by her will appointed her father, Thomas Finnimore Hill, sole executor and residuary legatee. He proved the will in America, and died in December, 1869, having executed a will in which he appointed Maria Frances Anderson, William McCouch, and Horatio Gates (who were all domiciled in America) his executors. At their request letters of administration of the estate of his daughter, Eleanor Sarah Hill, left unadministered by him, were granted by the Court in America to the Rev. George Washington Anderson, the husband of Maria Frances Anderson. A representation to the estate of Miss Hill in this country having become necessary, the executors of her father and executor, Thomas Finnimore Hill, executed a document in which they required that the grant in England might be made as in America to the Rev. G. W. Anderson.

Dr. Spinks (on May 10) moved the Court accordingly.

Cur. adv. vult.

LORD PENZANCE (on May 17).—A grant of administration of the estate of the deceased was made in America. The party who obtained that grant has applied for a grant in this country for the distribution of the English assets. The Court some time ago gave its adherence to the general principle, that when a person dies domiciled in a foreign country, and a party clothed with authority by the proper Court of that country to administer his estate comes to this country and applies for a grant, in order that he may administer the English assets, the Court, without further inquiry, should make the grant. In this case of The goods of Eleanor Sarah Hill, the property of which she died possessed in this country would form part of the estate of her father, her next of kin at the time of her death, and according to the English law of succession, in order to obtain those assets, it would be necessary to take out a grant to the father. It so happens—a mere incident in the case—that the law of America as regards succession coincides with the law of this country in that matter, and in order to obtain the estate of the deceased person in America, it was necessary to take out a grant to the father. Then arises the question, whether it is necessary to do so here. It seems to me that, if the general principle of following the foreign grant is worth preserving at all, it should be preserved in its integrity; and that being so, that I ought to shut my eyes to the ordinary course of succession here—to adopt the fact that a particular person is appointed the administrator of the deceased by the proper Court in America, and to acknowledge that fact as the basis of the grant in this country. The grant may go.

Attorneys—King & McMillan.

PROBATE. }
1870. } In the goods of J. E. O'LOUGHLIN.
May 31. }

Will—Residue—Money resulting from "sale of effects."

The testator, in addition to specific bequests, gave to A, the only legatee named in the will, "also any money that may result from the sale of my effects after paying the few small debts that I owe":—Held, not to carry the residue.

The testator executed a will in which he named no executor, and disposed of his property, with the exception of two articles of personal ornament, in the following terms:—"I leave whatever money remains at my agents, Sir J. Kirkland & Co., and Messrs. Cox & Co., to my cousin, Miss O'Loughlin; also any money that may result from the sale of my effects after paying the few small debts that I owe. I also wish her to get my watch." The whole property of the deceased consisted of money at his agents—241l. 5s. 3d., and effects worth 50l.

Searle moved the Court to grant administration, with the will annexed, to Miss O'Loughlin, as residuary legatee named in the will. He submitted that the words, "also any money that may result from the sale of my effects," were sufficient to carry the residue—Campbell v. Prescott (1).

LORD PENZANCE.—The word "effects," standing alone, will pass the residuary estate. The testator is here pointing to something that is to come from the operation of the sale, and I do not think I can hold that the words of the will pass the residue. You must cite the next of kin.

Attorney—F. S. Gosling.

MATRIMONIAL. }
1870. } VIVIAN v. VIVIAN AND WATER-
May 17, 31. } FORD (LESLIE intervening).

Dissolution of Marriage—Shewing Cause against Decree Absolute—Power to Condemn Intervener in Costs—23 & 24 Vict. c. 144. s. 7.

The Court has no power to condemn in costs a person who enters an appearance and files affidavits in opposition to a decree nisi being made absolute, and afterwards abandons his opposition.

In this case, after a decree nisi at the suit of the husband had been pronounced, Leslie entered an appearance, and filed affidavits, alleging material facts not brought before the Court, with the view of preventing the decree being made absolute. He subsequently withdrew his opposition, and the Court was moved to make the decree absolute.

Lord Penzance declined to make the decree absolute, and directed that notice should be given to the Queen's Proctor, in order that he might, if he thought fit, intervene.

Archibald (on May 17) appeared for the Queen's Proctor, and stated that, in the opinion of the Attorney General, there was no ground for the Queen's Proctor's intervention.

The Solicitor General (Sir J. D. Coleridge)—(Prentice and Dr. Swabey with him)—moved the Court to make the decree absolute, and to condemn Leslie in the costs of the intervention.

Sir J. Karlake and Dr. Tristram for the co-respondent.

Sir G. Honyman (Searle with him), for Leslie.—The Court has no power to condemn the intervener in costs—Lautour v. Her Majesty's Proctor (1).

LORD PENZANCE made the decree absolute, and took time to consider the question of costs.

Cur. adv. vult.

LORD PENZANCE (on May 31).—The Court took time to consider whether it had the power, and if it had, whether it ought to condemn in costs the person who appeared and filed affidavits with the view of preventing the decree nisi being made absolute. The interference turned out to be founded on charges which could not be maintained. The effect of such interference was to delay the petitioner's decree, and therefore I have no doubt that if it lay in the discretion of the Court the intervener ought to be condemned in costs. But it was argued that the Court has no power to condemn the intervener in costs, and 23 & 24 Vict. c. 144. s. 7, on which the interference of third parties is founded, was referred to.

(1) 10 H. L. Cas. 685; s. c. 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. & M. 89.

Now, by that section, no provision is made for the payment of costs by either side, except as regards the Queen's Proctor, when he intervenes in his official character and charges collusion, who, if he succeeds in proving the charge, is entitled to costs. On the other hand, there is the 51st section of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, which gives the Court unlimited discretion on the subject of costs, and looking at that section by itself, I should be inclined to conclude that the intention was to permit the Court to condemn in costs any person who took part in proceedings before it, and who it thought ought to be so condemned. But the case of Lautour v. Her Majesty's Proctor (1) appears to me to be antagonistic to that conclusion. I have read it with great care, and I can see no way of escaping from the conclusion that that case decided that where the Queen's Proctor intervenes simply as one of the public, as was done in this case, the Court has no power to give costs on either side. The language of the noble and learned Lord by whom the judgment was moved is distinct upon the point. He says, "The Queen's Proctor, therefore, I submit to your Lordships, must be treated as one of the public coming in to bring before the Court material facts for the Court's information, which had not been presented to it either by the petitioner or by the respondent. But I think the latter part of the section is not so worded as to take in the case of the Queen's Proctor acting merely for the purpose of bringing material facts before the Court" [which is what has been done in this case], "and that this Court has no power to give the costs of his so doing under and by virtue of the authority contained in that section." I feel myself bound by that decision, and I think it right to adhere to it, more especially as there would be no appeal from my decision if I were now to condemn the intervenor in costs.

Attorneys—Lanfear & Stewart, for petitioner;
Duncan & Murton, for respondent and co-respondent; White, Broughton & White, for intervenor.

PROBATE. }
1870. } In the goods of ANDERSON.
Feb. 8. }

Probate—Two Wills—Codicil by Mistake referring to First Will—Probate of Second Will granted—1 & 2 Vict. c. 26.

A testator executed a will on February 13th, 1864, and another, on June 24th, 1865, revoking all former wills. He afterwards executed a codicil which purported to be a codicil to his will dated February 13th, 1864, and after devising some property confirmed his said will. The solicitor who prepared the codicil had inserted the date of the first will under the supposition that it was the last will. There was nothing in the codicil which shewed an intention to revive the first will:—Held, that the second will and codicil were entitled to probate.

George Anderson, deceased, on the 13th of February, 1864, duly executed a will, and on the 24th of June, 1865, he duly executed another will revoking former wills. On the 21st of June, 1869, he duly executed a codicil which commenced thus: "This is a codicil to the last will of me, George Anderson Whereas I have in my will dated the 13th day of February, 1864, given and devised (among other things) all my real estate at Keelby, which was devised to me by my father, unto my son, George Anderson, his heirs and assigns for ever. And whereas since the date of my said will, my said son has departed this life. Now I do declare this to be a codicil to my said will, and do hereby revoke the said devise, so far and so far only as regards the house and premises in which I now reside." The codicil then devised the said house and premises to the testator's daughter, charged with the payment of 550*l.*, and concluded: "In all other respects I ratify and confirm my said will."

Both the wills devised to the testator's son, George Anderson, the real estate at Keelby devised to the testator by his father. The testator's son, George Anderson, died after the date of the second will. Both the wills were prepared by Messrs. Marris & Smith, solicitors, and were deposited by them in an iron chest. In June, 1869, the testator sent for Mr. Marris, and gave him the following instructions for a codicil: "I wish for the house in which I live and the property connected therewith left by my will, to my late son, George Anderson, to be given to my daughter, for which she shall give an equivalent out of her other property." Mr. Marris, on his return home, prepared the codicil, and in order to insert the date of the will, told one of his clerks to get the will of George Anderson out of the will-chest. The clerk by mistake brought the will of February 13th, 1864, and that date was inserted in the codicil under the supposition that it was the date of the last will.

Dr. Tristram moved the Court to decree probate of the will of June 24th, 1865, and of the codicil of June 21st, 1869. He cited In the goods of Steele and In the goods of Wilson (1).

LORD PENZANCE.—The Court has in this case to decide whether, under the words of the Wills Act, the codicil shews an intention to revive the first will, and whether the Court can go into evidence, shewing that a blunder was made in the codicil as to the date of the will. On looking at the codicil, I cannot find in it any intention to revive the first will. It alludes to the death of the testator's son which occurred after the second will.

I think there was clearly a mistake as to the date of the will intended, and therefore, on the authority of the cases cited, I grant probate of the second will and the codicil.

Attorneys—Matthews & Greetham.

(1) 37 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. & M. 72; s. c. Law Rep. 1 Prob. & D. 576.

MATRIMONIAL. }
 1870. }
 May 31. } MYCOCK v. MYCOCK.
 June 14. }

Dissolution of Marriage—Charges Proved—Alteration of Prayer of Petition—Right of Respondent to oppose.

The wife petitioned for a dissolution of her marriage, by reason of the husband's adultery and cruelty, and proved both charges. The decree nisi was suspended at her request, and subsequently she asked to be allowed to amend the petition, by substituting a prayer for judicial separation. The respondent opposed the alteration, and alleged that the petitioner herself had been guilty of adultery. The Court granted liberty to the respondent to file affidavits in support of the charge; and no affidavits being filed, allowed the petition to be amended as prayed.

This was a petition by the wife for dissolution of her marriage, by reason of the adultery and cruelty of the husband. It was heard on the 12th of May last. The Court held that the petitioner had proved both charges, but suspended its decree at her request.

Dr. Spinks (on May 31) moved the Court to allow the petitioner to alter the prayer of her petition, and to decree to her a judicial separation from the respondent.

Dr. Deane (with him Dr. Swabey), for the respondent, asked that the matter might be adjourned for a fortnight. The respondent had received information that the petitioner herself had committed adultery, and if that were proved the petition should be dismissed.

Dr. Spinks submitted that the respondent was not entitled to resist the application, and that if he were, no ground was shewn for delay.

LORD PENZANCE.—The adultery of the petitioner would be clearly a bar to her prayer for judicial separation. I ought not, therefore, precipitately to alter the character of the suit, seeing that possibly in doing so I may do injustice to the other side.

No affidavits were filed by the respondent in support of the suggestion of the petitioner's adultery; and

Dr. Spinks (on June 14) renewed the application for an alteration of the prayer of the petition. He questioned whether the Court had power to do so, and referred to the 31st section of the Divorce Act.

[LORD PENZANCE.—Is the Court bound to dissolve the marriage against the woman's consent?]

No; but she may have the petition dismissed.

LORD PENZANCE.—I think I ought to allow the petitioner to amend her petition, by asking for the less remedy of judicial separation.

Motion allowed, with costs.

Proctor—A. Ayrton, for petitioner.
 Attorneys—Gregory, Rowcliffes & Rawle, for respondent.

MATRIMONIAL. }
 1870. } CHAMBERS v. CHAMBERS.
 March 1. }

Suit for Restitution—Custody of Children—Jurisdiction—20 & 21 Vict. c. 85. s. 35.

The Court has no power, in suits for restitution of conjugal rights, to make any order as to the custody of the children of the marriage.

This was a suit, promoted by the husband, for restitution of conjugal rights.

Bayford, for the petitioner, moved the Court to order that the two children of the marriage be handed over to the custody of the petitioner until further order.

Inderwick, for the respondent, submitted that the Court had not the power to make the order, and referred to section 35 of the 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85.

LORD PENZANCE.—The section referred to carefully enumerates the cases in which the Court may act in respect of the custody of children, namely, suits for judicial separation, nullity of marriage, and dissolution of marriage. It says nothing about suits for restitution of conjugal rights, and the Court is therefore without authority in the matter.

Proctors—Brooks & Dubois, for petitioner.
 Attorney—W. B. Brook, for respondent.

MATRIMONIAL.
1870.
June 2.

MORDAUNT v. MORDAUNT, COLE AND JOHNSTONE.*

Dissolution of Marriage—Insanity of Respondent when cited and subsequently—Power to stay Proceedings.

In a suit for dissolution of marriage on the ground of the wife's adultery, the respondent having been at the time of the service of the citation and having since continued unfit from mental incapacity to answer the petition and duly instruct her attorney, the Judge Ordinary made an order staying further proceedings until she should recover. Upon appeal to the full Court,—Held, by the Judge Ordinary and Keating, J., that the insanity of the respondent, so long as it should continue, would be a bar to the suit, and therefore that the order ought to be affirmed.

Held, by Kelly, C.B., that the Court had power only to stay the proceedings so long as there might be a reasonable probability that the respondent would recover, but that when her recovery became hopeless the petitioner ought to be allowed to proceed, and therefore that the order ought to be rescinded.

This was an appeal against an order made by the Judge Ordinary staying proceedings in the suit. Sir C. Mordaunt, on the 30th of April, 1869, filed a petition for a divorce on the ground of the alleged adultery of the respondent with the co-respondent, and the petition and citation were duly served on the respondent. Citations were also served on the co-respondents, who appeared and filed answers denying the alleged adultery. On the 7th of May, 1869, a summons was taken out calling upon the petitioner to shew cause why all proceedings in the suit should not be stayed, and the time for entering an appearance and filing an answer on behalf of the respondent should not be extended until she was in a sound state of mind. On the 27th of July, the summons was heard on affidavits, and the Judge Ordinary made an order that Sir T. Moncreiffe, the father of the respondent, should appear as her guardian ad

* Before Kelly, C.B., Lord Penzance, and Keating, J.

NEW SERIES, 39.—PROB. AND M.

litem for the purpose of setting up her insanity. Sir T. Moncreiffe accordingly appeared and alleged that at the time when the citation was served the respondent was not of sound mind, and that she had never since been of sound mind. The petitioner took issue upon this allegation, and the issue was tried before the Judge Ordinary by a special jury, who, on the 25th of February, 1870, found that the respondent on the 30th of April, 1869, was in such a condition of mental disorder as to be unfit and unable to answer the petition and to duly instruct her attorney for her defence, and that she had ever since remained, and still remains, so unfit and unable.

On the 8th of March, 1870, the Judge Ordinary made the following order:—

"Upon hearing counsel for the petitioner and for Sir Thomas Moncreiffe, the guardian ad litem of the respondent, I do order that no further proceedings be taken in this suit until Lady Mordaunt recovers her mental capacity, and that the petitioner be at liberty to apply to the Court whenever he is able to affirm the respondent's recovery." (1)

(1) Lord Penzance, upon making the order, gave a written judgment, in which, after stating that it must be assumed as a fact that Lady Mordaunt, from the time the petition was served, had been in a state of mental incapacity to answer it, proceeded thus:—

"It is now contended on the one side that this circumstance forms no reason for further delaying the suit, and on the other that it forms a permanent bar to it. With the exception of the case of Bawden v. Bawden, 2 Sw. & Tr. 417; s.c. 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 94, in which Sir C. Cresswell permanently stopped a suit by a husband against an insane wife on the ground of her insanity, these questions are, I believe, entirely new. I think, therefore, counsel have done right in determining not to argue them in chambers, or even in Court before a single judge, but to reserve the argument for the full Court. It is for the purpose of formally founding this appeal to the full Court that they ask an order from me to-day. For this purpose it signifies little, perhaps, what order I make, but there is a consideration which has been constantly present to my mind throughout these proceedings, and which has not been hitherto brought into view. It is the possibility that Lady Mordaunt may recover her faculties, say within a year, although this is, I fear, less likely now than it was in July last, when the question of her mental condition first arose. If the testimony of the medical men at the trial is to be relied on, persons suffering from puerperal

Against this order the petitioner appealed.

The grounds of appeal stated in the petitioner's case were—

"1. The respondent's insanity at the time of the service of the citation is not a bar to the further prosecution of the suit.

"2. The respondent's insanity, though of a permanent character, is not a bar to the further prosecution of the suit.

"3. It does not appear, from the evidence given at the trial or otherwise, that there is any prospect of the respondent's recovery."

insanity for the most part recover within a year, some within eighteen months, and some never. It was therefore extremely probable, at the outset, that the lady, if deranged, would before long cease to be so, and there is some not unreasonable hope of her recovery still. Now whatever be the case in reference to permanent insanity, whether it ought to bar the suit or not, it may, I think, with some force, be argued that until all well-founded expectation or fair hope of the respondent being able to answer the petition be dispelled, the petitioner ought, for a reasonable time at least, to be forbidden to proceed without that answer. The hardship inflicted on a woman who has been temporarily deranged, and who on returning to her senses should find herself to have been divorced without defence is incomparably greater than any injury resulting from the delay in getting quit of an alleged adulterous wife, which her mental condition may have forced upon her husband. The possible cessation of the mental malady materially affects the main question looked at on either side. For if it be assumed as a general proposition that the insanity of the respondent ought not to be a bar to the petitioner's remedy, it would seem still reasonable that this suit should not be pressed during her temporary derangement. On the other hand, if it be declared that a divorce, involving the status of the respondent, ought not to be decreed during that respondent's insanity, it is reasonable that the petition should not be wholly dismissed, but only stayed until the respondent (if ever) recovers. In either view of the case, it would seem that some delay must be granted if the insanity is proved, unless, indeed, it is at the same time proved that, so far as medical experience goes, it is incurable and permanent. The order I propose to make is this [his Lordship read the order]. In making this order I do not desire to express any opinion until the case has been argued as to the effect which permanent insanity of the respondent might have in permanently staying the petitioner's suit. So far as this order involves that question, I must be taken as not expressing any opinion of my own, but only as following (according to the usual practice) the decided case of Bawden v. Bawden, leaving the propriety of that decision to be settled by the Court of Appeal."

The reason given in the case of the guardian ad litem, for affirming the order, was—

"As long as the respondent remains in such a condition of mental disorder as to be unable to answer the petition and to instruct her attorney for her defence, such mental incapacity constitutes a bar to the further prosecution of the suit."

The question was argued on the 27th and 28th of April, 1870.

Ballantine, Serjt., Dr. Spinks, and Inderwick for the petitioner.—The order ought to be rescinded. It is founded on the assumption that the insanity of the respondent, so long as it continues, is a bar to further proceedings, and therefore, if incurable, it would be a permanent bar. The Court in its discretion would, no doubt, in analogy to the practice of Courts of Common Law in the case of the illness of a material witness, have power to stay the suit for a reasonable time, if satisfied that there was a reasonable probability of the respondent's recovery, but not otherwise. The only authority upon the question directly in point is the case of Bawden v. Bawden (2), in which Sir C. Cresswell, on the ground of the respondent's insanity, stayed a suit for dissolution of marriage by a husband; but the question was not fully argued, and the decision was founded on King v. King, an unreported decision of Sir H. J. Fust.

[LORD PENZANCE.—Dr. Bayford has communicated to me the substance of the case of King v. King. Adultery was charged in 1839, 1840, and 1841, and in an action for crim. con. 100*l.* damages were recovered. On the part of the wife incipient insanity in 1837 was alleged, which became undoubted insanity in 1841, the wife having latterly been confined in a lunatic asylum. Sir H. J. Fust directed the case to stand over, in order to consider the power of the Court to make a decree against a lunatic. I have seen a note of the judgment, and it only shews Sir H. J. Fust entertained a doubt upon the question.]

In America the question arose in the case of Mansfield v. Mansfield (3). That was a suit by a wife for a divorce on the ground of adultery. The husband had not appeared. After evidence was given of the adultery, it was suggested to the Court that the husband was insane. The Court thereupon set aside the default, remarking that the wife, if so advised, might procure the appointment of a guardian to her husband, upon whose appearance proceedings might be continued, and on sufficient cause being shewn a divorce obtained. The point does not appear to have been raised again.

(2) 2 Sw. & Tr. 417; s. c. 31 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 94.

(3) 13 Massachusetts Rep. 29.

[LORD PENZANCE.—It would be material to know if the law of Massachusetts allows recrimination.]

In America recrimination is allowed. In Parnell v. Parnell (4), a suit for a divorce a mensâ et thoro by a lunatic was held maintainable. The principle of that decision is applicable to a suit for dissolution of marriage, and if a lunatic can be a petitioner in such a suit, why cannot he be a respondent? If he cannot, there would be this anomaly, that a lunatic might petition for a divorce, and recriminatory charges could not be made against him because he could not answer them. In Beauraine v. Beauraine (5), which was a suit for a divorce a mensâ et thoro by a wife against her husband, a minor, Lord Stowell ordered the husband's father to appear as guardian ad litem, saying it would be a denial of justice if minority protected a man in outrageous treatment of his wife. The father refused to appear as guardian, and it was subsequently held by the Court of Chancery that he could not be compelled against his will to act as guardian. If no one volunteered to act as guardian, the Court might surely appoint a guardian ad litem, or the Court of Chancery might be asked to appoint a committee for the purpose of defending the suit. Upon principle, and in analogy to the practice of Courts of Law and Equity, there is no reason why a lunatic should not be a respondent in a suit for divorce. Marriage is essentially a civil contract, and adultery a breach of it. At law a lunatic is liable on a contract or for a tort—Baxter v. The Earl of Portsmouth (6), Bac. Abr. Idiots

(E); ibid. Trespass (G), note to Borradaile v. Hunter (7); in an action of quare impedit, Tyrell v. Jenner (8); he may be arrested and formerly would not be discharged on filing common bail—Kernot v. Norman (9), Nutt v. Verney (10); and he is liable to an action for false representation—a quasi-criminal offence.

[KELLY, C.B.—And also for a libel.]

In Owen v. Davies (11), a specific performance of a contract entered into by a defendant, who afterwards became a lunatic, was decreed. A lunatic also may be made a bankrupt, whereby his status is affected, provided the act of bankruptcy was committed during a lucid interval—Anon (12). All the decisions on the subject in Courts of law and equity shew that whatever protection is given to lunatics, the rights of other persons already accrued are not affected by the lunacy.

[LORD PENZANCE.—There is this difficulty, which I should wish to hear argued—the power of obtaining a divorce is subject to certain conditions, in which the legislature intended that the public as well as the respondent should have an interest. The Queen's Proctor is empowered to bring evidence before the Court, shewing that any one of those conditions has been violated. A breach of them can in many cases be known only to the respondent. She ought, therefore, to be in a position to give instructions for her defence. Further, the respondent, by a recent Act of Parliament, is rendered a competent witness, and whilst she is insane the Court would be deprived of her evidence.]

The wife's uncorroborated evidence is seldom relied on. Other evidence is generally obtainable, which, if it does not conclusively establish a breach of these conditions, might furnish such probability of it that the Court would delay the suit for further information; or the Queen's Proctor might intervene if he saw any suspicious circumstances. The fact that the respondent is a competent witness in this suit is a mere accident, as the Act by which

(4) 2 Hag. Cons. 169.

(5) 1 Hag. Cons. 498.

(6) 5 B. & C. 170.

(7) 5 Man. & G. 670.

(8) 6 Bing. 283.

(9) 2 Term Rep. 390.

(10) 4 Term Rep. 121.

(11) 1 Ves. sen.

(12) 13 Ves. 500.

she was rendered competent was not passed until after the commencement of the suit.

Lunatics have frequently been suitors in this Court upon the question of the validity of a marriage. In Hancock v. Peaty (13), the proceedings were instituted by the guardian of the petitioner, who was a lunatic, and the marriage was annulled. In the Court of Arches, Michaelmas Term, 1837, in an unreported case, a decree of nullity was pronounced on the ground of insanity, where the respondent was insane during the suit. Suppose a suit for divorce on the ground of the wife's adultery were instituted by the guardian of a lunatic, that the wife deny the charge and recriminate, could the Court, after allowing the husband to charge the wife, stay the proceedings because the husband could not answer?

[LORD PENZANCE.—The petitioner might be deprived of part of his evidence, but the Court would not stay the proceedings.]

The Court sometimes pronounces a decree on the prayer of the respondent. Would the Court refuse to do so when the petitioner was a lunatic? In Talbot v. Talbot, on the second reading of a bill for a divorce in 1856, there was some question as to the effect of confessions of the wife, alleged to have been made during insanity. From a report of that case it does not appear to have been suggested that a state approaching fatuity would be a bar to proceedings. During these proceedings it has been suggested that a suit for a divorce, inasmuch as it affects the status of the parties, is analogous to a criminal proceeding, and that as a person charged with a criminal offence, if he becomes insane, cannot be called on to plead (14); in analogy to that practice, the proceedings in this suit ought to be stayed. But there is no such analogy. By the law of England adultery is not a crime. In criminal cases the law requires the accused to plead personally in Court. The object of a criminal proceeding is the punishment of the offender with a view to deter others, and not to afford redress or relief to the injured party, whilst the object of a suit for divorce is to get redress for an injury sustained by the petitioner. In the former case neither the public nor the prosecutor is injured by the accused not being tried. In the latter the petitioner may be seriously injured by a stay of proceedings.

Dr. Deane, Archibald, and Searle, for the respondent.—It is a fallacy to treat marriage as an ordinary contract. It is a contract sui generis, conferring a status upon the parties to it, and differing in some respects from all other contracts (see Storey's Conflict of Laws, pp. 170 & 171, quoting a judgment of Lord Robertson). Again, a divorce, though civil in its nature, is criminal in its effect, as it changes the status of the parties—Bishop on Marriage and Divorce, 479. It would be contrary to natural justice if a decree were made affecting the status of a party who is neither actually nor constructively before the Court—Buchanan v. Rucker (15), Reynolds v. Fenton (16), and other cases cited in the note to the Duchess of Kingston's case (17). It is true that the respondent has been served with process, but she cannot be said to have been served in any sense in which she could deal intelligently with it. Service on a lunatic is, as was said by Sir C. Cresswell, a meaningless formality. No case can be cited in which the personal status of a lunatic has been dealt with. The Courts of Law and Equity deal with property but not with personal status. In Woodgate v. Taylor (18), by order of the Lord Justices, the committee of a lunatic instituted a suit for judicial separation. It does not, however, follow that the committee of a lunatic could maintain a suit for dissolution of marriage. A decree of judicial separation only separates the parties temporarily, and contemplates reconciliation, whilst a decree of dissolution permanently alters the status of the parties. Further, the inability of a lunatic petitioner to rebut recriminatory charges, which, if established, would have more serious consequences than in a suit for judicial separation, is another argument

(15) 1 Campb. 63.

(16) 3 Com. B. Rep. 187; s. c. 16 Law J. Rep. (n.s.) C.P. 15.

(17) 2 Smith, leading cases, 592.

(18) 30 Law J. Rep. (n.s.) Prob. M. & A. 197.

(13) 36 Law J. Rep. (n.s.) Prob. M. & A. 57; s. c. Law Rep. 1 Prob. & D. 3.

(14) 3 Instit. 6; 1 Hale P. C. 33 & 34.

against such a suit. A suit for dissolution of marriage is analogous to a criminal proceeding, and by analogy to the practice of criminal Courts, such a suit ought not to be maintainable against a lunatic. According to Sir J. Hawles, Solicitor General, temp. Will. 3, in the case of Sir W. Bateman (19), the reason why a lunatic cannot be tried is because he is disabled from making his defence, since there might be circumstances which would prove his innocence unknown to those who conduct his defence, and only within his own knowledge. For the same reason the lunacy of a respondent ought to be a bar to a suit for a divorce. For if sane, he or she might explain matters apparently inconsistent with innocence, or set up some defence under the statute.

[KEATING, J.—Has it ever been held that insanity at the time of the adultery is a bar to a suit for divorce?]

Not in this country. In Alabama and Massachusetts it has been held that it is a bar; in Pennsylvania that it is not. As to other suits, the Court is bound to follow the practice of the Ecclesiastical Courts, and it may be that such suits may be maintained by and against lunatics, but a suit for a divorce is the creature of the Divorce Act, and unless it is clear from the terms of the Act that a divorce may be maintained by and against a lunatic, the Court ought not to allow such a suit to proceed. There are provisions in the statute which shew such a suit can only be brought by and against a sane person. Thus the 41st section requires the petitioner to make an affidavit verifying the petition, and the rules made under the Act require an affidavit from the respondent verifying matter in the answer other than a simple denial of allegations in the petition. Such an affidavit can only be made by a sane person, and there is no provision for an affidavit being made except by the parties. If the legislature had intended that a suit for divorce should be maintained by or against a lunatic, it would have provided some machinery for the protection of the lunatic.

[KELLY, C.B.—The statute requiring an affidavit to be made by the petitioner, and there being no power for the guardian of a lunatic to make such affidavit, it would seem that the guardian of a lunatic cannot institute a suit.]

(Dr. Spinks.—In Hancock v. Peaty (13), the affidavit in support of the petition was made by the guardian of the lunatic.)

[KELLY, C.B.—That may have been done per incuriam. LORD PENZANCE.—The rules have several times been altered, and if it should be held that the suit ought not to be stayed, a rule may be made to meet the difficulty.]

It does not follow, as contended, that if this order is valid the respondent in a suit for divorce by a lunatic (assuming such a suit maintainable) could not plead recrimination. There would be no hardship on the lunatic if he institutes proceedings that recrimination should be allowed as a defence, though the Court might refuse to found any sentence upon the answer. As to the hardship which, it is said, this order if sustained would in fact inflict on the petitioner, doubtless it would be hard that a husband should be unable to get rid of a guilty wife in consequence of her insanity, but the hardship would be far less than that inflicted on an innocent wife if a divorce was obtained against her in consequence of her inability to defend herself. If the adultery of a lunatic wife could be clearly established, there is nothing to prevent the husband getting the marriage dissolved by an Act of Parliament. As to Parnell v. Parnell (4), that case is relied on as shewing that an insane person can institute a suit, but that was only a suit for judicial separation, and one of the reasons given by Lord Stowell for allowing it to proceed, was that the wife could sustain no injury, since the lunatic, if he recovered, would have power to condone. Beauraine v. Beauraine (5) was a suit by a minor. There is no analogy between such a case and a suit by a lunatic. In Talbot v. Talbot the question of insanity was only raised incidentally in considering the effect to be given to certain confessions. They cited Beverley's case (20), Molton v. Camrous (21), Bac. Abr.

(20) 4 Rep. 174.

(21) 2 Exch. Rep. 487; s. c. 18 Law J. Rep. (n.s.) Exch. 68; in error 4 Exch. Rep. 17; s. c. 18 Law J. Rep. (n.s.) Exch. 356.

(19) 4 St. Tri. 474.

Idiot (F), 1 Hale, P. C. p. 33, Bishop on Marriage and Divorce, p. 419, White v. White (22), Hall v. Hall (23).

Ballantine, Serjt., in reply.—The Court can appoint a guardian to a lunatic. The rules of the Divorce Court provide for the appointment of guardians to miners, although the statute is silent on the point. It is said that Parnell v. Parnell (4) was only a suit for a divorce a mensâ et thoro, which is less serious in its effect than a suit for dissolution, but Sir C. Cresswell, in Bawden v. Bawden (2), said that a suit for dissolution against a lunatic was different from a case where the petitioner was a lunatic, thus assuming that a suit for dissolution of marriage might be maintained by a lunatic. Nor is it true that a decree of judicial separation does not affect the status of the parties, for a woman judicially separated is for all purposes, except marrying again, a feme sole. There is no analogy between a suit for divorce and a criminal proceeding. This Court is a Court of purely civil jurisdiction. Proceedings in it in their nature and object are essentially different from those of a criminal proceeding. In a criminal Court means would be taken to prevent injustice by incapacity of a material witness on behalf of the prisoner. But in such a case the Court would only grant a reasonable delay, and if the witness were permanently insane the trial would not be postponed indefinitely. The order ought to be rescinded, leaving it open to the respondent's guardian to apply for a further postponement if the respondent is likely to recover within a reasonable time, or if there should be prima facie ground for believing that any of the conditions or discretionary bars specified in the Divorce Act can be proved.

Cur. adv. vult.

The Court differing in opinion, the following judgments were now delivered:—

KEATING, J.—(after stating the facts, continued)—The question is whether the order should be rescinded or varied, or in other words, whether proceedings upon a charge of adultery, with a view to a divorce, can or ought to be continued against a respondent who at the commencement of the suit was, and still is, wholly unable and unfit, through mental incapacity, to defend herself, so long as that mental incapacity continues; and I am of opinion that the order made ought not to be rescinded or varied. If this were a criminal proceeding, or a proceeding in pœnam, properly so called, of course there could be no doubt upon the subject. Mental incapacity not only excuses the commission of what otherwise would be crime, but is a bar at every stage to any proceeding on the part of the Crown in respect of it. It excuses the act charged as crime, because the essence of crime is the mens rea, which could not exist in such a case, and it is a bar to criminal proceedings in consequence of want of capacity on the part of the accused to understand the charge or make a defence to it—See the rule and the reason for it well stated in 4 Broom and Hadley's Commentaries on the Laws of England, p. 22, citing Hale, P.C., 14. Now, it is true that by the law of England adultery is not the subject of indictment—2 Co. Inst. 488, and Galizard v. Rigault (24)—and therefore cannot with strict technical accuracy be termed a crime; yet the charge, both in its nature and consequences, much resembles a criminal charge. Indeed, Mr. Emlyn, whose learning and ability are vouched by Mr. Hargrave in his preface to the second edition of the State Trials, p. 33, note H, expresses an opinion that it was indictable by our law, and cites authorities for his opinion. By the law of France it is punishable as a criminal offence, and we have the authority of Lord Holt in the case referred to (25) that it is considered as such in the Spiritual Courts. In divorce proceedings also in the House of Lords it appears to be so treated. In the Duchess of Norfolk's case (26) the entry is, "Upon reading the charge which Henry Duke of Norfolk hath exhibited against his wife, Mary Duchess of Norfolk, for the crime of adultery, it is ordered, &c." No case is to be found in the Ecclesiastical Courts where the question has arisen how far

(22) 1 Sw. & Tr. 591.

(23) 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 65.

(24) Holt's Rep. 598.

(25) Galizard v. Rigault, Holt's Rep. 598.

(26) 12 St. Tri. 890.

adultery to justify a divorce could be committed in the absence of the mens rea, but it seems clear that by the French law it is essential to the commission of the crime—Gilbert, Codes Annotés, par Sirey, Code Pénal, 336; and Merlin, 1 Rep. Adultère, n. 10. In America the decisions conflict upon the point—2 Weaton's Com. 82. How that question will be dealt with, should it arise in the Courts of this country, it is not necessary to anticipate; for, at all events, the nature of the offence charged seems to me to distinguish the proceedings in divorce essentially from those merely of a civil character, in which the object is the recovery of debt or damages for an injury to person or property—See Bac. Abr. Trespass (G)—but where the personal status of the defendant is wholly unaffected. In proceedings for a divorce, although the consequences to the party charged and found guilty are certainly not the same as in misdemeanour, yet in the case of a wife respondent they are so incalculably more terrible than fine and imprisonment, that, as argued by Mr. Archibald, it seems contrary to all sense of natural justice that a woman should be convicted of adultery, involving a change in her personal status, and that by a judgment in rem, without the fullest opportunity of making her defence. By analogy, therefore, to those principles which have been established in the administration of criminal justice in this country, it seems to me that the proceeding for a divorce for cause of adultery, although not strictly a criminal proceeding, is at least a proceeding quasi in poenam, and ought to afford similar protection to parties accused.

But by far the most cogent reasons for supporting the present order are, in my opinion, to be found in the provisions of the statute itself upon which the jurisdiction of this Court is founded, and in order to appreciate their effect it is necessary to bear in mind that before the passing of the statute 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, by the law of England marriage, when lawfully contracted, was an indissoluble contract. Unlike all other civil contracts, it could neither be put an end to by mutual consent nor by act or operation of law. The husband, whose wife had proved unfaithful, might, indeed, go into the Spiritual Court, and, upon proof of adultery, without fault on his part, obtain a divorce a mensâ et thoro, and also bring an action for damages against the adulterer; but the marriage contract remained undissolved, nor could the parties during their joint lives marry again unless by special interference of the legislature. In that state of things the statute 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, was passed, which for the first time gave to a Court of law the power to dissolve a lawful marriage, but only sub modo, and subject to certain conditions. The 27th section of that statute enables either party to present a petition for dissolution of marriage. The 28th section provides that the person charged with adultery with either party may be made co-respondent, and that either party may have the facts tried by a jury. Section 29 enacts that “upon any such petition for a dissolution of marriage it shall be the duty of the Court to satisfy itself, so far as it reasonably can, not only as to the facts alleged, but also whether or no the petitioner has been in any manner accessory to or conniving at the adultery, or has condoned the same, and shall also inquire into any counter charge which may be made against the petitioner.” By section 30, “in case the Court, on the evidence in relation to any such petition, shall not be satisfied that the alleged adultery has been committed, or shall find that the petitioner has been accessory to or conniving at the adultery of the other party to the marriage, or has condoned the adultery complained of, or that the petition is presented or prosecuted in collusion with either of the respondents, then in any of the said cases the Court shall dismiss the said petition.” The 31st section provides “that in case the Court shall be satisfied on the evidence that the case of the petitioner has been proved, and shall not find that the petitioner has been in any manner accessory to or conniving at the adultery of the other party to the marriage, or has condoned the adultery complained of, or that the petition is presented or prosecuted in collusion with either of the respondents, then the Court shall pronounce a decree declaring such marriage to be dissolved; provided always that the Court shall not be bound to pronounce such decree if it shall find that the petitioner has, during the marriage, been guilty of adultery, or if the petitioner shall, in the opinion of the Court, have been guilty of unreasonable delay in presenting or prosecuting such petition, or of cruelty towards the other party to the marriage, or of having deserted or wilfully separated himself or herself from the other party before the adultery complained of, and without reasonable excuse, or of such wilful neglect or misconduct as has conduced to the adultery." And the 43rd section enables the Court to have the petitioner examined and cross-examined on oath, if necessary, in order to obtain information with reference to the various matters upon which it is to satisfy itself, saving only the right of the petitioner to refuse to answer any question tending to prove his or her adultery. Now, it appears to me to be impossible to apply these provisions of the statute in the manner contemplated by the legislature when one of the parties is insane. The Court cannot pronounce a decree of divorce, unless satisfied, after inquiry, which it is bound to make, that none of the statutable impediments exist, yet the existence of those impediments, or of most of them, is peculiarly, and often exclusively, within the knowledge of the parties themselves. How, then, can it be supposed that the legislature contemplated such a suit proceeding during the insanity of one of the parties to it? Connivance, condonation, cruelty, desertion, wilful separation without reasonable excuse, wilful neglect or misconduct, conducing to the adultery, are all matters upon which it is the duty of the Court to satisfy itself, as to some absolutely, as to others if charged; but how are they ever to be supported, much less proved, when one of the parties is insane? Take the case of a petitioner. Is a petition for a divorce to be presented or prosecuted on behalf of a lunatic with a view to alter his or her personal status without his or her consent? Who can say that such a proceeding, if it could be taken, would necessarily be for his or her benefit or would be approved upon recovery? A proceeding for a judicial separation stands upon a totally different ground. It is temporary in its effect, and always contemplates the possibility of re-union, and there certainly is authority for such a decree being made on the petition of the committee of a lunatic—Woodgate v. Taylor (18), where the distinction between judicial separation and divorce seems to have been present to the minds of the Lords Justices in making their order for proceedings. It is also to be observed as to that case that the attention of the Court does not seem to have been called to the provisions of the 41st section of the statute. But whatever may have been the case with reference to a petition, yet in the case of a respondent, although proceedings for judicial separation are not fenced round with all the statutable conditions applicable to a case of divorce, there is no instance to be found in which a decree for even a judicial separation has been made against a lunatic respondent, and there seems to be an additional objection to making such a decree in the fact that by a recent statute, 32 & 33 Vict. c. 68, he or she is made a competent witness, and has the right to give evidence in disproof of the charge of adultery. It would seem, therefore, extremely unjust to deprive the parties charged, of the right, without any fault on their part. It is not difficult to suppose many cases where suspicion of the gravest kind resulting from conversations, or letters, or entries, might be dispelled by a few words of explanation, which could only be given by the absent lunatic, or when a totally different complexion might be put upon facts, apparently of a highly criminating character, by the evidence of the party charged. I do not wish to attach undue importance to the fact that charge or counter-charge is, either by statute or rule, to be made upon the oaths of the parties, respectively, as perhaps the Court could, in furtherance of justice, relax the stringency of the requirements; but such a provision in the statute, in the case of a petitioner, tends at least to shew the legislature contemplated the parties being in a state of sanity. Neither does it seem to me that the argument used at the bar, that as the Court could pronounce a decree of divorce against a party not served, so it might do so in the case of a lunatic, avails much to the case of the appellant. When such a decree is made, the Court is satisfied either that the party has gone away to avoid service, or may have had notice by means of advertisements or other notices directed to be given, whereas, in the case of an insane person, the Court knows that the party had not and could not have had notice, and cannot possibly defend himself, or herself, against the charge. The authorities upon this point are necessarily few, but what authority there is upon the subject is clearly in favour of the present order. In a case not reported, but furnished from the notes of the late Sir Herbert Jenner Fust, the question seems to have arisen whether a decree a mensâ et thoro could be made against a lunatic respondent. That learned Judge, expressing a doubt whether he could make such a decree, took time to consider. No judgment is known to have been given, nor is there any trace of such decree having been made. However, the question arose afterwards before the late Sir Cresswell Cresswell, in the case of Bawden v. Bawden (2), on a petition for a divorce under the present Act, and that eminent Judge, after taking time to consider, gave judgment that the proceedings should be stayed. Now, this decision is admitted to be in point, and indeed the present appeal is with a view to overrule that case, although in form it is directed against the order of the Judge Ordinary made upon its authority. In my judgment, however, that case was rightly decided. I do not refer to the cases of hardship suggested, quite as great on the one side as on the other, as it was admitted the case must be decided on other considerations. The order as made, stays the proceedings, until the petitioner, who has the custody of the respondent, can assert her recovery. Meanwhile, he is in the same position as he would have been in before the passing of the statute. The facts of this case are not before us, but should it upon those facts, in consequence of any peculiar hardship, be deemed one fit for legislation, of course there is nothing to prevent it. In my opinion the order of the Judge Ordinary was right, and the appeal against it ought to be dismissed.

NEW SERIES, 39.—PROB. AND M.

THE JUDGE ORDINARY (Lord Penzance).—The main question to which the insanity of the respondent gives rise is, whether the suit can be permitted to proceed to a decree against her so long as she remains insane. A suggestion has been made that the order now under appeal should be altered by staying the proceedings for a time until recovery shall be declared hopeless. An obvious objection to this course is, that the probability of recovery is a matter more of speculation than of definite conclusion. But it seems to me that the propriety of adopting it depends upon the legal effect of the respondent's insanity, so long as that insanity continues. If while the insanity continues the petitioner is entitled, nevertheless, to proceed to prove his case, it would still be right, in justice to the respondent, to stay the proceedings for a reasonable time, to take the chance of her recovery, before the charge is pressed against her. If, on the other hand, the true view is that no proof or decree can lawfully be made against her so long as she continues insane, there is no need, as it seems to me, for a stay of proceedings for any period short of her recovery, and no justification for the postponement of a decision on the main matter, which the parties have asked at our hands. The authority of this Court to entertain a suit for the dissolution of marriage is derived wholly and solely from the statute by which this Court was first instituted. The relief which the Court was then for the first time empowered to give in cases where the marriage vow had been violated is defined and regulated by the various provisions of that statute, and restricted by the conditions thereby imposed. The language that has been held in argument invites and provokes some consideration of the nature and extent of these various provisions. It has been argued that marriage is nothing but a contract, subject to all the legal incidents of an ordinary contract, and giving rise to the like legal remedies. From this position, if tenable, the conclusion would not be difficult that insanity in her who has broken the contract should be no bar to the remedy of him who complains of the breach of it. For the Courts of Law and Equity have always, though in different ways, enforced remedies arising out of contract, notwithstanding the insanity of the defendant. But, is it true that marriage is an ordinary contract? Surely it is something more. I may be excused if I dwell somewhat on this matter, because I conceive it lies at the very root of the question in discussion. Marriage is an institution. It confers a status on the parties to it, and upon the children that issue from it. Though entered into by individuals, it has a public character. It is the basis upon which the framework of civilized society is built, and, as such, is subject in all countries to general laws, which dictate and control its obligations and incidents, independently of the volition of those who enter upon it. Marriage, moreover, has features which belong to no other contract whatever, and notably these two—it cannot be rescinded, even by the consent of both parties to it, and it is commonly contracted under the sanction of a religious ceremony. This, the leading feature of marriage, its indissolubility, was preserved by the law of this country up to the time that the statute constituting this Court passed into legislation. No matter how flagrantly the obligations of the contract had been violated on one side there was no right to a release from the corresponding obligations on the other. Cases of grievous hardship brought about a remedy by measures above and beyond the law for those who could afford to pay for them; but the essence of the marriage contract remained the same, and the bargain to live together for better and for worse continued to be one from which there was no voluntary retreat or legal escape. To what extent, then, did the legislature intend by the Divorce Act to break in upon the integrity of this system? It is worth while to examine this matter, for the power conferred by the Act of resorting to this Court has been treated in argument as if it were simply a new means of asserting a pre-existing right. According to this view the act of adultery is treated as conferring at once the right to a dissolution, and the Divorce Act only as furnishing the necessary machinery. But is this so? It appears to me that the new remedies, like those of a more limited character accorded by the Ecclesiastical Courts, were granted, if I may use the expression, rather ex gratia than ex debito iustitiae. The Divorce Act kept alive the restrictions under which the legislature in the case of divorce bills, and the legislature in the case of divorce suits a mensâ et thoro, had been used to act, and those restrictions plainly shew the spirit in which the relief was granted. It was a principle of universal application in the Spiritual Courts that a suitor who prayed for a relaxation of his marriage ties should come into Court with clean hands. It was further necessary that he should not, even in a moment of excitement, have pardoned his wife and taken her back to him. It was a further principle that he should be sincere in the grievance under which he professed to suffer. And, lastly, he was bound to be prompt, and not open to the charge of unreasonable delay. In a like spirit, a Divorce Bill, when passing through the House of Lords, was treated rather as a matter of general merits, laying the foundation for a measure of grace, than a mere investigation of delinquency, drawing after it an absolute right to redress. The entire conduct of the husband was submitted to review, the complaints and excuses of the wife were entertained, and the bill, which passed into a law only if the case were in all respects meritorious, was liable to be defeated in its last stages if the husband failed to restore an adequate part of the fortune, if any, that his wife had brought him. No doubt the breadth of this discretion in granting relief was much narrowed, and its limits defined when the dissolution of marriage was confided to the hands of a regular tribunal. Still a large discretion was left. The Court, under section 31, has the discretion to refuse a decree if the petitioner has been guilty of adultery, if he has been guilty of cruelty, if he has been fairly chargeable with unreasonable delay, if he has wilfully and without reasonable excuse separated himself from his wife, if he has deserted her, and lastly, if he has been guilty of any neglect or misconduct conducing to his wife's adultery. And here it is to be observed that the maintenance of these restrictions and qualifications is treated by the legislature as a matter not merely of equity to the erring wife, but of public concern. The enactment which followed the Divorce Act made special provision to insure divorces not being granted when any of these imputations could be successfully made against the petitioner. It cast upon a public officer, the Queen's Proctor, the duty of intervening at any time, and bringing them to light, and even empowered individuals, whether interested in the matter or entire strangers to the parties, to do the like. It is only, therefore, if the petitioner is free from all reasonable complaint of misconduct himself that the legislature intended to release him from bonds in their terms and their nature permanent. The statute accorded to those to whose own conduct no blame could be imputed a relief from obligations voluntarily undertaken and still binding, but which the unprovoked misconduct of others had rendered a grievous and intolerable burden. But it did not, as it seems to me, intend to do more. It did not intend to affirm that adultery of the wife at once conferred upon the husband an immediate though defeasible right to have his contract of marriage dissolved, treating his release from the contract as a simple right growing out of the breach of it by the other party, and thus placing it on a level with a contract for the sale of goods or the hire of a ship. When the Court, therefore, is asked to deal with this question of insanity as courts of law would deal with a case of ordinary contract, the answer is that marriage is not an ordinary contract. When the analogy of legal remedies in other cases of contract is put forward for adoption, the answer is that the analogy does not exist. If it did, it would no doubt give a summary solution to all difficulties, but a rather startling one. A lunatic at common law is liable to be sued, and (until arrest was abolished) held to bail; just the same as a sane man. There is no need at common law for the appointment of a guardian or the nomination of any one to act in the lunatic's place; the suit proceeds in all respects as if the defendant were sane. If this Court, then, were to act in analogy with this system, the petitioner would have only to prove service of the petition on his lunatic wife, and he might, without warning to her family or her friends, proceed to establish her guilt without danger of defence or recrimination. For these reasons, it appears to me that we must look elsewhere for the solution of the question at issue than to the analogy of ordinary remedies for the breach of ordinary contracts. And as it must be conceded that the true meaning of the legislature in the Divorce Act, if it can be arrived at, is that which ought alone to guide our decision, it is to the provisions of that Act that I again recur. It is to be observed, at the outset, that there are no words specially applicable to the case of lunacy either of the petitioner or the respondent. If suits were intended to be entertained by and against such persons it would be reasonable to look for some provisions by which their friends or relations might act for them and protect their interests. But there are none such, nor, indeed, any special provisions or machinery for the conduct of such suits. If the statute applies to lunatics at all, it deals with them in all respects like other persons. Accordingly the lunatic petitioner must present a petition, and accompany it by an affidavit sworn by himself as to the truth of its allegations. On this section 41 of the statute is express. The lunatic respondent, too, must be served personally with the petition, unless the Court dispense with it. Then the lunatic respondent is invited to recriminate, and submit the petitioner's matrimonial conduct to investigation. If she does this, the rules of the Court, as they stand at present, require that she should affirm the truth of the charges on personal affidavit. Any such charges the petitioner, whether a lunatic or not, has to meet, and the duty is by section 29 directly cast upon the Court of investigating all such countercharges. Now, so far as the mere machinery here indicated is concerned, its defects might, no doubt, be to some extent supplied by rules of Court. It is not, therefore, so much that the means of entertaining such a suit as this are beyond reach if it could only be made plain that the legislature so intended, as that the absence of appropriate provision for lunatics in those parts of the Act which concern procedure tends to shew that the Act was not designed for any but sane suitors. But I pass to a more general view, and I ask myself the broad question whether, looking at the substance, rather than the form, of these remedies, they were intended for lunatic petitioners and lunatic respondents. I say lunatic petitioners as well as respondents, for there is no distinction made in the Act; the words throughout are quite general, and there is no middle ground between the two opposite opinions that these words include lunatics or exclude them altogether. Take the case of the lunatic petitioner first. Did the legislature really intend that while a man was out of his senses, either he or his friends should be at liberty to take legal proceedings to put away his wife? Surely such a matter as the divorce of his wife (perhaps the mother of his children) is one upon which he should be allowed himself to exercise some reasonable option; and while from aberration of mind he is incapable of exercising that option, was it really contemplated that he, or his friends on his behalf, should be permitted to bring to the scandal of a public trial his wife's alleged guilt and his own supposed dishonour? But another result might follow. His wife, though guilty herself, might recriminate and charge him with conduct which his condition of mind would prevent him from answering with effect. His suit would then fail; the counter-charge would be established against him, and his remedy be barred for ever, though he should recover his senses and wish to pursue it. Then take the case of the lunatic respondent. The gravest of all charges short of indictable crime is made against her. She is unable to give any explanation to her advisers of the circumstances from which her guilt is argued. The charge is of a purely personal character, and the decree sought is aimed directly at her personal status; her exculpation, if there be one, probably lies in facts and events known only to herself. All her letters and documents have probably passed into the hands of her husband, who may produce what he likes, without fear of enquiries for the rest. Those who defend her—and if she belong to the humbler classes the expense of a defence will probably not be incurred at all—can only stand by and sift the petitioner's proofs: for all counter-evidence or proof of explanatory facts they will in most cases be wholly at a loss, for want of the knowledge which alone could lead to their production. Could the bare issue of adultery then be fairly tried against a person so placed? And, if not, did the statute which I have endeavoured to shew is so framed as to stipulate with scrupulous care for an equitable and meritorious view of conjugal delinquency on both sides really intend to place a dissolution of his marriage within the reach of a husband upon an inquiry so one-sided and incomplete? But if such an enquiry would be incomplete and inequitable on the fact of adultery, on all matters of recrimination, on all charges of neglect or misconduct on the part of the husband himself it would literally, in most cases, be no inquiry at all. Who is to know, much less find proof of the husband's cruelty? Who is to give the clue to and to bring to light the neglect or misconduct which may have conduced to the wife's adultery? If, before the adultery, he has deserted her, or separated himself from her, who is to meet or confute the facts he may put forward as a "reasonable excuse" for so doing? And these, be it remembered, are not only defences to the wife, but are by the statute made matter of public concern, and unusual means are enacted to preclude a decree of divorce from passing in any case in which they may exist. It is not too much to say that in the case of an insane respondent all these careful provisions and restrictions would become practically a dead letter; and as it is plain that the legislature did in no case intend that they should be so, I conclude that such a suit as this is not within the statute. I have thus far proceeded on the reason of the thing; authority upon the subject there is but little. With the exception of the case of Bawden v. Bawden (2), this is the first attempt in this Court to make an insane wife responsible in a suit for divorce. The judgment in that case was not an elaborate one, but no one who reveres the sound legal capacity of my predecessor in this Court as it deserves to be revered, can fail to attribute great weight to his decision. It is in entire conformity with the order now under review. In the Ecclesiastical Court no case has been cited in which so much as a contrary dictum is to be found; and on the only occasion when the matter was mooted, the Judge's notes shew an opinion in conformity with that of Sir Cresswell Cresswell. In the record of Divorce Bills none is to be found against an insane wife. It may safely, therefore, be asserted that all previous authority is against the petitioner and the further maintenance of this suit. It is hardly needful to say that in the foregoing remarks I have made no allusion to the actual facts of this or any other case. The question is one of general principle, and I have so treated it. Neither has it seemed right to base any conclusion upon mere considerations of hardship that may arise out of a decision in one direction or the other. As far as the petitioner is concerned, there is no hardship, unless on the assumption of the respondent's guilt, an assumption we are not at liberty to make. If in no case where the respondent is insane is the petitioner entitled to claim relief, there may, no doubt, arise some cases in which the petitioner will suffer a grievous hardship. If, in all cases in which the respondent is insane, the petitioner is nevertheless entitled to proceed, there may be some cases in which the respondent will be the victim, not merely of hardship, but fatal injustice. In whichever way the statute is interpreted, full and complete justice is not in all cases within reach of the Court. But this is the inevitable result of the malady with which the respondent has been afflicted, and which has rendered a fair investigation of the truth impossible. In conclusion, I will advert to one other subject. It was suggested in argument that in staying the suit the interests of the co-respondents might be compromised. It might be sufficient, perhaps, to observe that the supposed hardships of the co-respondents are put forward, not by them, but in the interests of the petitioner. The co-respondents themselves have not either of them appealed against this order, nor have they made any application regarding their costs. But if they had, I do not conceive that they have either the interest or the right to insist on a continuance of this suit, or that they can be wronged by its discontinuance. Suppose the respondent had died, could the petitioner have been obliged to continue the suit against the co-respondents? It must be remembered that the petitioner makes no claim for damages, and asks in his petition for no decree against them. They are made parties to the suit only because the statute peremptorily requires that they should be so. The object of this provision was no doubt to give them a locus standi to contest the proof of adultery. If no such proof is offered their legal interest in the matter is at an end. Is, then, a petitioner, it may be asked, who has commenced a suit, bound to go on with it whether he will or no? Suppose after the suit has begun he sees reason to doubt whether his wife is guilty, is he bound to continue the investigation in open court, in order to clear the reputation of the co-respondent? Or, again, if he forgive his wife, and they come together again, as not unfrequently happens, is he bound for the sake of the co-respondent to produce what he considers his proof of her infidelity, in order that the co-respondent may meet it in open Court? And if the Court were to hold that he were so bound, and that the suit must go on to a termination against the co-respondents, would the co-respondents obtain the end they are supposed to seek? No power of the Court can make the husband really try to prove adultery, unless he be so minded, and the reputation of the co-respondents would be in no degree mended by the form without the substance of an adverse investigation. The truth is that it is a misfortune inseparable from permitting a husband to charge his wife in public with adultery, that the name and reputation of a third person (if known) should be exposed to compromise. If the parties are innocent this cannot be otherwise than a grievous wrong, which nothing can wholly redress, and for which there is no practical mitigation but in that sense of justice on the part of the public which withholds a judgment until a charge is not only made, but proved. I am, therefore, of opinion that the petition of the co-respondents throws no light upon the propriety of the order now under appeal. Their position is the same as it would have been if the respondent had died, if the petitioner had found his proofs of guilt insufficient, and had ceased to urge them, if he had forgiven his wife, and taken her back, or if, for any other reason whatever, he had ceased to demand relief at the hands of the Court. The order ought in my judgment to be affirmed.

K

I desire to add that if the form of the present order should make any difficulty in the way of the petitioner appealing to the House of Lords, and if a dismissal of the petition will remove the difficulty, I shall be very willing to hear any future application that the condition of the respondent or other considerations may warrant the petitioner in making with that object.

KELLY, C.B. — I am of opinion that the order in question should be rescinded or varied, and that the order to be made should be that further proceedings in the cause be stayed for such limited time as the Judge Ordinary shall think reasonable and expedient, unless the respondent shall in the mean time recover, with liberty to either party to apply. The ground upon which I think that the postponement should at present be temporary only is, that to decide the question now, and either to grant the order in the terms prayed or to permit the cause to proceed, notwithstanding the insanity of the respondent, may do great and grievous injustice and an irreparable injury to the one party or the other, whereas a stay of proceedings for a limited time will meet the present exigencies of the case, and do no wrong to either. In considering the real nature of this order, and its ultimate consequences, I must disclaim any allusion to the parties before us in this particular case, and whom, as no evidence has been taken upon the petition, I shall presume to be free from all imputation. But in dealing with the case we must remember that our decision will govern all such cases hereafter, and determine the rights of all parties to a suit for the dissolution of marriage on the ground of adultery, under whatever circumstances it may come before the Court. The order, although in its terms conditional, is in effect, if the lady prove permanent or should continue during the life of the petitioner, an absolute bar to the suit, a final judgment against the petitioner, and a denial of the redress which he claims to be entitled to under the provisions of the statute, not only as regards the wife, but against the co-respondents. If such an order be made, the consequence to a petitioner is, that although he may have evidence incontrovertible of the adultery of his wife, and a just claim to damages to a large amount against a co-respondent, he finds himself — without any fault of his own, from an accident which he had no power to prevent — tied and bound to an adulterous wife for the remainder of his life, compelled by law to maintain her suitably to his own condition and rank and fortune, liable to the risk of spurious issue, his legitimate children or natural heirs despoiled of property, as, by the wife's claim to dower, or to personalty passing to her if he should die intestate, and himself for ever precluded from contracting marriage with another woman. On the other hand, if the petitioner be permitted to proceed, the consequences are scarcely less calamitous to the wife, it may be an innocent wife, in a case in which more than in any other species of judicial enquiry evidence may be given against her which she alone may be able to contradict or to explain away; and after a trial upon which, but for her insanity, she might have established a complete defence, she may recover her reason only to find herself dishonoured and disgraced for ever by a sentence of divorce for adultery. I venture to think that this Court ought not to entertain a question by its decision upon which it is compelled to choose between these two great evils, until, at least, the recovery of the respondent has become hopeless, and the Court is called upon, ex debito justitiæ, by one party or the other, to make the order, and, in effect, put an end to the suit, or to allow the petitioner to proceed and entitle himself to the redress which he seeks. It appears to be the result of the evidence upon the issue of insanity, as stated by the learned Judge Ordinary when this order was originally pronounced (1), "that persons suffering from puerperal insanity for the most part recover within a year, some within eighteen months or two years, and some never." And it was then observed by the learned Judge, "that it had been extremely probable at the outset that the lady, if deranged, would before long cease to be so; and that there was some not unreasonable hope of her recovery still." The learned Judge further observed, "that whatever be the case in reference to permanent insanity, whether it ought to bar a suit or not, it may with some force be argued that until all well-founded expectation or fair hope of the respondent's being able to answer the petition be dispelled, the petitioner ought, for a reasonable time at least, to be forbidden to proceed without that answer." I entirely concur in the view thus taken of this case, I believe, as late as the month of April last, and am still of opinion, that the disastrous consequences which may or must ensue whenever the Court is compelled to decide this question are such as imperatively to call upon the Court to vary and qualify this order, and stay the proceedings only for a limited and definite time. But from the view taken of the case by the Judge Ordinary and my brother Keating, it becomes necessary to consider what power or jurisdiction this Court possesses to make an order which, in case the respondent should not recover, operates as a judgment against the petitioner, and a final bar to his suit. And here it is objected in limine that the Court has no power to appoint or to recognise a guardian ad litem to the respondent, and that, therefore, if the cause proceed, no defence at all can be made on her behalf. But I am clearly of opinion that such is not the law or the practice of the Court. I conceive it to be a power inherent in all the superior Courts of Law and Equity to appoint a guardian ad litem to any infant or lunatic who may be a party to a suit, whether ex motu proprio, or at the instance of any fit and proper person willing to assume and perform the duties of the office. All the cases upon this point referred to on the one side and on the other are uniform to shew that it has always been the practice of Courts Spiritual, as of other Courts of Law and Equity, to appoint and recognise guardians to minors and lunatics, parties to suits before them. In Barham v. Barham (27), a wife, a minor, plaintiff in a suit against her husband for cruelty and adultery, appeared by a curator ad litem; and in Beauraine v. Beauraine (5), a curator ad litem was appointed to the respondent, a minor, sued by his wife for a divorce by reason of cruelty and adultery. This appointment was afterwards set aside by reason of the guardian having refused to accept the office. But the practice for a minor to appear by guardian in such a suit is not questioned. And in Hancock v. Peaty (13), in a suit of nullity of marriage by a wife against her husband, on the ground that she was insane at the time of the marriage, the plaintiff or petitioner appeared by a guardian, her brother, specially assigned by the Court at his own instance, and the suit was carried on and a decree of nullity pronounced, the plaintiff being lunatic, and therefore incapable of acting herself, and having appeared by guardian from the beginning to the end of the suit. In Parnell v. Parnell (4), a husband, lunatic, was permitted to institute and carry on a suit by his committee or guardian against his wife for a divorce by reason of adultery. And the principle upon which the practice rests was clearly laid down by Lord Stowell. This case is important as shewing conclusively that the insanity of a petitioner or plaintiff is no bar to a suit or a decree for a divorce by reason of adultery; and, inasmuch as adultery may be set up by way of re- crimination as a defence against such petition, it seems to follow that insanity is no bar to such a charge against a lunatic, and that he must defend himself against such charge through his guardian or committee. From what fell from the Court in this case it is also clear that, if necessary, the Court of Chancery might be applied to to appoint a committee, either generally or for a limited purpose, as ad litem, in any suit and in any Court; and in the case now before us the Court has assumed and exercised this power, and it is under the appointment by the (27) 1 Hag. Consist. 6.

Court of the guardian who is now conducting the defence of the respondent that the trial of an issue has taken place, motions have been entertained, and the very order now in question has been made. If the Court had no power to appoint a guardian and proceed with the suit against the respondent by her guardian, notwithstanding her insanity, what authority had it to try that issue, or to entertain this motion, receiving evidence upon oath viva voce or by affidavit; and above all, where was the authority to make the order now in question? All these acts and proceedings must be valid and binding alike on the petitioner and the respondent and the co-respondents, or they are absolutely void; and they cannot be binding if the Court had no power to proceed in the suit during the insanity of the respondent. And if they are void, how could the witnesses upon the trial, or the deponents upon the motion, be indicted for perjury; or how can the act of the guardian in appearing upon this motion, or in opposing or supporting this or any other order, be binding upon the petitioner, or upon the co-respondents, or upon the respondent herself if she should recover? If it be said that the Court being incompetent to proceed with the suit while the respondent is insane, it must of necessity resort to some kind of process and receive evidence before it can be informed or assured of the fact of the insanity, does not this shew that where the purposes of justice require that proceedings in a suit, whatever may be their nature, must be had notwithstanding the insanity of one of the parties, it is of necessity that the Court must permit and entertain these proceedings without the personal participation of the party lunatic, and admit a guardian to appear and act on his or her behalf? If, then, the respondent be well represented by the guardian now before the Court, the question at once arises—is the permanent insanity of the respondent a final bar to the suit? Now, a suit for a dissolution of marriage is the creature of the Act of Parliament, and we must look to the Act itself to see whether an order having this operation and effect is authorized expressly, or by necessary implication, by any of its provisions. I conceive that it is to misapprehend the question to enquire whether the Court has power to go on with the suit notwithstanding the insanity of the respondent, and that the true question is whether the Court has any power to stop the suit except by a final judgment in the cause upon the issues joined, or by default, as expressly directed by the Act, or for nonconformity to some rule or practice lawfully made or established under the authority of the Act. For unless a power is conferred upon the Court by the terms of the Act to bar the suit upon this ground, it has no more jurisdiction to do so than it would have had to entertain the suit and adjudicate upon it if the Act had never been passed. A writ, or process, or the whole proceeding in a suit, may be set aside for irregularity or bad faith; but in such a case the proceeding is not stayed but set aside, and the party complainant may begin de novo, whereas here the power claimed by the Court is at once to put a stop to the suit which bars the right of the complainant for ever. To refuse to proceed in a suit where either party demands that it should be carried on to its natural determination according to law, and by an arbitrary act at once to bar the complainant of a statutory right for ever, appears to me to be a usurpation of authority and a denial of justice; and no instance occurs to me of such an act ever having been done by any Court. Where the proceeding with an action at law is stayed by a perpetual injunction the writ restrains the party only, and does not operate on the suit itself, and the injunction is founded upon some established rule or doctrine of equity which has obtained the force of law. I must, however, except the case of Bawden v. Bawden (2), which is, undoubtedly, an authority in support of the order, and being the decision of a very learned and eminent judge, is entitled to every consideration. But it can scarcely be said that that case was either argued or decided with all the attention which such a question deserved. The respondent was a pauper lunatic in a workhouse, her guardian the overseer of the parish, and the learned judge appears to have proceeded, at least in some measure, upon the authority of a case before Sir Herbert Jenner Fust, which, when examined into, turns out to be no decision at all. But were it otherwise, we, sitting as a court of appeal, are entitled to review that decision, and bound to decide the great question before us upon its own real merits, after bestowing on it the attention and the serious consideration which its high importance demands. Does the statute then confer this power? Does it not in effect prohibit the making of such an order, and render it imperative upon the Court to hear and proceed with the cause? By the 27th section of the statute 20 and 21 Vict., c. 85, "it is made lawful for any husband to present a petition to the Court praying that his marriage may be dissolved on the ground that his wife has, since the celebration thereof, been guilty of adultery." And by section 31, "in case the Court shall be satisfied on the evidence that the case of the petitioner has been proved, then the Court shall pronounce a decree declaring such marriage to be dissolved." Where, then, is the power under this statute to make an order, by reason of the insanity of a party, or for any other cause not declared and specified in the Act, that a suit instituted in strict conformity to its provisions shall not be heard, that the petitioner shall not be permitted to give evidence in support of his petition, and shall be barred of his right, although his case be proved, to a judgment of dissolution of marriage, which right is expressly conferred upon him by this section of the Act of Parliament? I must say that it appears to me that to make such an order would be in effect to insert a clause in the Act which it does not contain, and in some such terms as these:—"Provided always that in case the respondent shall become insane no further proceedings shall be had upon any such petition unless and until such respondent shall recover." The language of the 30th and 31st sections seems to me conclusive against this interpolation of a defence which the Legislature has not thought fit to authorize; for the statute here in plain and express terms enumerates and specifies the several cases in which the petitioner shall be disentitled to the relief sought. By the 30th section, 1, "in case the Court shall not be satisfied that the alleged adultery has been committed;" 2, "or shall find the petitioner accessory to or conniving at the adultery;" 3, "or has condoned the adultery;" 4, "or that the petition is presented or prosecuted in collusion with either respondent," "the Court shall dismiss the petition." Then, by the 31st section, "the Court shall not be bound to pronounce such decree," 1, "if the petitioner has been guilty of adultery;" or 2, "of unreasonable delay in presenting or prosecuting the petition;" or 3, "of cruelty;" or 4, "of desertion without reasonable excuse;" or 5, "of such wilful neglect or misconduct as has conduced to the adultery." What authority has the Court to add to these cases and disregard the express provision before referred to, that if the Court shall be satisfied that the petitioner's case has been proved, and shall not find any of these specified defences, then "the Court shall pronounce a decree declaring such marriage to be dissolved?" I forbear to trace the consequences of such an order as this into a later stage of the suit, except to observe that it might well occur that after evidence taken on both sides and closed, and when the Court, perhaps without a jury, is, to use the language of the Act of Parliament, "satisfied on the evidence that the case of the petitioner has been proved," the respondent might become insane after the case had been so closed, and the Court about to pronounce a decree declaring the marriage to be dissolved. The suit would thus have arrived at that stage at which the words of the statute are imperative that "it shall pronounce the decree;" yet, if such an order can be made, this provision of the statute is absolutely set at naught. It would be well, also, to consider whether, if the Court had pronounced judgment in favour of the respondent and dismissed the suit, and the petitioner within the time allowed by the Act were to appeal, and the respondent then should become insane, the petitioner is also in this case to be barred of the right of appeal conferred upon him by the statute. If the making of this order be to contravene the provisions of the Act of Parliament, no question as to the analogy of a petition for a divorce to other proceedings, civil or criminal, can arise. But if it were necessary to deal with this question of analogy, I must say that I think there is no analogy whatever in a suit of this nature to an indictment for an offence against the criminal law, to which it has been assimilated in argument, and in which the personal presence of the accused, and in a sane state of mind, is indispensable. In a suit like this, there is in the petitioner a right to a reparation for a wrong done, to damages against correspondents, and it may be to property, or to interest in property, real and personal, which might otherwise pass to or continue in the respondent. Upon an indictment there is no such party to the cause, no right to redress for a personal wrong, or to damages, or to any interest in property, or affecting property, involved in the proceeding. The party prosecuting is the Crown, representing the public, and no one is injured in either person or property by the suit being brought to an end without a trial or a judgment. So far is a suit for a divorce from partaking in any degree of the character of a criminal proceeding that, if such a suit had been instituted in any Court Spiritual before the Act establishing the Divorce Court, it could not have been conjoined with proceedings in pœnam of a criminal nature, for adultery. The Court might pronounce sentence of divorce a mensâ et thoro, but had no jurisdiction to inflict any penalty or punishment. And if proceedings of a criminal character had been instituted, it must have been by means of articles, upon the office of the judge promoted, as by indictment at the suit of the Queen in a criminal prosecution at the common law; and then, and then only, in such criminal suit could a sentence by way of penalty or punishment have been pronounced; and the jurisdiction to entertain a suit in pœnam for adultery and pronounce a sentence inflicting punishment is still confined to the Court Spiritual, and is not conferred upon this Court by the Act. This Court, indeed, possesses no criminal jurisdiction at all. It is true that a judgment of dissolution may operate as a punishment, but so, also, may any verdict and judgment in a civil action, whether for a wrong, as a libel or an assault, or to recover landed estate, as in ejectment, or to recover debt or damages in an action of assumpsit or trover. Yet in all or any of these cases insanity is no defence and no bar to the suit, and no ground for a stay of proceedings. It is enough that the defendant has done a wrong, and given a right of action to the plaintiff for any of the causes above enumerated in any such case, although after the wrong done he may become insane, and so incapable of making his defence or instructing an attorney or counsel. A committee or guardian is appointed who conducts the defence, and the plaintiff enforces his legal right and proceeds with the suit to verdict and judgment. Indeed, this doctrine has been carried to its extreme length by Lord Eldon, who awarded a commission of bankruptcy, partaking both of a civil and criminal character, against an insolvent trader who, after committing an act of bankruptcy, had become insane. Again, in an indictment for a criminal offence, a trial cannot be had or begun in the absence of the accused; because he has a right, not by way of procedure, but as parcel of the common law, to be asked whether he is guilty or not guilty, and to plead "not guilty" in his own person, before he can be put upon his trial. In this suit, as in a civil cause for land, or debt, or damages, no such right exists. The Court may dispense with service of the petition, and proceed to trial and judgment in the absence of the respondent. In criminal cases, although the accused may have fled from justice, and his place of abode in a foreign country may be unknown, his personal appearance cannot be dispensed with, and no prosecution against him can be begun, continued, or ended, but in his presence. In these suits again, as in all other civil proceedings, if the respondent or defendant has departed the realm or secreted himself to avoid service of process, the service may be dispensed with and the suit may proceed. Indeed, upon every act, step, and stage of a cause the analogy to a civil suit is perfect, while to an indictment for a criminal offence it altogether fails. It is said that the status of the respondent is affected by the judgment; but so is that of the defendant in an action of ejectment, involving a question of marriage or of legitimacy. It is true that the judgment in such an action is not a judgment in rem; but this really makes no difference. Upon an information in respect of smuggled goods exhibited under the revenue laws, the judgment is a judgment in rem that the goods be forfeited, but the insanity of the defendant would be no bar to such an information. Not only, then, is there no authority that a suit involving the status of one of the parties, or terminating in a judgment in rem, cannot be carried on against a lunatic; but the case before cited of Hancock v. Peaty (18) is a direct authority to the contrary; the judgment in that case being a judgment in rem, putting an end to the status of marriage, and the suit having been carried on from the beginning to the end while one of the parties whose marriage was declared null and void was a lunatic, and appeared throughout by her guardian. But another objection arises as to this order, which appears to me insuperable. We find that in this case two gentlemen are, under the exigency of the 28th section, made co-respondents. We must consider, therefore, how they are affected by this order, and in what condition they are placed. They are charged with acts of adultery with the chief respondent, the wife of the petitioner—a charge, if either of them be married, of a double adultery, and in that case of such a nature that until disproved it may disturb or be fatal to the domestic peace and happiness of the accused and of his wife; or if the petitioner has been the friend of the co-respondent the charge may involve the imputation of the basest treachery or ingratitude. Upon what ground can the Court deprive the co-respondent in such a case of his right to insist that the suit shall proceed to judgment, that he shall be enabled to deny and disprove these charges made against him? It was suggested during the argument that the suit might be continued against the co-respondents only. But this is not so. The petitioner may, under the 33rd section, proceed for damages alone against an alleged adulterer with his wife, and by section 11 of the 21 & 22 Vict. c. 108, the Court may, after the close of the evidence for the petitioner, direct the co-respondent to be dismissed. But neither of these provisions applies to the present case; for here the petitioner has proceeded against the respondent and co-respondents jointly, and had he proceeded against the co-respondents alone the insanity of the wife would not have affected the suit, and no such order as this could have been made. So here the evidence is not closed, or indeed opened; but if it had been closed, it would only have been if the case had failed that the co-respondents could have been dismissed, and the dismissal would have been a proceeding in the suit which this order forbids. There is, therefore, no power in the Act conferred upon the Court either to direct or to permit the cause to proceed against the co-respondents under the circumstances of this case. Indeed, if the petitioner had the power, and were so to proceed, and the wife were afterwards to recover, the adultery might be tried twice over, and with different results; the co-respondents might be convicted of adultery with the wife, and made to pay large damages, and the wife might be acquitted of adultery with the co-respondents. Then, let us look again to section 28. If the insanity of a respondent wife puts an end to the suit, so also must the insanity of a respondent husband against whom a divorce for adultery is sought under section 28. And here a lady may be made a co-respondent, and charged with adultery with another lady's husband. And if this husband become insane, the suit must be stopped and the lady stigmatised as an adulteress, must pass the remainder of her life with this charge hanging over her head, unable to bring her accuser to the proof, and insist upon her acquittal, the petitioner in the meantime averring her guilt, but unable also to bring forward her evidence and substantiate her charge. But, further, it is provided in this clause that "either party may insist on having the contested matter of fact tried by a jury." Such an order as this absolutely repeals this all-important provision of the statute. What power has the Court so to obliterate this portion of the Act of Parliament, and take upon itself to deny alike to the accuser and the accused this great privilege thus conferred upon them by the legislature? Next, how does this order affect the petitioner with respect to the co-respondents? Here there is no claim to damages. But in cases hereafter to be governed by this decision the petitioner may have a just claim, which he seeks to enforce against a co-respondent, to large and exemplary damages. How is he to recover them? How is justice to be done? The action of crim. con. is at an end, and the order expressly forbids any further proceedings in the suit unless the chief respondent shall recover. Can it be that the legislature intended to perpetrate this wrong? Then, as to the costs. The petitioner or the co-respondents may have incurred considerable or absolutely ruinous costs. Is there to be no means of recovering them, even where the facts of the case, entitling the one party or the other to claim them, may be capable of clear and immediate proof? I cannot but think that if the legislature had intended that the Court should have power to make such an order as this, provisions would have been found in the Act for doing justice, as well to the petitioner and to the co-respondents as to the party in whose favour the order is made. Lastly, it has been said that, as by the Act of Parliament the respondent may set up matters recriminatory by way of defence, it would be unjust to allow the petitioner to proceed while the respondent is in such a condition as that she cannot avail herself of the statutory defence. But the same argument might be urged in every civil cause where the defendant has become insane. The answer is that no such incapability exists, for the guardian of the respondent may plead and give evidence in support of the plea of recrimination in like manner as the respondent herself. It is true that a rule has been made, under the authority of the statute, that a plea of recrimination must be verified by affidavit, and it is clear that no affidavit can be made by an insane respondent; and if the necessity for this affidavit had arisen from a provision in the statute it would, no doubt, have presented the argument in a much stronger form. Where, however, the statute requires the petition to be verified by affidavit (sec. 41), the petitioner is to file an affidavit verifying the same, only "so far as he or she is enabled to do so." But if the statute is imperative that the Court shall pronounce for a dissolution of marriage if satisfied upon the evidence that the charge in the petition is established, I conceive that it is not competent to the Court to make an order, the indirect effect of which would be to disable itself to proceed as required by the terms of the statute. And, as before observed, Parnell v. Parnell (4) is an authority that the committee of a lunatic husband may sue for adultery, although the wife might in such a suit plead recrimination by way of defence, thus putting the lunatic husband in the condition of a respondent. It is undoubtedly a great evil that a woman—perhaps an innocent woman—should be made to undergo a trial in a case of this nature while labouring under a state of mind which subjects her, or those who represent her in the suit, to many and great disadvantages in making her defence, and the grievance is but partially mitigated by the consideration that a judge or jury could not fail to have regard to her unhappy condition while dealing with the evidence adduced against her. But whether the evil is so great as to overbalance the wrong done to a husband, who, with possibly conclusive evidence that his wife is an adulteress, finds himself bound to her for a lifetime, by a tie that is indissoluble, and denied for ever the redress that he had been taught to believe an Act of Parliament had secured to him, is a question well worthy the serious consideration of the legislature. But I think that the legislature should have a voice in it, and that it is not for this Court to attempt to settle the question by a law of its own making. To the legislature, therefore, the question should be left; and if, at last, it be its will that a husband is to be thus dealt with, it is to be hoped that the Act to be passed may contain provisions under which something like justice may be done as well to him as to all other parties to the suit.

Upon all these grounds I am of opinion that this order cannot be sustained, that the Court should stay the proceedings from time to time as long as a reasonable hope remains that the respondent may recover, but that when that hope shall have ceased the petitioner should be permitted to proceed with his suit.

The order was then affirmed, and the appeal dismissed with costs.

The Judge Ordinary added that an application to make any formal alteration in the order which would facilitate an appeal to the House of Lords might be made at Chambers.

Attorneys—R. Hunt, agent for Haymes, Hannay & Haymes, for petitioner; Benbow & Saltwell, for respondent; Lake & Co., for Viscount Cole; Baxter, Rose, Norton & Co., for Sir F. Johnstone.

MATRIMONIAL.

1870.

June 28.

YEATMAN v. YEATMAN AND RUMMELL.

Dissolution of Marriage—Discretionary Bar—Desertion by Petitioner—20 & 21 Vict. c. 85. s. 31.

The discretion vested in the Court by s. 31 of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, will almost invariably be exercised by refusing to dissolve a marriage on the ground of the wife's adultery if she has been deserted by the petitioner.

This was a petition for dissolution of marriage on the ground of the wife's adultery.

The respondent denied that she had committed adultery, and also pleaded that before the adultery she had been deserted by the petitioner, and that she had obtained a decree of judicial separation on that ground. The cause was heard by the Judge Ordinary, who reserved his judgment.

The petitioner appeared in person.
Searle, for the respondent.

Our. adv. null.

LOED PENZANCE.—In this case I think that it has been proved that the respondent committed adultery in 1866. The respondent alleged that in a former suit, before the date of the alleged adultery, she had obtained a decree of judicial separation on the ground of the petitioner's desertion. The marriage took place in 1852, and the parties lived together until 1856, in which year the petitioner took the respondent to Germany, and left her there under circumstances which, in the opinion of the Court, constituted desertion. He never afterwards cohabited with her. In 1858 he instituted a suit in this Court to annul the marriage, on the ground that the respondent was insane at the time of its celebration. That suit failed. In 1862, and again in 1867, he instituted suits for dissolution of marriage on the ground of adultery. In each suit the respondent pleaded desertion, and in each case, the evidence failing to prove adultery, the question of desertion was not gone into. In 1867 the respondent petitioned for a judicial separation, on the ground of desertion for two years and upwards, and obtained a decree.

The desertion having taken place in 1856, and the adultery in 1866, I am asked now to exercise the discretion given me by s. 31 of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, and to dissolve the marriage. I think that upon no principle should I be justified in so doing. The 31st section enacts that the Court shall not be bound to pronounce a decree if the petitioner has deserted or wilfully separated himself from the other party to the marriage, before the adultery complained of, without reasonable excuse. The Court hitherto has not usually exercised the discretion vested in it by this section by granting a divorce, and desertion without excuse, when established, ought more especially to induce the Court to refuse a decree, for there is nothing so likely to conduce to adultery as the desertion of a young wife without reasonable excuse, and throwing her upon the world unprotected. In this case I see no excuse for the desertion. The petition must therefore be dismissed with costs.

Petition dismissed, with costs.

Attorney—S. Edwards, for respondent.

PROBATE.
1870.
Feb. 1.

SMITH v. ATKINS.

Probate—Practice—Testamentary Suit—Appeal against Decree—Leave to Appeal against Discharge of Rule for a New Trial
—20 & 21 Vict. c. 77. s. 39.

At the trial of issues in a testamentary suit, the jury found that the residuary clause in the will had been obtained by undue influence, whereupon the Court pronounced for the will exclusive of the residuary clause, but suspended the delivery out of probate in order that an application for a new trial might be made. A rule for a new trial having been discharged, the plaintiff who intended to appeal against the decree asked for leave to appeal against the order discharging the rule:—Held, that no such leave was necessary as the order being interlocutory it would be under appeal on the appeal against the decree.

The plaintiff, as executrix, propounded the will of Eleanor Jane Atkins, which, after a few small bequests, appointed the plaintiff residuary legatee. The defendant, one of the next of kin, pleaded: 1, Undue execution; 2, Incapacity; 3, Undue influence; 4, Fraud; and 5, that the deceased did not know and approve of the contents of the will. At the trial before Lord Penzance by special jury, the defendant obtained leave to amend the pleas by pleading that the residuary clause in the will, instead of the whole will, was obtained by undue influence. The jury found that the residuary clause was obtained by the undue influence of the plaintiff. Thereupon the Court decreed probate of the will without the residuary clause. A rule for a new trial was granted, and was argued before Lord Penzance, Channell, B., and Hannen, J., who discharged it.

The plaintiff, who intended to appeal to the House of Lords against the decree, now applied for leave to appeal against the discharge of the rule.

The Solicitor General (Sir J. D. Coleridge), C. Russell, Searle, and Barclay for the plaintiff.

Ballantine, Serjt., H. James, and Dr. Tristram for the defendant.

Our. adv. vult.

LORD PENZANCE.—An application was made for leave to appeal against the discharge of the rule. I think that leave ought not to be given, for the simple reason that I find, on looking at the section of the statute, that if there is any right of appeal against the discharge of a rule for a new trial, it exists under the terms of the Act as soon as there is an appeal against the final decree of the Court, and there is nothing now to prevent the Court making its final decree. The section is as follows:—"Any person considering himself aggrieved by any final or interlocutory decree or order of the Court of Probate, may appeal therefrom to the House of Lords. Provided always that no appeal from an interlocutory order of the Court of Probate shall be made without leave of the Court of Probate first obtained, but on the hearing of an appeal from any final decree all interlocutory orders complained of shall be considered as under appeal as well as the final decree."

Now on looking at the registrar's minutes of what took place at the trial, I find that this was the order entered: "Whereupon the judge, on the application of counsel for the defendants, by his final decree pronounced for the force and validity of the last will and testament, excepting the residuary clause, of Eleanor Jane Atkins, the deceased in this cause, being the script bearing date July 30th, 1868, now remaining in the registry of this Court, and propounded in this cause on behalf of the plaintiff, the sole executrix therein named. And on the further application of counsel for the defendants, condemned Emma Smith, the plaintiff, in the costs incurred, or to be incurred in this cause, on behalf of the defendants. And the judge directed that the residuary clause be excluded from the probate, and further, that the said probate be not delivered out of the registry before July the 14th instant." So that what the Court did was to pronounce for the force and validity of the will, but in order to enable the plaintiff to move for a new trial it declared further that the probate should not be delivered out of the registry, that the parties might go on in getting the papers in order in the registry. It could not possibly be granted until after the 18th of July, and on that day an application was made to extend the time granted. Then came the rule, and then the argument before the Court, and finally the discharge of the rule. All that remains now for the Court to do is to remove that restriction against delivering out the probate. The Court now orders that that restriction be removed, and that the plaintiff be at liberty, if she be so disposed, to proceed to take out the probate, and if she does not take it out in a fortnight, that the defendant be at liberty to apply to the Court. Of course it is possible that the plaintiff may not desire to take out probate, and it might be contended if she did that she would in some way hamper herself in her appeal, which I do not desire, but at the same time if she does not take probate the defendant ought to be entitled to go on in order to get the estate administered. I will not anticipate what may be said on that question, but I merely say that if the plaintiff does not take probate within a fortnight the defendant may apply to the Court.

With reference to the costs, I see from the shorthand writer's notes that at the trial an application was made to condemn the plaintiff in costs, and the Court acceded to that application. No suggestion was made as to the plaintiff being entitled to any costs, as executrix, for proving the will. Now if she proves the will, independently of any costs she might have personally to pay to the defendant by reason of the order of the Court, she would be entitled, according to the ordinary practice, to take her own costs of proving the will in solemn form out of the estate. That there may be no difficulty or doubt upon that question, I make it part of this order that, on taking probate, the plaintiff be at liberty to take out of the estate her costs of proving the will in solemn form, so that there may be no dispute about the residue, and she will come into Court to prove the will, as the Court ultimately holds that it ought to have stood.

Dr. Spinks, for the plaintiff, submitted that all the costs were incurred by the plaintiff, as executrix, before the defendants put upon the record the plea upon which they succeeded. If that plea had been on the record originally non constat that any costs would have been incurred.

LORD PENZANCE.—The defendants at first pleaded, with other pleas, that the whole will was obtained by undue influence. When the case came on for trial they desired to narrow that issue, and say something less than they had said before, not something more. Instead of saying that the whole will had been obtained by undue influence, they wished to say that only part had been so obtained. That would have been undoubtedly the proper time to object to that being done, on the ground of its influence on the costs. But I think nothing of that, for the Court desires to do what is just in the matter, and therefore if the plaintiff has been put to any further costs, by reason of the issue being so narrowed, undoubtedly she ought to have those costs, and not to have to pay them. But I cannot see that she has. The plea upon which, as narrowed, the defendants ultimately succeeded, appears to me to involve the whole history of the case. The only evidence which became necessary for the decision of the contention upon that plea was evidence which would be necessary in any view of the case. I do not think that any further evidence, or any further costs were cast upon the plaintiff by the alteration in the pleadings. If it can be shewn in detail that any such costs were incurred, application may be made to the Court that they should be allowed out of the estate.

Attorneys—C. Mossop, for plaintiff; F. L. Soames, agent for T. W. T. Cooke, Wokingham, for defendant.

PROBATE. }
1870. } THOMAS V. NURSE AND ANOTHER.
Feb. 22. }

*Probate—Jurisdiction of County Court—
Real Estate—Heir not Cited—20 & 21
Vict. c. 77. ss. 54 and 59.*

*The County Court has no jurisdiction over a probate suit where the deceased died seised or beneficially entitled to real estate of the value of 800*l., although the persons interested in the realty have not been cited.

The defendants propounded the will of Frances Sarah White, late of Bungay, in the county of Suffolk. The plaintiff pleaded the usual pleas, upon which issue was joined.

Witt, on behalf of the defendants, moved the Court to order the issues to be tried by the Court.

Pritchard, for the plaintiff, asked for an order under s. 59 of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77 (1), that they should be tried in the

(1) By s. 59 of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, where in any contentious matter arising out of any application for probate or administration, "it is shewn to the Court of Probate that the state of the property and place of abode of the deceased were such as to give contentious jurisdiction to the judge of a County Court, the Court of Probate may send the cause to such County Court."

Section 54 enacts:—"Where it shall appear by affidavit of the person, or some or one of the persons applying for probate or letters of administration, that the testator or intestate had at the time of his death his fixed place of abode in one of the districts specified in schedule H. to the Act, and that the personal estate in respect of which such probate or letters of administration should be granted under this Act, exclusive of what the deceased shall have been possessed of or entitled to as trustee, and not beneficially, but without deducting anything on account of the debts due and owing from the deceased is under the value of 200*l.*, and that the deceased at the time of his death was not seised or entitled beneficially of or to any real estate, or that the value of the real estate of or to which he was seised or beneficially entitled at the time of his death was under the value of 300*l.*, the judge of the County Court, having jurisdiction in the place in which

County Court for the district of Bungay, held at Beccles, in the county of Suffolk, on an affidavit that the deceased had at the time of her death her fixed abode in the district of Bungay, and that the whole of her estate was under the value of 200*l.*

Witt, contra, relied on an affidavit, which stated that the deceased died seised of freehold property of the value of 340*l.*

Pritchard.—Assuming that the deceased died seised of real estate of that value, that is no ground for not sending the cause to the County Court. The heir-at-law is not cited, and the probate therefore will not affect the real estate. It could not have been intended to oust the jurisdiction of the County Court, where the suit would not affect the realty.

LOED PENZANCE.—The objection cannot be allowed. The terms of the statute are clear. Three things are necessary to confer jurisdiction on the judge of the County Court. First, that the testator or intestate at the time of his death should have his fixed place of abode in one of certain districts. Secondly. That the personal estate should be under the value of 200*l.* Thirdly. That the deceased at the time of his death should not be seised or beneficially entitled to any real estate of the value of 300*l.* or upwards. In this case the two former requisites are complied with, the third is not. The statute does not require that there should be any dispute as to the real estate. I cannot, therefore, send the case to the County Court.

Attorneys—Pritchard & Sons, agents for Hartcup & Son, Bungay.

it shall be sworn that the deceased had, at the time of his death, his fixed place of abode, shall have the contentious jurisdiction of the Court of Probate in respect of questions as to the grant and revocation of probate of this will and letters of administration of the effects of such deceased person in case there be any contention in relation thereto."

MATRIMONIAL.
1870.
July 19, 26. }

SHAW v. THE ATTORNEY GENERAL.

English Marriage—American Divorce and Re-marriage—Domicile.

A marriage celebrated in England between English subjects was dissolved by an American Court on the petition of the wife, on the ground of adultery and desertion. Both parties were at the time resident in the United States, but had not acquired an American domicile. Further, the exact whereabouts of the husband at the date of the institution of the suit in the Court in America not being known, the citation was served on him by advertisement, but no appearance to it was entered on his behalf. The wife re-married in America, and after her return to England filed a petition under the Legitimacy Declaration Act, praying that such second marriage might be declared valid. The Court refused to recognise the decree of divorce pronounced by the American Court, and dismissed the petition for a declaration of the validity of the second marriage.

The petitioner prayed for a decree under the Legitimacy Declaration Act (21 & 22 Vict. c. 93), that her marriage with William Shaw, celebrated on the 22nd of September, 1859, at Rock Island, in the state of Illinois, United States of America, was valid.

The petitioner was born in England, and on the 26th of August, 1851, was lawfully married to William Suthers, at Halifax, in the county of York. They cohabited in this country until 1853, when they went to America. They returned to England in 1855, and cohabited until March, 1856, when Suthers deserted his wife and went back to America. In 1857, the petitioner followed him, but made no attempt to discover him. She lived for six months in the state of Massachusetts, and then went to the state of Iowa, where she lived for upwards of two years, supporting herself as a seamstress. In 1859, while resident in Iowa, she presented a petition to the District Court praying for a dissolution of her marriage with Suthers, on the ground of his adultery coupled with desertion. Suthers never resided in the state of Iowa, and his whereabouts not being known, the citation was served on him by advertisement. No appearance was entered on his behalf. On the 12th of September, 1859, the District Court pronounced a decree dissolving the marriage, and on the 22nd of the same month the petitioner was married to William Shaw, at Rock Island, in the state of Illinois. Mr. and Mrs. Shaw afterwards returned to this country, where Mr. Shaw died, in April, 1869, leaving the petitioner a life interest in his property. Suthers, her first husband, never abandoned his English domicile, and was alive when the petitioner married Shaw.

NEW SERIES, 39.—PROB. AND M.

Mr. De Tracey Gould, an American advocate, proved that by the law of the state of Iowa, the residence of the petitioner for six months in the state was sufficient to found the jurisdiction of the District Court. The decree of divorce was valid according to the law of the state, and would be recognised by the Courts of all the States of America. He also proved that the marriage of the petitioner with William Shaw in the state of Illinois was valid according to the law of the state, and would be recognised in the other states of America.

Dr. Deane (with him Dr. Swaby), for the petitioner.

The Solicitor General (Sir J. D. Coleridge) (with him R. Bourke), for the Attorney General.

Cur. adv. vult.

The following judgment was delivered on the 26th of July:—

LORD PENZANCE. — This is a petition presented by Betty Shaw praying the Court to declare that her marriage with William Shaw, on or about the 22nd of September, 1859, was a valid marriage, under the Legitimacy Declaration Act. This marriage was proved, but it appeared that on August 26th, 1851, she had been married to a man named William Suthers, at Halifax, in the county of York, and the petition goes on to say that this marriage on or about September 12th, 1859, was dissolved by a decree or judgment of the District Court of Scott county in the state of Iowa, in the United States of North America, being a Court of competent jurisdiction thereto, on the ground of the adultery of the said William Suthers, and of his desertion for three years and upwards without reasonable excuse. Then the petition goes on to say that the decree has since the date thereof been and still is of full force and validity, and thereby she was fully divorced from the said William Suthers and ceased to be his lawful wife. The marriage with William Suthers, and the divorce in the state of Iowa, have both been proved, and the question is whether that divorce did or did not dissolve the English marriage in contemplation of English law.

M

The principles upon which this question must be decided have been so recently discussed in several cases in the Court of ultimate appeal that it is not necessary to enter upon the discussion at large on the present occasion. It may be sufficient to observe, firstly, that Lolly's case has never been overruled; secondly, that in no case has a foreign divorce been held to invalidate an English marriage between English subjects where the parties were not domiciled in the country by the tribunals of which the divorce was granted. Whether, if so domiciled, the English Courts would recognise and act upon such a divorce appears to be a question not wholly free from doubt; but the better opinion seems to be that they would do so, if the divorce be for a ground of divorce recognised as such in this country, and the foreign country be not resorted to for the collusive purpose of calling in the aid of its tribunals. To my own mind it is manifestly just and expedient that those who may have permanently taken up their abode in a foreign country, resigning their English domicile, should, in contemplation of English law, be permitted to resort with effect to the tribunal exercising jurisdiction over the new community of which, by their change of domicile, they have become a part, rather than that they should be forced back for relief upon the tribunal of the country they have abandoned. But the inquiry is needless in this case, because it seems to me to be neither just nor expedient that a woman whose domicile is English, and whose husband's domicile is English should, while living separate from him in a foreign State in which he has never up to the time of the divorce set his foot, be permitted to resort to the local tribunal, and, without any notice to her husband, except an advertisement, which he never saw and was never likely to see, obtain a divorce against him behind his back. No case has ever yet decided that a man can, according to the law of this country, be divorced from his wife by the tribunals of a country in which he has never had either domicile or residence. He has never submitted himself, either directly or inferentially, to the jurisdiction of such a Court, and has never by any act of his own laid himself open to be affected by its process, if it ever reaches him. A judgment so obtained has, therefore, in addition to the want of jurisdiction, the incurable vice of being contrary to natural justice, because the proceedings are ex parte and in the absence of the party affected by them. It follows that the marriage upon which the petitioner founds her claim to a decree is invalid, and the petition must be dismissed.

Petition dismissed.

Attorneys—Edwards, Layton & Jaques, agents for Holroyd & Smith, Halifax, for petitioner; Gregory, Rowcliffes & Rawle, for the Attorney General.

MATRIMONIAL.

1870.

Feb. 8.

STERBINI v. STERBINI.

Dissolution of Marriage—Validity of Agreement to withdraw from Suit.

An agreement for good consideration that the petitioner in a suit for dissolution of marriage will withdraw from the suit is binding, if it has not been obtained by fraud or duress.

This was an application for a stay of proceedings in a suit by a wife for dissolution of marriage, on the ground of adultery and cruelty. On the 26th of November, 1869, after the institution of the suit, the petitioner signed the following agreement:—

“November 26th, 1869.

“Mr. A. M. Sterbini.

“Sir,—For the sake of my dear child, and upon the understanding that you bring him to England as soon as health permits, and that I be at liberty to live apart from yourself, and reside in this country, your absence notwithstanding, I hereby undertake to withdraw from the suit commenced against you for divorce; and also that I will not institute any other proceedings in the Divorce Court in respect of your misconduct charged in my petition or otherwise prior to this date, or take any steps to deprive you of the legal custody of our child; but I reserve to myself, without prejudice from this undertaking, full power to continue my suit on all points next Hilary Term, or such after time as I may think fit, should you not fulfil the aforesaid condition, binding on you by this undertaking.

(Signed) "Emma Sterbini."

In December, 1869, the child was brought to England by the respondent, and had since remained under the petitioner's care. The petition was, however, not withdrawn, but stood in the list for hearing at the sittings in Hilary Term, 1870.

Affidavits, the effect of which sufficiently appears in the judgment, were filed in support of and against the application.

Searle, for the respondent, moved the Court to order that further proceedings be stayed. The agreement being simply for a compromise of the suit, and not for a separation, is binding—Rowley v. Rowley (1), Hooper v. Hooper (2). The respondent having complied with the terms of the agreement by bringing the child to England, the petitioner is bound not to proceed further with the suit.

Inderwick.—The agreement to withdraw from the suit would no doubt be binding if it had been fairly obtained and were not one-sided. It was not fairly obtained, because the petitioner was induced to sign it by the grossly exaggerated account which the respondent had given of the child's illness. That led her to fear that unless she consented to withdraw from the suit, she would never see her child again. Further, the agreement is in its terms one-sided. The sole consideration for the surrender of the petitioner's rights under the suit was the promise that the child should be brought to England within no specified time, the respondent reserving the right to take the child again whenever he should think fit. When the agreement was signed by the petitioner, she was without legal assistance, and was in such distress of mind that she hardly knew what she was doing. Such an agreement so obtained ought not to be held binding.

LORD PENZANCE.—The agreement would only be invalidated by fraud or duress. I think there was neither. There is no fraud, because what is suggested about the illness of the child not being genuine is not established. The husband in his letter says the child is ill—the illness may or may not be serious; he does not say it is dying. There is no proof that what he said was not word for word true, and no deception seems to have been practised. As to duress, after reading the affidavit of Mr. Rix, I cannot see that there was any duress. Mr. Rix is, comparatively speaking, a disinterested person, and the Court is inclined to rely more on what he says than on the statements of Mrs. Sterbini. So far from there being any duress, it seems to me that Mrs. Sterbini voluntarily offered to drop the proceedings. The reason why the agreement was put into writing was that Mr. Rix was not satisfied with a mere verbal promise. He told Mrs. Sterbini before she signed the agreement that the child was out of danger, and it is idle to say that she was forced into signing it. Then it is said that the agreement was one-sided, and that Mrs. Sterbini had no legal advice when she signed it. I do not think that the Court can go into that matter. Mrs. Sterbini agreed to stop the litigation on the promise that the child should be brought back. That has been done. The child has been handed over to her, and her husband has agreed that it shall remain with her. I shall dismiss the petition, and shall make an order that the child remain in the wife's custody until further order.

Attorneys—Belfrage & Middleton, for petitioner;
Mr. W. Miller, for respondent.

(1) 3 Sw. & Tr. 347; s. c. 34 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 97; affirmed 35 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 100; s. c. Law Rep. 1 H. of L. 220.

(2) 1 Sw. & Tr. 602; s. c. 30 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Prob. M. & A. 49.

PROBATE. }
1870. } In the goods of J. W. PUDDPHATT.
June 7. }

Will—Execution—Name of Testator below Names of Witnesses—No Evidence as to order in which Parties signed—Probate.

The name of the testator was at the foot of the will, but below the names of the attesting witnesses. Both witnesses were dead, and there was no evidence of the order in which they and the testator signed the will, but a due execution was to be inferred from the attestation clause. The Court decreed probate of the will.

The testator, John Warner Puddephatt, otherwise John Eyles, of Luton, Bedfordshire, tailor, died on the 15th of December, 1858, leaving a will, dated 30th of June, 1857, which concluded thus:—

Signed by the said
John Warner Puddephatt (commonly called John Eyles) in the presence of, and by the direction of the said J. W. Puddephatt, the testator, as his last will and testament, and such signature acknowledged by him in the presence of

Thomas Tomlinson,
John Craker.

John Eyles.

The witnesses were both dead, and no one else could be found who was present at the execution of the will. The handwriting of the testator and of the witnesses respectively was proved.

Searle moved for probate of the will. In the absence of direct evidence, the Court would assume, from the wording of the attestation clause, that the will was properly executed.

The Court decreed probate of the will.

Attorney—T. Sismey, agent for G. Bailey, Luton, for all parties interested.

MATRIMONIAL. }
1870. } ALEXANDRE v. ALEXANDRE
June 10. } (THE QUEEN'S PROCTOR INTERVENING).

Matrimonial Suit—Suppression of Material Facts—23 & 24 Vict. c. 144. s. 7—Intervention of Queen's Proctor—Decree.

The Court will not refuse a petitioner his decrees because of the suppression of material facts, if upon the whole case he should appear entitled to relief.

This was a petition by the husband for a dissolution of marriage on the ground of the wife's adultery. The petition set forth that the marriage was celebrated at Jersey, in January, 1856; that in February, 1858, the respondent refused to live with the petitioner, and that he lost sight of her from 1860 until March, 1868, when they resumed cohabitation; that in the following month (April, 1868) he discovered that in October, 1860, the respondent gave birth to a child of which he was not the father; that between September, 1867, and March, 1868, she had committed adultery with divers men, and lived as a prostitute at Buckingham Place, Southwark; and that he thereupon ceased to live with her, and filed his petition. No appearance was entered on behalf of the respondent. At the hearing, evidence was given in support of the charges alleged in the petition, and the Court granted a decree nisi on the 9th June, 1869.

The Queen's Proctor having obtained leave to intervene, filed pleas in which he alleged (in addition to charges of collusion, connivance, and neglect, upon which no question arose) that the petitioner had suppressed material facts, and condoned the adultery of the respondent. The particulars which accompanied the pleas set forth "that when the petitioner resumed cohabitation with the respondent in the year 1868, he was well aware that she had frequently committed adultery and that she had given birth to an illegitimate child during the separation, and that he condoned such adultery, and that no adultery subsequent to such condoned adultery was alleged in the petition or proved at the hearing." The petitioner joined issue on the pleas.

At the hearing, which took place before the Judge Ordinary, on Friday, June 10, the respondent deposed that, desiring to return to cohabitation, she met her husband by appointment in London in April, 1868. At the interview she confessed that she had given birth to a child in 1860, and asked his forgiveness. He forgave her and took her back, and further consented to have the child live with them. She denied that she had ever led the life of a prostitute, but she admitted that while living at Buckingham Place from September, 1867, until March, 1868, she carried on an adulterous intercourse with a man who visited her, and that she had concealed the character of this intimacy from her husband.

The Attorney General (Sir R. P. Collier) (with him Searle), for the Queen's Proctor, submitted that the pleas of condonation and suppression of material facts had been established, and that the decree nisi should be reversed and the petition dismissed. He referred to 23 & 24 Vict. c. 144. s. 7 (1). G. Browne for the petitioner.

LOED PENZANCE.—I quite agree that the petitioner did fail to bring before the Court most material facts. In his peti-

(1) By section 7 of the 23 & 24 Vict. c. 144, it is enacted: "Every decree for a divorce shall in the first instance be a decree nisi, not to be made absolute till after the expiration of such time, not less than three months from the pronouncing thereof, as the Court shall by general or special order from time to time direct; and during that period any person shall be at liberty, in such manner as the Court shall by general or special order in that behalf from time to time direct, to shew cause why the said decree should not be made absolute by reason of the same having been obtained by collusion, or by reason of material facts not brought before the Court; and, on cause being so shewn, the Court shall deal with the case by making the decree absolute, or by reversing the decree nisi, or by requiring further inquiry, or otherwise as justice may require; and at any time during the progress of the cause, or before the decree is made absolute, any person may give information to her Majesty's Proctor of any matter material to the due decision of the cause, who may thereupon take such steps as the Attorney General may deem necessary or expedient," &c., &c.

tion he charged his wife with adultery on what I may call two separate occasions. The first adultery with which he charged her was an adultery that resulted in the birth of a child; and being aware that after the birth of that child he had taken her back to live with him, in his petition he endeavoured to explain away the circumstance by stating that at the time he resumed the cohabitation he was not aware of the birth of the child. In that way he endeavoured to get rid of the condonation which, according to the facts as they now stand, undoubtedly existed in respect of that adultery. So far, I think, the learned Attorney-General's argument is made out, because it is now clear, assuming what the respondent says to be true, that when he took her back to live with him he knew that while separated from him she had had a child. But there is nothing as it seems to me in the 7th section of the Act (23 & 24 Vict. c. 144) that would justify the Court, upon the mere proof that some material facts had been kept from the knowledge of the Court, in refusing a man his divorce if upon the whole case he is entitled to it. The suppression of a material fact is a sufficient reason to justify a third person or the Queen's Proctor intervening; but where the material fact, whatever it may be, is brought to light and placed before the Court, there is nothing in the seventh section of the Amendment Act which would justify the Court in withholding a decree if, upon the whole case, and supposing the fact to have been brought to light in the first instance, the petitioner should be entitled to it. Therefore the Court has to consider whether upon the whole case there is anything that stands in the way of the decree, treating the facts, as now known, as if they had been brought before the Court in the first instance. As regards the first adultery charged, there would be a perfect answer to the decree, because he condoned it; but there is another portion of his complaint which was established at the trial, and which is not only not disputed now, but is supported by what the witness in the box tells us took place. The eighth paragraph of the petition charges "that your petitioner's said wife, from the month of September in the year 1867, until the month of March, 1868, committed adultery with divers men, to your petitioner unknown, on divers occasions, and lived as a prostitute at 7 Buckingham Place, Southwark." At the trial he proved that charge by the mouth of a policeman, who said that he saw this woman in the streets, and saw her take men home to her house at night on more than one occasion. When in the witness-box she refused to answer categorically as to all that she did while living at Buckingham Place, but with great truth she acknowledged that she had been guilty of adultery there, while denying that she had led the sort of life imputed to her. Substantially, therefore, the charge of adultery at 7, Buckingham Place is proved, in my judgment, and what answer is there to it? It has never been condoned, for the husband never knew of it. When she went back in 1868 she carefully concealed it from him, and was in fact afraid to tell it. She told him of the birth of the child, and very possibly one reason for her doing so was that she was very anxious to have the child come and live with her. But whether that was her reason or not, she admitted having committed herself once and having had a child, and she as certainly kept back from her husband the life that she had led at Buckingham Place. It seems to me, therefore, no one can say that he has ever pardoned it. That being so, I see no answer to the charge, and I ought not to withhold the decree. At the same time I think it was a most proper case for the intervention of the Queen's Proctor.

Decree accordingly.

Attorneys—Hancock, Saunders & Hawksford, for petitioner. Proctor—F. Dyke, the Queen's Proctor.

MATRIMONIAL. }
1870.
March 17. }

HARRIS v. HARRIS AND MILTON.

Identity of Respondent—Evidence of Petitioner as to—Corroboration—Practice.

In an undefended suit for dissolution of marriage, the only evidence as to the identity of the respondent was that of the petitioner himself. The Court refused to act on it without corroboration.

In this case, which was an undefended suit by the husband for dissolution of marriage, the cohabitation between the respondent and co-respondent was proved by the lodging-house keeper in whose house they had lodged, but the only evidence of the respondent's identity was that of the petitioner himself who had seen her at the house.

Searle for the petitioner.

The Court refused to grant a decree until corroborative evidence as to the identity of the respondent was produced.

The hearing was adjourned, and the respondent having been afterwards identified by the petitioner's brother in the presence of the lodging-house keeper, a decree nisi was granted.

Attorneys—Lewis & Lewis, for petitioner.

INDEX

TO THE SUBJECTS OF CASES IN THE COURT OF PROBATE,

AND

THE COURT FOR DIVORCE AND MATRIMONIAL CAUSES.

MICHAELMAS TERM, 1869, TO MICHAELMAS TERM, 1870.

ADMINISTRATION—grant to legatee where executor resident abroad and bankrupt!—Where the executor of a will was bankrupt and resident in Australia, the Court granted letters of administration, with the will annexed, to one of the legatees, but required that before the letters issued, the written consent of the next of kin, and of the persons entitled to the undisposed of residue, should be brought in and filed in the Registry. In the goods of Cooper, 8

— where there is an administrator acting under the Court of Chancery!—An administrator pendente lite, acting under an order of the Court of Chancery, which directed the personal estate of the intestate to be applied in payment of her debts and funeral expenses in a due course of administration, advertised for sale the unrealised portions of the estate, consisting chiefly of personal ornaments and family relics. The estate, exclusive of such articles and things, was insufficient to meet the debts proved and claimed, but plaintiff, in order to prevent the sale, was willing to deposit in the Registry a sum sufficient to cover the deficiency:—The Court, though deeming the offer of the plaintiff a reasonable one, declined to restrain the administrator from proceeding with the sale, and intimated that as a rule it would not interfere with an administrator acting under an order of the Court of Chancery. Tichborne v. Tichborne; and In the goods of Tichborne, 22

— grant to attorney!—When the person entitled to administration is in England, a grant will not be made to his attorney unless the estate consists solely of property held in trust. In the goods of Bullar, 26

— grant de bonis non (with will annexed) to administrator of executor!—Where A died, having appointed B executor of his will, and B proved the will, and died leaving part of the estates unadministered, the Court made a grant de bonis non (with the will annexed) to the administrator of B, the parties entitled in priority being abroad and difficult to be found; but required that security should be given to the amount of their share of the property. In the goods of Hicks, 27

— residuary legatees: vested interest: right to grant de bonis non!—Testator left by his will to his wife a life interest in his real, leasehold, and personal estates, with permission to consume such portion of the personal estate as was consumable by nature. On her death or re-marriage, he gave his real and leasehold estates and such personal estate as then remained unconsumed to his children in equal shares, their executors, administrators and assigns, with a proviso that if all and every his children died before obtaining a vested interest under the will, the property should go in equal shares to his then next and nearest of kin, and the then next and nearest of kin of his wife. Testator's only child survived him, but died in his mother's lifetime and previous to her re-marriage. The wife died leaving part of the estate unadministered:—Held, that the child did not take a vested interest under the will, and administration granted to the next of kin of the testator. Greenhalgh v. Bates, 44

— with will annexed de bonis non, following grant in America to person not entitled by English law!—A died domiciled in America, and by her will appointed B, her father, sole executor and residuary legatee. B died, leaving part of the estate unadministered. On the application of his executors, who were all domiciled in America, administration of the unadministered estate of

A was granted to C by the Court in America. The Court, following the American grant, allowed a grant of administration (with will annexed) of the personal estate of A in this country, to go to C. In the goods of Hill, 52

ADMINISTRATION (continued)—citation to husband to take grant of wife's estate—In an administration suit in Chancery it became necessary for the purposes of the suit, that a personal representative of A, the wife of B, should be appointed. The Court, at the instance of C, who had no direct interest, allowed a citation to issue to B to take administration of his wife's estate, or to shew cause why it should not be granted to C. In the goods of Williams, 48

—pendente lite: no dispute as to appointment of executors—In a testamentary suit in which there was no dispute as to the appointment of the executors, and one of them was willing to act, the Court refused to appoint an administrator pendente lite, unless it could be shewn that there was something requisite to be done in relation to the estate which the executor, before probate, could not do. Mortimer v. Paul, 47

ALIMONY—wife's petition for, pendente lite: practice when no answer—The wife filed her petition for alimony, pendente lite. The husband filed no answer thereto:—Held, that he was not entitled to cross-examine witnesses called in support of the petition. Constable v. Constable, 17

AMENDMENT—wife's petition allowed to be amended by addition of charge of cruelty—On the hearing of her petition for dissolution of marriage, the wife proved the adultery of the husband, but failed to establish the charge of desertion. The Court allowed her subsequently to amend her petition by adding a charge of cruelty, but intimated that strict proof would be required to support it. Parkinson v. Parkinson, 21

—right of respondent to oppose alteration of prayer of petition—The wife petitioned for a dissolution of her marriage, by reason of the husband's adultery and cruelty, and proved both charges. The decree nisi was suspended at her request, and subsequently she asked to be allowed to amend the petition, by substituting a prayer for judicial separation. The respondent opposed the alteration, and alleged that the petitioner herself had been guilty of adultery. The Court granted liberty to respondent to file affidavits in support of the charge; and no affidavits being filed, allowed the petition to be amended as prayed. Mycock v. Mycock, 56

APPEAL—testamentary suit: appeal against decree: leave to appeal against discharge of rule for a new trial—At the trial of issues in a testamentary suit, the jury found that the residuary clause in the will had been obtained by undue influence, whereupon the Court pronounced for the will exclusive of the residuary clause, but suspended the delivery out of probate, in order that an application for a new trial might be made. A rule for a new trial having been discharged, plaintiff, who intended to appeal against the decree, asked for leave to appeal against the order discharging the rule:—Held, that no such leave was necessary, as the order being interlocutory, it would be under appeal on the appeal against the decree. Smith v. Atkins, 78

CHILDREN. See Custody of Children. Settlements.

CODICIL. See Probate.

CONFIRMATION AND PROBATE ACT—additional confirmation sealed in registry—On death of testator, a domiciled Scotchman, his widow filed in the Commissary Court at Jedburgh an inventory of his estate, distinguishing which part was situate in Scotland and which in England, and the value of each, and she was decreed and confirmed executrix dativo to the deceased. The confirmation was sealed in England under the provisions of the Confirmation and Probate Act. Subsequently additional estate was discovered in England. Thereupon the executrix filed a fresh inventory of such estate in the Commissary Court, and obtained an eik or additional confirmation:—The Court ordered the eik to be sealed in the Registry. In the goods of Ryde, 49

COSTS—of heir-at-law intervening: costs of issues found distributively—An heir-at-law, who intervenes in a suit and opposes a will, is entitled to costs if the will is pronounced against. Rayson v. Parton, 20

When issues are found distributively, the party condemned in costs is not liable for costs of issues found in his favour, if separable from the other costs. Ibid.

—shewing cause against decree absolute: power to condemn intervener in costs—The Court has no power to condemn in costs a person who enters an appearance and files affidavits in opposition to a decree nisi being made absolute, and afterwards abandons his opposition. Vivian v. Vivian, 54

COUNTY COURT—jurisdiction of, in testamentary suits. See Probate.

CRUELTY—undue exercise of marital authority—The wife being seriously ill, was advised by her medical attendant to leave home for a time. The husband refused. Having become worse, she left home without his consent, and stayed away some months, which she passed with her relations. On her return home she was deposed by her husband from her natural position as mistress of his house; she was deprived of the use of money entirely; all that she required had to be put down on paper, and her husband provided it if he thought proper. Having refused to tell her husband on one occasion of going into town everywhere that she had been, an interdict was placed on her going out at all; those whom she desired to see were forbidden the house, and she was prohibited from writing any letters unless the husband saw them before they were posted. Under this treatment her health again broke down:—Held, an undue exercise of marital authority, and to constitute legal cruelty. Kelly v. Kelly, 9

CUSTODY OF CHILDREN—jurisdiction—The Court has no power, in suits for restitution of conjugal rights, to make any order as to the custody of the children of the marriage. Chambers v. Chambers, 56

DAMAGES—application of—In a suit by a husband for dissolution of marriage, the Court refused to order any part of the damages assessed to be settled on the wife, but directed them to be applied, first, to the payment of such part of the petitioner's costs as he should not recover from the co-respondent, and subject thereto, to be settled upon the issue of the marriage. Taylor v. Taylor, 23

—co-respondent removing his effects: writ of fi. fa. issued without personal service of the order—In a suit by the husband for dissolution of marriage on the ground of the wife's adultery, damages to the amount of 500*l.* were assessed against the co-respondent. The Court granted a decree nisi, and condemned him in costs. On affidavits, shewing that the co-respondent was removing his effects, and evading service of a peremptory order for payment of the damages, the Court allowed a writ of fi. fa. to issue forthwith, without requiring personal service of the order. Pritchard v. Pritchard, 46

DESERPTION—deed of separation agreed to a year afterwards, and fully executed: wife's right to relief—A husband deserted his wife. A year afterwards, through the intervention of a mutual friend, a deed of separation was agreed to by which the husband covenanted to make the wife an allowance, and charged it upon his reversionary interest in a sum of money. The deed was fully executed, but no part of the allowance paid:—Held, that the wife had bargained away her right to relief, and could not establish the charge of desertion without cause for two years. Nott v. Nott distinguished. Parkinson v. Parkinson, 14

— See Dissolution of Marriage.

DISSOLUTION OF MARRIAGE—unreasonable delay—The marriage took place in 1844. In 1848 the husband was guilty of incestuous adultery, and in 1850 he and the wife separated. Yielding to the entreaties of her mother, the wife abstained from instituting her suit until after her mother's death, which occurred in 1868:—Held, to constitute unreasonable delay, but decree granted on consideration of all the circumstances of the case. Newman v. Newman, 36

NEW SERIES, 39.—PROB. AND M.

—insanity of respondent when cited and subsequently: staying proceedings—In a suit for dissolution of marriage on ground of the wife's adultery, the respondent being at the time of service of the citation, and having since continued, unfit from mental incapacity to answer the petition and duly instruct her attorney, the Judge Ordinary made an order staying further proceedings until the respondent should recover. Upon appeal to the full Court, it was Held, by the Judge Ordinary and Keating, J., that the insanity of the respondent, so long as it should continue, would be a bar to the suit, and therefore that the order ought to be affirmed; but by Kelly, C.B., that the Court had power only to stay the proceedings so long as there might be a reasonable probability that the respondent would recover, and that when her recovery became hopeless, the petitioner ought to be allowed to proceed, and therefore that the order ought to be rescinded. Mordaunt v. Mordaunt, Cole and Johnstone, 57

—discretionary bar: desertion by petitioner—The discretion vested in the Court by s. 31 of 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, will almost invariably be exercised by refusing to dissolve a marriage on the ground of the wife's adultery if she has been deserted by the petitioner. Yeatman v. Yeatman, 77

—validity of agreement to withdraw from suit—An agreement for good consideration that the petitioner in a suit for dissolution of marriage will withdraw from the suit is binding, if it has not been obtained by fraud or duress. Sterbini v. Sterbini, 82

— See Desertion.

DIVORCE—alteration of Settlement. See Settlements.

EVIDENCE—competence of witness to give evidence of his or her adultery: privilege of witness to refuse—The proviso in 32 & 33 Vict. c. 68, s. 3, that "no witness, whether a party to the suit or not, shall be liable to be asked, or bound to answer, any question tending to shew that he or she has been guilty of adultery," does not render inadmissible the evidence of a witness that he or she has committed adultery. The witness may claim the protection of the statute or give the evidence, but a party to the suit cannot object to its admission. Hebbethwaite v. Hebbethwaite, 15 — in proof of person named as executor. See Will.

EXECUTOR. See Will.

INSANITY—of co-respondent. See Dissolution of Marriage.

JUDICIAL SEPARATION—undue exercise of marital authority: moral cruelty—If force, whether physical or moral, is systematically exerted to compel the submission of the wife in such a manner, to such a degree, and during such length of time, as to break down her health and render serious malady imminent, the interference of the law cannot be justly withheld by any Court which affects to have charge of the wife's personal safety. Kelly v. Kelly, 28

N

— See Cruelty.

JURISDICTION. See Costs. Custody of Children.

MARRIAGE—declaration of validity: American divorce and re-marriage: domicile—A marriage celebrated in England between English subjects was dissolved by an American Court on the petition of the wife, on the ground of adultery and desertion. Both parties were at the time resident in the United States, but had not acquired an American domicile. Further, the exact whereabouts of the husband at the date of the institution of the suit in the Court in America not being known, the citation was served on him by advertisement. No appearance to it was entered on his behalf, nor did it appear that he even saw the advertisement. The wife re-married in America, and after her return to England filed a petition under the Legitimacy Declaration Act, praying that such second marriage might be declared valid. The Court refused to recognise the decree of divorce pronounced by the American Court and dismissed the petition for a declaration of the validity of the second marriage. Shaw v. The Attorney General, 81

MATRIMONIAL SUIT—suppression of material facts—The Court will not refuse a petitioner his decree because of the suppression of material facts, if upon the whole case he should appear entitled to relief. Alexandre v. Alexandre (Queen's Proctor Intervening), 84

PRACTICE—uncorroborated evidence of petitioner as to identity of respondent—In an undefended suit for dissolution of marriage, the only evidence as to the identity of the respondent was that of the petitioner himself. The Court refused to act on it without corroboration. Harris v. Harris, 86

— discretionary bar. See Dissolution of Marriage.

— staying proceedings on ground of insanity. See Dissolution of Marriage.

— See Alimony. Appeal. County Court. Matrimonial suit. Staying Proceedings.

PROBATE—paper simply revoking a will—An instrument which disposes of no property, but simply declares an intention to revoke a previous will, is not a will or codicil, and is therefore not entitled to probate. In the goods of Fraser, 20 — of codicil where will not forthcoming—Where testator made a codicil to his will and gave it to his son to keep, and on his death the will was not forthcoming, the codicil not having been revoked by any of the modes indicated in the statute, was admitted to proof. Black v. Jobling affirmed. In the goods of Savage, 25

— proof of revocation by later will—Testator made a will in 1831. A few years before his death in 1863, he produced to two acquaintances a paper dated 4th June, 1847, which he alleged to be his will, and got one of them to make a copy of it. This paper was in substance the same as the will of 1831. It had the name of the deceased and the names of two attesting witnesses at the bottom of it, but neither of the persons to whom it was shewn could speak to any of the signatures. The copy which the deceased signed in their presence was forthcoming, but the original document could not be found. The Court held that there was no evidence of its existence as a will, and granted probate of the will of 1831. In the goods of Gray, 42 — of codicil beginning "I hereby make a free gift to A.B.," &c.—Testator, shortly before his death, executed a paper which began, "I hereby make a free gift to A.B. of," &c. The Court being satisfied that he intended the operation of the paper to be dependent on his death, granted probate of it as a codicil to his will. Robertson v. Smith, 41

— of copy will and codicil where original will in India—The testator made his will in India and deposited it with a bank at Calcutta. While temporarily resident in Scotland he executed a codicil, in which he referred in distinct terms to a copy of the will. This copy he produced to the witnesses at the time he executed the codicil, and he deposited both papers in the hands of his executor.—Held, that the copy was incorporated by the codicil, and probate of copy-will and codicil granted, without production of original will. In the goods of Mercer, 43

— codicil by mistake referring to first of two wills—Testator executed a will on February 13th, 1864, and another on June 24th, 1865, revoking all former wills. He afterwards executed a codicil which purported to be a codicil to his will dated February 13th, 1864, and after devising some property, confirmed his said will. The solicitor who prepared the codicil had inserted the date of the first will under the supposition that it was the last will. There was nothing in the codicil which shewed an intention to revive the first will.—Held, that the second will and codicil were entitled to probate. In the goods of Anderson, 55

— two wills, one limited to property in England, the other to property in Tasmania: separate executors—The testator died leaving two wills—one limited to property in England, the other to property in Tasmania, and he appointed different executors in each. The Court granted probate of both papers as together constituting the will of the deceased, to the executors named in the English will. In the goods of Harris, 48

— jurisdiction of County Court: real estate: heir not cited—The County Court has no jurisdiction over a probate suit where the deceased died seised or beneficially entitled to real estate of the value of 300*l.*, although the persons interested in the reality have not been cited. Thomas v. Nurse, 80

— See Confirmation and Probate Act. Will.

RESTITUTION OF CONJUGAL RIGHTS—husband's suit for: unfounded charges in wife's answer: costs of suit—The husband filed a petition for restitution of conjugal rights. The wife, in her answer, charged him with cruelty of a gross and indecent kind, but at the hearing her counsel admitted that she had no case. The wife had a separate income of 760*l.* per annum. She had induced her husband to give up his practice as a surgeon in the country, and had put him to expense by the unfounded charges in her answer:—The Court, under these circumstances, condemned her in the costs of the suit. Miller v. Miller, 4 — substituted service of order: order not obeyed: sequestration against wife's separate estate—In a suit by the husband for restitution of conjugal rights, a decree was made that the wife should return to cohabitation. The wife was abroad; her address was kept secret by her friends, and personal service of the decree could not be effected. Substituted service on her attorney was in consequence allowed, and the decree remaining unobeyed, the Court, without requiring a previous writ of attachment to issue, granted a writ of sequestration against the wife's separate estate, for the purpose of enforcing obedience to its order. Miller v. Miller, 38

— See Custody of Children.

SEQUESTRATION—to enforce obedience to decree. See Restitution of Conjugal Rights.

SERVICE. See Restitution of Conjugal Rights.

SETTLEMENTS—total income allotted to maintenance of children—On the marriage of the parties, the father of the respondent (the wife) brought into settlement a sum of 3,000*l.*, in which the first life-interest was given to the respondent. Her conduct was bad, and after her marriage with the petitioner had been dissolved, she intermarried with the co-respondent, an officer in the army. The Court ordered the total income derived from the fund in settlement to be applied, during the lifetime of respondent, to the maintenance of the three children of the marriage. St. Paul v. St. Paul, 50

— covenant by father of petitioner to pay respondent an annual sum on petitioner's death—On the marriage of the parties, the father of the petitioner covenanted to pay to the respondent the annual sum of 100*l.* after the death of the petitioner. The marriage was dissolved by reason of the respondent's adultery. The Court ordered that the money should be applied for the benefit of the child of the marriage, but held that it had no power to deprive the respondent of her right under the covenant on the death of the child. Sykes v. Sykes, 52

STAYING PROCEEDINGS—non-payment of costs in former suit—Non-payment of the costs of a suit for dissolution of marriage, in which the husband, the petitioner, has failed, is not a ground for staying proceedings in a suit by him for dissolution on the ground of fresh adultery. Yeatman v. Yeatman, 37 — on account of respondent's insanity. See Dissolution of Marriage.

WILL—execution: signature not seen by witnesses: acknowledgement—A asked B to witness his will. He subsequently asked C if he would sign a paper (not mentioning its character) for him, and said he should wish B to be also present at the same time. A few weeks after they met by appointment. A produced a paper from his pocket and (alluding to the death of his wife) observed,—"They were aware that there had been a change in his circumstances which involved an alteration in his affairs." He then so folded the paper that they could not see his signature or any other writing upon it, but they believed that they were signing his will:—Held, that the circumstances warranted the presumption that the signature of the testator was on the paper when the witnesses signed, and that there was a sufficient acknowledgment of it. Beckett v. Howe, 1 — A asked B, in presence of C, to witness her will, which lay open on the table. B signed the will, but did not observe A's signature. B then handed the pen to C, but did not see him sign his name. The will was prepared by C. The attestation clause stated that it was signed by the witnesses in the presence of each other, and C had also prepared other wills:—Held, a good execution; the circumstances warranting the presumption that A's signature was on the paper when B signed, and that C, who was aware of the requirements of a will, signed before B left the room. Olver v. Johns, 7 — effect of reference to "written directions affixed to will:" where none affixed—A executed, in 1866, a will which referred to written directions, which he intended to form part of the will. This paper, which began, "To my executors,—I have written the following directions for your guidance with respect to many things and goods not mentioned in my will, which said will very probably will be found at William Weedon's, Esq., solicitor," was further subsequently executed by him according to the provisions of the Wills Act. In 1868 he executed a second will, which revoked all previous wills, and contained the following clause: "All my books, pictures, sketches, guns, rods, goods and chattels in and about the rooms I shall occupy at the time of my decease, I wish my executors to dispose of faithfully and conscientiously according to the written directions left by me, and affixed to this my will, trusting, as I unhesitatingly do, in their honour and integrity." Nothing was affixed to the will, which remained in the possession of Mr. Weedon, the solicitor who prepared it, and the only paper of written directions forthcoming was that which the testator intended to form part of the will of 1866:—Held, that it was not incorporated by the reference in the will of 1868, and that as an executed testamentary paper it was revoked by such will. In the goods of Gill, 5

WILL (continued)—test of will being contingent—

A test for ascertaining whether a will is contingent is the question whether the disposition of property is dependant upon the happening of some event or calamity referred to in the will, or whether the imminence of such event or calamity is merely a reason for making the will. In the former case the will is contingent; in the latter it is not. In the goods of Porter, 12

—appointment of executor: parol evidence as to persons named—Testator appointed his "said nephew, Joseph Grant, executor" of his will. His wife's nephew of that name had resided with him for many years, and managed his business. There was also living a nephew (a brother's son) of the like name. Both claimed probate of the will:—Held, that parol evidence was admissible to shew the relation and circumstances in which the respective parties stood to the testator, and the sense in which he habitually used the word "nephew," when referring to his wife's nephew. And the evidence shewing that the wife's nephew was the person meant, probate of the will was decreed to him accordingly. Grant v. Grant, 17

—attestation: name of witness written by another—An attesting witness must himself subscribe the will. It is not essential that a witness should sign his own name, provided it is clear that his subscription is intended as an act of attestation. In the goods of Duggins, 24

The name of A, an attesting witness to a will, was at his request subscribed by B, who was himself present at the execution:—Held, that as A had not subscribed, and B's subscription was not intended as an act of attestation, the will was not duly executed. Ibid.

—residue: money resulting from "sale of effects"—Testator, in addition to specific bequests, gave to A, the only legatee named in the will, "also any money that may result from the sale of my effects after paying the few small debts that I owe":—Held, not to carry the residue. In the goods of O'Loughlin, 53

—ambiguity: error as to Christian name of executor—Testator by his will appointed "Francis Courtenay Thorpe, of Hampton, gentleman," one of his executors. The only person answering the description was a youth of twelve, the son of Francis Corbet Thorpe, of Hampton, gentleman, who, previous to the execution of the will, had been asked by the testator and consented to be one of his executors and trustees:—Held, that there was no ambiguity to entitle the Court to enquire into the intention of the testator so as to ascertain which of the two—the father or son—he meant to be executor. In the goods of Peel, 36

—execution: name of testator below names of witnesses—The name of the testator was at the foot of the will, but below the names of the attesting witnesses. Both witnesses were dead, and there was no evidence of the order in which they and the testator signed the will, but a due execution was to be inferred from the attestation clause. The Court decreed probate of the will. In the goods of Puddephatt, 84

— See Probate.

ERRATUM.

The paragraph in the report of Mycock v. Mycock, page 56, beginning, "Dr. Spinks (on June 14) renewed the application," &c., should run thus:—

Dr. Spinks (on June 14) renewed the application for an alteration of the prayer of the petition.

Dr. Swabey, for the respondent, questioned whether the Court had power to do so, and referred to the 31st section of the Divorce Act.

TABLE OF CASES.

Alexandre v. Alexandre, 84
Anderson, in the goods of, 55

Beckett v. Howe, 1
Bullar, in the goods of, 26

Chambers v. Chambers, 56
Constable v. Constable, 17
Cooper, in the goods of, 8

Duggins, in the goods of, 24

Fraser, in the goods of, 20

Gill, in the goods of, 5
Grant v. Grant, 17
Gray, in the goods of, 42
Greenhalgh v. Bates, 44

Harris v. Harris, 86
— in the goods of, 48
Hebblethwaite v. Hebblethwaite, 15
Hicks, in the goods of, 27
Hill, in the goods of, 52

Kelly v. Kelly, 9, 28

Mercer, in the goods of, 43
Miller v. Miller, 4, 38
Mordaunt v. Mordaunt, 57
Mortimer v. Paull, 47
Mycock v. Mycock, 56

Newman v. Newman, 36

O'Loughlin, in the goods of, 53
Olver v. Johns, 7

Parkinson v. Parkinson, 14, 21
Peel, in the goods of, 36
Porter, in the goods of, 12
Pritchard v. Pritchard, 46
Puddephatt, in the goods of, 84

Rayson v. Parton, 20
Robertson v. Smith, 41
Ryde, in the goods of, 49

Savage, in the goods of, 25
Shaw v. Attorney General, 81
Smith v. Atkins, 78
St. Paul v. St. Paul, 50
Sterbini v. Sterbini, 82
Sykes v. Sykes, 52

Taylor v. Taylor, 23
Thomas v. Nurse, 80
Titchbourne, in the goods of, 22
— v. Titchbourne, 22

Vivian v. Vivian, 54

Williams, in the goods of, 48

Yeatman v. Yeatman, 37, 77

PRINTED BY SPOTTISWOODE & Co.

New-street Square ; 29 Chancery Lane ; 30 Parliament Street ; 38 Royal Exchange.

THE
LAW JOURNAL REPORTS

FOR THE YEAR 1870:

CASES

DECIDED BY THE
JUDICIAL COMMITTEE AND THE LORDS OF
Her Majesty's Privy Council,

REPORTED BY

• EDWARD BULLOCK, ESQ. BARRISTER-AT-LAW.

[THE CASES ON APPEAL FROM THE ADMIRALTY AND ECCLESIASTICAL COURTS ARE PUBLISHED WITH THE CASES OF THOSE COURTS RESPECTIVELY.]

MICHAELMAS TERM, 1869, TO MICHAELMAS TERM, 1870.

PRIVY COUNCIL.
NEW SERIES, VOL. XXXIX.

LONDON:
PRINTED BY SPOTTISWOODE AND CO. NEW-STREET SQUARE.
PUBLISHED BY EDWARD BRET INCE, 5, QUALITY COURT, CHANCERY LANE.

MDCCCLXX.

CASES ARGUED AND DETERMINED

IN THE

JUDICIAL COMMITTEE AND THE LORDS OF

Her Majesty's Privy Council.

COMMENCING WITH

MICHAELMAS TERM, 33 VICTORIÆ.

1869.
Dec. 10,
11, 18.

CURRIE AND COMPANY, appellants v. THE BOMBAY NATIVE INSURANCE COM-PANY, respondents.*

Marine Insurance—Constructive total loss —Notice of Abandonment; Form of—Insurable interest—Disbursements.

It is not necessary to use the word "abandon" in a notice of abandonment; any equivalent expressions which inform the underwriters that it is the intention of the assured to give up to them the property insured on the ground of its having been totally lost is sufficient.

The assured must not delay to give notice of abandonment, but sufficient time must be allowed to enable the assured to exercise their judgment whether the circumstances entitle them to abandon.

Advances made by the charterer to the master at the port of loading to be repaid by deductions out of freight, give the charterer an insurable interest in a policy on disbursements.

The appellants chartered a vessel for a voyage, and insured the cargo against total loss. In the course of the voyage the vessel went aground, became hogged, and sustained other injuries, and surveyors recommended her to be stripped with dispatch, and steps taken to save the cargo, but no attempt was made to do so; and after several days the master, fearing bad weather, sold the vessel and cargo for the benefit of all concerned.

* Present—Lord Chelmsford, Sir J. Colville, and Sir J. Napier.

NEW SERIES, 39.—PRIV. COUN.

The vessel remained for some days in the same state, and the weather proving fine, the purchasers saved a large part of the cargo:—Held, that the appellants were not entitled to treat the cargo as having been totally lost.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Recorder of Rangoon.

The suit in the Court below was brought by the appellants who carried on business as merchants at Moulmein, against the respondents, to recover the several sums of 38,400 rupees and 1,600 rupees, as a total loss upon two policies of insurance effected by them with the respondents, upon the "cargo" and "disbursements," respectively, of the ship Northland, upon a voyage from Moulmein to Madras.

The policies were against total loss only.

A cargo of teak and other timber was loaded on board the Northland at Moulmein, and on the 2nd of June, 1867, she set sail on her voyage with the cargo on board. The appellants had also made disbursements on the said ship, within the meaning of the policy on "disbursements."

The Northland started on her said voyage from Moulmein to Madras, and proceeded in tow to a place called Halfway Creek, where she anchored on account of the state of the tide. About half-an-hour afterwards she was found to be driving, and a second anchor was let go, which brought her up; but, as the tide fell, she grounded. The master and crew endeavoured, but unsuccessfully, to get her off. On the following morning the vessel was found to have sustained considerable damage. The captain remained with the vessel until the 4th of June, endeavouring to save her, when he returned to Moulmein with the passengers, and applied for assistance, and for cargo boats to save what he could. The captain took back with him surveyors, who surveyed the ship, and recommended him to strip the ship and save what he could, which he proceeded to do, and this continued until the 10th of June; on which day the captain came up to Moulmein again, and on the 11th of June had an interview with the agent of the respondents. The captain then ordered a second survey by the same surveyors, who sent in a second report, which was as follows:—"We find the ship lying on the sands near Halfway Creek, in 13 feet low water, fore and aft, and amidships in about 5 feet. The ship is hogged to a fearful extent, and broken amidships, the water flowing and ebbing in and out and through her as the tide rises and falls, and the low parts under water at high tide. The ship is stripped to a gantling and all her stores landed. We are of opinion that it would be impossible to save the cargo, which consists of padouk and teak, without cutting the ship's decks and beams, on account of the logs of timber being so severely jammed, and which is caused by the vessel being so hogged and out of shape."

B

On receiving this report the captain advertised the ship and cargo for sale, for the benefit of all concerned.

Prior to the receipt of the second report of the surveyors (on the 10th of June), the appellants, by letter, gave notice to the respondents' agent, that the Northland was a total wreck, and that they claimed payment on their policies. Some of the cargo was subsequently saved by reason of a succession of weather unusually fine for that season of the year; but the ship soon became a perfect wreck, and she with the rest of the cargo was lost.

The case was heard, and on the 23rd of March, 1868, when the Recorder delivered judgment, holding that there was not a total loss, actual or constructive, of the cargo and disbursements, or either of them, within the terms of the policies; and he dismissed the case with costs.

From this judgment the present appeal was brought.

Sir R. Palmer and Grantham for the appellants.—The ship and cargo were sold by the captain for the benefit of all parties. There was a total loss of the subject matter insured. The appellants are entitled to recover the amounts insured under the respective policies. There was, at all events, a constructive total loss. Such constructive total loss was one of the contingencies insured against by the policies. The letter of the 10th of June was a sufficient notice of abandonment. No precise form is necessary for a notice of abandonment. The assured must be allowed a reasonable time to consider whether the subject matter assured is constructively lost. The payments by the appellants to the captain for disbursements were moneys paid on behalf of the captain and owners of the ship, and not payments made on account of cargo or freight. The right to recover them did not depend on whether the freight could have been earned or not. (They referred to Read v. Bonham (1), King v. Walker (2), Gernon v. Royal Exchange Insurance Company (3), Farnworth v. Hyde (4), Cambridge v. Anderton (5), Kidston v. Empire Marine Insurance Company (6), Arnould on Marine Insurance, vol. 2, p. 582.)

The Solicitor General (Sir J. D. Coleridge), and Walkin Williams for the respondents.—The judgment of the Court below was right. The policies covered total loss only. This was not the case of a claim for a total loss; it was at most a claim for a constructive total loss. The goods were actually in existence, and it might have turned out that the goods could ultimately be forwarded to their destination. Even if

(1) 3 B. & B. 147.

(2) 3 Hurl. & C. 209; s.c. 33 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Exch. 325.

(3) 6 Taunt. 383.

(4) 36 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 33.

(5) 2 B. & C. 691.

(6) 36 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 156.

the assured were entitled to treat the subject of insurance as a constructive total loss the notice of abandonment was not given in sufficient time. The assured must not delay to give notice of abandonment, but here there was delay. (They referred to Hall v. Janson (7), Flint v. Fleming (8), Shipton v. Thornton (9), Moss v. Smith (10), and Parsons on Maritime Insurance.)

Sir R. Palmer in reply.

Our. adv. vult.

The judgment of their Lordships was delivered on the 18th of December, by—

LORD CHELMSFORD.—This is an appeal from the judgment of the Recorder of Rangoon, dismissing the suit of the appellants, brought to recover the amount of two policies of insurance effected by them with the respondents upon the "cargo" and "disbursements" respectively of the ship Northland, upon a voyage from Moulmein to Madras.

The policies, which were dated 1st June, 1867, were against total loss only.

The Northland, with a cargo consisting partly of teak and partly of Padouk and other timber (of great specific gravity), set sail from Moulmein on the insured voyage to Madras, on the 2nd June, 1867. She proceeded in charge of a pilot down the Moulmein River, in tow of a tug steamer, and came to an anchor about half-past five in the evening of that day.

In consequence of the strength of the tide, the Northland dragged her anchors and went aground, about 9 o'clock. Endeavours were made during the night to get her off, but without success; and in the morning, the tide having left her, she was found (in the language of the pilot and the captain), "broken," or "almost broken in two." And the captain added, "if there had been any means by which she could then have been got into deep water she would most probably have gone down."

The captain procured a survey of the ship, and on the 6th June, three surveyors reported that they found her lying ashore on the sands perfectly upright, but hogged to the extent of four feet; and, after describing particularly other injuries which she had sustained, they concluded their report in these terms: "In consequence of the vessel being loaded with a cargo of Padouk and teak timber, we would recommend that she be stripped and dismantled with all despatch, and steps taken to save as much of the cargo and stores as possible for the benefit of all concerned." The underwriters had a survey made on their behalf by a Mr. Peche, upon whose evidence in other respects their Lordships are not disposed to lay any stress, but upon this occasion he substantially agreed with the other surveyors, and reported as follows: "Her hull is so seriously injured that I recommend prompt and decisive steps be taken to dismantle and discharge for the benefit of all interested."

The captain, in accordance with the recommendation of the surveyors, proceeded to dismantle the vessel, and "sent down spars and sails, and everything above water, which they could move." This work of dismantling continued until the 10th of June, the day on which a notice of abandonment was given, but nothing was done or attempted towards discharging the cargo, which, according to the evidence of Mr. Dodd, one of the surveyors, by employing extra hands, might have gone on simultaneously with the work of dismantling the vessel. The grounds upon which the captain thought it would be useless to attempt to get out the cargo were stated by him to be that, "at the time the vessel was aground, the weather was nasty and squally up to the 10th or 11th of June; that at that time of the year bad and heavy weather is to be expected; that he didn't think he could have got out a single log of the cargo without destroying the ship by cutting her open; that if the ports (meaning the openings through which the timber was shipped, and under ordinary circumstances would have been taken out of the vessel) had been opened, she would have filled with sand; and that if he had attempted to get at the cargo by cutting

(7) 4 E. & B. 400; s.c. 24 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 97.

(8) 1 B. & Ad. 45; s.c. 8 Law J. Rep. K.B. 350.

(9) 9 Ad. & E. 314; s.c. 8 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 73.

(10) 9 Com. B. Rep. 24; s.c. 19 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) C.P. 225.

the ship, with the weather such as it was at the time, he didn't think he should have saved any of the ship or cargo." There is some contradictory evidence as to the state of the weather between the 6th and the 10th or 11th of June. The pilot, without specifying the exact time to which he was speaking, said, "The weather was very dirty, blowing hard with rain. There was a heavy sea on at high water. At low water it was smooth enough." The notarial protest made by the captain, however, does not state that there was any stormy weather between the time of the vessel grounding and the 10th or 11th of June. His description of the weather on each day is:—"Thursday, 6th June, commenced with light cloudy weather and variable winds." He gives no account of the state of the weather on the 7th June. On the 8th June he describes it as "squally weather and rain." But on Sunday, the 9th June, this is his description: "Throughout these twenty-four hours fine clear weather and moderate breeze from S.W." On Monday, the 10th June, he states it to have been "fine all day, clear weather, and very hot." And on Tuesday, the 11th of June, that the "first and middle part was fine clear weather and very hot, with fine S.W. breeze." This protest of the captain tends strongly to confirm the evidence of the witness Bodeker, who is the agent of the respondent, and who swore that "there had been unusually fine weather for some time before the second survey."

With respect to the reason given by the captain for not making any effort to save the cargo—that none of it could be got out without cutting the ship open, this was not the opinion of the surveyors at the time of the first survey, but on the contrary, they recommend "steps to be taken to save as much of the cargo as possible." And at the trial, Mr. Dodd, the Government Surveyor, said, "On the second occasion on which I visited the ship I did not think it was possible to save the cargo without cutting the ship." And, "When I saw the Northland first I think she could have partly discharged her cargo and come up to Moulmein." Another of the surveyors, Mr. Carruthers, said, "It was on the second survey that I came to the conclusion that the cargo could not be got out except by cutting the ship's decks."

Before this second survey was made, and while it was the opinion of the surveyors that steps ought to be taken to save the cargo, the assured, the appellants, on the 10th June, 1867, wrote to the underwriters in these terms: "With regard to the Northland, we regret to say that she is a total wreck, and we have hereby to give you notice that we shall claim payment of the policies we hold against her cargo and disbursements."

On the following day, the 11th June, another survey took place by the same three surveyors who had made the former one, and they reported as follows: "The ship is hogged to a fearful extent, and broken amidship, the water flowing and ebbing in and out and through her as the tide rises and falls, and the bow ports under water at high tide. We are of opinion it would be impossible to save the cargo, which consists of Padouk and teak, without cutting the ship's decks and beams, on account of the logs of timber being so severely jammed, which is caused by the vessel being so fearfully hogged and out of shape."

After this second survey the captain, on the 14th June, advertised for sale by public auction the wreck of the British ship Northland, together with her cargo of timber, in one lot, and on the following day the ship and cargo were sold for the sum of 13,000 rupees. The purchasers immediately after the sale proceeded to discharge the timber, and succeeded in obtaining all of it except sixty logs. There were two timber ports at the side and one on the deck. These were opened, and the timber was got up through the hatchway and out of the ports, but the greater part was lifted through the hatchway. The person employed by the purchasers to discharge the cargo stated in his evidence that the vessel remained in the same position all the time they were discharging, and that they found no difficulty whatever in getting it out. They worked for thirty-five days uninterruptedly, but on the thirty-sixth day there was a strong wind, and the vessel became a wreck, and thereupon they ceased working and left her. Under ordinary circumstances the cargo could have been discharged in twenty-one days. Upon this evidence the Recorder was of opinion that there was no total loss, actual or constructive, within the terms of either of the two policies, and that even if the assured had a right to abandon, there was no sufficient notice of abandonment.

Upon the argument before their Lordships, the Solicitor General, for the respondents, very properly admitted that the notice of abandonment was in its terms sufficient. The case upon which the Recorder founded his judgment of the insufficiency of the notice was a nisi prius case of Parmeter v. Todhunter (11), in which there having been a verbal notice that the ship insured had been captured, recaptured, and carried into Grenada, and that the underwriters were required to settle as for a total loss, and to give directions as to the disposition of the ship and cargo, Lord Ellenborough said "the abandonment must be express and direct, and I think the word 'abandon' should be used to render it effectual." But whatever strictness of construction may have been applied to notices of abandonment in former times, it never could have been absolutely necessary to use the technical word "abandon;" any equivalent expressions which informed the underwriters that it was the intention of the assured to give up to them the property insured upon the ground of its having been totally lost, must always have been sufficient. There can be no doubt that the letter of the 10th of June from the assured to the underwriters was a sufficient intimation of the intention of the assured to divest themselves of the property in the Northland, and to vest it in the underwriters, subject, of course, to the question of their right to abandon, upon the ground of either an actual or a constructive total loss.

The respondents confined their answer to the appellants' case to the denial of there having been a total loss of the cargo, and to the objection that, if there were a total loss, the notice of abandonment was not given within a reasonable time.

What is a reasonable time in a case of this description must depend upon the particular circumstances of each case. On the one hand, the assured is not to delay his notice when a total loss occurs, in order to take his chance of doing better for himself by keeping the subject insured, and then when he finds it will be more to his advantage to do so, throwing the burthen upon the underwriters, while, on the other, the underwriters cannot complain of a suspense of judgment fairly exercised on the part of the assured, to enable him to determine whether the circumstances are such as entitle him to abandon.

In the present case, assuming the loss to be a total one, there appears to have been no unreasonable delay in giving the notice of abandonment. At the time of the first survey on the 6th of June, there was no reason for supposing that the timber would be totally lost. The surveyors at this time recommended steps to be taken which they must have supposed would have been effectual to save some, at least, of the cargo. But at the time when the notice was given (as sufficiently appears by the surveyors' report of the following day), things had assumed a much more serious appearance, so as to justify the apprehension that the cargo would be entirely lost. Whether the vessel was brought into the condition described in the second survey, suddenly, or gradually between the 6th and the 10th of June is not in evidence, but in either case their Lordships think that there was no unreasonable delay in giving the notice of abandonment, and that supposing there was a total loss of the subject insured it would entitle the appellants to recover the amount of the policies.

We arrive then at the question whether there was a total loss under the policies? And here we must distinguish between the policy on the timber, and that upon the disbursements, as different considerations are applicable to them. Taking first the policy on the timber, does the evidence shew that the assured were entitled to treat the case as one of total loss? It cannot be contended that at the time of the first survey the timber, or at all events some part of it, could not have been saved; and if part might have been saved the loss, of course, could be only partial. The surveyors were all of opinion that endeavours should be made to get the timber out of the ship, and at the first survey they did not think it would have been necessary to cut the decks to effect this object. It was the duty of the assured, or of the captain of the Northland (to whom everything appears to have been left), to take some steps in accordance with the recommendation of the surveyors to try and save the cargo. But towards this object the captain literally did nothing. As far as dismantling the ship went he acted upon the report of the surveyors, and continued this particular work down to the 10th of June, but according to Mr. Dodd this need not have interfered with the discharge of the cargo, for although the crew could not have assisted in that service, "by employing extra hands both operations might have been conducted together."

The excuse offered by the captain for not attempting to get out the timber is that not only at that time of the year "bad and heavy weather" might be expected, but that the weather was actually "nasty and squally," by which he must be understood to mean that it was of such a character as to render it impracticable to make even an attempt to get at the timber. But his evidence as to the state of the weather from the 6th to the 11th of June, both inclusive, is positively contradicted by his own notarial protest, to which reference has been already made.

It is impossible, therefore, to believe that the state of the weather prevented even the smallest attempt to save any portion of the timber, the weather having been, on the contrary, peculiarly favourable, for that season of the year, for at least making the experiment.

At the time of the second survey things had materially altered for the worse, and from what the surveyors call "the fearful extent" to which the vessel was hogged, the timber had become "so severely jammed," that, in their opinion, it was impossible to save it without cutting the decks. Now, assume for the moment that the cargo was in such a condition at this time that it might be regarded as totally lost, if previously a portion of it, at least, might have been saved by the exertions of the captain acting for the assured, and he chose not to make the slightest attempt to save it, how can the assured recover from the underwriters a loss which was made total by their own negligence?

This, in itself, would be an answer to the claim of a total loss upon the policy of the timber. But it is very doubtful whether, at the time of the second survey, there really was a total loss. It is true that it was the opinion of the surveyors that the cargo could not be saved without cutting the ship's decks and beams, and the captain said, "If they had attempted to get at the cargo by cutting the ship, with the weather they had at the time, he didn't think they would have saved any of the ship or cargo." The captain here again makes the state of the weather an obstacle to doing what was necessary for saving the cargo, but it has been clearly shewn that this excuse cannot avail him.

If there was nothing in the state of the weather to prevent the operation of cutting open the decks, what reason was there for not resorting to it? When a ship and cargo are in peril of being lost, the captain is called upon to act for the benefit of all concerned, and he is not at liberty to prefer the interests of one of the parties to another. In this case, his tenderness to the ship might have arisen from his being a part-owner uninsured, but, at all events, there was no reason why she should have been spared if her sacrifice were necessary to the safety of her cargo. She was a hopeless wreck, and was sold at the auction in that character and by that description.

Can it be said that the captain was doing his duty, either to the owners of the cargo or to the underwriters, by not opening this wreck in order to obtain access to the cargo, by the only mode in which it was supposed at this time that it could be saved? But even at the period of the second survey, if any effort had been made by the captain to get at the cargo, some portion of it might have been saved without cutting open the decks. He states, indeed, in his evidence, that "he didn't think he could have got out a single log of the cargo without destroying the ship, and that if the timber ports had been opened she would have filled with sand." But, after the auction, the purchaser, according to the evidence of the person employed by him, discharged almost the whole of the cargo through the hatchways and out of the ports, without apparently experiencing any extraordinary difficulty, except that a longer time was occupied in unloading the timber than would have been required under ordinary circumstances. Whether the timber was taken out of the hatchways without cutting open the decks is not stated. It is said that during the thirty-six days employed on the work the weather was unusually fine, but this has been abundantly shewn to have also been the case between the first and second surveys.

Their Lordships are of opinion that there was no time between the grounding of the Northland and the sale by auction, at which the assured were entitled to treat the cargo as having been totally lost. They have already adverted to the absence of even the smallest attempt on the part of the captain, after the first survey, to save the cargo, and to the extreme probability that, with the favourable weather which occurred afterwards, and before the ship was hogged to such an extent as that the timber became "severely jammed," a considerable portion of it would have been obtained. This omission of the captain to take any steps towards saving the cargo, at a time when it was probable that his endeavours would be successful, in their Lordships' judgment, precludes the assured from claiming for a total loss of the cargo, into whatever condition it might have been brought afterwards. But even at the time of the second survey, as the Northland had then become a perfect wreck, there was no reason for sparing her; and if the timber could not be got out without cutting up the decks, their Lordships think that the captain, who is bound where there is danger of loss of ship and cargo to act for the benefit of all concerned, ought to have treated the ship as utterly lost, and to have regarded only the interests of the owners of the cargo and of the underwriters.

As far, therefore, as the judgment of the Recorder applies to the policy upon the cargo, their Lordships are of opinion that he came to a right conclusion that the assured were not entitled to recover.

With respect to the policy on disbursements, their Lordships cannot agree with the Recorder's judgment. The disbursements were advances made by the charterer to the captain of the Northland, to be paid out of freight which would not be earned except by the arrival of the vessel at Madras. There can be no doubt, upon the authority of the case of Droege v. Stuart (12), decided by the Judicial Committee on the 15th of July last, that the sums borrowed by the captain from the charterer at the port of loading, to be repaid by deductions from the freight, must be considered as advances of freight, and that the charterer had therefore an insurable interest. The possibility of freight being earned by the Northland was, of course, at an end when she was reduced to a wreck, and the case became one of total loss. It was argued on the part of the respondents, that the captain might have hired another vessel and forwarded the timber to its destination, and so have earned freight out of which the disbursements might have been paid. But even supposing that the advances made upon the original freight would attach upon the freight thus acquired, the captain is not under an absolute obligation to trans-ship a cargo when a ship is disabled from pursuing the voyage insured, but may exercise his discretion upon the subject. And while the ship was unquestionably a wreck, and utterly incapable of conveying the goods to their destination, and so earning freight, the assured gave notice of abandonment to the underwriters (which their Lordships have determined to be a good notice), and at this time there is no doubt there was a total loss of the disbursements which were to be paid out of freight.

Their Lordships, therefore, will recommend to her Majesty that the judgment appealed from be varied so far as relates to the policy on disbursements, and that it be declared that the appellants are entitled to recover on that policy, with so much costs of suit, as, according to the course of the Court below, he would have been entitled to if the judgment had been given for him on that policy, and that in respect of the other policy, the judgment be affirmed; and that the cause be remitted to the Court below, in order that a final decree be made in accordance with the above declarations. Their Lordships think there should be no costs of the appeal on either side.

Attorneys—J. M. Uphill for appellants; Uptons, Johnson & Upton, for respondents.

1869.
Dec. 11, 18. { DIRK GYSBERT VAN BREDA, appellant; JOHAN CONRAD SILBERBAUER, respondent.*

Cape of Good Hope — Ordinances of Court of Policy; Effect of—Roman-Dutch Law.

*By the Roman-Dutch law, ordinances of the Governor and the Court of Policy at the Cape of Good Hope form part of the lex scripta of the colony.*

A landowner in the colony petitioned the Governor and Court of Policy to be relieved from certain ordinances made in respect to the right to the flow of certain water from his land into and upon the land of certain adjoining landowners, but "offered" to permit the flow of the water, subject to certain restrictions. By an ordinance of the Governor and Court of Policy, it was resolved to release the landowner from the former ordinances, and to accept the "offer" contained in his petition:—Held that, inasmuch as the legislature could only modify an existing law by passing a new law, such ordinance, though informal, had the force of law.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Supreme Court of the colony of the Cape of Good Hope.

The action was brought in the Supreme Court by the respondent, the proprietor of a mill known as the Government Gort Molen, in Table Valley, against the appellant, the owner of a landed estate called Oranjezicht, in Table Valley, and against the Commissioners of the municipality of Cape Town.

The declaration alleged that in October, 1805, the Governor and the Council of * Present, Lord Chelmsford, Sir J. Colvile, and Sir J. Napier.

Policy of the colony sold to one Johannes Jacobus Smuts, in freehold, a mill in Table Valley, known as the Government Mill, with certain land annexed thereto, as by the deed of grant of the said mill would appear. That at the time of the sale and for a long time before, the mill was supplied with, and of right entitled to, a certain supply of water. That the mill was so supplied by means of certain streams of water which formed a junction above the mill, and then ran down a ravine, and turned the mill-wheel. That among the streams forming the aforesaid junction were the Platteklip stream, the Lemmetges stream, the Verlatenbosch stream, and the stream flowing from the Vineyard spring. That the point of junction was in the ravine forming the bed of the Platteklip stream. That some of the aforesaid streams took their rise from certain springs on certain lands the property of the defendant Van Breda, and which had been for a length of time the property of his progenitors, and others of the streams, though not rising on such lands, flowed over them. That by law arising from divers regulations of the Governor and Court of Policy of the colony, bearing date, as in the declaration mentioned, the owners for the time being of the lands of the defendant Van Breda, were bound, after making a certain prescribed use of the water rising in or out of the said lands, or flowing over them, to allow the remainder, being a principal portion thereof, to run down to the Government Mill aforesaid, and after turning or contributing to turn the wheel thereof, to serve other purposes not necessary to be mentioned. That, independently of the Government regulations, a right of servitude existed, whereby the Government mill aforesaid, either solely and with other tenements, was entitled to receive the surplus waters arising in the lands of the said defendant, or flowing through the same. That with reference to the Vineyard spring, by a judgment of the Court, on the 1st day of February, 1859, made in a suit in which the firm of Prince, Collison & Co., the then proprietors of the said mill, were plaintiffs, and the present defendants were defendants, it was ordered and decreed that the said plaintiffs were entitled to receive and should receive a supply of 30,000 gallons of water per diem throughout all the periods of the year, to be conveyed from the main reservoir on the place Oranjezicht to the Platteklip ravine, whence the water might flow down to the mill of the plaintiff, as by reference to the said judgment would appear. That on the 30th day of April, 1865, the plaintiff became the owner by purchase of the said mill, with all the right, title, and interest which were of the said Johannes Jacobus Smuts, and the said mill was duly transferred to the plaintiff on the 1st day of June in the same year. That the defendant Van Breda having entered into some agreement with the other defendants, the defendants had, at various times, between the 1st May, 1865, and 11th November, 1865, in violation of the regulations aforesaid, and the rights of the plaintiff arising from prescription, turned away from the ravine a large portion of the water which had run from the springs aforesaid to the mill, and in particular the plaintiff alleged that the water from the Lemmetjes spring, with the Velatenbosch stream, had been altogether diverted from the mill. That the defendants had not, since the 1st of May, allowed a supply of 30,000 gallons of water to flow from the main reservoir on Oranjezicht to the mill of the plaintiff. That by reason of such diversion of the water the plaintiff had sustained damage to the amount of 500*l*. That even if defendant Van Breda was entitled to use for his own lands so much water as the irrigation might require, yet he was not entitled to sell or give away, for purposes unconnected with the irrigation or other benefit to his own land, any of the waters aforesaid, to which or to so much of which as the defendant, Van Breda, did not require, the plaintiff in virtue of his mill was entitled; and the plaintiff prayed that the defendant might be condemned in the said sum of 500*l*., and also interdicted from diverting the aforesaid streams in the manner in which they had been diverted, or any other manner, and that they might be condemned to restore the streams to the channels through which they were accustomed to flow before the diversions complained of.

NEW SERIES, 39.--PRIV. COUN.

On the 5th day of February, 1866, the defendants filed their plea, taking issue generally on the allegations contained in the declaration.

At the trial, before the Supreme Court, it was proved that the plaintiff was in possession of the mill, situated in Table Valley, known as the Government Gort Molen. That this mill is on the Platteklip stream, and is worked by the water which comes to it down that stream. That the said mill was originally built by the Government of the colony. That the appellant was the proprietor of an estate called Oranjezicht, situated higher up Table Valley than the mill of the plaintiff, extending up to the slopes of Table Mountain. That the estate of Oranjezicht comprises lands granted in freehold at different dates to the ancestors of the appellant by the Governor and Council of the Cape of Good Hope, viz., in December 1st, 1709, December 11th, 1744, January 12th, 1751, and August 22nd, 1769. That the grant of August, 1769, was made to Michael Van Breda, an ancestor of the appellant, and contains no reservation of any water rights. That rising within and flowing through the lands contained in the grant of August, 1769, is a stream of water known as the Lemmetjes stream. That a transverse cut through the lands of the appellant, connects the bed of the Lemmetjes stream with the ravine or bed of the Platteklip stream, above the mill of the plaintiff. That in winter the Lemmetjes stream, if not intercepted for purposes of irrigation or otherwise on appellant's lands, is able to reach the Platteklip through this cross cut. That in summer for a short time after heavy rains, which are rare at that season, the Lemmetjes stream is of sufficient volume to reach the Platteklip. But in some summers, even when unimpeded, it is not strong enough to reach the cross cut. That another stream, called the Vineyard spring, rises on the land forming part of Oranjezicht, and also falls into the Platteklip stream.

Various regulations were from time to time made by the Government for the time being of the colony, in respect of the use of the water of the Platteklip, and of certain of the streams flowing thereinto.

C

By a resolution of the Governor and Council, dated March 1st, 1774, it was resolved and decreed that the water issuing from Table Mountain, and running down through the land granted in freehold to Michael Van Breda in 1769, should not be led out of its course or impeded otherwise than for the garden of the said Breda himself, but then never otherwise than in the morning and evening, from four to seven o'clock, and that he should be obliged during the summer to let the said river water run first along and then downwards, with an angle through his garden into the common ditch to the mill.

By a resolution of the Governor and Council, bearing date the 3rd day of April, 1787, the order of the 1st of March, 1774, regulating the use of the water for the gardens situate in Table Valley, was withdrawn, and it was decreed inter alia that the water issuing on this side the Table Mountain for irrigating the said gardens, should in future be used as therein mentioned; to wit, The water coming down through the land granted to Pieter Van Breda, in the year 1769, for the garden of the said Breda, to be made use of daily, but for not longer than from four o'clock in the morning until twelve o'clock at noon; whilst the said Breda shall be obliged to let the river water run during the dry season, first along and then downwards, with an angle through his garden to the mill.

Pieter Van Breda was then possessed of the lands granted in 1769 to Michael Van Breda as aforesaid. Upon the passing of the above resolution he presented a petition to the Governor and Council of Policy, dated November 20th, 1787, which was as follows:—

“To the Honourable Cornelis Jacob van de Graaff, Governor and Director of the Cape of Good Hope and the Dependencies thereof, &c., and the Honourable Council of Policy, “Sheweth, with due respect, the petition of your humble and obedient servant, the Burgher Lieutenant P. Van Breda.

“That an extract of your Honours' resolution of the 3rd of April of this year having been forwarded to memorialist, containing an altered arrangement and regulation with regard to the use which may and shall be allowed to be made of the water coming down from Table Mountain, for the service of the gardens lying along the same; that petitioner has seen therein that with regard to the water arising within and flowing down over the land which, in the year 1769, was granted in freehold to his father, the ex-burgherraad Michael Van Breda, and of which the petitioner is now the proprietor, a partial and limited use only of the same was allowed to memorialist, to wit, from four o'clock in the morning till twelve o'clock at noon, with the addition that he (the memorialist) should be bound to allow the river water to flow during the dry season, as before, first along and then with a bend through his garden to the mill.

“That this regulation left undisturbed the arrangements made in the year 1774 regarding the said river water, an arrangement against which memorialist's father at that time already complained to the then Governor of this colony, the Honourable Joachim Van Plettenberg, as greatly tending to open for private and general use a benefit to the use of which memorialist's father, at that time, and now the memorialist, considered himself alone legally entitled, as long as that water does not flow beyond the land in which it rises, as in the grant of that land no condition or exception whatever respecting the use of that water has been made as prescribed, memorialist's father having already allowed at that time, without conditioning any private advantage, that the water of another and very abundant spring, rising in the old ground of his garden, should be led out for the purpose of supplying the inhabitants of Cape Town with drink-water, and also for the Company's and other ships arriving here, but that also, by reason of the repairs which this water-course from time to time requires, memorialist has suffered considerable damage in his crops and plantations, and loss of freedom in his garden from the labourers and the wagons carrying the materials.

“That the complaints which memorialist's father lodged with the said Governor Van Plettenberg having been found well-founded and just, the consequence was that memorialist's father, and memorialist afterwards, have remained in the free and undisputed enjoyment of the said river water, without any person ever preventing or obstructing it, by virtue of the said resolution of 1774; while, on the contrary, ever since, when the said water was necessarily required during the dry season either for the town canals or for the Company's mill, and he (petitioner) being applied to, when he could spare it without great detriment to himself, he has allowed it to run freely for the above services.

"That petitioner, from the now altered arrangements of 3rd of April of this year, which leave those of 1774 in full force, on the one side, is persuaded that your Honours were unacquainted with, or, at least had not sufficient information of memorialist's complaints against the same, and considering, on the other hand, that, should he now silently acquiesce in the said rules, the consequence for him might be the very injurious result that the garden from which he and his numerous family must derive their support would be deprived for ever of a privilege which has always been annexed to it, and by virtue of which alone the garden can continue to yield the means of support for himself and family.

"That memorialist feels himself thus compelled to bring his grievances again under the consideration of your honour and worships, in the full confidence that you will, as memorialist humbly requests, pay a favourable regard to the same, and, acquiescing in the justice of the complaint, release him from the obligation of complying with that part of the regulation of 3rd April last, which deprives him of the free use of the river-water arising in his own freehold.

"That memorialist, on the other hand, having no desire or intention to avoid the obligation of every member of society to contribute his part towards the prosperity of his fellow men and citizens, but on the contrary, convinced that the above river-water, after having been used by him, should necessarily answer other purposes besides his private ones, is fully ready and prepared to comply therewith, in such a manner as may be done without detriment to his lawful rights, and he hereby offers to allow the said river-water, during the dry season, to flow without obstruction freely through his garden to the main ditch, not only from the Saturday afternoon till the Sunday afternoon, for the refreshment of the canals of Cape Town, but also to allow the same during every night, that it may be disposed of for general use, except when the petitioner shall be compelled, in particular cases, in order to prevent considerable loss, to make use thereof for himself.

"The memorialist, trusting that his offer will be considered sufficient to allow a proper use of the said river-water to others, remains in the certain expectation that it will meet the approbation of your Honour and Worships, and that the said offer, saving his own lawful right, may be a means by which the petitioner may be properly released from the altered regulations respecting the water made by the aforesaid resolution of 3rd of April of this year."

An ordinance of November 20th, 1787, set out the petition and proceeded to provide as follows:—"Whereupon it was taken in consideration that the arrangements enacted by the resolution of 3rd April this year, regarding the use of the water for the gardens in this Table Valley, and in particular that by which the regulation for the garden of the said Breda is made, as merely founded on the former arrangements of 1774, apparently without considering at that time that the river-water, in regard to which the said regulation for the garden of Lieutenant Breda was then made, had its source in a piece of land which was granted in freehold, in the year 1769, to the former proprietor of that garden, late ex-Burgherraad Michiel Van Breda, and which grant was made principally as a compensation for the service which the said Burgherraad Breda had done shortly before to the company and the colony, by allowing that a very abundant and pure spring of water arising in his old land should be built on and led out for the purposes of public use, in such manner as takes place at the present time, and as it is still maintained and kept in repair: so that, because the said Breda had thereby been deprived of the use of the said fountain-water, the use of which he might have retained to himself, as formerly, it must also be supposed that, in the grant of the new land in 1769, it was purposely that no condition or exception was made regarding the water rising in that new land, in order that the water might supply the loss suffered by the proprietor of that garden by the leading out of the water of the other fountain.

"And whereas it would be contrary to fairness that the aforesaid Breda should be deprived of the lawful use of the above-mentioned river-water arising in his new ground, which belongs to him in the first place, it has been resolved unanimously to release him from the obligation to obey the regulations respecting that water, made on 3rd April of this year, and on the contrary considered that the offer made by him in the latter part of his petition may be accepted, trusting that, considering the inconvenience which otherwise might arise in the dry season from the absence of that water, he will carefully comply with his above offers.

"Resolved, consequently, to place an extract hereof in the hands of commissioners of the Court of Justice, in order to guide in the observance of the arrangement about the aforesaid water."

On the 8th day of September, 1806, the majority of the Court gave judgment for the plaintiff for 50*l.* damages, and reserved certain points as to the quantum of water to which the plaintiff was entitled. The Chief Justice of the colony dissented, and delivered a judgment in favour of defendants.

On the 15th day of November, 1806, the Court further decreed that the appellant should thenceforth allow the water mentioned in the regulations of the 3rd of April, 1787, called the water coming down through the land granted to Pieter Van Breda in 1769, and also called the river water, being the water now known by the name of Lemmetjeskloof stream, with which the stream now called Verlatenbosch also flows, to flow down without obstruction through the ancient course of the Platteklip watercourse during every night from sunset to sunrise, and on every Saturday from 6 o'clock P.M. to 6 o'clock P.M. on the next day being Sunday, according to the true intent and meaning of the regulations of the Governor and Court of Policy of the 3rd April, 1787, modified by the offer contained in the petition of Pieter Van Breda, and the acceptance of such offer by the said Court of Policy.

The Solicitor General and Butt for the appellant.—The government water regulations do not oblige the appellant to allow the streams to flow down to the plaintiff's mills in the manner claimed. Independently of prescriptive right and of the Government water regulations, the appellant had a right to use and appropriate the water of these streams. If, in virtue of the offer made by Pieter Van Breda in his petition of the 20th November, 1787, the appellant is bound to let any portion of the water run through and pass from his land, the right to the use of such portion of the water was and is vested in the governor and council and their successors, and not in the plaintiff or those through whom he claims. The ordinance of November, 1787, relieved the appellant from the provision of the regulations of April, 1787. They referred to Voet (1), Grotius (2).

Sir G. Honyman and Archibald for the respondent.—The rights of the parties are governed by the regulations of the Court of Policy, which have the force of law. The ordinance of November, 1787, is binding on the appellant. It is in fact part of the law of the colony. At the date of the grant of the 22nd August, 1769, all the water rising in or flowing through the land granted, had been disposed of by the previous regulations. The grant was subject to such regulations. No right to the water was conveyed to Michiel Van Breda by the grant of 1769, but his right and that of his successors is derived from the regulations of 1st March, 1774, modified by the subsequent regulations of the Court of Policy. If the regulations of the Court of Policy are not binding as a legislative "imposition," they constituted a contract with Pieter Van Breda, which is binding on the appellant, and to the benefit of which the respondent, as assignee of the government, is entitled. They referred to Chase-

(1) De aqua et aquæ plurius arcendæ. 6 Ed. ch. 39. ti. 3.

(2) Dutch Jurisprudence.

more v. Richards (3), and the cases there cited.

Butt in reply.

Cur. adv. vult.

SIR JAMES COLVILLE (on Dec. 18) delivered the judgment of their lordships.—The appellant in this case is the owner of an estate situate in the Table Valley, near Cape Town, called Oranjezicht. It consists of various parcels of land, which were granted to his ancestor, whilst the colony still belonged to the Dutch, by several instruments, of which the most modern, as well as the one most material to the present controversy, is that of the 22nd of August, 1769.

The respondent is the owner of a water-mill, lower down the Table Valley, called Gort Molen, which is worked by means of a stream, or water-course, known as the Platteklip.

The substance of the complaint of the respondent, who was plaintiff in the suit against the appellant, is that the appellant has diverted the waters of certain streams, which would naturally flow, and of right ought to flow, into the bed of the Platteklip, and, from the point of junction with the latter stream, run down and turn the wheel of the respondent's mill.

The streams so alleged to have been diverted are the "Lemmetjes Stream," the "Verlatenbosch," which joins the Lemmetjes, and several streams, which, for the purposes of this appeal, it will be sufficient to treat as comprehended in the description of "the stream flowing from the Vineyard Spring."

The declaration stated that some of these streams take their rise from certain springs situate in the appellant's lands, and that others of them, though not originally rising upon such lands, flowed and ran over the same.

It rested the title of the respondent to the use of these waters—first, upon certain regulations of the Governor and Court of Policy of the colony, dated the 1st of March, 1774; the 3rd of April, 1787; and the 20th of November, 1787; the effect of which was, as the respondent alleged, to bind the owners of the appellant's lands, after making a certain prescribed use of the water rising in or out of the said lands, or running over them, to allow the remainder, being a principal part thereof, to run down to the mill; and, secondly, upon a right of servitude by prescription.

It set up a further title to the waters of the stream flowing from the Vineyard Spring under a judgment pronounced in a suit wherein a firm of Prince, Collinson, and Company, the former proprietors of the mill, were plaintiffs, and the appellant and his co-defendants were defendants. Whereby it was ordered and decreed that the said plaintiffs were entitled to receive, and that they should accordingly receive, a supply of 30,000 gallons of water per diem, throughout all the periods of the year, to be conveyed by means of an adequate conduit-pipe at the expense of the defendants, from the main reservoir on Oranjezicht to the junction of the Platteklip ravine, and the cross cut below the vineyard of the said appellant, whence the said water might flow down the said ravine to the mill of the said respondent.

The declaration further stated that the appellant had entered into some arrangement with the commissioners of the municipality of Cape Town, who were also made defendants to the suit, whereunder, by means of pipes and other contrivances, they had diverted from the bed of the Platteklip and the mill aforesaid a large portion of the water which had run and proceeded from the various springs and streams aforesaid to the mill aforesaid; and in particular that the water arising from the spring called the Lemmetjes Spring had, since the 1st of May, 1865, been altogether turned away from the bed of the Platteklip and the mill.

It further stated that, since the 1st of May, 1865, the defendants had wrongfully and unlawfully kept back and prevented the respondent's mill from receiving the 30,000 gallons of water which, by the previous decree, they were ordered to allow to pass daily to the mill.

It insisted that even if the appellant was entitled to use for his own lands so much of the waters of the said springs and streams as the irrigation thereof might require (which the respondent did not admit), he was not entitled to sell, as he had done, the same for purposes unconnected with the irrigation or other benefit of his own lands.

(3) 2 Hurl. & N. 168; s. c. 26 Law J. Rep. (n.s.) Exch. 373; House of Lords, 29 Law J. Rep. (n.s.) Exch. 81.

And in respect of the wrongs complained of, the respondent claimed damages; and a perpetual interdict restraining the defendants from diverting the water of the several streams, and an order condemning them to restore the several streams to their original and accustomed channels.

The commissioners for the municipality of Cape Town, though defendants in the Court below, have not joined in this appeal.

The defendants put in issue every allegation of fact and conclusion of law contained in the pact.

Several orders have been made by the Court in the suit. By the first, which bears date the 2nd of March, 1866, it was ordered that the water-course of the Verlatenbosch and Lemmetjes streams be reasonably cleared of obstructions, and the water be allowed to flow every Saturday from six o'clock in the evening till six o'clock on Sunday evening, and on every other day from sunrise to sunset for a fortnight in order to test whether, if so allowed to flow, the water of these streams would reach the Platteklip water-course.

On the 8th of September, 1866, the Court gave judgment for the respondent for the sum of 50*l.* as damages with costs of suit, reserving certain points as to the quantities of water to come down, to be thereafter adjudged by the Court; and on the 15th day of November, 1866, it further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the appellant should thenceforth allow the water in the regulations of the 3rd of April, 1787, called the water coming down through the land granted to Pieter Van Breda in 1769, and also called the river water, being the water now known by the name of the Lemmetjes Kloof stream, with which the stream now called the Verlatenbosch stream also flows, to flow down without obstruction through the ancient course to the Platteklip water-course, during every night, from sunset to sunrise, and on every Saturday from six o'clock P.M. to six o'clock P.M. on the next day, being Sunday, according to the true intent and meaning of the regulations of the Governor and Court of Policy of the 3rd of April, 1787, modified by the offer contained in the petition of the Lieutenant Van Breda in 1787, and the acceptance of such offer by the said Court of Policy.

The present appeal, if in terms it originally covered more, has, in the argument at the bar, been limited to the last-stated order. The first order was merely an interlocutory proceeding for the purpose of ascertaining the flow of the Lemmetjes and Verlatenbosch streams, if after their junction they were allowed to flow towards the Platteklip. And no question is here raised as to the propriety of what has been decided by the second order which relates exclusively to the stream flowing from the vineyard, to the respondent's rights in respect of that stream as they were defined by the former decree, and to the damages recoverable for the breach of that decree.

It is obvious that the third order which is now the sole subject of appeal, is based upon two assumptions: first—that the regulations of the Governor and Court of Policy in the matter of this water have the force of law in the colony; and secondly—that upon the true construction of the particular regulations referred to, the appellant is under an obligation, enforceable at the suit of any person aggrieved by the non-performance of it, to allow the water in question to flow in the manner prescribed by the order.

The first of these propositions has hardly been contested. Under the Dutch Government the Governor and the Court of Policy were the sole legislative power in the colony. That their ordinances, including these very water regulations, however inartistically framed, do, unless modified or repealed by subsequent legislation, still form part of the lex scripta of the colony, appears from the volume of the statute law recently published by the Cape Government. It appears from the regulations printed in the record, that in the exercise of their legislative power the Governor and Court of Policy did, at least from 1861, by positive ordinance regulate the use of the streams watering the Table Valley, whether arising in that valley or descending from the Table Mountain. Their object seems to have been to give to the upper riparian proprietors the fullest use of these streams for irrigation which was compatible with the rights and interests of those below, and in particular with the due supply of water to what is designated the Honourable Company's mill, being a mill on the Platteklip, above the site on which the respondent's mill now stands. In doing this they may sometimes have restricted, and sometimes have extended the rights which, apart from special ordinance, those proprietors would have had under the general law. Whether their power to do this was specially reserved to them by the clause touching "impositien en geregtigheden" which appear to have been ordinarily inserted in their grants of land is not a material question, for if the ordinances have, as they are admitted to have, the force of law, they must be obeyed, though they may have derogated from the rights of individuals.

The legislation touching the particular streams which are now in question was, so far as it need be stated, as follows:—By the regulation of the 1st of March, 1774, made pursuant to the report of certain members of the council, it was ordered that "The water issuing from the Table mountains, and running down through the land granted in freehold to Van Breda in 1769, might be led out of its course, or otherwise impeded for the gardens of the said Breda himself; but also never otherwise than in the morning and evening, from four to nine o'clock, and that he (Breda) should be obliged during the summer season to let the said river water run first along, and then downwards, with an angle, through his gardens, into the common ditch (admitted to be the Platteklip) to the mill.

In April, 1787, it was resolved, upon a further report of persons deputed to enquire into the whole subject of the water-courses in the Table Valley, to withdraw the order of the 1st March, 1774, in respect of the regulated use of the water for the gardens situate in the Table Valley, and to substitute other provisions.

The provision relating to the waters in question was as follows:—"The water coming down through the land granted to Pieter Van Breda in the year 1769, for the garden of the said Breda to be made use of daily but not longer than from four in the morning until twelve o'clock at noon; whilst the said Breda shall be obliged, as heretofore, to let the river water run during the dry season, first along, and then downwards, with an angle, through his garden to the mill."

On the 20th November, 1787, the Lieutenant P. Van Breda, the ancestor of the appellant, then in possession of Oranjesticht, presented a petition to the Governor and Court of Policy, praying for relief against the provisions of the last-stated ordinance. The petition, after stating certain representations made by the petitioner's father against the ordinance of 1774, and that in consequence of such representations that ordinance had never been enforced against him; and complaining of the probable effect of the ordinance of the 3rd of April, 1787, upon his garden, contains the following passages:—[His Lordship read the material part of the memorial.] The ordinance of November, 1787, states his petition in extenso, and then proceeds as follows:—[His Lordship read the ordinance.] The question upon this part of the case is whether, as the respondents contend, this last stated document was in the nature of a law imposing upon Van Breda and his successors the legal obligation to allow the water to flow in the manner stated in his offer; or whether, as the appellant contends, it simply relieved him from the obligation to obey the regulations of the 3rd April, 1787, leaving him free to comply with his offer or not, as he might see fit.

The question is not free from difficulty; but their Lordships have come to the conclusion that the former is the true and reasonable construction of the document under consideration. Nothing can be more informal than the mode in which, as the other regulations shew, the Governor and Court of Policy exercised their legislative power. Their Lordships must look to the substance of the transaction. Here was a man subject to a written law, who came forward to complain of its provisions by petition to the legislature; and offering to do certain things "as the means whereby he may be released" from those provisions. The legislature accepts his offer, and resolves to release him from the obligation to obey the regulation of which he complains, trusting that he will comply with his offer. Now the legislature could only modify an existing law by passing a new law, and therefore the document, whatever be the true construction of its terms, must be treated as an ordinance having the force of law. And the reasonable construction of it seems to their Lordships to be,—that it substitutes for the obligations which the former law had imposed upon Van Breda for the benefit of the public the obligation to do that for the benefit of the public which was expressed in his offer. It may be that if he failed to perform this obligation he would not incur the penalties which were imposed on those who disobeyed the general regulations; but the obligation was nevertheless one which any person aggrieved by its non-performance could sue to enforce. Their Lordships are fortified in this construction by the final clause, wherein it is resolved to place an extract of the proceedings “in the hands of the Commissioners of the Court of Justice, in order to guide in the observance of the arrangement about the aforesaid water.”

This being their Lordships' view, they deem it unnecessary to consider the various other questions raised in the argument before them. If the last regulation had not incorporated, so to speak, the offer, and thereby defined the legal obligations of Van Breda—if it had merely released him from the obligations of the first regulation of 1787, and left him to his rights over the water, under the general law it could hardly be contended that it conferred upon him affirmatively the right to divert the water for purposes other than that of irrigation, or to sell it in violation of the rights which the lower riparian proprietors might have under the general law. The question would then arise, what the latter rights are? And this is a question for the satisfactory decision whereof the record, as sent home, does not afford the requisite materials.

In the first place, there is not a sufficient constat whether as a matter of fact the Lemmetjes and Verlatenbosch do or do not rise on the appellant's land. The balance of the evidence given in the cause seems to be in favour of the conclusion that they do so rise; and this is in some measure confirmed by the last regulation of 1787. But two of the learned judges below dispute this; founding their conclusions, somewhat irregularly as it appears to their lordships, upon their personal knowledge, derived either from a personal view of the locality, had in the former suit, or from a recollection of the evidence taken in that suit. Again, their lordships have not before them the particular texts in Voet upon which all the judges seem to concur in holding that, if the streams do rise in the appellant's land, he is by the law of the colony entitled to do what he pleases with their waters. Their lordships are not satisfied that this proposition is true without qualification; or that by the Roman-Dutch law as by the law of England the rights of the lower proprietors would not attach upon water which had once flowed beyond the appellant's land in a known and definite channel, even though it had its source within that land. Another issue of fact, disputed at their lordships' bar, would have arisen on this point.

Their lordships, however, are relieved from the necessity of considering these questions, since the consequence of their construction of the regulations is that they must humbly recommend Her Majesty to affirm the decree under appeal with a slight modification to be now stated. That modification consists in the insertion of the words “during the dry season” between the words “henceforth” and “allow.” The addition of these words will make the order literally comply with the terms of Van Breda's offer in November, 1787.

The order will then leave the appellant free to make what use he pleases of the water (and the use actually made of it is apparently one for the benefit of the public) at seasons when it cannot be required to swell the waters of the Platteklip. Their Lordships, however, are of opinion that this slight variation in the form of the decree which is probably not inconsistent with the intention of the Court below, ought not to relieve the appellant from paying the costs of this appeal.

Attorneys—Venning, Robins & Venning for appellant; Nash, Field & Layton, for respondent.

1870.
Jan. 25.

{ GALE WENTWORTH BOSTON AND OTHERS, appellants; SIME-ON LELIEVRE AND OTHERS (Seigniorial Revising Commissioners), respondents.*

Lower Canada—Court of Queen's Bench—Appeal from Superior Court—Writ of Certiorari—Seigniorial Acts—Consolidated Statutes of Lower Canada, c. 77. s. 23; c. 88. s. 17; c. 89—Construction.

By the Consolidated Statutes of Lower Canada, c. 77. s. 23, it is provided, "That an appeal shall lie to the Court of Queen's Bench as a Court of Appeal and Error from any judgment rendered by the Superior Court for Lower Canada in any district, in all cases where the matter in dispute exceeds the sum of 20l. sterling."

Chapter 88. s. 17, provides, "That an appeal shall lie to the Court of Queen's Bench, sitting in appeal, from all final judgments rendered by the Superior Court after the 30th day of June, 1858, in all cases provided for by that Act and chapter 89 of these Consolidated Statutes, except in cases of certiorari."

Chapter 89 provides for proceedings upon writs of prohibition, certiorari, and scire facias, and section 6 states that "appeals from final judgment rendered under the Act, except in cases of certiorari, are provided for by chapter 88."

In a proceeding under the Seigniorial Acts of Lower Canada, the appellants obtained from the Superior Court a writ of certiorari to bring the proceedings into the Superior Court, which Court afterwards quashed the writ:—Held, first, that the Consolidated Statutes must be treated as one great act, and that the several enactments ought to be construed collectively, and with reference to one another; secondly, that the writ of certiorari is governed by the provisions of chapter 88, and that no appeal will lie in such a case from the judgment of the Superior Court to the Court of Queen's Bench.

This was an appeal from the Court of Queen's Bench for the province of Quebec, Canada.

The appellants were the executors of one John Boston, who was at the time of * Present—Lord Westbury, Sir J. Colvile, and Mr J. Napier.

TRINIS, 39.—PRIV. COUN.

the passing of the Seigniorial Act, 1854, and continued till his death, the owner of two Seigniories, called the Seigniories of Thwaite and St. James.

The respondents were the Revising Commissioners appointed under the said Seigniorial Act of 1854.

In the year 1854, a provincial Act, 18 Vict. c. 3, was passed, under the title of "The Seigniorial Act, 1854," for the abolition of feudal rights and tenures in Lower Canada.

By this Act, the Governor was empowered to appoint Commissioners to value the feudal rights in each Seignior, and to draw up a Schedule, containing, amongst other particulars, the yearly value of the seigniorial rights upon each parcel of land in the Seignior.

By section 12, the Governor was authorised to appoint four of the Commissioners Revising Commissioners, of whom any three were to form a Court for the revision of the Schedules made under the Act; and by section 13, the decision of any two of such Commissioners was to be final.

Accordingly, Henry Judah, one of the Seigniorial Commissioners appointed under the Act of 1854, proceeded to prepare a Schedule for the said Seigniories, and the said John Boston thereupon filed before him a claim setting out the special facts relating to the Seigniories of Thwaite and St. James above referred to, and claiming to be entitled to an indemnity for special rights belonging to him beyond those possessed by other Seigniors of the value of a capital sum of 16,200l.

On April 16, 1857, the said Henry Judah, after hearing all objections that were taken to the Schedule which he had prepared for the Seignior of Thwaite, pronounced a judgment or order making certain alterations therein, but rejecting the claim of the said John Boston in toto, and declaring the Schedule closed. On the same date, the said Henry Judah made a similar judgment or order in the matter of the Seignior of St. James.

The said John Boston thereupon applied to the Revising Commissioners, appointed under the 12th section of the Seigniorial Act, 1854, above mentioned, for the revision of each of the said Schedules, and on the 29th of May, 1861, the respondents, by the three Commissioners before whom the Appeal was heard, gave judgment on the Schedule relating to the Seignior of Thwaite, substantially confirming the judgment of Henry Judah, on the ground that the Seigniorial Court had decided that the rights for which the said John Boston sought to be indemnified as Seignior could not exist.

D

On the same date the respondents also pronounced a similar judgment in the matter of the Seignior of St. James.

The said John Boston thereupon procured a writ of certiorari, to be issued out of the Superior Court of Lower Canada, to remove all the proceedings before the respondents into the Superior Court.

On December 20th, 1861, the Attorney General for Lower Canada entered an appearance, and obtained a rule nisi to quash the said writ.

On the 21st of February, 1862, John Boston obtained a rule nisi to quash the judgment rendered by the respondents on the 29th of May, 1861.

The two rules came on for argument together, before Mr. Assistant Justice Monk, who, on the 27th of June, 1862, gave judgment, making absolute the rule for quashing the writ of certiorari, on the grounds that there did not appear to have been any excess of jurisdiction on the part of the respondents, and that their judgments could not be questioned by writ of certiorari.

On the 28th of November, 1862, John Boston having died, the appellants, as his executors, issued out a writ of appeal from this judgment in the Court of Queen's Bench for Lower Canada.

By the Consolidated Statutes of Lower Canada, c. 77. s. 23, it is enacted, "That an appeal shall lie to the Court of Queen's Bench, as a Court of Appeal, and Error from any judgment rendered by the Superior Court for Lower Canada in any district, in all cases where the matter in dispute exceeds the sum of 20*l.* sterling, or relates to any fee of office duty, rent, revenue, or any sum of money payable to her Majesty, or to any title to lands or tenements, annual rents, or such like matters or things where the rights in future may be bound, although the immediate value or sum in appeal is less than 20*l.* sterling."

The 88th and 89th chapters of the said statutes relate respectively to the protection and enforcement of corporate rights, and to writs of prohibition, certiorari and scire facias, and by section 17 of the former statute, it is enacted, "That an appeal shall lie to the Court of Queen's Bench, sitting in appeal, from all final judgments rendered by the superior Court after the 30th day of June, 1858, in all cases provided for by that Act and chapter 89 of these Consolidated Statutes, except in cases of certiorari."

On the 5th of September, 1863, a motion was made on behalf of the Attorney General for Lower Canada intervening, to quash the writ of appeal which had been issued by the appellants as above-mentioned, on the ground that there was no appeal from a judgment quashing a writ of certiorari, and that the judgment of the Court below was final.

On the 6th of September, 1864, the Court of Queen's Bench, after hearing counsel for the appellants, respondents and party intervening, gave judgment quashing the writ of appeal on the ground that the law did not allow an appeal to that Court from the judgments rendered by the superior Court on writs of certiorari issued out of it.

The appellants thereupon moved the said Court of Queen's Bench for leave to appeal to Her Majesty in Council, but the said Court on the 1st of December, 1864, rejected the motion with costs.

The appellants then presented a petition to Her Majesty in Council for special leave to appeal from the said judgment of the 6th of September, 1864, and also from the said orders or judgments of April 16th, 1857; May 29th, 1861; June 27th, 1862; and December 1st, 1864; and by an order in Council, dated the 27th day of November, 1865, leave was given to the appellants to enter and prosecute their appeal from the said several judgments and orders.

Bompas (Sir R. Palmer with him).—The judgment quashing the writ of certiorari is erroneous. The Consolidated Statutes of Lower Canada, by chapter 77, section 23, expressly provide that an appeal shall lie to the Court of Queen's Bench as a Court of appeal from any judgment rendered by the superior Court of any district in all cases where the matter in dispute exceeds the sum of 20*l*. A writ of appeal therefore lies to the Court of Queen's Bench from all judgments of the superior Court. The matter in dispute in this case is admitted to be of much greater amount than 20*l*. The writ of certiorari is not the creation of any colonial statute. It is the ordinary writ of certiorari in use in the Courts in England. It is therefore subject to all the incidents of that writ. The provisions of statute 88, section 17, were intended to extend the right of appeal in the case of prerogative writs to judgments in cases where the matters in dispute were of a less value than 20*l*. They are not within the terms of this statute. The exception made in that statute of writs of certiorari does not alter or take away the general right of appeal.

The Solicitor General (Sir J. D. Coleridge) and Wills, for the respondents.—The writ of certiorari in this case is the ordinary writ of certiorari, and is subject, without doubt, to all the incidents of that writ, but the Consolidated Statutes expressly negative the right of appeal in cases of certiorari. The law is therefore express upon this subject. The terms of the enactment contained in the Consolidated Statutes, c. 77, giving a general power of appeal from the superior Court to the Court of Queen's Bench, do not apply to a writ of certiorari. The right to appeal is not therefore an incident of a writ of certiorari in Lower Canada. It is said that the provisions contained in c. 88 only apply to final judgments. If this be so, this is a final judgment. They referred to 2 Wm. Saunders, 101 x. Corner's Crown Practice title Certiorari, and to the Consolidated Statutes of Lower Canada, cc. 77, 88, 89.

Bompas in reply.

LORD WESTBURY delivered the judgment of their Lordships.—Their Lordships are not insensible to the importance of this case. At the same time they feel that they would not act rightly if they were to overrule the unanimous judgment of the Court below, upon a question of this nature, unless they were perfectly satisfied that the Judges had committed an error in refusing the exercise of their Appellate jurisdiction.

The question is governed entirely by the language of the statutes. The Court of Appeal in Canada is the creation of statute, and the subjects upon which Appeal lies to that Court are defined with reasonable clearness. The jurisdiction of the Court existed before the Consolidated Statutes, but the Consolidated Statutes annulled all the antecedent statutes upon the subject. The Consolidated Statutes may be treated as one great Act, and their Lordships think it would not be wrong to take the several chapters as being enactments which are to be construed collectively, and with reference to one another, just as if they had been sections of one statute, instead of being separate acts.

The material sections to which their Lordships' attention has been directed by the able arguments they have heard, are the 23rd section of chapter 77, and chapters 88 and 89. The 23rd section gives generally a right of appeal to the Court of Queen's Bench from any judgment pronounced by a Superior Court, in all cases where the matter in dispute exceeds the sum of 20*l*. sterling.

The Solicitor-General admitted that if this section stood alone, the matter in dispute here might fairly be taken as involving the determination of a matter of property exceeding 20*l*.; but he directed our attention to the two subsequent chapters, which are most important, namely, the 88th and 89th chapters.

The 88th chapter, in section 17, gives an appeal from all final judgments rendered by the Superior Court after the 30th of June, 1858, in all cases provided for by that chapter and chapter 89, except cases of certiorari.

The cases provided for by chapter 89 are cases of writs of prohibition, of writs of certiorari, and of writs of scire facias.

The fact, therefore, which has to be inquired into is:—Did this writ of certiorari fall under the provisions of chapter 89; for if it did, the exception applies.

But there can be no question that the chapter 89 gives the rule under which writs of certiorari shall for the future issue, be treated, and decided. It is the code of procedure with reference to that particular writ. It simplifies the proceedings under it, and makes them correspondent with proceedings in ordinary cases.

Therefore, the writ of certiorari here was provided for by that particular enactment.

The chapter 89 repeats, "Appeals from final judgments rendered under this Act, except in cases of certiorari, are provided for by chapter 88." It expressly refers, therefore, to the antecedent chapter for the purpose of making the directions given in that chapter applicable, by the express words of the reference, to all cases provided for by the statute.

Their Lordships, therefore, are of opinion that the certiorari in this case must be considered as governed by chapter 89; and if so, then to have been excepted from appeal.

This is the ground upon which it appears to their Lordships that the judgment of the Court below can and ought to be supported.

Their Lordships would hesitate very much to interfere with the unanimous judgment of the Court below upon a matter of this kind, which is to be regarded as a matter of procedure only, unless they were clearly satisfied that the Court had made a great mistake in the construction put upon these statutes. They think that construction is more in conformity with general principles of law upon the subject of these writs, and they think also that it is a construction which they are compelled to affirm by the interpretation they are obliged to put upon the meaning, intent, and object of chapter 89; and holding, as their Lordships are obliged to do, that this case fell under the regulations of that statute, they will humbly advise Her Majesty to affirm the order of the Court below and to dismiss the Appeal.

Sir Roundell Palmer.—Your Lordships will remember the very peculiar position in which this case comes before you. It is only a part of an appeal heard in the first instance by special order.

[LORD WESTBURY.—We do not prejudice anything else that remains to be done, but we consider this as if it were a special case raising a particular question which it is convenient to dispose of per se. In that manner the appeal has been presented to us and in that way we shall report to Her Majesty.]

Your Lordships will deal only with the appeal from that particular order which quashed the writ and the order affirming the appeal from it.

[LORD WESTBURY.—Their Lordships will be disposed to deal with this appeal as if it were a special case raising an appeal to us on this simple question. Does an appeal lie in a case of a writ of certiorari to the Court of Queen's Bench from the order made by the Superior Court?]

So I understand, your Lordship. Our appeal is from several orders, the last of which is the only one your Lordships have been dealing with. Therefore your Lordships' judgment only will deal with the last order.

[LORD WESTBURY.—Yes; it will not affect the other appeals. SIR J. COLVILLE.—It is without prejudice to the rest of the appeals.]

The Registrar.—Your Lordships directed the sum of 300*l.* to be deposited to meet the expenses of the appeal. If the costs of this appeal are now given, they will be paid out of that 300*l.*, and the sum will then be exhausted.

[LORD WESTBURY.—We will state that the recommendation we shall finally give to Her Majesty will be,—that, without prejudice to the other questions involved in the appeals which the appellants were permitted to present, and which remain for decision, as to this particular question involved in the present appeal, we shall humbly advise Her Majesty to affirm the order of the Court below quoad hoc, and to direct the expenses to be paid by the appellant, the deposit made by the appellant remaining entire to answer the expenses of the rest of the appeal.]

Attorneys — Bischoff, Bompas & Bischoff, for appellants; Ashurst, Morris & Co., for respondents.

1870.
Jan. 24, 25.
Feb. 11.

DAVID DOUGLAS YOUNG AND ANOTHER, appellants; JAMES THOMAS LAMBERT,
respondent.*

Lower Canada: Execution creditor — Rights of Pledgor and Pledgee—Delivery of Pledge.

Goods shipped at Liverpool for Quebec were taken on their arrival to the examining warehouse, and were entered as consigned to "M. & S.," and were marked "M. & S." By the regulations of the warehouse, consignees were entitled to possession on payment of freight and duty. M. & S. having obtained an advance on the goods from the appellants, signed a request note directed to the officer of the warehouse, directing him to "hold the goods subject to the order of the appellants, they paying duty and storage charged before removal." The officer wrote across the note "accepted," and signed it:—Held, on a seizure under a f. fa. by the execution creditor of "M. & S.," that, by the express agreement of the parties, followed by the acceptance of the officer of the warehouse, there was a valid constructive delivery of the property in the goods to the appellants sufficient for the purposes of the pledge.

This was an appeal from the Court of Queen's Bench for the province of Quebec, Canada.

The suit was brought to try the right to certain wire rope and other goods, which were taken in execution, on the 17th of June, 1865, by the Sheriff of Quebec, while lying at the government examining warehouse in that city.

The writ under which the goods were seized was issued by the respondent on the 30th of May, 1865, on a judgment obtained by him against Messrs. Maxwell & Stevenson, merchants of Quebec.

To this seizure the appellants, on the 27th of June, 1865, filed an opposition afin d'annuler, alleging in effect that the goods had been previously assigned to them in pledge by the said Maxwell & Stevenson as security for an advance of $1,800, together with interest, commission, and other charges thereon, and that, at the time of the seizure, the said goods were in their lawful possession as pledgees as security for a sum of $2,058-²/₁₀ to which the whole sum due to them then amounted.

* Present, Lord Westbury, Sir J. Colville, and Sir J. Napier.

To the opposition so filed, the respondent pleaded the general issue, and also, as a special exception péremptoire en droit, that Messrs. Maxwell & Stevenson were, at the time of the advance, notoriously, and to the knowledge of the opposants, insolvent, and had stopped payment, and that the goods pledged constituted their whole estate, and that the transaction was illegal, and in fraud of creditors.

On these pleadings, issue was joined.

Both parties subsequently proceeded to take evidence, when the following were shewn to be the facts of the case:—

The goods in question were sent from Liverpool by the steamer St. David, in the summer of 1864, consigned to Maxwell & Stevenson, and, on their arrival at Quebec, were landed and placed in the government examining warehouse on the 6th of August in that year.

The examining warehouse is a part of the Customs department, established under the authority of the Canadian Customs Act (Consolidated Statutes of Canada), c. 17, s. 11, cl. 4, and s. 14, cl. 4.

The routine of the Custom House at Quebec was proved to be as follows:—The master of a vessel arriving produces a manifest or statement of his cargo; and the respective owners of goods possessing bills of lading, or any other legal mark of ownership, pass entries for them. If this is not done, the goods are sent to the examining warehouse as unclaimed; when there, they are held until properly passed through the Customs; that is to say, either the duty paid, or the necessary bond given. When an entry of goods is passed, whether on their first landing, or while lying at the examining warehouse, the duties are paid at the time of such entry, and a permit given for their removal, or a bond is given by their owner for the due payment of the duties, and the goods are then entered in the bonded warehouse book, and placed in some bonded warehouse; the examining warehouse is treated as a bonded warehouse for this purpose, and goods which are there before entry remain so afterwards. Goods which have been so bonded are not delivered out of the examining warehouse, or other bonded warehouse, without a permit from the head locker. Special statutory provisions are contained in the Customs Act, s. 46, for the transfer by bill of sale of bonded goods, and a book was kept for the purpose of entering such sales.

The whole of the Customs department is under the control of the collector of Customs at the port of Quebec, but the examining warehouse is under the special charge of François Xavier Métivier.

Métivier received no express instructions from the collector to accept any order for the delivery or transfer of goods from the parties owning them, but it was always his custom to do so, and considered by him to be the rule of the office.

Shortly after the goods were bonded and placed in the examining warehouse, Messrs. Maxwell & Stevenson applied to the appellants, who were also merchants at Quebec, carrying on their business under the style of "D. D. Young & Co.," for a loan of $1,800 upon the security of their goods. The appellants having consented, gave to Messrs. Maxwell & Stevenson their promissory note at three months' date for that amount, and received from them the following document:—
"$1,800.

"Quebec, 19th August, 1864.

"Received from D. D. Young & Co., their note at three months' date for eighteen hundred dollars, being an advance on 89 packages of wire rope rigging, marked M. & S., No. 1 @ 89 ex-stmr. St. David, and now in H. M. ex. warehouse, said advance to be repaid to D. D. Young & Co., on or before the maturity of their note, together with a commission of 5 per cent. on the amt. advanced. Should the advance not be repaid by that time, D. D. Y. & Co. to have the right of selling the rigging, &c., and paying themselves out of the proceeds.

"MAXWELL & STEVENSON."

Messrs. Maxwell & Stevenson at the same time gave to the appellants the following order on the officer in charge of the examining warehouse:—

"The Officer in charge of H. M.

"Examining Warehouse.

"Quebec, 19th August, 1864.

"Will please hold, subject to the Order of D. D. Young & Co., 13 coils wire rope, Nos. 1 to 13; 1 bag ironwork, No. 14; 74 coils rope, Nos. 15 to 88; and one bale merchandise, No. 89, all marked M. & S., landed from the steamer St. David, on her last passage from Liverpool, they paying the duty and storage charge before removal, and oblige,

"Maxwell & Stevenson."

This order was the same day taken by one of the appellants' clerks to the said François X. Métivier above-mentioned, who wrote across it, "accepted, F. X. Métivier," and at the same time wrote opposite the entry of the goods in the warehouse book kept by him, "subject to D. D. Young's order."

Messrs. Maxwell & Stevenson discounted the appellants' note.

Messrs. Maxwell & Stevenson were unable to repay the advance before the note became due; but at their request the appellants consented not to sell the goods, but to continue to hold them as security for their advance, in consideration of being paid an extra commission of 2½ per cent. for an extension of time of three months. Interest was also to be paid at 7 per cent. The appellants accordingly retired the said note at maturity, and continued to hold the goods.

On December 30th, 1864, Messrs. Maxwell & Stevenson duly entered the goods and bonded them. An entry of them was then made in the bonded warehouse book, kept by James Sealey as above-mentioned, but the goods remained in the examining warehouse.

In the month of June, 1865, the three months' extension of time having expired, the appellants prepared to sell the goods, and gave instructions to their brokers, A. J. Markham & Co., to that effect. The sale was, however, stopped by the seizure of the goods in execution as above-mentioned.

The amount due from Messrs. Maxwell & Stevenson to the appellants at the time the goods were seized, was proved to be the sum of $2,058, ¹¹/₁₆ mentioned in the appellants' opposition.

There was no evidence that the state of the affairs of Messrs. Maxwell & Stevenson was known at the time to the appellants.

The case was heard on the merits before Mr. Justice Stuart, who, on July 2nd, 1867, gave judgment for the appellants, declaring them pledgees of the goods in question, and granting mainlevée of the seizure thereof.

The respondent having inscribed the cause for review before three judges, the cause was again argued before Meredith, C.J., Stuart, J., and Taschereau, J., and on the 5th of February, 1868, the Court gave judgment, reversing the judgment of the preceding 2nd of July, on the ground that the appellants did not obtain possession of the goods so as to give effect to the contract of pledge, and dismissing the opposition of the appellants with costs; Mr. Justice Stuart dissenting.

From this judgment the appellants appealed to the Court of Queen's Bench of the Province of Quebec, Canada, and on the 19th September, 1868, that Court gave judgment confirming the judgment of the superior Court.

From this judgment the present appeal was brought.

Sir R. Palmer and Bompas for the appellants. The execution creditor stands in the shoes of the execution debtor. The question then is: What were the rights of Messrs. Maxwell & Stevenson at the time of the seizure by the sheriff? The chief officer at the examining warehouse had authority to accept the order of Messrs. Maxwell & Stevenson that the goods should be held subject to the appellants' order. The possession of the chief officer was, from the time that he accepted the said order, the possession of the appellants, notwithstanding the lien of the shipowner for freight; and, if not, it became such as soon as the freight was paid. At the time of the seizure, Messrs. Maxwell & Stevenson had no legal right, or actual power, to take possession of, or interfere with, or sell, the goods, without first paying to the appellants the sum due to them. The goods had been validly pledged to the appellants, and were in their constructive possession at the date of the seizure. Goods in the possession of a pledgee cannot be taken in execution by a judgment-creditor of the pledgor. The respondent failed to prove that Messrs. Maxwell & Stevenson were, at the time of the appellants' advance, insolvent to the knowledge of the appellants. They referred to Eyre v. McDowell (1); Watts v. Porter (2); Beavan v. Lord Oxford (3).

No appearance was entered on behalf of the respondent.

Cur. adv. vult.

SIR JOSEPH NAPIER (on Feb. 11) delivered the judgment of their lordships.—In this case the respondent claims the benefit of a seizure of goods, under a writ of fiat facias issued on a judgment recovered by him against Messrs. Maxwell & Stevenson, of Quebec, merchants. The writ was issued on the 30th May, 1865, and certain goods, alleged to be the property of Messrs. Maxwell and Stevenson, were seized under the writ by the sheriff. The appellants opposed the execution on the ground that by a contract in writing, bearing date the 19th August, 1864, the property of Maxwell & Stevenson in the goods in question was conveyed to them, and an authority to sell expressly conferred by Maxwell & Stevenson for the purpose of securing repayment of advances made by the appellants on the faith of this contract; and as repayment had not been made, that the seizure under the writ should be set aside.

The cause was heard in the first instance by Mr. Justice Stuart, one of the judges of the Superior Court of Lower Canada. He allowed the opposition, and, after declaring that the opponents were pledgees of the goods in question, he granted mainlevée of the seizure thereof, that is, directed an amoveas manus against the execution creditor. This decision was reviewed by the full Court. The majority of the judges held that the contract had not been perfected by delivery of possession of the goods so as to constitute a pledge; and on this ground they reversed

(1) 9 H.L. Cases, 619.

(2) 3 E. & B. 743; s.c. 23 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Q.B. 345.

(3) 6 De Gex, M. & G. 507; s.c. 24 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 311.

the decision of Mr. Justice Stuart, and dismissed the opposition to execution.

The case was then taken by appeal to the Court of Queen's Bench, and the judgment of the Superior Court was affirmed. The appeal to Her Majesty in council now under consideration has been brought against the judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench.

In the reasons of the judges, which have been elaborately drawn up by Mr. Justice Badgley, the material point of contention is stated to be, "the opposants' want of possession of the pledge, actually or constructively," on or after the 19th August, 1864. It is at the same time stated that "the preferential privilege of the pledgee in the thing pledged, according to our law, is undeniable, over the creditors of the pledgor when the contract is complete and perfect." It is suggested (but for the first time) that supposing the contract of pledge to have been completed, the course adopted by the appellants in opposing the execution was not in accordance with the Canadian law.

The goods in question were shipped at Liverpool, on board a steamer called the St. David. They arrived at Quebec early in August, 1864, and were reported by the master of the vessel at the customs in Quebec as consigned to Messrs. Maxwell & Stevenson.

According to the regulation of the Customs the goods were taken to their examining warehouse, and in the book of M. Metivier, the chief officer in charge of the warehouse, an entry was made of them as consigned to Maxwell & Stevenson. They were marked "M. & S." The lien on them for freight continued, and they were also liable to detention until the charges for customs' duties and storage had been satisfied. Subject to these conditions, the consignees had the ownership and the possession of the goods and also the right of dealing with them according to the rules of law applicable to transfers of goods that are subject to charges, and actual delivery does not take place at the time of the transfer.

The officer in charge of the warehouse was bound not to part with the goods until the several claims for freight, duties, and storage had been discharged. But he was at liberty, with the sanction of the consignees, to substitute in his warehouse-book the name of another as entitled to their property and possession subject to the conditions then subsisting.

"The general rule of my office" (says M. Metivier) "is, when a party applies to transfer the goods to another party, I generally make a remark in my book to keep in mind of asking a proper order from the party to whom the goods are transferred, and that is very often."

The goods having thus been placed in the Customs Examining Warehouse, and the entry having been made in the book of M. Metivier, Maxwell & Stevenson, on the 19th of August, 1864, asked for and obtained from the appellants an advance of 1,800 dollars on the goods, described in the receipt for the "advance, signed by Maxwell & Stevenson, as wire-rope, rigging, &c., marked M. & S., ex steamer St. David, and now in Her Majesty's Examining Warehouse; said advance to be repaid to D. D. Young & Co., on or before the maturity of their note, together with a commission of 5 per cent. on amount advanced. Should the advance not be repaid at that time, D. D. Young & Co. to have the right of selling the rigging, &c., and paying themselves out of proceeds."

A request note of the same date, directed to the officer in charge of Her Majesty's Examining Warehouse, and signed by Maxwell & Stevenson, was given by them to the appellants, whereby the officer was requested "to hold the goods" (described as in the receipt) "subject to the order of D. D. Young & Co., they paying the duty and storage charge before removal." On the same day this was sent to M. Metivier, who wrote across it—"Accepted, F. X. Metivier," and it was then returned to and kept by the appellants. M. Metivier also wrote an entry in his own book opposite to the entry made when the goods were first placed in the warehouse. This second entry was—"Subject to D. D. Young's order." He says—"I made that entry in order that, in case the said wire- and rope-rigging were claimed by anybody, I should require the order of D. D. Young & Co. before delivery." He further says that he would not have delivered the goods to Maxwell & Stevenson, or to any other, without an order from the appellants.

Thus, as between the Customs and the appellants, the latter stood precisely in the position in which Maxwell & Stevenson had stood before the request note was accepted and the entry made in the warehouse-book by M. Metivier; and as between the appellants and Maxwell & Stevenson, the goods in question were sufficiently transferred for the purposes of the pledge or mortgage.

It appears to their Lordships that by the express agreement of the parties in this case, followed by the acceptance of the chief warehouse-keeper, there was a valid constructive delivery of the property comprised in the contract, and that the judgment under appeal, which dismissed the opposition and gave effect to the seizure under the execution, to the prejudice of the rights of the appellants as pledgees, cannot be supported.

Their Lordships will, therefore, humbly advise her Majesty that the judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench should be reversed, and that in lieu thereof it should be ordered that the judgment of the Superior Court, which reversed the judgment of Mr. Justice Stuart, should also be reversed, and the judgment of Mr. Justice Stuart be affirmed with costs in both Courts. The appellants are entitled to have their costs of this appeal.

Attorneys—Bischoff, Bompas & Bischoff.

1870. { THOMAS PHILIPPE LA CLOCHE
Jan. 22, 24. { AND ANOTHER, appellants; March 5. { THOMAS LA CLOCHE, respondent.*

Jersey—Heir—Testamentary Law—Personal Estate—Rights of Possession of Executors.

By the law and custom of Jersey a testator who dies leaving lawful issue can only dispose of a part of his personal estate, but the executors of such testator are entitled to

* Present, Lord Westbury, Sir J. Colville and Sir J. Napier.

NEW SERIES, 39.—PRIV. COUN.

possession of the entirety of the personal estate until they have fulfilled the duties of the administration.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the full Court of Appeal of the Royal Court of Jersey, reversing the judgment of the inferior number of the Royal Court.

The appellants were the executors of Thomas La Cloche.

The respondent was the heir of the said Thomas La Cloche.

The said Thomas La Cloche, who was a native of St. Helier in the island of Jersey, made and executed his last will and testament, bearing date the 2nd day of October, 1862; by which will, after providing for all debts and some small legacies and funeral expenses, the testator bequeathed all his personal property to his grandson, Thomas Philippe La Cloche, and in case the said Thomas Philippe La Cloche should die in the life time of the testator, the testator directed that the whole of the residue of his personal estate should pass to his son, John Frederick La Cloche, and he appointed the said Thomas Philippe La Cloche and William Gaudin, the appellants, the executors of his will.

The testator died on the 13th day of October, 1864, without having altered or revoked his said will, which was proved on the 20th day of October, 1864, by the said Thomas Philippe La Cloche and William Gaudin, the executors therein named, and who were the present appellants, before the Dean of the Ecclesiastical Court of the island of Jersey.

The personal property of the testator was of considerable value, and the principal part thereof was, at the date of his decease, invested in foreign funds and railway shares, chiefly French, Spanish, and Italian, the securities for which, amounting in the whole to several hundred thousand francs, were at the time of his death held by Messrs. Mallet Brothers and Company, bankers, of Paris, who also had a considerable sum of cash belonging to the said testator's estate.

The appellants after having proved the will of the testator took measures as the executors, for the purpose of obtaining the transfer to them of the various funds and securities so invested belonging to the testator's estate, but upon applying to Messrs. Mallet Brothers and Company, they were informed that a caveat had been lodged in their hands on behalf of the respondent, Thomas La Cloche, who claimed to be the only son and the heir of the said testator.

E

On the 24th November, 1864, the appellants caused notice to be served upon Messrs. Mallet, summoning them to appear before the First Chamber of the Civil Tribunal of the Seine to show cause why they should not be ordered without delay to restore to the appellants, as such executors, with the interest due thereon for the half year then past, all the several securities and funds, and all such personal effects as had been deposited in their hands by the testator and which belonged to his succession.

The respondent appeared in the said suit, alleging that in his capacity as only son and sole heir of the deceased he had instituted before the competent tribunals an action for declaring null and void the said will, that in that position, he had an interest in seeing that the securities belonging to the succession of his father should not be placed in the hands of the executors.

On the 24th of February, 1865, the First Chamber of the Civil Tribunal decided that the present appellants had the right to receive all the moneys and personal securities, forming part of the succession of the said testator, which were in the hands of Mallet Brothers and Company, and that the said Mallet Brothers and Company were bound, notwithstanding any opposition of the respondent, to hand the same over to them, and adjudged that the respondent should pay the costs of his intervention.

The respondent appealed from this decision, and on the 29th of November, 1865, the Imperial Court of Paris reversed the decision of the Court below, on the ground that the dispute between the heir and the executors of the will related to a foreign succession, and only concerned foreigners, and that the French Courts were therefore incompetent to adjudicate thereon, and the said Court ordered that until it should be otherwise decreed the said Messrs. Mallet, Brothers should continue to remain in possession of the securities, documents, papers and moneys belonging to the succession of the said testator, Thomas La Cloche, then in their hands, and to administer them for the benefit of the persons entitled.

On the 27th of April, 1865, and after the decision of the Civil Tribunal of the Seine, but before the hearing of the appeal from that decision, the respondent, alleging himself to be the only son of the testator and sole heir to the succession of the deceased, instituted a suit in the Royal Court of Jersey against the appellants as executors of the said will, for the purpose of having the said will set aside and annulled as being made to the prejudice of the said heir and contrary to law and custom.

The suit so instituted by the respondent against the appellants came on for hearing before the inferior number of the Royal Court, and on the 20th of June, 1865, the inferior number of the Royal Court of Jersey declared that the respondent had made out his title to be considered legitimate heir of the testator, and determined that the said will ought to be reduced, ad legitimum modum, thereby in effect deciding that the testator had by his said will exceeded the amount of which he could by law dispose beneficially, but that the will ought not to be set aside or annulled, and the Court sent the parties before the Greffier as arbitrator, to proceed and act in conformity with the judgment of the Court.

Proceedings were taken before the Greffier, when the appellants objected that they ought, according to custom, during a year and a day at all events, to be seised of all the personal property (meubles), constituting the succession, and not having been so seized according to custom, they could not be held bound to render, as they were required to do, accounts of the said testator's estate, and that the conduct of the respondent in intervening in the said action before the French tribunals, and thereby resisting their title to receive and administer the said testator's personal property, in fact operated to take from them both the liability and the power to render such accounts. These objections of the appellants, however, were then overruled.

The appellants also commenced an action in the Royal Court of Jersey.

The plaint in this action alleged that the appellants were the executors of Thomas La Cloche deceased, and that, in consequence and by force of the law and custom of Jersey they became of right invested with the entirety of the rights of the succession of the said Thomas La Cloche, and had, in consequence, the absolute seisin from the moment of the death of the testator of all the effects, debts, and personal property of the deceased.

The respondent pleaded, amongst other pleas, that he was the only son and heir of the said Thomas La Cloche, that as such he was entitled by law to the possession and property of two-thirds at the least of the personal estate of the deceased, of which right it was impossible for the deceased to deprive him; that by the rule of law, "la mort saisit le vif," he was in his character of heir, from the moment of the death of the testator, seized of the entirety of the personal estate, and was not bound to divest himself of any part thereof, before it should have been definitely determined whether or not there existed a valid will of the deceased; that the question of setting aside the will of the deceased was then pending before the Court, in a cause to which he the said defendant in his character of heir of the deceased, and the residuary legatees, were parties; and that although the Court had decided that the will of the deceased ought not to be set aside in its entirety, but ought only to be reduced, ad legitimum modum the question as to the validity of the will had not been set at rest, the plaintiffs having appealed from the said decision; that even supposing that the judgment of the Court should be confirmed on appeal, it would be evidently contrary to principle and to law, that he the heir should be bound to divest himself of the part which belonged to him of right, in order to transfer it to persons who had no right, except such as they derived from the testator, in the degree in which he had power to make a will. And the respondent alleged that the question as to the seisin to the estate of the deceased could not be decided until the result should be known of the suit to set aside the will, that he ought to remain seized of the entirety of the said estate until the termination of that suit; and that, upon the supposition most favourable to the executors, they could only be entitled to one-third, at most, of the said estate.

The appellants answered that the seisin conferred upon the executors, in consequence of the trust committed to them, had its origin and its reason in the will formally expressed by the testator, that this seisin had a character essentially administrative, and displaced the common law seisin of the heir, which only became effective when the mission of the executors was accomplished; that the maxim, "la mort saisit le vif," only conferred the direct and immediate seisin on the heir, in a case in which there was no will, and therefore, that in the present case it was not applicable. That it was from the very hands of the testamentary executors that the heir was to receive his net share of the succession—the testamentary executors being the direct continuation (continueurs) of the very person of the testator, as far as regarded the carrying out of his last wishes.

On the 13th of October, 1866, the inferior number of the Royal Court of Jersey unanimously gave judgment in this action in favour of the appellants, as follows:—"Considering that, according to the custom followed in this bailiwick, the testamentary executors are seized of the personal property of the testator. That the seisin of the executors is not permitted for their own profit, but in trust to serve in the execution of the will. That the seisin of the executors is indivisible by the very nature of their duties as such, and that they ought to have the seisin of the entirety of the personal estate of the deceased, all the more because from the moment of taking upon themselves the trust, they are bound to prepare an inventory of the entirety of the said succession, and are liable to the demands of those who have claims against the said estate. The Court, for these reasons, has overruled the pleas of the defendant, and is of opinion that the plaintiffs, as executors of the will of the said late Thomas La Cloche, are entitled to the seisin of the entirety of the personal estate of the said deceased, and that they are to be preferred to the heir in the possession of the effects, deeds, and securities of the said succession, and the defendant is condemned to pay the costs."

The respondent appealed on all the points from the judgment of the inferior number of the Royal Court to the full Court.

On the 27th of October, 1868, the full Court gave judgment upon the appeal, the Judges being divided in opinion. Three of the jurats were of opinion that the judgment of the Court below ought to be affirmed for the same reasons. Two jurats were of opinion that the testator having died in the island, where the law is superior to his will, the law allowing the testator to bequeath only one-third of his personal property, the principle "le mort saisit le vif" gave to the heir the seisin of the remaining third of the personal estate of the deceased, each party contributing to the charges or debts of the estate in the above mentioned proportions. One jurat was of opinion that considering that by the act of the Court of the 20th day of June, 1865, the will of the said Thomas La Cloche, Esquire, was upon an action between the parties to this case reduced ad legitimum modum and the said parties were sent before the Greffier as Arbitrator in order to establish the amount of the estate of the deceased, and to proceed in conformity with the judgment of the Court, that by that judgment, the right of the said Thomas La Cloche in his capacity as sole heir of his father to the two-thirds of the said personal estate was in conformity with the acknowledged laws and customs of the island, and that the said Thomas Philippe La Cloche, one of the executors of the said will and residuary legatee, had a right to the other third, subject to the charges fixed by law. That it had been established by the proceedings taken before the Greffier, that nearly the whole of the personal estate appertaining to the said succession, consisting of securities payable to bearer, amounting to nearly one million of francs, was in the hands or in the custody of Messrs. Mallet Brothers, bankers, at Paris, where the deceased had placed them. That an heir in a direct line cannot be deprived of his right to take possession of the share coming to him in a personal succession. That the right of the heir to two-thirds of the said estate having been acknowledged by the above-mentioned judgment, that the said Thomas La Cloche as heir of his father should, under all the circumstances of the case, be invested with the share to which he was entitled before the executors could take possession of the third of the said estate, which the deceased had right to dispose of. One jurat was of the following opinion:—That if the two executors were strangers, and had no interest in the will as legatees, they would have a right to the seisin of the whole of the personal estate of the testator, but considering that Thomas Philippe La Cloche, one of the executors, was residuary legatee, it would not be right towards the heir, to invest the executors with the whole of the personal estate, but that the executors should have the seisin of the portion that the testator had by law the right of bequeathing; for these reasons he was of opinion that the judgment of the inferior number should be reversed until the final adjudication of the suit entered for the revocation of the said will. One jurat was of opinion that the judgment of the inferior number ought to be reversed, inasmuch as, according to the laws and customs of the island, a father cannot dispose of the whole of his personal estate, but only of one-third in conformity with the wish of the law. And whereas, by an act dated the 20th day of June, 1865, the will of the deceased, wherein he disposed of the whole of his personal estate, without any reference to his heir, was modified, the said will being reduced ad legitimum modum, that is to say, in accordance with law, and the parties were sent before the Greffier, in order to establish the share appertaining to each party. That the executors had no right to claim the seisin of the whole of the personal estate of the deceased, that they should only take after shares had been apportioned, the portion which might come under their administration, and disposal of it according to the will of the testator. That for these reasons the pleas of the executors should be dismissed, and the heir should have the seisin of the two-thirds, and the executors the seisin in possession, of the other third of the personal estate belonging to the said deceased, the latter being bound, should it be asked, to give security for the administration of the share of the said personal property under their control.

The Court, therefore, reversed the judgment of the Court below, and condemned the appellants to pay the costs of the action, with the exception of the costs of the rehearing, which costs were to be shared equally between the parties.

From this judgment, the appellants appealed to Her Majesty in council.

Sir R. Palmer, Mr. Millar and Mr. Vickery (Jersey bar), for the appellants.

By the law and custom of the island of Jersey, every person of the age of twenty years, not labouring under incapacity, has power to make a will, and may nominate persons as executors to whom he may commit the trust and duty of administering his property. By the law and custom of Jersey, an executor who has in due form proved a will, is liable to the payment of all debts of the testator, and is entitled, enabled, and bound to collect and get in and recover all the personal estate of the testator. Assuming that the respondent is the legitimate son and heir of the testator, and entitled to share in the division of his estate, yet the right of the testator to make a will and to appoint executors is not thereby prejudiced or affected. Principle, convenience, and authority are in favour of this practice. The executors are the proper persons to receive and give receipts for the entirety of the property of the testator, and to administer and apply the same according to law, and to transfer or pay over to the heir of a testator so much of the testator's estate as he shall be unable to dispose of. The maxim "le mort saisit le vif," on which the respondent relies, applies only when a person dies intestate, and when thereupon his property passes direct to the heir. At the time when the Norman law prevailed in England, the whole personal estate of a testator devolved upon the executors, though a testator's wife and children could not be deprived of the whole of the person-

They referred to Terrien (1), Pothier (2), Spence Equi. Juris. (3), and W. Williams on Executors, citing Glanville 2 Fleta.

Mr. Mellish and the Procureur General of Jersey (M. Marett), for the respondent.

The right of a testator to vest his personal estate in his executors is dependant on and is limited by the power given him by law of disposing of his estate. The testator has left an only son, and has consequently by law power to dispose of one-third only of his personal estate. The executors of the will have no legal right to the seisin of the whole of such estate, but at most to the seisin of the "part disponible," which is one-third part. The fact that the testator has made a will disposing of the whole of his personal property, cannot add to the powers of the executors, or operate to the prejudice of the heir. An act done in violation of the law can have no effect. The respondent is the sole heir of the testator, and is entitled to two-thirds of his personal estate as his lawful right, irrespective of the wishes of the testator and free in all respects from his control. By virtue of the maxim "le mort saisit le vif" he became seized of the succession of the deceased at the very moment and by the very fact of the death of the testator. He cannot be compelled against his will to suffer the executors to have the possession and control of the portion of the estate of the deceased which by law devolves on the heir. By the law of Jersey the executors of a will cannot be called upon to give an account of their administration until after the expiration of a year and a day from the date of the probate of the will. During all that time, the heir would be excluded from the enjoyment of what is his own. A testator must be considered as having died intestate as to that part of his personal estate over which the law gives him no testamentary power.

Sir R. Palmer in reply.

Cour. adv. vult.

(1) Des Testaments : Des Exécuteurs, Commentaires de Droit Civil de Normandie, bk. 6. c. 7. p. 217. Coutume d'Orléans. Coutume Réformée.

(2) Traité de Droit Civil. Dupin's Ed. vol. vii. p. 343; vol. x. p. 641.

(3) Vol. i. p. 189.

LORD WESTBURY (on March 5th) delivered the judgment of their Lordships.

The appellants are the executors of the will of Dr. Thomas la Cloche, who, at the time of his death, was domiciled in the island of Jersey.

The respondent claims to be the lawful son and only child of the testator.

The construction and effect of the testator's will, and the succession to his moveable estate, must be determined by the law of Jersey, being the law of the domicile.

By that law a testator who dies leaving a widow and a lawful child, cannot dispose by his last will of more than one-third part of his personal estate, and if the will professes to dispose of the entirety or more than one-third part of the moveables, it is liable to be reduced ad legitimum modum.

The testator died on the 13th of October, 1864. His will was duly registered, that is to say proved by the appellants as executors on the 20th of October, 1864.

The personal estate of the testator consisted chiefly of shares in foreign funds and railway companies, the certificates and coupons of which were at the time of his death, and still are, in the hands of his bankers, MM. Mallet, Freres & Co., bankers at Paris.

The appellants demanded from MM. Mallet the delivery of those securities to themselves as executors. The respondent as heir-at-law intervened and entered a caveat against such delivery.

The Imperial Court of Paris, on appeal, decided that as the dispute related to a foreign succession, and concerned foreigners only, it was itself incompetent, and that the property must remain in the hands of the bankers until the right of possession had been decided by the tribunals of the domicile.

Pending these proceedings in France, a suit was instituted in Jersey by the respondent against the appellants for the purpose of annulling the will, and the appellants in their defence impeached the legitimacy of the respondent. In these suits it seems that the Court in Jersey of the first instance refused to set aside the will, but made a decree reducing it ad legitimum modum, and also declared that the respondent had made out his title as lawful heir to the testator. From these judgments both parties appealed, but at this stage of the proceedings it seems to have occurred to them that the property could never be obtained from the bankers at Paris until the right to the saisine or possession of the moveable estate had been finally determined, and a final decision given on the question whether the executors were entitled to take possession of or recover the whole of the moveables for the purposes of administration, or whether the heir was entitled to take possession of two-thirds directly, excluding any possession thereof by the executors.

Accordingly, the executors commenced an action in the Royal Court of Jersey, and by their plaint prayed a declaration that they as executors have by virtue of the oath that had been administered to them, and by virtue of the law and customs of the country, the saisine or possession of the entirety of the moveable succession of the deceased testator.

In answer to this action the present respondent pleaded that as sole heir-at-law and only child of the deceased testator, he had right by law to the possession and ownership of two-thirds at least of the moveable succession of the deceased, and that by the rule of law, le mort saisit le vif, he was seized thereof from the moment of the death of the testator.

The judgment of the inferior number of the Royal Court of Jersey was given to this effect, viz.: "Considering that, according to the custom constantly followed in this bailiwick, the testamentary executors are seized of the moveable property of the testator, that the seisin of the executors is not granted them for their own personal benefit, but rather in trust to serve the administration of the will; that the seisin of executors is by the very nature of their duties indivisible, and that they ought to have possession of the entirety of the moveable property of the deceased, the more because, from the time of their entry into charge of it, they are bound to furnish an inventory of the entirety of the succession, and are bound to answer the demands of all who have any claims against the succession. Therefore the Court dismisses the plea of the defender, and determines that the plaintiffs as executors of the will of the deceased are entitled to the seisin of the entirety of the moveable succession of the deceased, and ought to be preferred to the heir in the possession of the moveables, documents, and evidences of the succession."

From this judgment the present respondent appealed to the superior number of the Royal Court.

Before stating the decree of the Appellate Tribunal it is material to observe that the judgment of the inferior number included the decision of the Bailly, who is the principal legal authority in Jersey.

Their Lordships think, therefore, that great weight is to be ascribed to the Bailly's statement of the law and custom of the island. The Court of Appeal, or Court of the greater number, were greatly divided in opinion; three of the jurats or judges were in favour of affirming the decision of the Court below. Two of the jurats were of opinion with the respondent that the maxim le mort saisit le vif gave to the heir the saisine or possession of two-third parts, and to the executors the seisin of one-third part only, of the moveable succession of the testator.

Another jurat appears to have decided against the right of the executors, because in this particular case one of them was residuary legatee.

The two remaining jurats appear to have also decided against the executors, on the ground that the will had been reduced ad legitimum modum, and the parties sent before the Greffier to prove the portions which belonged to each party; and that this had deprived the executors of the right of claiming seisin of the whole of the moveable property. Upon the whole, a majority of five jurats out of eight pronounced for the reversal of the decision of the Court of inferior number. Their Lordships have stated shortly the grounds of the judgments, because they wish it to be observed that the statement of the law or custom of Jersey, contained in the judgment of the Court of inferior number, is not in terms denied or qualified by the majority of the judges of the Court of Appeal.

In determining the abstract question raised by this appeal, their Lordships have felt anxious to form their decision entirely upon the proper evidence of the law and custom of Jersey, without being influenced by considerations of convenience, or by analogies derived from the laws or customs of other countries.

Their Lordships have, however, much difficulty in ascertaining what are the recognised authorities on the law of Jersey.

The book called Le Grand Costumier de Normandie, which is probably the earliest admitted authority, does not appear to contain anything on the subject of testamentary executors or succession of moveables, and was not cited or referred to in the argument. The commentary of M. Terrien on the civil law, as well public as private, observed in the country and Duchy of Normandy, was cited by the counsel both for the appellants and respondent, and the Attorney-General for the Island of Jersey seemed to admit it to be a book of authority in the Courts of Jersey. These commentaries were published at Paris in the year 1574, a considerable time after the final separation of the Duchy of Normandy from the Crown of England, but apparently several years before the formation of La Coutume Réformée of the Duchy, which appears to have been prepared under the authority of letters patent granted by Henry III. of France, and dated the 14th of October, 1585.

The commentary of Terrien, therefore, may be reasonably regarded as the best evidence of the old custom of Normandy, and also of the Channel Islands before the separation of Normandy from the English Crown. In this commentary, in the 7th chapter of the sixth book, which is entitled Des Testaments, after stating the law, that if a testator be married and have a child in potestate patris, he cannot make a will of more than one-third of his moveable property, under the heading Des Exécuteurs, is the following passage:—

"Fant supplier icy ce qui est omis à dire de l'office & pouvoir des exécuteurs: C'est qu'ils sont saisis dedans l'an & iour du trespas du testateur, des biens meubles demourez par son decez, iusques à la valeur & accomplissement du testament, & preferez aux héritiers en la possession desdits biens meubles: comme le portent aucunes costumes de ce Royaume. Et peuvent dedans ledit an prendre & intenter proces pour raison de la dite exécution, & estre connus comme exécuteurs, des choses contenues au testament. Et aussi peuvent & doyvent faire délivrance des laiz aux légataires, quand ils ont accepté la charge de l'exécution. Acceptans laquelle & eux entremettans au fait d'icelle sans benefice d'inventaire, sont obliges aux dettes, laiz testamentaires, & funeraillies du défunct. Et sont appelez detteurs d'avanture par nostre costume, . . . Et sont tenus à rendre conte de leur exécution aux héritiers & en payer le reliqua."

We construe this passage as importing that the executors are entitled to the possession of the whole of the moveable property of the testator for a year and a day after the decease, and that their possession will continue until they have received the amount of the moveable estate bequeathed by the will, and have also fulfilled the duties of administration.

In the "Coutume Réformée," according to the commentary of Godefroi, which was published in 1626, and the commentary of Basnage, which was published in 1694, the passage which we have cited from Terrien's Commentary appears to form the text of the 430th article of the Coutume itself, in the Chapter "Des Testaments," and which is thus expressed:—

"Les exécuteurs testamentaires sont saisis durant l'an et iour du trespas du defunct des biens meubles demeurez apres le décès pour l'accomplissement du testament jusques à la concurrence des laiz et autres charges, en faisant au préalable inventaire appellez les heritiers et en leur absence les plus prochains parens: si mieux l'héritier ne veut saisir l'exécuteur testamentaire des laiz et charges en argent ou en essence."

These words are nearly identical with those of Terrien, except that for the words "jusques à la valeur," are substituted the words "jusques à la concurrence des laiz et autres charges," which are explanatory of the words "jusques à la valeur." The law and course of procedure are plainly indicated by this article. Immediately on the death of a testator, the executors are to take possession of the whole of his personal estate, and to continue in such possession until they have collected or received sufficient property to answer the bequests validly made by the will, the testator's debts and all the expenses of administration; but at the beginning of their office the executors are bound to make an inventory of the whole of the moveables, and to cite the heirs for the purpose of seeing this done, unless the heir elect to pay or secure to the executor the full amount of the bequests, debts and expenses, in which case it would seem that the heir becomes entitled to the possession.

The "Coutume d'Orléans" and the "Coutume de Paris" (although they differed in this, that the "Coutume d'Orléans" included heritable property, and did not confine the rule to moveables), appear to have contained the same law or custom with respect to the "saisine" of executors as that stated in the passage cited from Terrien, and embodied in the article of the "Coutume Réformée" as cited from Godefroi and Basnage. These "coutumes" may be legitimately referred to for the purpose of testing the interpretation we have put on the custom as stated by Terrien, and also for the purpose of explaining the force and effect of particular expressions. Pothier, in his treatise on the "Coutumes des Duché, Bailliage, et Prévoté d'Orléans," under the 16th title, "Des Testaments," Article 290 (10th Vol. of Dupin's Ed. 621), after referring to the 163rd Article of the "Ancienne Coutume" and to the 297th Article of the "Coutume de Paris," states the "Coutume d'Orléans" in the following words, which are nearly identical with the passage in Terrien:

"Les exécuteurs des testamens sont saisis des biens meubles et héritages du testateur jusques à la valeur et accomplissement du testament."

At the word "saisis" is the following note:—

"C'est-à-dire, qu'ils peuvent d'eux-mêmes se mettre en possession des biens du testateur, en faisant faire un inventaire desdits biens, et sans qu'ils soient tenus d'en demander aucune délivrance à l'héritier; ce qui n'empêche pas que l'héritier ne demeure vrai possesseur de tous les biens de la succession, dont il a été saisi par le défunt dès l'instant de sa mort, suivant l'article 301: car ces exécuteurs ne sont en possession que comme procureurs légataires de l'héritier, pour exécuter à sa décharge les dispositions testamentaires; de manière que l'héritier est censé continuer de posséder par eux."

And again, in his "Traité du Droit français," under the head "Traité des Testaments," 2nd Article entitled "De la Saisine des Exécuteurs testamentaires" (7th Vol. of Dupin's Ed. 348), is this explanatory passage:—

"Le pouvoir des exécuteurs testamentaires consiste principalement dans la saisine, que les Coutumes accordent à l'exécuteur testamentaire, pour l'accomplissement du testament. Cette saisine est compatible avec celle de l'héritier; car cette saisine, qui est accordée à l'exécuteur, n'est pas une vraie possession; l'exécuteur, par cette saisine, est constitué séquestre; il n'est en possession qu'au nom de l'héritier; c'est l'héritier qui est le vrai possesseur de tous les biens de la succession, suivant la règle, le mort saisit le vif; c'est la doctrine de Dumoulin, qui, sur l'art. 95 de Paris, dit: Hæc consuetudo non facit quin hæres sit saisitus ut dominus, sed operatur quod executor potest ipse manum ponere et apprehendere . . . et etiam executor non est verus possessor, et nisi ut procurator tantum."

These passages appear to their Lordships to be very applicable to the case before them, and to reconcile the arguments of the appellants and respondent. It is true, according to this interpretation, that under the maxim le mort saisit le vif, the children of a testator are from the moment of the death the true owners of that part of the moveable estate which belongs to them, but it is equally true that the law makes the executors les procureurs légaux of the heir, which procurator is irrevocable until l'accomplissement du testament, and in this character the law gives the executors full right and title, d'eux-mêmes, that is, in their own names, to take possession of, and recover and receive the whole of the moveables for the purposes of administration. In the same article, Pothier remarks: "Observez, que l'accomplissement du testament comprend non-seulement l'acquiescement des legs, mais aussi celui des dettes mobilières de la succession; car l'acquiescement de ces dettes fait partie de l'exécution testamentaire." In the argument before us it was admitted by the respondent's counsel that it was the right and duty of the executors to pay the debts of their testator, and that they were liable accordingly to the creditors, but if an obligation thus indefinite be thrown upon them it seems to follow of necessity, first, that the right to possess and retain the whole of the personal estate must remain with them "jusqu'à l'accomplissement du testament;" secondly, that the portion that belongs to the heir cannot be ascertained until the amount of this indefinite prior charge has been discovered and liquidated. This, however, must be subject to the right of the heir to interpose and demand possession from the executors by depositing with them the full amount of the debts and other charges of administration, and of the bequests made by the will, if at least there be such a custom in the Island of Jersey, as there seems to be in the Coutume réformée of Normandy, and in the Coutumes of Orléans and Paris.

The cases which have been collected and given in evidence by the appellants, although obscure, and as to some of them of little application, yet so far as they go distinctly confirm the conclusion which has been stated.

Thus, in No. 12, the Court directs the executor to deliver over a third of the net residue, i.e., of the clear residue, to the legatees; and in the case cited, No. 14, the judgment of the Court is thus prefaced:—

"Considering that the execution of a will cannot be regarded as ended until the executor has recovered all that may be due to the succession of the testator, and out of it has paid his debts,—and more particularly in the case No. 16, which was decided on the 24th March, 1860, the Court in the record of its judgment lays down the following principles:—

1. That a testamentary executor is seized in full right of the moveables of a succession, for a year and a day from the date of the death of the testator.

2. That these moveables during the year and the day are in the custody and under the personal responsibility of the executor.

3. That after possession for a year and a day the executor must carry the will into effect, and deliver good and faithful accounts to the person entitled.

F

No case or other authority has been cited by the respondent in support of the judgment appealed from.

By way of confirmation of the conclusion which their Lordships are disposed to draw from the authorities they have cited, may be added the illustrative fact, that shortly after the Norman invasion of this country the present law or custom of Jersey appears to have prevailed in England, and was most probably, therefore, brought in by William the Conqueror. It is stated by Glanville to have been the common law of the land in the reign of Henry II. with respect to moveable successions; and accordingly the wife and the children were entitled to recover from the executors their proportionate parts of the personalty of the testator, and the writ entitled De rationabili parte was framed for their relief, which plainly shews that the executors were regarded as entitled, in the first instance, to the seisin or possession of the whole of the personal estate. Without dwelling, therefore, on the great inconvenience that would result from such a rule as is contended for by the respondent, their Lordships are clearly of opinion that the judgment appealed from is erroneous, and contrary to the established law and custom of Jersey, and they will therefore humbly advise Her Majesty to reverse the judgment appealed from, to affirm the judgment of the Court of the inferior number, and to direct the respondent to pay to the appellants their costs of the proceedings in the Court of the superior number, and also their costs of this appeal.

Attorneys—Jones, Blaxland & Son, for appellants;
Hancock, Saunders & Hawksford, for respondent.

1870. } THOMAS NYE (appellant) v. JAMES
July 19. } MACDONALD (respondent).*

Lower Canada—Notary Public—Certificate of—Deed—Execution—Evidence.

In a petitory action in Lower Canada, the plaintiff produced a deed of sale executed before a notary public in Upper Canada, and a certificate by such notary of the due execution of the deed. No further evidence of execution was produced:—Held, that the certificate of a notary public of the due execution of a deed in a colony regulated by English law does not dispense with proper evidence of execution, though the certificate is put in evidence in a colony regulated by French law, where such certificate is sufficient evidence.

This was an appeal from the Court of Queen's Bench, province of Quebec, Lower Canada.

The action was brought in the Superior Court for Lower Canada by the appellant against the respondent, to recover possession of a piece of land, in the township of Godmanchester, in the district of Montreal.

The declaration alleged that by a deed of sale of the 11th November, 1841, executed at Montreal, before one Doucet and his colleague, public notaries, Alexander Lake, otherwise called James Lake, yeoman, and Mary his wife, both of the township of Loughborough, by their attorney, William Teeples, duly appointed in virtue of a power of attorney annexed to the deed, sold the said land to the appellant.

That the respondent had unjustly obtained possession of the half of the said land so sold, and refused to restore it, and had received the rents and profits to the value of 600*l*. The declaration then prayed that the appellant might be declared owner of the said half, and the respondent adjudged to deliver up the same, with the rents and profits, from the time of his unjust possession, and pay the appellant 600*l*. as damages.

The respondent pleaded, first, that neither the vendors of the appellant nor their auteurs ever had any title to the land, and that the respondent was in possession as proprietor at the time of the alleged sale to the appellant; and the general issue.

* Present, Lord Cairns, Sir J. Colvile, and Sir J. Napier.

The appellant answered the first plea by alleging title, as follows:—

That on the 4th of January, 1814, the land in question was by letters patent under the Great Seal, granted to John Rankin, in trust for himself and his brothers and sisters, James, David, Mary, and Elizabeth, his and their heirs and assigns for ever in free and common socage. That John, James, Mary, and Elizabeth died intestate, leaving David their only surviving heir and representative. That David by will devised the said land to Mary Lake, described as the wife of James Lake, of Loughborough, yeoman, and to her heirs and assigns. That David died in March or April, 1833, without having altered his will, and that the said will was duly proved at Kingston, on the 9th of October, 1833. That Mary Lake, in conjunction with her husband, Alexander Lake, otherwise called James Lake, at Kingston, on the 8th of October, 1841, executed a power of attorney to William Teeple, in the presence of witnesses, one of whom, Samuel Rorke, was a notary public, who then and there signed his certificate, attesting the due execution of the said power of attorney. That the deed of sale mentioned in the declaration was executed under this power of attorney. That the power of attorney, the certificate of Rorke, and a certificate of the Administrator of the Government of the Province that Rorke was a notary public, were deposited with the aforesaid Doucet, one of the notaries before whom the deed of sale was executed. That thus the title of David Rankin became vested in the appellant under the deed of sale.

The respondent replied generally to this answer.

At the trial the following documentary and oral evidence was adduced:—A copy of the letters patent of 1814; extracts from registers proving the deaths of John, Mary, James, and Elizabeth Rankin; the probate of the will of David Rankin, and the affidavit of one of the executors; the power of attorney from Alexander Lake and Mary Lake, his wife, to William Teeple to sell the land devised in the will, executed by the two Lakes in the presence of two witnesses, one being a notary public. To this power of attorney was annexed the notarial certificate of the notary, and a certificate of the Administrator of the Government of the Province that the said notary was a notary public of Upper Canada.

On the 31st of October the Superior Court gave judgment, dismissing the action with costs, on the ground that the appellant had failed to establish by evidence the material allegations of his declaration, and more especially that William Teeple was the attorney of Mary, wife of James Lake, mentioned in the will of David Rankin, duly authorised to sell the said land and premises.

From this judgment the appellant appealed to the Court of Queen's Bench, and on the 6th December, 1864, that Court gave judgment, affirming the judgment of the Court below.

The present appeal was brought to reverse this judgment.

Mr. Garth and Mr. Gibbs for the appellant.—The judgment of the Superior Court of Lower Canada was contrary to law, and ought to have been reversed. The appellant produced evidence sufficient in law to support the material allegations of his declaration. The appellant established that William Teeple was the attorney of Mary, the wife of James Lake, mentioned in the will of David Rankin, duly authorised to sell the said land and premises. The execution of the power of attorney is admitted on the pleadings. But if this were not so, it is sufficiently proved. By the French law which prevails in Lower Canada, a notarial certificate is conclusive evidence of the due execution of the instrument executed before a notary public. Even if it would not have been sufficient evidence before the Courts in Upper Canada, where English law prevails, it must be sufficient in Lower Canada, which is ruled by French law. Evidence is governed by the Lex Fori. A notary has a well known commercial character. The certificate must operate according to the law of the country where it is produced in evidence. It is part of the business of a notary to make himself acquainted with the persons who resort to him in his notarial capacity. They referred to Es parte Church (1), The Queen v. Scriveners' Company (2), Garvey v. Hibbert (3), Lord Kinnaird v. Lady Saltoun (4), Vanier v. Falkner (5), Forbes v. Atkinson (6), Copps v. Copps (7), Lawrence v. Stuart (8), Act of Low. Canada, 12 Vict. c. 88, s. 85, Pothier, Hypothèque, c. 1, s. 2, Toulhier, vol. 10. c. 6. s. 8, art. 1, Foelix, Droit International.

Mr. Harcourt and Mr. Bompas, for the respondent, were not heard.

LORD CHAIRS delivered the judgment of their Lordships.—In this case the appellant, about twenty-one years ago, brought an action in the Courts of Lower Canada against the respondent, for the recovery of a lot of land which is described in the pleadings. The appellant claimed title to that lot under a grant originally made to a person of the name of John Rankin, and proposed to deduce his title from that John Rankin.

It is necessary to consider, in the first place, what was the character of the issue raised by the pleadings with regard to the title of the plaintiff, because it has been contended that certain matters of evidence with regard to his title, which it otherwise would have been necessary to have proved in the regular course, were removed out of the region of proof, by reason of admissions which are said to have been made in the pleadings between the parties.

The declaration had stated a deed of sale, by which this lot of land had been conveyed to the appellant from those who had the right to convey it, and in answer to that declaration, the second plea, after alleging possession for a certain length of time by the respondent of the lot in question, averred distinctly, "that the persons from whom the plaintiff pretends to have purchased the said real estate never had, nor hath the plaintiff ever had, nor have they, or either of them, any right, title, interest, possession, or property of, in, or to the said real estate, or any part thereof." It is possible (their Lordships express no opinion upon the point) that at that stage of the pleadings the appellant might have taken issue upon this part of the second plea, and gone to trial upon those general allegations as they stood up to that point, putting in evidence the proof of the different links of the title under which he claimed; but in place of doing that, the appellant met the second plea by an extremely special replication or answer. He professed on the face of that answer to answer the second plea, and the character of his answer (it is unnecessary to read it at length) was in substance a statement of what may be termed his abstract of title. It was a statement in an abstract form of the various stages of the title, commencing with the letters patent to John Rankin, then setting forth the will of one David Rankin, then stating the seizin of persons of the name of Alexander (otherwise called James) Lake and Mary Lake under the will of David Rankin, and stating further the execution of a power of attorney to one Teesles, by Lake and his wife, under which power of attorney, and a deed executed in virtue of it, the appellant claimed.

To that answer a replication was put in by the respondent, saying "that all and every the allegations, matters, and things in the said special answer contained and set forth, save and except in so far as they corroborate and confirm the allegations, matters, and averments of the defendant in his said second plea contained and set forth, are, and each and every of them is false, untrue, and unfounded in fact."

Now, without turning to the défense en fonds en fait, or considering what the effect of that would have been, if it had stood alone, either by statute or otherwise, in the Courts of Lower Canada, their Lordships are clearly of opinion that both upon the most technical construction which can be applied to pleading, and also upon the substance and sense of these pleadings, there was here the clearest putting in issue, on the part of the respondent, of every stage and point in the title which was alleged on the part of the appellant. It may be added that there appears no

- (1) 1 Dowl. & Ry. 324.
- (2) 10 B. & C. 511.
- (3) 1 J. & W. 180.
- (4) 1 Madd. 227.
- (5) 6 Low. Can. Jn. 251.
- (6) Stuart's Low. Can. Rep. 106.
- (7) 2 Low. Can. Rep. 106.
- (8) 6 Low. Can. Rep. 294.

reason to suppose that the respondent could possibly have known anything with regard to the particulars of the title of the appellant, and it would indeed have been strange if he had taken upon himself in a suit of this kind to admit any links of that title; but, in point of fact, he did not do so. On the contrary, in the plainest way that words could do, he traversed every stage of the allegations which the appellant had made.

Their lordships, therefore, are obliged to approach the farther questions in the case, the questions which have arisen with regard to the evidence, and the sufficiency of the evidence, with the clear opinion, that so far as pleading could go, there was no admission of anything which could otherwise be the subject of evidence; but on the contrary, the appellant was challenged to produce, in the strictest form, the evidence necessary to support his title.

Now there were two most important links in the chain of the appellant's title. David Rankin had made a will by which, assuming him to have a good title to the lot in question derived from the grantee under the letters patent, he devised and bequeathed this lot to Mary Lake, whom he described as the "wife of James Lake, of Loughborough, yeoman, and adopted daughter of the late James Bleakaby, of Loughborough, yeoman, deceased." It appears that in the power of attorney under which the appellant claimed, the persons giving and executing that power of attorney called themselves "Alexander Lake, and Mary Lake his wife;" and on the face of the power of attorney it was stated that this Alexander Lake was the same person who, in the will of the testator, David Rankin, was called "James Lake." That may be perfectly true. Mistakes of that kind not unfrequently happen, and although such mistakes are by no means fatal to the devise in which the mistake may occur, yet it would be obviously necessary for the person claiming under a will of this kind, to adduce some evidence that the mistake which he alleges had actually taken place, and that he who now calls himself "Alexander Lake," was really the person whom the testator meant to describe when he used the name "James Lake." Of course there are many ways in which that could have been done. Evidence might have been given as to the identity of Mary Lake. The person who was the adopted daughter of James Bleakaby might have been traced, evidence might have been given with regard to her history, and it might have been shewn that she who appears thus to have been minutely described in the will of the testator, had married a person whose name was really Alexander Lake. Evidence of that kind, and I might say evidence, if uncontradicted, of a very slight kind, would probably have been sufficient to satisfy the Court that the mistake was the mistake of the testator, and that the person who really was called Alexander Lake, was the person whom the testator meant to describe when he called him "James Lake," the husband of this Mary Lake.

However, no evidence of that kind appears to have been adduced; and at this point their lordships consider that there was a complete hiatus in the title of the appellant, and that there is no identity made out between the devisee and the husband of the devisee named in the will of David Rankin, and the persons who profess to execute the power of attorney, and who there are called Alexander Lake and Mary his wife.

But then this power of attorney professes to have been executed by this Alexander Lake and Mary Lake before a notary public in the town of Kingston, in Upper Canada, and to have been executed by Alexander Lake and Mary Lake, in the presence of two witnesses, of whom the notary public was one. The first attesting witness, Henry Smith, is not produced. The notary public is not produced. But a certificate is produced, given in the province of Upper Canada, professing to come from this Samuel Rorke, the notary public, and to be vouched by Sir Richard Jackson, the administrator of the government of the province of Canada, who states in his certificate that "Samuel Rorke, whose name is subscribed to the foregoing notarial certificate, is a notary public, duly appointed in and for that part of the province of Canada, formerly called Upper Canada." Now, the question arises whether in the Courts of Lower Canada, regulated by French law, the production of a power of attorney not proved by the attesting witnesses, but certified by the certificate—not upon oath—of the notary public before whom it appears to have been past, is sufficient in point of evidence.

Their lordships may say that upon this point there appears to have been no real difference between the learned judges of the Courts below. There has been a difference between these learned persons, and one of them has thought the title of the appellant sufficiently made out; but that, as their lordships consider, is not because he differed from his colleagues as to the effect of the evidence, but because he thought that upon this point evidence was altogether unnecessary, by reason of the form of the pleadings, a question upon which their lordships have already expressed their opinion. The learned judges may, therefore, be taken as agreeing that by the law of Lower Canada this certificate, given by a notary public of Upper Canada, was not sufficient proof of the execution of the power of attorney.

In that opinion their lordships entirely concur. A notary public in the province of Upper Canada, a province regulated by English law, has no power, by English law, to certify to the execution of a deed in such a way as to make his certificate evidence, without more, that the deed was executed, and that it was attested in the manner in which the deed professes to be attested.

It is familiar that according to the law of England, the mere production of the certificate of a notary public stating that a deed had been executed before him, would not in any way dispense with the proper evidence of the execution of the deed. The circumstance that by French law a French notary public has a greater power, and that his certificate has a greater validity, does not appear to their lordships to carry a power to the act of the English notary upon English soil, so that that act when brought into question upon French soil should have the effect given to it there which is given by the law of France to the act of a French notary public. The circumstance that an officer is called in France a notary public, with certain powers assigned to him by French law, and that in England there is also an officer called a notary public, with much more limited powers assigned to him by English law, would not in any way make the act of the English notary public, when it is called into question in France, have the effect which it would have had if it had been an act done by a French notary public, upon French soil.

Their lordships, therefore, are of opinion that upon these two points, without going further, the appellant failed altogether to make out his title in the Court below, and they will humbly recommend to Her Majesty that the appeal be dismissed with costs.

Their lordships can only express the surprise they feel that if these points, which may appear to be and are to a great extent points of technicality, were points upon which the defects in the evidence to which they have referred, could have been remedied, the much shorter and more inexpensive course was not taken of treating the action as having failed (as the learned judges said it did fail) for want of evidence, and of bringing a new action supplying these defects, in place of going to the great expense and delay of an appeal to Her Majesty in Council.

Attorneys—Wilde, Wilde, Berger & Moore, for appellant; Bischoff, Cox & Bompas, for respondent.

1870.
July 22. { ROBERT GRAHAM, acting collector of customs of the Cape of Good Hope, appellant, JOHN THOMAS POCOCK AND JOHN AL-FRED MATHEW, respondents.*

Cape of Good Hope—Customs Ordinance
(No. 6, ss. 24, 25, and 50)—Construction—
Entry—Penalties.

Ordinance No. 6 of the Cape of Good Hope, by section 24, provides that no goods shall be laden or unladen from any ship in the colony until due entry shall have been made of such goods and warrants granted for the unloading of the same (1).

* Present—Lord Cairns, Sir J. Colville, and Sir J. Napier.

Section 25 provides that the person entering any goods shall deliver to the collector a bill of entry thereof, containing, amongst other things, the particulars of the quality and quantity of the goods, and the packages containing the same (2).

Section 50 provides that every person who shall assist or be otherwise concerned in the unshipping, landing, or removal or harbouring goods liable to forfeiture, or into whose hands the same shall knowingly come, shall forfeit treble the value thereof (3).

P. and M. carried on business in partnership at Cape Town. P. consigned 25 cases of glassware and 3 cases, each containing a carriage, and filled up with corks, to M. at Cape Town. On the arrival of the goods, M. made out one entry for 3 cases containing carriages and 25 cases of glassware. There was no entry in respect of the corks:—Held, first, that it is the duty of the person who applies to enter goods, for the purpose of having them unladen, to state the packages the unloading of which he asks for, and to identify those packages, and to state the particulars of the quality and quantity of the goods contained in the packages, and that the whole of the contents of 3 cases containing the corks was forfeited. Secondly, that, inasmuch as there may be several entries on one bill of entry, the cases containing glass ware were not forfeited. Thirdly, that under the circumstances, M. was liable to the penalties imposed by section 50.

This was an appeal from two judgments of the Supreme Court of the colony of the Cape of Good Hope, bearing date respectively the 4th day of September, A.D. 1868, in two actions brought by the appellant against the respondents.

The first was an action in which the appellant prayed that certain goods might be declared to be forfeited. The second was an action in which the appellant prayed that the respondents might be declared to

(1) Ordinance 6:—

Sect. 24. That no goods shall be laden or waterborne to be laden on board any ship or unladen from any ship in this colony, until due entry shall have been made of such goods, and warrants granted for the lading or unloading of the same; and that no goods shall be so laden or waterborne, or so unladen, except at some place at which an officer of customs is appointed to attend the lading or unloading of goods, or at some place for which a surffiance shall be granted by the collector or other principal officer of customs for the lading and unloading of such goods; and that no goods shall be so laden or unladen except in the presence, or with the permission, in writing, of the proper officer: Provided always, that it shall be lawful for the governor to make and appoint such other regulations for the carrying coastwise of any goods, or for the removing of any goods for shipment, as to him shall appear expedient, and that all goods laden, waterborne, or unladen contrary to the regulations of this ordinance, or contrary to any regulations so made and appointed, shall be forfeited.

(2) Sect. 25. That the person entering any goods shall deliver to the collector or other proper officer of customs a bill of the entry thereof, fairly written in words at length, containing the name of the exporter or importer, and of the ship and of the master, and of the place to or from which bound, and of the place within the port where the goods are to be laden or unladen, and the particulars of the quality and quantity of the goods and the packages containing the same, and the marks and numbers on the packages, and setting forth whether such goods be the produce of the United Kingdom or of the British Possessions or not, and shall also deliver at the same time one or more duplicates of such bill, in which all sums and numbers may be expressed in figures; and the particulars to be contained in such bill of entry shall be written and arranged in such form and manner, and the number of such duplicates shall be such as the collector or other principal officer shall require; and such person shall, at the same time, pay down all duties due upon the goods, and the collector or other proper officer of customs shall thereupon grant their warrant for the lading or unloading of such goods.

(3) Sect. 50. That all vessels, boats, carriages, and cattle made use of in the removal of any goods liable to forfeiture under this or any future ordinance or act of the legislature of this colony, or under any act of the imperial Parliament relating to the customs, or to trade and navigation, shall be forfeited; and every person who shall assist or be otherwise concerned in the unshipping, landing, or removal, or in the harbouring of such goods, or into whose hands or possession the same shall knowingly come, shall forfeit the treble value thereof, or the penalty of one hundred pounds, at the election of the officers of the customs, and the averment in any information or libel to be exhibited for the recovery of such penalty, that the officer proceeding has elected to sue for the sum mentioned in the information, shall be deemed sufficient proof of such election, without any other or further evidence of such fact, and that such officer shall be a competent witness in any such suit or proceeding.

have forfeited the sum of 796*l*. 6*s*. 9*d*., being the treble value of certain goods, to wit, 3,350 gross of corks, landed clandestinely, and by the first action declared to be forfeited.

The appellant was the acting collector of and principal officer of customs of the colony of the Cape of Good Hope.

The respondents were partners carrying on business in Cape Town.

On the 8th of May, 1868, a vessel called the Loch Awe, bound from London to the Cape of Good Hope, arrived in the port of Cape Town, having on board a general cargo. As part of such general cargo there were laden on board of the said vessel, the goods which the appellant prayed should be declared forfeited, to wit: 3,350 gross of corks, 25 cases of glassware, and 3 carriages, namely, 1 brougham, 1 basket carriage, and 1 wire sociable.

The said carriages were packed in 3 separate cases, each containing 1 carriage; and the said 3 cases carriages, and 25 packages glassware were described by the marks and numbers of each package in a bill of lading thereof, dated in London, 22nd of February, 1868, which was prepared under the directions of respondent, Pocock, and signed by the master of the said vessel.

The said 3 cases, carriages, and 25 cases glassware were also described by their respective marks and numbers in the report of the ship signed by the master at the Custom House, at Cape Town, in accordance with the customs' regulations.

The said 3 cases, carriages, and 25 cases glassware were also described in a policy of insurance thereof effected by the respondents.

There was no mention of corks in any of the documents.

The said 3,350 gross of corks were packed in the 3 cases containing the carriages. Each of these 3 cases contained corks.

On the 8th of May, 1868, the Loch Awe, being then in the port of Cape Town, and ready to discharge her cargo, the respondent, Mathew, made out the entry for the landing of the 3 cases carriages and 25 cases glassware. This entry he delivered to the senior examining officer in the customs department of the colony, who passed it.

The respondent, Mathew, produced two invoices, the one being the invoice of the carriages, and the other the invoice of the glassware. On the production of the invoices, the goods were allowed to be landed, and two of the cases of carriages were landed on the afternoon of the same day, under the directions of the respondent, Mathew, and were conveyed to and placed in the business premises of the firm, by people employed by the respondents.

On the 9th of May, 1868, one of the examining officers of the customs of the said colony, acting upon information he had received, stopped the remaining carriage case and 25 packages of glassware, which had then been taken out of the ship by the respondents, and were on the landing place preparatory to being conveyed to the respondents' premises. The examining officer sent for the respondent, Mathew, and demanded his invoice, and an invoice was produced with the entry, with which it was found to agree, and the officer then proceeded to open the carriage case. The respondent, Mathew, then said, "You will find corks in that case." He had not spoken of corks before. Finding corks in the case, the officer told respondent, Mathew, to consider the goods under seizure, and he then proceeded to the respondents' premises, and examined the other cases, which had been landed on the previous day. He found that both contained corks, and at once seized the cases.

All the goods in question, viz., the carriages, the glassware, and the corks had been shipped in England on board the Loch Awe by the respondent, Pocock, who directed the packing of the corks and the preparation of the bill of lading before-mentioned. The respondent, Pocock, sent the invoices of the carriages and the 25 cases of glass were to an agent at Cape Town, and on the 7th of March, 1868, wrote from London to the said agent stating that the cases were filled with corks, which were to be sent to the firm of Pocock and Company, and that Mathew would pay the duty on them. The respondent, Pocock, also wrote to the respondent, Mathew, a letter bearing the same date, informing him also on the subject.

On the 24th day of June, 1868, the appellant commenced an action against the respondents in the said Supreme Court. The declaration averred that the said goods, viz., the 3 cases of carriages, 25 cases of glassware, and 3,350 gross of corks had been taken by the respondents, who were the importers thereof, by virtue of an entry in which the said goods were not properly described, that the said entry ought to be deemed invalid, and the goods ought to be deemed goods taken without due entry thereof, and to be forfeited: and prayed a forfeiture of the said goods under Ordinance No. 6 of 1853.

The respondents pleaded to the declaration—a plea denying all the allegations of fact and conclusions of law contained in the declaration.

On the 24th day of August, 1868, the parties appeared before the acting Chief Justice of the colony, and one of the Puisne Judges of the said colony. The Court heard and considered the evidence, and on the 4th day of September, 1868, the Court gave judgment for the appellant, and decreed that the 3,350 gross of corks and the three carriages were forfeited.

From this judgment the appellant appealed.

The second action was commenced by appellant against the respondents at the same date as the former action. The declaration was founded on the 50th section of the said Ordinance No. 6, 1853, and averred that the respondents, or one of them acting on behalf of both, landed clandestinely 3,350 gross of corks without payment of duty thereon, and thereafter harboured and knowingly received into their possession the said goods. The declaration further averred that the appellant elected to sue for the treble value of the said goods in lieu of suing for the specific penalty provided, and prayed that the respondents might be declared to have jointly and severally forfeited the sum of 796*l.* 6*s.* 9*d.*, being the treble value of the said goods.

The respondents pleaded, denying all the allegations of fact and conclusions of law contained in the declaration.

This action was tried on the 4th day of
NEW SERIES, 39.—PRIV. COUN.

September, 1868, before the same judges. The Court having considered the evidence and heard counsel for the parties respectively, gave judgment for the respondents with costs.

From this judgment, the present appeal was brought.

Mr. Mellish and Mr. Archibald, for the appellant.—It cannot be disputed that the corks contained in the three cases entered as carriages are liable to forfeiture. But it is clear that the entire contents of the cases, the quality and quantity of which are defective, are forfeited. The 24th section of the ordinance requires a full entry of the goods. Then section 25 requires the particulars of the quality and quantity of the goods and packages containing the goods to be entered. There was a failure in the performance of the express provisions of this ordinance. The goods are therefore forfeited, and the respondents were liable to the penalties sued for in the second action. The conduct of the respondent, Mathew, at the time when he applied to the collector for the delivery of the goods, shews that he knew the goods were liable to be forfeited.

The respondents did not appear.

LORD CAIRNS delivered the judgment of their Lordships.—The first question raised by this appeal is, what goods were rendered liable to forfeiture to the Crown, by reason of defective entry? That the corks which are in question in the case were rendered liable to forfeiture is not disputed. It is contended by the appellant, that not only were the corks forfeited to the Crown, but that in addition, the 15 and 10 casks of glassware were forfeited; and, although the question has not been brought by any cross appeal before their Lordships, a suggestion has been made by the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, to which in the first instance their Lordships will deem it their duty to advert—a suggestion that the Court in the colony has gone beyond what properly it ought to have done, in declaring that the three carriages in which the corks were contained were also forfeited.

Their Lordships are of opinion—although, I repeat, the question has not been brought before them by any regular appeal upon this subject—that those carriages were properly forfeited. Their Lordships consider that, under the 24th and 25th sections of the colonial ordinance, it is the duty of any person who applies to enter goods for the purpose of having them unladen, to state the packages the unloading of which he asks for, and to identify those packages; and then their Lordships consider, that it thereupon becomes further the duty of the person making this application to state the particulars of the quality and of the quantity of the goods which those packages, according to his knowledge, contain. If that statement is inaccurately made, their Lordships are of opinion that there is, in that respect, a defective and improper entry, rendering the goods liable to forfeiture. In this case (confining the observation still to the question of the carriages), there was a demand made for the entry and unloading of three cases, having upon them particular marks; and, according to the construction which I have stated their Lordships put upon the section, it thereupon became the duty of the person tendering the entry to state what those three cases contained. He stated that they contained one brougham, one phaeton, and one sociable, whereas, in point of fact, they contained those three carriages and also a large quantity of corks, filling up the empty spaces. Their Lordships are of opinion that there is no ground for the doubt entertained by the Chief Justice, and that the judgment of the Court, in holding forfeited the whole of the contents of those packages, was a correct judgment.
G

But then arises the question brought before their Lordships directly by the appeal, whether the 25 cases of glassware were also forfeited. That depends upon the construction which ought to be given to the word "entry" throughout the sections of the ordinance, which have been referred to. Their Lordships are of opinion that it would not be a sound or proper construction to read the word "entry" throughout those clauses as meaning "bill of entry;" because they are of opinion that there may be several entries upon one bill of entry. What shall be considered to be the different entries, if there be more than one upon one bill of entry, will depend upon the facts of each particular case, the construction of the bill of entry, and the nature of the goods which it describes. A case, for example, might easily be put, where 50 cases of goods precisely ejusdem generis were entered under one head, and as contained in cases marked No. 1 to No. 50. It is obvious that that entry, although relating to 50 cases, would really be one entry.

But, in the present case, their Lordships think there can be no doubt, from the manner in which the entry has been tendered, that there are upon the bill of entry two entries which are distinct for all substantial purposes; the first entry being that of the three carriages in the three cases to which I have already referred, and the second being a separate entry of 25 cases of glassware. With regard to those cases of glassware, their Lordships cannot find any provision in the ordinance which has been violated or departed from; and they are therefore of opinion that there was a proper entry of those packages of glassware, and that they were not liable to forfeiture, or rendered liable to forfeiture, by reason of being associated in the same bill of entry with that other entry which their Lordships consider was a defective entry.

The result is, that on the first part of the case their Lordships consider the judgment of the Court below is correct, and ought not to be altered.

The second part of the appeal raises the question, whether the respondents, or either of them, has become liable to the treble value of the forfeited goods?

I may put out of the case the first respondent, Pocock, for it was admitted that there was no case of personal culpability against him. The question only arises with regard to the defendant Mathew. As regards the facts of the case, resulting from the oral evidence, their Lordships have no hesitation in saying, that in their opinion, that evidence shews that Mathew was a person directly concerned in, if he was not the person ordering and entirely responsible for, the un-shipping, the landing, and the removal of the goods which they hold to be liable to forfeiture. Their Lordships, therefore, see no reason for the opinion entertained by the Court below that the only terms in the ordinance under which Mathew can be brought would be the words relating to the harbouring of goods. They are of opinion that he was a person either unshipping, landing, and removing the goods, or a person concerned in the unshipping, landing, and removing of the goods.

Their Lordships are of opinion, further, that it is not made an element in the 50th clause of the ordinance that the defendant should be a person unshipping, landing, and removing the goods, with the fraudulent intent of depriving the government of the duty properly payable upon their goods. The question of fact is all that the clause requires to be determined—Was the defendant, or was he not, a person who was actually concerned in unloading and unshipping the goods liable to forfeiture? Their Lordships are also of opinion that it is not any answer to the charge under this section to say that the respondent Mathew was the owner of the goods, and therefore, as it were, the principal concerned, and not an accessory. The proceeding under the first part of the record was not a proceeding personally against any individual. It is a proceeding for the forfeiture of particular goods, and the question who is the owner of the goods under that part of the proceeding is immaterial. The goods having been forfeited by a proceeding, which is in the nature of a proceeding in rem, the question who is liable to penalties for being concerned in the landing or the unloading of the goods is a question to be determined irrespective of the inquiry, Who is the principal and who is the accessory?

Their Lordships consider that upon the facts appearing on the evidence, it is abundantly clear that the defendant Mathew was aware before these goods were unshipped, and at the time he tendered the entry, that the cases contained the corks, and that he was aware when he was concerned in unshipping them that he was unshipping cases of goods containing certain goods as to which no mention had been made in the bill of entry.

Therefore, their Lordships are clearly of opinion that all the elements of the offence created by the 50th section concur in the case of Mathew, and that he has become liable to the penalty of the treble value of the goods under that section. They will therefore humbly advise Her Majesty that the appeal in that respect should be allowed, and that judgment should be given for the Crown in the proper form for the treble value of the goods forfeited.

Attorneys—Green & Allin, for appellant.

1870.
July 7.

GEORGE LYALL, appellant.
ROBERT JARDINE, CHARLES
FREDERICK STILL, GEORGE FRANCIS MACLEAN, AND OTHERS, respondents.*

Hong Kong—Bankruptcy—Adjudication —Prior Bankruptcy in England—Judicial Committee—Practice.

The Judicial Committee will not entertain an appeal upon facts which were known to the appellant at the time of hearing in the Court below, but which were not brought to the notice of the Court below.

Upon a petition for leave to appeal, it is the duty of the petitioner to state in the fullest and frankest manner all the circumstances of the case.

The appellant carried on business in partnership with S. & M. in London and also in Hong Kong. The firm being in difficulties, the appellant, who was in London, gave a power of attorney to S. at Hong Kong to act for him in all matters on behalf of the firm, and to take any proceedings in bankruptcy on his behalf, and on the 23rd of May, 1867, the firm was adjudicated bankrupt in the Supreme Court at Hong Kong, and the appellant was represented by counsel in the Supreme Court. In April, 1867, the appellant filed a petition in bankruptcy in England, and was adjudicated a bankrupt in England. This fact was known and might have been, but was not, brought to the notice of the Supreme Court:—Held, that inasmuch as the bankruptcy of the appellant in England was known and was not brought to the notice of the Court in Hong Kong, their Lordships would not entertain the fact of the bankruptcy in England on appeal.

* Present, Lord Cairns, Sir W. Erle, and Sir J. Colvile.

This was an appeal from an adjudication of bankruptcy by the Supreme Court at Hong Kong, dated the 23rd day of May, 1867, whereby the said George Lyall and the respondents Charles Frederick Still and George Francis Maclean were adjudicated bankrupts by the said Court, pursuant to the provisions of "The Bankruptcy Ordinance of Hong Kong (No. 5) of 1864."

The facts were as follows:—

In the month of April, 1867, and for several years previous, the appellant, George Lyall, and the respondents, Charles Frederick Still and George Francis Maclean, carried on the business of merchants in co-partnership at Victoria, in the colony of Hong Kong, under the style or firm of "Lyall, Still & Co.;" and in Leadenhall Street, London, under the style or firm of "George Lyall & C. F. Still."

The firm having fallen into difficulties towards the end of 1866, it was thought advisable that they should be made bankrupts in Hong Kong, where the said Charles Frederick Still and George Francis Maclean then were, the said George Lyall being in England; and with that view the appellant sent out to his co-partner Charles Frederick Still, a power of attorney, dated the 11th February, 1867, appointing him to act on his behalf in Hong Kong; and amongst other things to file any declaration or petition in bankruptcy, and to do all other acts in the liquidation of the liabilities of the firm in Hong Kong.

The power of attorney was received by Charles Frederick Still, in Hong Kong, early in the month of April, 1867, and on the 18th of that month a petition, dated the 13th April, 1867, and signed by Charles Frederick Still and George Francis Maclean, for themselves and the appellant, was filed in the Supreme Court of Hong Kong, in the names and on behalf of the said George Lyall, Charles Frederick Still and George Francis Maclean, stating that they were unable to meet their engagements with their creditors, and praying that they might be adjudged bankrupts.

This petition was not acted on by the said George Lyall, Charles Frederick Still and George Francis Maclean, and on the 2nd of May, 1867, the appellant (by his attorney Charles Frederick Still), Charles Frederick Still and George Francis Maclean, by indenture assigned all their estate to be administered for the benefit of their creditors.

On the 21st of May, 1867, the respondent, Jardine, filed a petition in the Supreme Court of Hong Kong, praying for an adjudication in bankruptcy against George Lyall, Charles Frederick Still and George Francis Maclean.

On the 23rd of May, 1867, the last mentioned petition came on for hearing before the Chief Justice. Counsel appeared for the said George Lyall. The said Charles Frederick Still and George Francis Maclean appeared and consented to be made bankrupts, and numerous creditors asked for an immediate adjudication. The Chief Justice intimated that he considered that as George Lyall was resident in England, he was bound not to adjudicate until a copy of the petition had been served on him, and thereupon the counsel, who appeared for the said George Lyall, requested that the adjudication might then be made without service on the said George Lyall; and on his behalf consented to admit that he had been properly adjudicated bankrupt, and submitted to abide by such adjudication, and thereupon the Chief Justice did adjudicate the said George Lyall, Charles Frederick Still, and George Francis Maclean, bankrupts.

Charles Frederick Still and George Francis Maclean, who were at Hong Kong at the date of the adjudication, surrendered thereto, and passed their last examination, and respectively obtained their orders of discharge.

After the power of attorney given by the appellant had been received by Charles Frederick Still, but before any adjudication in bankruptcy in Hong Kong proceedings in bankruptcy were taken against the appellant in the Court of Bankruptcy in London, and on the 18th of April, 1867, he was adjudicated bankrupt, pursuant to the provisions of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, upon an act of bankruptcy committed by him on that day by filing a declaration of insolvency in the last mentioned Court of Bankruptcy, dated the said 18th day of April, 1867, and having surrendered to such bankruptcy, he passed his last examination on the 14th of February, 1868, and on the 4th of August, 1868, obtained his order of discharge.

On the 19th of June, 1868, the appellant applied for and obtained leave to appeal to Her Majesty in Council, from the adjudication in Hong Kong.

Sargood, Serjt., and Mr. Lord, for the appellant. — The proceedings in bankruptcy in the colony as regards the appellant ought to be set aside. The appellant is compelled to resort to this tribunal in the first instance because the time has expired within which application can be made to the Court below. The 50th section of the Bankruptcy Ordinances of the colony requires any proceedings by way of appeal to be taken within twelve months of the adjudication. These Colonial Ordinances in respect of bankruptcy proceedings are similar to the enactments contained in the English Bankruptcy Act, 1849. There is no remedy under the Colonial Ordinances after the period limited, except by appeal to her Majesty in Council. The practice in England under these circumstances is to annul the prior adjudication. It is a well established principle of bankruptcy law that a bankruptcy cannot be double. If the bankruptcy in London was valid the bankruptcy in Hong Kong is invalid. The power of attorney given by the appellant to his partner, Still, to act in his behalf would cease to have any effect or to confer any authority on Still after the appellant committed an act of bankruptcy in England. Section 44 of the Colonial Ordinances is precisely similar in kind and import to the provisions contained in section 97 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1849. The act of bankruptcy in the colony would have no operation as regards the appellant. There was no act of bankruptcy by the appellant in the colony. The deed executed by the partners in Hong Kong for the benefit of the creditors of the firm was executed by the other partners for themselves and the appellant in pursuance of the power of attorney which in fact had ceased to operate. It is clear, therefore, that all the proceedings taken in bankruptcy in the colony are at an end. They referred to ex parte Crew (1), Carter v. Dimmock (2), The Royal Bank of Scotland v. Cuthbert (3), Ex parte Williams (4).

Sir R. Palmer and Mr. Watkin Williams, for the petitioning creditor. — There is no precedent for such an appeal. The appellant had given a power of attorney to his partner, Still, and by virtue of that power Still appointed counsel to represent the appellant in the bankruptcy proceedings in the colony, and upon these proceedings the appellant was represented by his counsel, and by his counsel consented to all the proceedings in the colony, and although the Judge in the colony proposed to have the appellant served with a copy of the petition in bankruptcy, yet the appellant, by his counsel as representing him, declined to require service, and expressly by his counsel assented to the proceedings. The appellant has no locus standi before this tribunal. It is proposed to ask that the proceedings in the colony shall be reversed so far as the appellant is concerned, upon the ground that the appellant had been adjudicated bankrupt in England at the time the proceedings in bankruptcy in the colony took place, and it is said that the bankruptcy could not be double. But this tribunal will not help the appellant. All these facts now set up were known to the appellant at the time proceedings in the colony were taken, and might have been brought to the notice of the Judge of the Court below. If this had been known to this tribunal at the time leave to appeal was

(1) 16 Ves. 237.

(2) 22 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Bankr. 55.

(3) 1 Rose Bankruptcy Cas. App. 462.

(4) 11 Ves., jun. 3.

granted such leave would have been refused. Carter v. Dimmock (2) is no authority.

Mr. Hall, for the respondents, Charles Frederick Still and George Francis Maclean.—The adjudication in Hong Kong was a valid adjudication. The filing of the petition in bankruptcy on the 13th of April, 1867, was an act of bankruptcy on the part of the firm. It was the act of all the partners. Still held a power of attorney from the appellant authorising him to act on behalf of the appellant, and expressly in matters relating to the bankruptcy of the firm. The power of attorney was given for that very purpose. The adjudication was therefore made with the concurrence of the appellant. He cannot now dispute the validity of such adjudication. Besides, all the facts and matters now alleged in support of this appeal were known to the appellant and might have been brought to the notice of the Supreme Court.

Mr. Bell and Mr. B. Smith, for the official assignees.—The appellant committed an act of bankruptcy, under the 16th section of the Ordinance, by petitioning the Supreme Court in April, 1867. Under the 35th section of the Ordinance, the Supreme Court had power to adjudicate the appellant a bankrupt. If the evidence before the Supreme Court were insufficient to support an adjudication, the appellant has, by his own petition of appeal, shewn that he had, at the time of the adjudication, committed an act of bankruptcy under section 12. The appellant is, by the acts of himself and his counsel, estopped from disputing the validity of the adjudication in the colony. The adjudication in England did not deprive the Court at Hong Kong of the power to issue a joint adjudication against the appellant and his partners. The appellant might have applied to the Supreme Court within twelve months of his adjudication to set aside the adjudication.

LORD CAIRNS delivered the judgment of their Lordships.

Their Lordships have, in the first instance, to advert to the circumstances under which leave to appeal was granted in this case. Nothing can be more important than that it should be understood that those who come before this Committee upon an ex parte application for leave to appeal should consider it their absolute duty to state, in the fullest and frankest way, every circumstance connected with the history of the case which possibly can have any bearing on the leave for which they ask. Now their Lordships do not mean to attribute, either to the appellant, Mr. Lyall, or to his advisers, any intentional disregard of this duty, or any wish in the petition which they presented in the year 1868, to suppress any fact which they might have thought material; but, unfortunately, the petition is one which, when looked at, cannot be described otherwise than as a petition which was calculated to mislead the tribunal before whom it was heard. It states, in substance, that the appellant, Mr. Lyall, had been adjudicated a bankrupt in London on the 18th of April, 1867. It does not suggest that that had been done, either on his own application, or upon an act of bankruptcy committed by him with a view to have the application made by a friendly creditor. It then proceeds to state, that while he was thus in England adjudicated a bankrupt on the 21st of May, 1867, creditors of his firm in Hong Kong had filed a petition in the Court of that colony, for the purpose of making the firm bankrupts, and that on that petition they had been adjudicated bankrupts. He does not state that there had been any declaration of insolvency filed by the firm with a view to their bankruptcy in the colony, or that he had given a power of attorney to his partner in the colony, enabling him to take the proceedings proper to lead to a bankruptcy, or that there had been a conveyance or assignment of their property executed by the partners abroad, and by one of them as attorney for himself, with a view to bring about an adjudication in bankruptcy. It is treated as an adverse proceeding in the colony, just as the proceeding in bankruptcy in London is treated as an adverse proceeding against Mr. Lyall. It then proceeds to state that "during the time of these bankruptcy proceedings in the colony, and from thenceforward, Mr. Lyall had been residing in England, had no notice of the adjudication, and was thereby rendered unable to shew cause against the validity of the same within the time limited by, and pursuant to, the provisions of the Bankruptcy Ordinance, 1864." It does not state that under the professed authority of the same power of attorney consent had been given in the colony to expediting and making perfect, as far as consent could do it, the proceedings in bankruptcy; but it treats the whole of those proceedings as proceedings which Mr. Lyall would, in every way, have opposed and objected to had it been in his power. It assumes, rather than expressly states, that he had come before this tribunal at the earliest moment, for the purpose of protecting rights which had been infringed; and it does not state, what now appears to have been the case, that upon the 8th of July, 1867, Mr. Lyall, who must have known before of the power of attorney which he had given, had become aware that that power had been acted on, and that those proceedings in bankruptcy in the colony had taken place, and that from the 8th of July, 1867, when he had this knowledge, until the 12th of May, 1868, a period of about ten months, he had remained quiescent, and had taken no step, either in the colony or here, for the purpose of disputing the proceedings in bankruptcy. Under those circumstances, upon statements so eminently insufficient to put this tribunal in possession of a knowledge of all that had occurred, and aided, doubtless, by the view which seems to have been entertained by the advisers of Mr. Lyall, which, no doubt, was pressed upon their Lordships, that after the shorter period of a few weeks, mentioned in the Bankruptcy Ordinance, there was no remedy in the colony, and the only remedy could be here, their Lordships granted the leave to appeal.

Stopping at this part of the case, their Lordships cannot but think that if the whole facts, which I have endeavoured to state, had been made known to their Lordships upon the face of this petition, they would have felt themselves unable, under the circumstances, to have granted the leave to appeal which was granted.

Passing, however, from that, their Lordships have next to consider whether, this leave having been granted, the appeal is one which they properly can entertain.

Now the appellant is obliged to come here virtually confessing, at the outset, that if he is limited to the materials which were before the Judge in the colony at the time that this adjudication was made, and if he is not allowed to import into the case the other facts with regard to the London bankruptcy, and its bearing upon what was done in the colony, he is unable to sustain his appeal, and is unable to deny that the proceedings in the colony were regular. In that view of the case they clearly would be regular. There was an assignment by the three partners of all their property, an assignment executed by two, and by one of the two as attorney for the third, under a power which clearly authorised him to execute that assignment. There was, therefore, an act of bankruptcy—there was a trading; there were all the requisites proper to found a bankruptcy, and there was a proper adjudication upon those requisites, and upon those materials there would be nothing to argue.

Admitting that on the materials before the Judge the order was proper, the appellant has to contend that this tribunal should look at the other facts which had occurred at the time, although they were not known to the Judges, namely, the English bankruptcy and its bearing upon the colonial proceedings; and he has to contend that, looking to the whole of those facts, the order is one which ought not to be supported. Now, their Lordships desire to intimate their opinion with great distinctness that that is not a purpose for which this tribunal can be resorted to. This is an appellate tribunal—an appellate tribunal, no doubt, which possesses large powers to admit in proper cases, by way of supplement, evidence upon points which upon the hearing may appear to require to be elucidated, but this is certainly not a tribunal to which resort can be made by those who are obliged at the outset to confess that they have no case for appeal as the matter stood before the Judge who heard the case in the colony, and that their only ground for appeal is the introduction of other matters which were in no way before the Judge of primary instance.

Their Lordships further think that there is nothing whatever in the construction of the 182nd section of the Hong Kong Bankruptcy Ordinance which would have prevented, but that there is everything which would have empowered the present appellant, if he had been prepared to bring before the Judge in the colony further evidence leading to a different conclusion from that to which the Judge arrived in adjudicating in the first instance, to have gone to the Judge in Hong Kong within the prescribed period of twelve months, to have brought those further questions before him, to have taken his decision, by way of rehearing upon this new matter, upon the whole of the case; and then would have been the time, if the appellant had been dissatisfied with the decision of the Court, that his right might have arisen to appeal to Her Majesty in Council.

Their Lordships observe that the case "In the matter of Carter," decided in the House of Lords, which was referred to in argument, does not appear to their Lordships to have any contrary bearing to the conclusion at which they have arrived. In that case it appeared that the bankrupt, having abstained from shewing cause against the adjudication, although he was in the country, and might have done so within the shorter time appointed by the English statute, afterwards applied to the Commissioner in London within the twelve months, not upon any new materials, but simply for the purpose of disputing the propriety of the adjudication upon the materials upon which it was made, and against which he might have shewn cause within the proper time. The House of Lords held that this was a course which was not open to him; and Lord Cranworth, in announcing the decision of the House of Lords, states expressly that it was only playing with words to treat that proceeding as anything but an appeal; that the second application to the Commissioner, without any change of the materials upon which it was to be supported, was simply appealing to the Commissioner from his own order, and upon the same materials; and that on the proper construction of the English Act, the course which ought to have been taken was to make an application in such a case to the Court of Appeal, namely, the Lords Justices, and not to the Commissioner. Those remarks have no relevancy to a case where the second application to the primary Court is made, not on the same, but on different materials.

Their Lordships, therefore, upon this ground alone, would feel themselves unable to entertain this appeal, and this observation is sufficient for its disposal. Their Lordships, however, are bound to add that, although they do not propose to travel out of their proper functions, and to decide as a Court of first instance upon the merits of a case, which never was brought before the Judge at Hong Kong, they have not been satisfied by any argument which they have heard, that if this matter had been brought, with these new materials, before the Judge in the Court at Hong Kong, it would have been the duty of that Judge to have superseded or annulled the bankruptcy. There appears to have been an act of bankruptcy constituted, if not by the assignment made subsequent to the London bankruptcy, yet by the declaration of insolvency filed by the two partners upon the spot, and signed by them on behalf of their absent partner as well as of themselves; and that, at the time when there had been dispatched to one of those partners a power of attorney which clearly gave him authority to file a declaration of that kind. Their Lordships are not satisfied that the circumstance, that before the proceedings in bankruptcy were taken in that colony, there had been a London bankruptcy of Mr. Lyall alone, would necessarily have prevented, or ought properly to have prevented, the adjudication against the firm in the colony. It might give rise to questions between the assignees under the two bankruptcies as to what were their relative rights of property, but their Lordships are by no means satisfied that it would not be altogether within the power and discretion of the Court, after a separate bankruptcy against one of the partners in England, to have a joint bankruptcy against the firm, upon proper materials in the colony, leaving it of course open to the English assignee to make any application as to the conduct of that bankruptcy, or the rights under it, which he might be advised to make; and they are not satisfied that it would lie in the mouth of Mr. Lyall—especially after the power of attorney which he executed, after the appearance made on his behalf under that power in the Court by counsel, after the consent given on his behalf under that power to the completion of the proceedings in bankruptcy in the colony—in any way to quarrel with what had been done by those proceedings.

Upon the whole their Lordships are clearly of opinion that it is their duty to advise Her Majesty that this appeal should be dismissed, with costs to be paid to the various respondents. Their Lordships are informed that there is a sum of 300*l.* deposited. Supposing the taxed costs of each respondent amount to a larger sum than one-third of that amount, it will be divided rateably among the three respondents.

Attorneys—Lawrance, Plews, Boyer & Baker, for appellant; Freshfields; A. Parsons; and Bailey, Shaw, Smith & Bailey, for respondents.

1870. } HUGO LEVINGER (appellant) v.
July 26. } THE QUEEN (respondent).*

Victoria—Jury—Alien—De Medietate Linguae—Peremptory Challenge—Right of.

"The Juries Statute Act, 1865," of Victoria, by sect. 37, provides that every person arraigned for any treason felony or misdemeanour shall be admitted to challenge peremptorily to the number of twenty jurors. Sect. 38 provides that on the prayer of any alien informed against for felony the sheriff shall, by command of the Court, return for one-half of the jury a competent number of aliens, if so many shall be found in the town, etc., and that no such alien shall be liable to be challenged for want of qualification, "but that every such alien may be challenged for any other cause in like manner as if he were qualified." An information was exhibited in Melbourne against the appellant an alien for felony. The appellant prayed to be tried by a mixed jury, and challenged peremptorily an alien, one of such jury:—Held, that in the absence of positive provision to the contrary, an alien juror was subject to peremptory challenge, and that the appellant had a right to such challenge.

* Present, Lord Cairns, Sir J. Colville, and Sir J. Napier.

NEW SERIES, 39.—PRIV. COUN.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Supreme Court of the colony of Victoria, affirming a conviction for manslaughter on information preferred against the appellant.

On the 15th of June, 1869, an information, in the nature of an indictment for murder on the high seas, was exhibited against the appellant in the Supreme Court at Melbourne.

Upon the trial the appellant prayed for a jury de medietate linguae, on the ground that he was an alien, and a mixed jury was empanelled to try the appellant. Thereupon the appellant challenged peremptorily an alien, one of the said jury, to which challenge the Attorney General for the said colony, on behalf of the Crown, demurred, and the appellant having joined in demurrer, the Supreme Court gave judgment against the appellant, and adjudged that the challenge was insufficient in law, and that the alien juror was not liable to be challenged peremptorily.

The trial then proceeded, and the jury found the appellant guilty of manslaughter.

On the 6th June, 1870, the appellant obtained leave to appeal from this judgment.

The following are the material sections of the colonial statute, 28 Victoria, No. 272, "The Juries Statute Act, 1865:—

Sect. 36. "In all inquests to be taken before any Court wherein the Queen is a party, howsoever it be, notwithstanding it be alleged by them that sue for the Queen that the jurors of those inquests or some of them be not indifferent for the Queen, yet such inquests shall not remain untaken for that cause; but if they that sue for the Queen will challenge any of those jurors, they shall assign for their challenge a cause certain, and the truth of the same challenge shall be enquired of according to the custom of the Court, and it shall be proceeded to the taking of the same inquisitions as it shall be found if the challenges be true or not, after the discretion of the Court."

H

Sect. 37. "Every person arraigned for any treason felony or misdemeanour, shall be admitted to challenge peremptorily to the number of twenty, and every peremptory challenge above the number aforesaid respectively shall be void, and the trial or enquiry shall proceed as if no such challenge had been made; . . . and unless the jurors or assessors shall be sworn for the particular trial or enquiry, every challenge shall be made as the juror or assessor comes to take his seat, and before he takes it."

Sect. 38. "On the prayer of any alien informed against for any felony, the sheriff shall, by command of the Court, return for one-half of the jury a competent number of aliens, if so many there be in the town or place where the trial is had; and if not, then so many aliens as shall be found in the same town or place, if any, and no such alien juror shall be liable to be challenged for want of freehold or of any other qualification required by this Act, but every such alien may be challenged for any other cause in like manner as if he were qualified by this Act."

Sleigh, Serjt., Mr. Bell, and Mr. Thomas, for the appellant.—An alien by the law of the colony of Victoria has the same right upon a trial for felony to a jury de medietate lingue as he has upon a trial for felony in England. The law in the colony is identical with the law of England. The "Juries Statute Act, 1865" (1), contains precisely similar provisions to those contained in the English statutes of Geo. 4. (2). Sect. 37 of the colonial statute gives to a person arraigned for any treason felony or misdemeanour a right of peremptory challenge to the number of twenty; and sect. 38 of the same statute gives an alien upon his trial the right to be tried by a jury, de medietate lingue; and the section expressly provides that no alien juror shall be challenged for want of a qualification in respect of freehold, "but that every such alien may be challenged for any other cause in like manner as if he were qualified by this Act." It is quite clear from this that the right of peremptory challenge remains incident as part of the common law. The common law in respect of challenge must apply unless it is expressly taken away. They referred to Blackstone's Com. vol. 4. p. 353, Coke's Institutes, The Queen v. Giorgetti (3), The Queen v. Gray (4).

The Attorney General (Sir R. Collier), The Solicitor General (Sir J. D. Coleridge), and Mr. Archibald, for the Crown.—The appellant has no right to challenge peremptorily an alien juror. The right of an alien to be tried by a jury de medietate lingue is the creature of statute law, and an alien has no such right by the common law. The English statute which conferred the right on foreigners to demand to be tried by a mixed jury is the 28 Ed. 3. c. 13. That statute gives no right of peremptory challenge. The right claimed by the appellant must, however, depend upon the law as to jurors contained in the Juries Act, 1865. That statute, by sect. 37, gives an accused a right to challenge peremptorily to the number of twenty; but sect. 38, which gives the right to a foreigner to demand a mixed jury, is silent as to the right of peremptory challenge, and the reason is plain, namely, the great inconvenience which might arise by reason of such challenge. It is frequently difficult to obtain a sufficient number of foreigners. This question of peremptory challenge was considered in The Queen v. Mansel (5). Whatever right of challenge the appellant had must be given by the colonial statute law. They referred to The Queen v. O'Connor (6).

SIR JOSEPH NAPIER delivered the judgment of their Lordships.—In this case the appellant was arraigned at Melbourne, in the Supreme Court of the colony of Victoria, upon an information for murder, to which he pleaded not guilty, and put himself upon the country. He then suggested and set forth that he was an alien, and

(3) 4 F. & F. 546.

(4) 11 Cl. & F. 427.

(5) 26 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) M.C. 137; s.c. 8 E. & B. 64.

(6) 26 St. Tri. 1191.

(1) Acts of the Colony of Victoria, 28 Vic. No. 272, ss. 36. 37. 38.

(2) 6 Geo. 4. cc. 50. 60; 7 Geo. 4. c. 28.

prayed the Queen's writ for having a jury de medietate summoned for his trial on the information. This was granted, and a jury was returned and impanelled accordingly. The single question raised on this appeal is, whether the appellant was entitled to challenge peremptorily one of the jurors who was an alien. The Supreme Court disallowed the challenge; the trial proceeded, and the appellant was convicted.

The rule of the common law, as it has been modified by the 37th section of the Victorian statute, provides that every person arraigned for any treason felony or misdemeanour, shall be admitted to challenge peremptorily to the number of twenty jurors. (Juries Statute, 1865, No. 272.)

The right of peremptory challenge at common law was a principal incident of the trial of felony. When Sir E. Coke comments upon the 38 Hen. 8. c. 28, which for a time took away the right of peremptory challenge in cases of high treason, he says, "the end of challenge is to have an indifferent trial, and which is required by law, and to bar the party indicted of his lawful challenge is to bar him of a principal matter concerning his trial" (3 Inst. 27). In The Queen v. Mansel (5), Lord Campbell, C.J., observes that "unless this power were given under certain restrictions to both sides, it is quite obvious that justice could not be satisfactorily administered; for it must often happen that a juror is returned on the panel who does not stand indifferent, and who is not fit to serve upon the trial, although no legal evidence could be adduced to prove his unfitness." Section 36 of the Victoria Statute provides.

[His Lordship read the section.]

The right of the Crown, thus restricted, may be considered as in effect equivalent to a peremptory challenge, if, without having resort to such of the jurors as have been "set by" for the time on the part of the Crown, there can be procured, from those returned on the panel, enough of persons not objected to to make a jury. The restriction in practice imposed on the Crown is that it shall not exercise its prerogative so as to make it necessary to put off the trial for want of a jury, such as the party arraigned is entitled to have upon his trial.

The right of this party to challenge peremptorily (but restricted to the number of twenty) is preserved under the 37th section in all cases of arraignment for any treason or felony, and it has been extended by this section to cases of misdemeanour.

It has been contended on the part of the Crown that this right of peremptory challenge, thus secured, was taken away in part by the appellant's having obtained the benefit of the 38th section, by which he was enabled, when arraigned for the felony, to claim a trial by a jury de medietate. The early statute which conferred this privilege on aliens in cases at the suit of the king, was the 28 Edw. 3. c. 13. s. 2, enacted "for the benefit and in favour of aliens." The words of the enactment are in the affirmative, professing to confer a privilege, not to take away a right confessedly material to secure an indifferent trial which is required by law.

Under the 37th section of the Victorian statute the right of peremptory challenge on the part of the prisoner on his arraignment is certain; but it is not equally certain that this right was taken away in part by the necessary operation of the 38th section; or that the rule of the common law, as to peremptory challenge, was interfered with in any such case by the necessary operation of 28 Edw. 3. c. 13. In a case where the question arose as to the taking away by implication the right of peremptory challenge in felony (Gray v. The Queen) (4), Tindal, C.J., said, "If the question be whether his right to the peremptory challenge has or has not been taken away, it appears to me that in accordance with the general principle of decision applied to criminal cases, tutius erratur in mitiori sensu, the decision of such question is to be given in favour of the prisoner, who is not to be deprived by implication of a right of so much importance to him, given by the common law and enjoyed for many centuries, unless such implication is absolutely necessary for the interpretation of the statute." An example of the like construction is to be found in Hawk. P.C. bk. 1, ch. 7, s. 9 (Felony and Misprision of Felony), where it is said, "If a statute create a felony, and says that the offender shall suffer death, yet he shall in such case have the benefit of clergy, for this being a privilege allowed by the common law, cannot be taken away without express words."

The composition of a jury de medietate is prescribed by the statute, but the incidents of the trial are annexed by the common law, and are therefore implied and included in the statute. If on a venire of half denizens and half aliens, the sheriff returns twelve as aliens, and among them some who in truth are not such, the party may challenge the array for want of a sufficient number of aliens. (Hawk. P.O. bk. 2, ch. 43, s. 43.) There is no express provision in the statute for this, but it is not excluded, and that is enough. The right and the privilege are consistent and stand well together. Not only is there no inconsistency in retaining the right of peremptory challenge in a case like the present, and claiming the privilege of having a trial by jury de medietate, but there are sufficient reasons for making use of both.

In addition to what has been observed by Lord Campbell, C.J., as to peremptory challenge, and which applies to all jurors impanelled on a trial for felony, there may be aliens with national prejudices and hostile feelings against the prisoner, and objections which he could not make out by legal evidence. There is not a reason assigned in books of authority in favour of the right of peremptory challenge that is not at least as applicable (if not in some instances more so) to an alien as to any of the other jurors. It is to be observed that by the 38th section an alien juror impanelled on a jury de medietate is not liable to be challenged for want of freehold or of any other qualification required by the Act. This is in accordance with the principle of the earlier statutes (9 Hen. 6. c. 29, and others), by which the laws relating to aliens as to holding property were not allowed to interfere with the privilege of having a trial by a jury de medietate. The 34th section of the Victorian statute makes the want of qualification according to the Act a ground of challenge, and, therefore, it was necessary to remove this hindrance to an alien juror serving on such a jury, under the 38th section. This section places him in the same position as if he had the qualification required by the Act, but leaves him subject to be challenged for any other cause of challenge; that is to say, for any personal disqualification at common law, except alienage itself. The statute being in the affirmative, leaves the common law as to these unaffected. This is in accordance with the view of Mr. Justice Willes, in delivering the opinion of the judges in Mulcahy v. The Queen (7).

But for the express saving in favour of the alien juror, the disqualifications as to property would have attached, as in the cases of a denizen juror. In every instance where the legislature has not interfered in his favour, it will be found that an alien juror is dealt with as if he were a denizen. The closing words of the 38th section are obviously introduced ex abundanti cautela, and the words immediately preceding refer to challenges for cause, as distinguished from those that are peremptory.

It was not necessary to draw any distinction between the alien and the denizen moiety of the jury with reference to the law of peremptory challenge, the reason for which applied to both; but it was necessary to distinguish with reference to challenges for cause, and to make special provision as to these for the case of alien jurors on a jury de medietate. The words of the section relate to challenges for cause only, and are in the affirmative; so that the right of peremptory challenge is not in any way prejudiced.

Whenever the case requires it, and the reason of the rule applies, the law of juries, in the absence of a positive provision to the contrary, is applicable to jurors on a jury de medietate. The instance of a challenge to the array has been mentioned. There is another instance in the extension of the law as to a tales, where although the words in the statute were appropriate to the common trials of English, yet the law was extended to a jury de medietate. The case is reported in Popham, 36, and is fully set out in 10th Rep. 104-6. No case has been cited before the decision of the Supreme Court in 1866, and no textbook of authority has been referred to, in which the distinction contended for between the alien and the denizen portion of the jury de medietate, as to the law of peremptory challenge, has been suggested. The case of The Queen v. Giorgetti (3) seems to have proceeded on the principle that an alien juror impanelled was subject to peremptory challenge. As to the exercise of the right of the Crown, under the special circumstances of the case, it seems to have been reasonably restricted, so as not to prejudice or abridge the right of the prisoner to have a jury de medietate to try him, so far, at least, as it was practicable to obtain such a jury.

(7) 3 Law Rep. H. of L. Cas. 315.

The result is, that their Lordships are of opinion that the challenge put forward by the appellant in this case ought to have been allowed. That neither in the provision for the composition of the jury de medietate, nor in that for relieving the alien jurors from liability to be challenged for want of a qualification under the Act, nor in that for preserving the liability for other causes of challenge existing at common law, is there to be found anything that takes away, or is inconsistent with, the right of peremptory challenge given by the common law and preserved by the statute as a principal incident of the trial of the felony, and consequent upon arraignment. Their Lordships, therefore, will humbly advise her Majesty that the appeal should be allowed, that the verdict and conviction should be quashed, and a venire de novo awarded.

Attorneys—H. A. Graham, for petitioner; The Solicitor to the Treasury, for the Crown.

PRIVY COUNCIL. } THE QUEBEC MARINE INSURANCE, appellants, v. THE COMMERCIAL BANK OF CANADA, respondents.^{*} 1870.
April 20.

Marine Insurance—Seaworthiness—Implied Warranty—Inland Policy.

A policy of Marine Insurance headed "Inland Hull policy" insured the ship "West" against perils of "lakes, rivers, canals, fires, ^{*} Present, Lord Penzance, Sir W. Erle and Lord Justice Giffard.

jettisons, except damage from rottenness, inherent defects, and other unseaworthiness," "at and from Montreal to Nova Scotia." At the commencement of the voyage the boiler was defective, and after leaving Quebec and on getting into salt water "The West" met with bad weather and was lost:—Held, first, that the warranty of seaworthiness at the commencement of the voyage applied, although the policy was an Inland policy, the voyage being expressed by the policy to be from Montreal to Halifax; secondly, that the express provision as to seaworthiness in the policy did not exclude the implied warranty; thirdly, that, though there are different degrees of seaworthiness according to the nature of the voyage; yet where there are several stages in a voyage which involve different equipments a vessel must be seaworthy for each stage at the commencement of each stage.

This was an appeal from the Court of Queen's Bench of Quebec, Canada.

The appellants were a Marine Insurance Company, and the action was brought by the respondents on a policy of insurance effected by their agent, on a steam vessel called The West, for a voyage from Montreal to Halifax.

The policy was headed "Inland Hull Policy," and was for 6,000 dollars on a steam vessel called The West "at and from Montreal to Halifax, in Nova Scotia," the vessel being warranted to sail on or before the 21st of November, 1864. The policy contained the following clause:

"Touching the adventures and perils which the said insurance company is content to bear and take upon itself by this policy, they are of the lakes, rivers, canals, fires, jettisons, that shall come to the damage of the said vessel or any part thereof. Excepting all perils, losses, or misfortunes arising from or caused by the following or other legally excluded causes: For damage that may be done by the vessel hereby insured to any other vessel or property.—From incompetency of the master or insufficiency of the crew, or from the want of ordinary care and skill in loading, and stowing the cargo of said vessel.—From rottenness, inherent defects, and other unseaworthiness.—From theft, bartray, or robbery.—From the bursting or explosion of boilers, collapsing of flues, or breakage of machinery, unless occasioned by unavoidable external cause, or fire ensue therefrom.—From charges, damage, or loss in consequence of a seizure or detention, for or on account of any illicit or prohibited trade, or any trade in articles contraband of war.—From any claim for wages or provisions furnished to officers or crew, while the property insured may be detained by any disaster, or during subsequent repairs, excepting always services rendered in recovering and securing the vessel or property covered by this policy.—From anchors being cast without being properly and sufficiently buoyed.—From gangways and openings through the deck being improperly and insecurely secured and protected."

The declaration, after setting out the substance of the policy of insurance, continued as follows:—"The plaintiffs say that the said vessel called The West sailed from Montreal within the period mentioned in the said policy, having on board a cargo, and arrived on the 25th day of November, abreast of Barnaby Island, on the Lower St. Lawrence, when the engineer reported that her boilers had become unserviceable, and a strong breeze from west-north-west causing her to roll heavily, she was brought to anchor under shelter of the said island, and a telegraphic message was despatched to Montreal to procure assistance. On the 29th of November an easterly breeze having sprung up, in order to bring the vessel to a place of safety, to repair her and to avoid driving on shore, the crew brought her into river Hokee Cove. On the 30th of November assistance arrived from Montreal, and her boilers were duly repaired; but, owing to the lowness of the tides, she was not able to proceed with her voyage until the 11th of December, when the weather being calm, clear and fine, she was taken out of Hokee Cove, and proceeded on her voyage. Towards the evening of that day the wind commenced to blow from the eastward and rapidly increased to a gale, with a very heavy sea. When abreast of Matane, and distant about 15 miles from the shore, the vessel worked so much as to disable her to meet the wind, and, on an attempt being made to turn her round to run her before the wind, her rudder was broken by a heavy sea, which rendered her unmanageable. It was then blowing a hurricane, with a very heavy sea and a thick snow storm, and the crew fearing that she would capsize or break up, attempted to run her ashore; but her sails were carried away by the gale while they were in the act of setting them, and the vessel became completely at the mercy of the winds, and at seven in the morning of the 12th day of December she stranded about seven miles below Matane, and in a few hours became a total wreck."

To this declaration the appellants pleaded the general issue and a perpetual exception péremptoire du droit, alleging that the vessel was unseaworthy at the commencement of the voyage.

Both parties then proceeded to take evidence, and it was proved that The West was a screw propeller, built in the year 1859, and had been used, up to the date of the voyage in question, entirely in fresh water navigation. Previously to starting, the vessel underwent some alterations at Montreal, to prepare her for a sea voyage, and her boilers were cleaned, but they were not otherwise repaired.

The engineer who had been previously on board the vessel was retained as chief engineer, though he had never been to sea, and was unacquainted with the management of engines in salt water; but a second engineer was obtained, who had been previously on sea voyages.

The West left Montreal on the 21st of November, 1864—the last day allowed by the policy of insurance—and arrived safely at Quebec on the 23rd, and completed there her cargo and crew. She left Quebec on the night of the 24th, and on the morning of the 25th, when she had arrived opposite the Island of Barnaby, having then been about six hours in salt water, it was discovered that there was a leak in the boiler, the water damping the engine fires and the pressure of steam in the boiler falling suddenly from 70lb. to 10lb. The weather up to this time had been fair, and the voyage without accident. The cause of the leak was found to be a crack, situated in the corner of one of the fire-boxes, which had been noticed by the chief engineer previously to the vessel leaving Montreal, but which had not leaked till the vessel got into salt water. The defect in the boiler being such as to render it unsafe to proceed on the voyage without its being repaired, she was taken to a neighbouring harbour, called River Hokee Cove, and men were sent down by her owners to do the necessary repairs.

It was several days before the repairs were executed, and the state of the tide not allowing the vessel to start immediately on their completion, it was not till after a delay of sixteen days that she again proceeded on her voyage, on the 11th December, by which time she might otherwise have reached her destination. On the evening of the same day a violent storm came on, and, her rudder breaking, the vessel was driven on shore and became a total wreck. The principal point contested between the respondents and appellants was, whether the crack in the boiler, or the inexperience of the chief engineer, rendered the ship unseaworthy at the time of her starting so as to prevent the policy attaching. Several witnesses were called to give their opinions on each point, and on the first they agreed that a vessel whose boiler had a crack in it unrepaired would be defective and unfit to go to sea; while the fact that the vessel soon after leaving port, without experiencing rough weather, or meeting with an accident, became unable to proceed, would, in itself, raise an inference that the ship was unseaworthy at starting.

The enquêtes having been closed, the following judgment was delivered on the 31st December, 1867:—

"The Court considered that the propeller called The West was seaworthy at the time of her leaving Montreal, on her voyage from thence to Halifax, and that the plaintiffs having established that the said propeller called The West was, in the month of December, 1864, lost from perils of the sea, adjudged and condemned the defendants to pay to the plaintiffs the sum of 6,000 dollars currency."

From this judgment the appellants appealed to the Court of Queen's Bench for the province of Quebec, Canada, and on the 19th of December, 1868, that Court gave judgment confirming the judgment of the Superior Court.

From this judgment the present appeal was brought.

The appeal was twice argued, first on the 21st January before Lord Westbury, Sir J. Colvile, Sir J. Napier and Sir R. Phillimore, when their Lordships took time to consider their judgment and afterwards expressed their desire that the appeal should be re-argued.

Sir J. Karslake and Mr. Bompas, for the appellants.—The law which is to be applied to this case is the English law. That is not disputed. The West was unseaworthy at the time she left Montreal, or at all events at the time she left Quebec, and at the time she entered salt water. It is therefore a case of breach of warranty of seaworthiness at the commencement of the voyage. The fact that the vessel was repaired after the voyage was commenced, even if it was before any loss had occurred in consequence of the defects, is immaterial. It is said that the implied warranty of seaworthiness is excluded by the express stipulation as to seaworthiness contained in the policy. It is also said that the whole frame of the policy shews it to have been the intention of the contracting parties that the policy should only extend to risks of rivers and lakes, but the policy expressly assures the vessel from Montreal to Halifax. The express provision as to seaworthiness is not intended to apply to the commencement of the voyage but to the whole duration of the voyage. There are no doubt different degrees of seaworthiness for different voyages, but a vessel must be seaworthy for the voyage at the commencement of each stage of the voyage. The American authorities do not apply. They referred to Gibson v. Small (1); Dixon v. Sadler (2); Bouillon v. Lupton (3); Thompson v. Hopper (4); Weir v. Aberdeen (5); Forshaw v. Chabert (6).

Mr. Manisty and Mr. Fullarton, for the respondents.—The law of implied war-

(1) 4 H. L. Cas. 353.

(2) 5 Mee. & W. 405; s. c. 8 Mee. & W. 895.

(3) 15 Com. B. Rep. N.S. 113.

(4) 6 E. & B. 172.

(5) 2 B. & Ald. 320.

(6) 3 Br. & B. 158.

ranty of seaworthiness at the commencement of the voyage does not apply in the construction of this policy. The policy is headed "Inland Hull Policy," and the policy by express terms limits the adventures and risks insured against to "lakes, rivers, canals, fires, and jettisons." It is clear, therefore, that this policy was only intended to cover river risks, and is, in fact, a description of policy very common in Canada, and known as a River policy. The implied warranty of seaworthiness at the commencement of the voyage is confined to sea policies; but this policy by its very provisions excludes the usual implied warranty of seaworthiness, for it provides, amongst other exceptions from liability on the part of the assured, that they shall not be liable for damage arising from rottenness, internal defects, or other unseaworthiness. The implied warranty is, therefore, excluded by this express provision—" Expressum facit cessare tacitum."

They referred to Roberts v. Barker (7); Line v. Stephenson (8); Cook v. Jennings (9); Aspdin v. Austin (10); Biccard v. Shepherd (11); Taylor v. Lovell (12); The Merchants' Insurance Co. v. Olapp (13).

LORD PENZANCE delivered the judgment of their Lordships.—This is an appeal from the Court of Queen's Bench in Canada, and the question to be determined is, whether or not the appellants, who are the underwriters upon a policy of insurance, are, in the events that have happened, liable for the loss of the vessel insured by that policy?

The policy was a policy effected upon a printed form which was intended, as appears by many of its details, to have formed a policy for river, and what may be called inland navigation; but the risk and duration of the policy, as expressed upon the face of it, were "at and from Montreal to Halifax," in Nova Scotia, and it therefore appears to their Lordships to be practically a sea policy as well as a river policy.

The vessel was warranted to sail on or before the 21st of November, 1864; and within the period mentioned in the policy that vessel, The West, left Montreal, and proceeded down the river towards the sea. In due time she arrived at Quebec, from Quebec she pursued her voyage, and very shortly after she found herself in salt water. The boiler of the vessel, which had at the time of her starting on her voyage a defect in it, became unmanageable. The defect which originally existed was aggravated by the increased pressure arising from the vessel being in salt water; but, from whatever cause, the fact is undoubted, that the boiler, owing to the original defect, became then unmanageable. It ceased to do its work, and the vessel was obliged to put into a neighbouring place to have the defect remedied before she could proceed on her voyage. The defect was remedied, but a considerable delay occurred before the voyage was resumed. This delay was caused partly by the state of the tides, and partly by the time necessarily consumed in repairing the existing defect; but eventually she sailed again. She met with bad weather, and was lost. The question is, whether the underwriters, in these circumstances, are responsible for the loss that has occurred?

The underwriters defend themselves upon the ground that the vessel was not seaworthy for her voyage when she sailed, and they point to this defect existing in the boiler at that time, which undoubtedly asserted and established itself as a cause of unseaworthiness as soon as the vessel was in salt water. This defence the underwriters undoubtedly did put forward in very plain language, as it seems to their Lordships, upon their plea or défense au fonds en droit; and it may be remarked in passing, that although it has been argued that the present appellants did not intend to rely upon that defence, yet that does not seem to have been questioned in either of the Courts in Canada. That the defence was raised, and that it was properly raised, seems to have been granted by everybody, including the two learned judges who have

(7) 1 Cr. & M. 808.

(8) 5 Bing. N.C. 183.

(9) 7 Term Rep. 381.

(10) 5 Q.B. Rep. 671.

(11) 14 Mo. P.C.C. 471.

(12) 3 Mass. Rep. 330.

(13) 11 Pick. Rep. 56.

delivered their judgments in favour of the respondents in the Court below.

Now it is undoubted that the vessel, from the fact of the boiler being in the state in which it was found to be as soon as the vessel entered salt water, was not fit to encounter the seas, and for that reason, and that reason alone, she put in to repair. Well, then, can it be said that the vessel sailed in a seaworthy state? The general proposition is not denied that in voyage policies there is an implication by law of a warranty of seaworthiness, and it was not contended that the vessel was seaworthy when she found herself in salt water; but it has been suggested that there is a different degree of seaworthiness required by law, according to the different stage or portion of the voyage which the vessel successively has to pass through, and the difficulties she has to encounter; and no doubt that proposition is quite true.

The cases of Dixon v. Saddler (2), and the other cases which have been cited, leave it beyond doubt that there is seaworthiness for the port, seaworthiness in some cases for the river, and seaworthiness in some cases, as in a case that has been put forward of a whaling voyage, for some definite, well-recognised, and distinctly separate stage of the voyage. This principle has been sanctioned by various decisions; but it has been equally well decided that the vessel, in cases where these several distinct stages of navigation involve the necessity of a different equipment or state of seaworthiness, must be properly equipped, and in all respects seaworthy for each of these stages of the voyage respectively at the time when she enters upon each stage, otherwise the warranty of seaworthiness is not complied with.

It was argued that the obligation thus cast upon the assured to procure and provide a proper condition and equipment of the vessel to encounter the perils of each stage of the voyage, necessarily involves the idea that between one stage of the voyage and another he should be allowed an opportunity to find and provide that further equipment which the subsequent stage of the voyage requires; and no doubt that is so. But that equipment must, if the warranty of seaworthiness is to be complied with, be furnished before the vessel enters upon that subsequent stage of her voyage which is supposed to require it.

Now, in this case, supposing there were any such subsequent stage as has been argued, and that there were any such necessity for a different equipment at one period of the voyage than that which existed at another, which is by no means plain, can it be said, that at the commencement of that portion of her voyage which was to be made in salt water, the vessel was fit to encounter the perils of it, or, in other words, was seaworthy?

It is plain that this could not be asserted with truth, because from the moment she entered the salt water, the defect became apparent, and she was actually disabled by the action of the salt water upon the defective boiler.

It seems, therefore, to their Lordships, that the warranty of seaworthiness has not been complied with.

Two grounds have been taken by the respondents as reasons why the underwriters should, nevertheless, be held responsible. The first and main ground is one which it may be said, in passing, received no attention whatever either from the counsel or from the Courts in Canada, namely, that in this particular policy there is no warranty of seaworthiness to be implied. It is said that the language of this policy is such, that the Court ought not to imply therefrom the ordinary warranty of seaworthiness. No doubt it is competent to parties by language in a contract to which, as an ordinary rule, the law attaches some implied condition, by express, pertinent, and apposite language to exclude that condition, and the question in this case is, whether the parties have done so? This, like all other questions of contract, is a question of the intention of the parties. The law by which the warranty of seaworthiness is attached to the contract is a law known to the parties who make contracts of this description; and, therefore, they are prepared to understand that the implied warranty will be attached to the contract they are about to make. If, therefore, there is an intention to exclude that implied warranty, it ought to be expressed in plain language; but, upon looking at the language which it is argued has that effect in this case, there seems to their Lordships to be no reason whatever for saying that it was intended to have any such result. The enumeration of losses for which the underwriter here declares that he will not be responsible, is one that may properly have been introduced for either one of two reasons: first of all, the underwriter may have thought it right to say that, should a loss occur which he attributes to the condition of the ship, he will not be placed in the position of being obliged to satisfy a Court or a jury that that loss was brought about by the vessel being deficient in seaworthiness at the time when she sailed. He may wish to protect himself by stipulating, that when any loss is attempted to be brought home to him, he shall be at liberty to investigate at once the immediate cause of that loss (quite irrespective of the time when the rottenness or inherent defect, or unseaworthiness arose), and be entitled to put his finger upon it, and say, "This is a loss that has not arisen by the pressure of the elements, but one which has in fact arisen from rottenness or inherent defect."

There is another reason why he may wish to have this enumeration included in the policy without intending to disturb the well-known warranty that attaches to all policies of this character; it is this—the warranty of seaworthiness would only protect him in case the defect exists at the time the vessel sails on her voyage, but the language of the enumeration is quite wide enough to protect the underwriters from losses of a similar character, although it is proved to demonstration that they did not arise till after the vessel sailed. This enumeration of excepted losses, therefore, very largely enhances the protection of the underwriters; and it is impossible to read this enumeration without seeing that the underwriters were bent on being specially protected by the terms of this policy. And if it be said that the enumeration of excepted losses superseded the need of the warranty, as all losses arising from unseaworthiness, whether existing before or after the commencement of the voyage, are thereby excepted, the answer is obvious—that the warranty, if broken, exempts the underwriters from loss by fire or pirates, or any other danger, though in no way referable to the unseaworthiness itself. It would seem, therefore, an odd conclusion to come to, to say that, where the underwriters were bent upon special protection and exemption, they should have intended to surrender the warranty of seaworthiness, which, after all, is the main protection to their interests.

It seems to their Lordships, therefore, that there is no pretence for saying that the language here used is such that the Court ought to conclude from it that the underwriters intended to part with the protection which the law otherwise would have accorded.

The second ground taken by the respondents is founded upon the language attributed to a great authority (Lord Tenterden) in the case of Weir v. Aberdeen (5), to the effect that if a defect, though it exists at the time the vessel sailed, and exists to such an extent and is of such a character as to render the vessel unseaworthy, be remedied before any loss arises, the underwriters still remain responsible. This is a proposition of perilous latitude. It is impossible not to see that such a doctrine would tend, if carried to its legitimate consequences, to fritter away the value of this warranty altogether. It is all very well to talk of trivial and small things, but it is very difficult to define what should fall within the category of small or trivial things, and what should exceed it. It may, however, be safely observed, without going more narrowly into that subject, that the case of Weir v. Aberdeen (5) did not proceed upon the language that is attributed to Lord Tenterden—whether he was fully and rightly reported or not—but the judgment proceeded, as it appears to their Lordships, distinctly upon the principle that the underwriters had been aware of the unseaworthiness, and had assented to the vessel putting back to the port to cure herself of the defect, and, therefore, they were held responsible. They had assented in writing on the policy to maintain their liability, notwithstanding the violation of the warranty. If the statements attributed to the Chief Justice were to be held to be the ground of decision in that case, the case itself would come in direct conflict with many other cases, and especially the case of Fordshaw v. Chabert (6), in which a defect existed at the time the vessel sailed, was completely remedied at Jamaica, the port into which the vessel put for that purpose, and after the defect was completely remedied, the vessel was lost on the voyage from Jamaica to Liverpool; and yet the underwriters were held not responsible.

For these reasons their Lordships think that they ought humbly to advise Her Majesty to reverse this decision of the Court of Queen's Bench in Canada, and their Lordships think that the reversal ought to be with costs. The judgment of the Court of Appeal in Canada appears to have given the costs in both Courts to the present respondents. Their Lordships think that this portion also of the judgment ought to be reversed, and that the costs of both Courts in Canada, as well as the costs of this appeal, ought to be paid by the present respondents.

Attorneys—Bischoff, Bompas & Bischoff, for appellants; Roberts & Simpson, for respondents.

1870. } REGINA, appellant;
July 7. } ALLAN MACPHERSON, respondent.*

New South Wales—Criminal Information—Assault—House of Assembly, Contempt of—Imputation of—Demurrer.

An information by the Attorney-General of New South Wales charged "That on the 26th of February, 1868, at Sydney, in the said colony, while the Legislative Assembly of the said colony was sitting, a member of the said Assembly, whose conduct had been, and was then, under its consideration, after having been heard in his place in the said Assembly in reference to such conduct, was, in accordance with the practice of the said Assembly, requested by the Speaker thereof to withdraw therefrom, and that the said member, in obedience to the said request, thereupon withdrew from the said Assembly, and that immediately on his so withdrawing, the respondent being a member of the said Assembly, in and upon the said member did make an assault, and him (the member) did then beat, wound, and ill-treat, in contempt of the said Assembly, in violation of its dignity, and to the great obstruction of its business:"—Held, on demurrer, that the information charged in proper terms a common assault. That the words, "in contempt of, etc.," did not constitute a separate charge, or derogate from the charge of assault.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Supreme Court of New South Wales, given in favour of the respondent on a demurrer to an information filed by the Attorney-General of that colony.

On the 17th of March, 1868, an information was filed in the Supreme Court of New South Wales by Her Majesty's Attorney-General for the said colony, charging the respondent—"For that on the 26th of February, 1868, at Sydney, in the said colony, while the Legislative Assembly of the said colony was sitting, Benjamin Lee, a member of the said Assembly, whose conduct had been and then was under its consideration, after being heard in his place in the said Assembly in reference to such conduct, was, in accordance with the practice of the said Assembly, requested by the Speaker thereof to withdraw. And that the said Benjamin Lee, in obedience to the said request, thereupon withdrew from the said Assembly into an ante-chamber adjoining thereto, and that immediately upon his so withdrawing into the said ante-chamber, the said Allan Macpherson, a member of the said Assembly, in and upon the said Benjamin Lee did make an assault, and him, the said Benjamin Lee, did then beat, wound, and ill-treat, in contempt of the said Assembly, in violation of its dignity, and to the great obstruction of its business."

On the 11th of May the said Allan Macpherson appeared before the Court at Darlinghurst, and filed a demurrer to this information, and a joinder in demurrer was filed by the Attorney-General.

* Present, Lord Cairns, Sir William Erle, Sir J. W. Colvile.

The demurrer was argued before the Court at Darlinghurst, on the 13th of May, 1868, before two of the judges of the Supreme Court of the colony; and on the 18th of the same month the said judges delivered judgment, one of the judges deciding in favour of the respondent; the other judge decided in favour of the Crown.

On the 5th of June, 1868, the demurrer came on to be heard in the Supreme Court before the Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Hargrave and Mr. Justice Cheeke.

On the 8th of June, 1868, the Supreme Court gave judgment for the respondent, Sir Alfred Stephen, Chief Justice, holding that the appellant was entitled to judgment, but Mr. Justice Hargrave and Mr. Justice Cheeke held that the demurrer ought to be allowed.

The Chief Justice delivered the following judgment:—"This is an information filed, ex officio, by the Attorney-General, charging the defendant with the commission—under special circumstances—of (real or supposed) aggravation of an assault and battery. It states in substance, by way of prefatory averment, that while the Legislative Assembly of this colony was sitting, one Benjamin Lee, a member, in obedience to a request from the Speaker, withdrew therefrom into an adjoining ante-chamber, and that immediately on such withdrawal, the defendant, he being also a member, committed the assault in question on the said Benjamin Lee. The information then proceeds to allege that the act was in "contempt of the Assembly, in violation of its dignity, and to the great obstruction of its business."

Here, then, whatever may have been the intention of the draftsman, and whether we regard the prefatory matter or that which follows the statement of the assault (one or both) as material to and incorporated with that statement, or as surplusage and matter wholly irrelevant, is a clear and distinct charge of an indictable offence—that of an assault and battery, committed by one man upon another, without apparent justification. This charge is couched in apt terms, with its ordinary technical allegation that the defendant assaulted, beat, wounded, and ill-treated his adversary. Such an offence is necessarily against the public peace, or, in legal language, against the peace of the Queen. The addition or the omission of those words is confessedly of no moment. Their formal insertion could not affect in any degree the character or legal quality of the assault, and since the passing of the 16 Vict. No. 18, s. 24, their omission (which is in accordance with the usual modern course) is absolutely immaterial. So that the proposition maintained by the defendant's demurrer, as I understand it, amounts in effect to this: that the assault and battery committed by him, thus charged, is not punishable on this information, because, although essentially against the peace, it is here charged only as having been in contempt of the Legislative Assembly, and a serious obstruction to its business.

In other words, the question raised by him is, whether an assault is the less punishable by law because it not only was a breach of the peace, but also a contempt (whatever those words may mean) of the local Legislature. Or, putting that allegation aside, whether beating a man ceases to be against the peace, or to be an offence cognisable by this Court, because it not merely injured the individual named (as the information clearly implies), but at the same time obstructed the legislative business of the country.

It may be that the information was thus framed for the purpose of inducing the Court, if possible, to regard the assault as an offence solely because of that alleged obstruction, or of the supposed contempt and violation of dignity charged.

Let us assume this to have been the case, and, for the sake of argument, that the act of beating is not shown on this information to have been either a contempt, a violation of anyone's dignity, or an obstruction of legislative business. Or, let it be assumed that no such contempt, violation, or obstruction, however adequately charged, is itself an indictable offence. The conclusion appears to me to be the same—that the failure of the second portion of the indictment, from whatever cause, will not affect the validity of the first. It cannot relieve the defendant, for the charge of assault, existing unmistakably on the record, remains, and the Court, whatever the design of the pleader, must take cognizance of that charge.

The objection, therefore, that no offence against the Assembly has been shewn, or could be punished by indictment if shewn, fails (as it seems to me) to sustain the demurrer. The imputed offence of beating is not answered by showing that immaterial or idle allegations follow, such as that the individual beaten was a senator, or that the act of beating was a contempt, or obstruction of senatorial business. If, except simply as matters of aggravation, those allegations are wholly immaterial, which they clearly are if they disclose no offence, the Court may, on a well-known principle, reject them.

We have next to consider whether the allegations in question are or not in this sense immaterial—in other words, whether a distinct offence cognizable by law is disclosed by them. And if there be, another question may arise—whether the information is or not then bad for duplicity; for, by the rules of pleading, two different offences (if at least both be well laid—See 1 Com. B. Rep. 854) cannot be included in the same count.

I am of opinion that there is no second offence charged in this information. It imputes to the defendant an assault, an offence, as already observed, aptly and technically described and well-known to the law. All that precedes and that follows is, in legal effect, matter of aggravation and detail only, showing the circumstances which accompanied, not those which constitute, the offence. As, therefore, they form no legal ingredient in the charge, their insertion was unnecessary; and for the same reason that they added nothing to the essence of the crime, the words which tend to aggravate its character were superfluous. But this no more vitiates the indictment than the allegation in the Earl of Thanet's case (1) affected the charge of riot there, that the defendants thereby not only disturbed the public peace, but also committed a contempt of the Court and obstructed the course of justice.

In the view which I thus take of the case, it becomes unnecessary to express an opinion on the question raised whether it is or not an indictable offence contemptuously or by unauthorised means to obstruct the House of Assembly (and if so, equally the Legislative Council) in the performance of its duties. It would be difficult to define such an offence; for what will amount to an obstruction, especially by a member of the House, cognizable by the criminal law? There may be things said, as well as acts done, in either Chamber, unsanctioned by any rules of debate and largely obstructive of legislative business, which nevertheless ought to be enquired into by no other tribunal. On the other hand, as neither House can punish offenders in any case, I should be sorry to let it be supposed that every obstruction, however gross, by deed or words, to the performance of their high functions, provided only that it amounts neither to riot nor assault or libel, has therefore an absolute immunity from prosecution elsewhere. And if contemptuous expressions or offensive conduct towards a justice of the peace while in the discharge of his duty, operating in effect as an obstruction to its due performance, be indictable at law, as this Court held it to be in Ex parte Cory (2) (see also the authorities referred to by Mr. Justice Wise in Ex parte Carrol (3)), it would seem strange to hold that a similar obstruction to the business of the Assembly or Council, sitting in the exercise of legislative powers, is not equally so punishable.

In Aldridge v. Haines (4), it is distinctly said, by Lord Tenterden and Mr. Justice Parke, that abusive words spoken to the Commissioners of a Small Debt Court might be charged as an obstruction to their proceedings. A like observation is made by the latter learned Judge in the Exchequer, as to an abusive letter sent to a magistrate—The King v. Faulkner (5). The case of The King v. How (6), which is an instance of a prosecution for obstructing a magistrate by words spoken,

(2) 3 S. C. R. 309.

(3) 1 S. C. R. 311.

(4) 2 B. & Ad. 395.

(5) 2 Cr. M. & R. 525.

(6) 2 Str. 699.

(1) 27 St. Tri. 827.

appears to me an authority to the same effect. So is the expression of Lord Denman in his Judgment in the Duke of Marlborough's case (7). In The King v. Smith (8), it is held to be an indictable offence at law to obstruct any person in the exercise of powers conferred on him by statute. And (on that principle, I presume) in Kielley v. Carson (9), the Privy Council in their considered judgment, denying the power of a Colonial Legislative Body to commit for a contempt, assume, apparently as a matter of course, that "contemptuous insults and expressions" are punishable by the ordinary tribunals. If this be not understood as referring to libels only, it will of course include the case supposed—that is to say, of obstruction by insults, or any contemptuous expressions, offered or used to the Legislative Body.

The case of any such obstruction (or of obstructing by some act or acts done) where the offender is himself a member of the House, it must be admitted, presents more difficulty than that of a stranger so offending. And if, as is intimated in Doyle v. Falconer (10), legislative bodies have power to expel a member for misconduct of this kind, there seems little reason for resorting to a court of law. But, on the whole, I see no sufficient reason for holding that the obstruction, if punishable in the one case, is not equally so in the other. Be this how it may, I am of opinion that in every indictment or information for the offence, not only must the obstruction be specifically charged as such, but the act, words, or other matter meant to be insisted on as constituting it, must (according to the general rule) be stated with reasonable particularity. The Court must be enabled to see, moreover, on the face of the information, that an interruption of the business and duties of the House really was occasioned, directly or indirectly, by the means stated; and that those means were unlawful, in the sense, at least, of their being unjustifiable in the person using them.

(7) 5 Q.B. Rep. 955.

(8) 2 Dougl. 445.

(9) 4 Moore, 63.

(10) 4 Moore P.C. (N.S.) 203; s. c. 36 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) P.C. 33.

As this case now stands, my conclusion is that the demurrer ought to be overruled; and that the defendant, unless permitted, as an indulgence, to plead in denial of the charge, should receive the judgment of this Court for the assault with which he stands charged, the same being confessed by his demurrer, with the matters charged in aggravation of that offence.

Sir R. Palmer and Mr. Cohen, for the Crown.—The information sufficiently charged a common assault. The charge contains the ordinary technical allegations, setting out a charge of assault and battery. That part of the information which imputes a contempt of the Legislative Assembly may be rejected as surplusage. Such a charge would in itself constitute no offence. The information is not bad on the ground of duplicity. But if it is said that the charge of a common assault is not well laid, the facts alleged amount to a misdemeanour at common law in the obstructing the business of the House of Assembly. The failure of the latter part of the charge will not affect the validity of the earlier part of the charge. All the allegations which precede and follow the charge of assault are mere aggravation. They referred to the Earl of Thanet's case (1), The King v. Hunt (11), and Taylor on Evidence, 4 Ed. 245, 247.

The respondent did not appear.

LORD CAIRNS delivered the judgment of their Lordships.—In this case, their Lordships are of opinion that the appeal ought to be allowed, that the judgment which has been entered in the Colony for the defendant should be reversed, and that the demurrer of the defendant should be overruled, and their Lordships will humbly report to Her Majesty to this effect. Beyond that their Lordships do not proceed. They leave it to the Attorney-General to take such steps as he may think fit, if he should desire to take further steps with reference to the judgment in the Colony.

Their Lordships read the information in this case as an information which states in fit and apt terms that an assault was committed by the defendant upon the person named in the information, viz., Benjamin Lee; they read it as alleging that "the defendant, in and upon the said Benjamin Lee, did make an assault, and him, the said Benjamin Lee, did then beat, wound and ill-treat;" words which, in all respects, are apt words for the purpose of describing a common assault. They find, then, that added to those words there are some further words, viz., "in contempt of the said Assembly, in violation of its dignity, and to the great obstruction of its business." Their Lordships cannot read these words as an allegation of a further or of a separate offence, but simply as the statement of a consequence resulting from that common assault which is described in the earlier words. Whether that consequence did or did not result from the common assault, whether that consequence ought or ought not to be considered as an aggravation of the common assault is, to the minds of, their Lordships, immaterial. The words do not alter the character, or the allegations with regard to the character, of the offence which is charged. They may be surplusage; but if surplusage, they do not in any way injure or take away from the effect of the earlier averments. Their Lordships are perfectly satisfied with the reasons upon this head which have been given by the Chief Justice in the Colony. They desire to express their concurrence with those reasons; and it is upon those grounds their Lordships have arrived at the conclusion which has been already intimated.

(11) 2 Campb. 583.

Attorneys — Oliversons, Denby & Peachey, for appellant.

1870. } RAYNES WAITE SMITH, appellant,
July 5. } v. JANE GEORGIANA O'GRADY
AND OTHERS, respondents.*

Jamaica—Real Estate—Personal Estate —Executor—Claim for an Account—Laches.

A testator bequeathed all his real and personal estate in Jamaica, after payment of debts and legacies, to the respondents, his grandchildren, to be apportioned when they should attain the age of twenty-one years, and appointed D. R. executor of his will and guardian in respect of the real estate. The testator died in 1832, and D. R. entered into possession of the real and personal estate. D. R. died in 1850, and appointed the appellant his executor. The respondents attained the age of twenty-one years in 1865, and in that year the appellant filed a petition praying that an account might be taken of the real and personal estate of the testator:—Held, that the appellant was entitled, notwithstanding the delay, as a matter of right to have an account taken of the personal estate of the testator, and inasmuch as D. R. had been appointed guardian in respect of the real estate, and had entered into possession of the same, accounts should also be taken of the rents and profits of the real estate of the testator.

This was an appeal from a decree of the Vice Chancellor of Jamaica, dated the 2nd of May, 1868, whereby a suit, instituted by the appellant, as executor of Duncan Robertson, the surviving executor and trustee of the will of John Chambers, for the administration of the real and personal estate of the latter, was dismissed.

The circumstances under which the appeal arose were as follows:—

The said John Chambers, at the time of making his will and of his death, was seised in fee simple of certain real estate in Jamaica. By his will, dated the 30th of September, 1831, he bequeathed certain legacies, and devised and bequeathed all the residue of his estate, subject to the payment of the said legacies, to his grandchildren, the respondents, in fee, as tenants in common, to be apportioned to them when and as they should, respectively, attain the age of twenty-one years. The said John Chambers appointed, amongst other persons, one Duncan Robertson, executor of his said will.

* Present, Lord Cairns, Sir J. W. Colville, and Sir R. Phillimore.

The testator, Chambers, died on the 1st of December, 1832, leaving the respondents surviving, and the said Duncan Robertson proved the said will.

Upon the decease of the testator the said Duncan Robertson entered upon and took possession of the real and personal estate of the said testator in Jamaica, and applied the rents and profits and produce of the real estate, and such of the personal estate as came to his hands, so far as the same extended, in payment of the testator's debts and legacies.

The said Duncan Robertson died on the 9th of May, 1850, and appointed the appellant executor.

On the 8th of May, 1865, the appellant, as his executor, filed a petition in Jamaica against the respondents, stating the facts of the case, and alleging that there was a debt due by the estate of Chambers to the estate of Robertson amounting to the sum of 1,648*l.* 11*s.* 10*d.* or thereabouts, exclusive of interest; and praying for an administration decree of the real and personal estate of John Chambers, and for a sale of the real estate, and for payment of debts and costs.

On the 1st of November, 1867, the respondents filed their affidavit in answer to the said petition, admitting that the real and personal estate of the testator, Chambers, had been administered by Robertson, but stating that in various respects the estate had not been correctly administered nor accounted for; that, if the accounts were properly taken, a large amount would be due by Robertson's estate to the respondents, and setting up, as a defence to the appellant's claim, that the cause of action did not accrue within six years before the filing of the petition.

On the 2nd of May, 1868, the petition was heard before the Vice Chancellor of Jamaica, and by a decree made therein on the 2nd of May, 1868, the cause petition was dismissed.

From this decree the present appeal was brought.

Sir Roundell Palmer, Mr. Mackeson and

Mr. Cooper, for the appellant.—Duncan Robertson was the executor and trustee under the will of the testator, Chambers, and there are open and unsettled accounts between their respective estates. The Statute of Limitations does not apply. Every executor, or trustee, or representative of an executor or trustee has a right to have the trust accounts taken under the decree of the Court so long as the estate remains, as in this case, unwound up and not fully administered. The parties beneficially entitled under the will of the testator, Chambers, are entitled to call upon the appellant, as the executor of their testator's executor and trustee, for an account, and therefore the appellant, as such executor, is entitled to discharge his testator's estate under the decree of the Court. The appellant had a right to file a bill for an account both in respect of the real and personal estate of the testator, and he is entitled to have such accounts, unless there have been laches. It is not contended that there have been laches. There is an outstanding estate, and a balance is still due. The estate is unsettled. All the appellant asks for is the common administration decree. The case on both sides is that the real estate is in question. Robertson was appointed by the will guardian in respect of real estate. All the proceedings in the Court below have been on the assumption that Robertson was in legal possession.

[LORD CAIRNS.—Do you contend that the appellant has a charge on the real estate?]

We wish to keep that question open, and to have an enquiry whether the real estate is chargeable. By the law of the colony the executor can charge the real estate for management. The judgment of the Court below proceeds upon this assumption.

Mr. Shapter and Mr. Tripp, for the respondents.—No case is shewn by the petition which entitles the appellant to the relief sought against the respondents, or to any relief which may affect them personally or charge the real estate vested in them and the other devisees. The evidence shews that not only all the debts of Chambers, but all his legacies were paid out of his assets. The claim, if any, of Duncan Robertson, or of the appellant, as representing him, is for advances or expenditure in relation to his possession of the real estate of Chambers. Duncan Robertson was not justified in incurring any liability in respect thereof, so as to affect or charge the respondents or their interests in the real estate. The accounts of Duncan Robertson were all closed, and he never set up any claim in respect thereof in his lifetime. If Duncan Robertson ever had any claim, the remedy in respect thereof was barred by the Statutes of Limitations by the length of time which has elapsed. This suit was not an ordinary administration suit. The object of the cause petition was to have an account of the real estate, and to create a charge on the real estate in respect of a debt due to Robertson. The petition in the Court below alleges the payment of debts and legacies out of assets. There was no charge on the real estate by Chambers. Duncan Robertson was not guardian of the real estate. A grandfather cannot appoint a guardian. Robertson was only a bailiff, having the management of the real estate. There was only an equity in the corner of the bill. That cannot prevail. The equity is merely incidental to the prayer of this petition. If a decree be made for accounts, what accounts are to be rendered? They referred to Sleight v. Lawson (1); Curling v. Austin (2); 3 & 4 Will. 4. c. 27; 6 Vict. c. 56.

LORD CAIRNS delivered the judgment of their Lordships:—

Their Lordships entirely concur with the learned Judge of the Court below, that this is a suit brought after very great, and perhaps censurable delay, that if it were a question of indulgence it is entitled to no indulgence, and that the rights of the plaintiff, and the relief which is to be given to him, ought to be carefully scrutinized, so that that which he is entitled to, and only that, should, under the circumstances of the case, be granted. But having said this, their Lordships are not prepared to assent to the view taken by the learned

Judge in the Court below, that an executor, coming even after the delay which has taken place in the present case, and asking to have those accounts taken in which he has been the receiving party, is to be deprived of his right to have those accounts taken, and of having it ascertained, once for all, what his liability as an accounting party is, merely from the lapse of time that has taken place.

So far, therefore, as the personal estate is concerned, and as the position of the appellant, as executor, or executor of an executor, is concerned, their Lordships think that, notwithstanding the delay, the appellant is entitled, as a matter of right, to have the account of the personal estate of the testator taken, and to have it ascertained whether upon those accounts he is a debtor or a creditor of the estate. Their Lordships think that to be the right of the executor upon the statements made in his own complaint, and not denied; but they think that right is strongly fortified in the present case by the fact that the residuary legatees, the persons with whom he is to be in account, themselves admit and assert that his accounts have never been settled; and further, that if they were properly taken, a sum would be found due from him to them. So much as regards the personal estate.

As regards the real estate, their Lordships are of opinion, that it being asserted and sworn to on the part of the appellant that Robertson, who was the executor under the will, and who appears to have been mentioned as a guardian of the infants in respect to the devised property, although a legal guardian, he could not be made by will; and it being stated that he had entered into possession of the real estate, and received the rents and profits of it, and this not being controverted by the defendants, but on the contrary, being insisted upon by them, and it being stated by them that he is accountable in respect to those receipts, their Lordships are of opinion that the accounts should extend to the receipts of rents and profits in respect of the real estate, and to the dealings of Robertson in respect to the real estate, for the purpose of ascertaining whether upon that account also any sum is due from or to Robertson or the appellant.

K

(1) 3 Kay & J. 292; s. c. 26 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Chanc. 553.

(2) 2 Dr. & S. 129.

NEW SERIES, 39.—PRIV. COUN.

Their Lordships observe that the petition seeks to raise the question whether Robertson or the appellant is not entitled to a charge upon the real estate in respect of any sum that may upon one or both of these accounts be found due to him. Their Lordships do not consider that they are in a position to decide that question. The will may have been referred to in the proceedings in the Court below; it has not been formally placed before their Lordships. But in addition to that, their Lordships consider that that is a question which may be affected by the law of the island; and they do not find that this point has been taken notice of specifically by the learned Judge from whose decision the appeal proceeds.

Their Lordships will, therefore, humbly recommend to Her Majesty that in place of the Order dismissing the suit in the Court below, there ought to be an account of the personal estate of the testator received by Robertson or the appellant, and of their application thereof, and whether any and what sum is due to or from the appellant as executor of Robertson in respect thereof, and also an account of the rents and profits of the real estate of the testator received by Robertson or the appellant, and of their application thereof; and of the dealings of Robertson in respect of the real estate, and whether any and what sum is due to or from the appellant as executor of Robertson in respect thereof. Their Lordships think that there should be an enquiry whether any debts or legacies are unpaid, in place of the ordinary general account of debts and legacies, and whether any personal estate is outstanding. They propose, then, to reserve further consideration and costs in the Court below, and in particular the question whether the appellant, as executor of Robertson, is entitled to any lien on the real estate in respect of any sum which may be found due in respect of the dealings with the real estate. And their Lordships will order that the costs of the appellant and of the respondents in this appeal should be made costs in the cause in the Court below. Perhaps it is better to mention—it will indeed be observed from what I have said—that their Lordships desire the account to be taken in the form which I have stated, and they do not propose that the recorded accounts should be taken as settled accounts in any way between the parties.

Attorneys—G. S. Airey, for appellant; Valpy & Chaplin, for respondents.

1869. { JOHN MARTIN, appellant, v. THE
Dec. 24. { REV. ALEXANDER HERIOT MAC-
KONCHIE, respondent.

Judicial Committee—Monition—Disobedience to—Holy Communion—Elevation of Cup and Paten—Kneeling or Prostration.

On appeal from the Arches Court in a proceeding under the Church Discipline Act, the respondent, a clerk in orders, was monitioned to abstain from the elevation of the cup and paten, during the administration of the Holy Communion, and from kneeling or prostrating himself before the consecrated elements during the prayer of consecration.

On a motion to enforce obedience to such monition, it appeared that the sentence of the Arches Court, which was affirmed by the Judicial Committee, monitioned the respondent not to elevate the elements "above the head of the respondent," and that the respondent had literally obeyed that monition. But their Lordships intimated, that any elevation as distinguished from the mere act of removing the elements from the table, and taking them into the hands of the minister, is not sanctioned by law.

It further appeared, that the respondent bowed one knee at certain parts of the prayer of consecration, to an extent that it, occasionally, touched the ground:—Held, that such a bowing of the knee was a breach of the monition, and that it is not necessary that a person should touch the ground, in order to perform an act of reverence.

[For the report of the above case, see 39 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Eccles. p. 11.]

1870. { CHARLES BARRON AND ANOTHER,
June 20. { appellants; GEORGE CHARLES STEWART, respondent.
"THE PANAMA."

Admiralty—Bottomry—Owner—Notice —Insolvency—Adjudication—Assignee.

In no case can notice of the intention to raise money by bottomry be dispensed with. Until an owner has been judicially declared insolvent, he is entitled to notice. If an owner has been judicially declared insolvent, the assignees are entitled to notice.

[For the report of the above case, see 39 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Adm. p. 37.]

1869. { THE GENERAL STEAM NAVIGATION
Dec. 6. { COMPANY, appellants, v. THOMAS HEDLEY AND OTHERS, respondents.
"THE VELOCITY."

Admiralty — Collision — Sailing Rules,
No. 14—Construction—Ships crossing.

Rule 14 of the sailing and steering rules provides that "If two ships under steam are crossing, so as to involve risk of collision, the ship which has the other on her own star-board side, shall keep out of the way of the other." The appellants' ship, in proceeding down a river, and intending to keep her course; in order to round a bend in the river, had her head slightly inclined so as to exhibit her masthead and portlight only to the respondents' ship, which was proceeding up the river:—Held (reversing the judgment of the Admiralty Court), that the vessels were not crossing within the meaning of the above rule. That the fact that the portlight only of the appellants' ship was seen by the respondents was not conclusive evidence that the vessels were crossing; that the relative position of the vessels was not only to be regarded but also the place in which the vessels were situated.

[For the report of the above case, see 39 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Adm. p. 20.]

1870. { THE QUEEN, appellant;
June 27, 28. { JAMES CARLIN, respondent.
"THE SALVADOR."

Admiralty—Foreign Enlistment Act (59 Geo. 3. c. 69. s. 7)—Construction.

The Foreign Enlistment Act (59 Geo. 3. c. 69. s. 7) provides that if any person shall, without the leave, equip, furnish, or fit out "any ship or vessel with intent or in order that such ship or vessel shall be employed in the service of any foreign prince, or of any person or persons exercising or assuming to exercise any powers of government in or over any foreign state, as a transport, &c., every such person shall be guilty of a misdemeanour, and every such ship shall be forfeited." The respondent's ship was fitted out as a transport for the service of certain persons in the island of Cuba, who had revolted from Spain, and had assumed to exercise government, and were conducting hostilities against Spain. It did not appear who the persons were, or over what part of Cuba they assumed to exercise government:—Held, that inasmuch as the persons in whose service the ship was employed assumed to exercise the government, there was a breach of the provisions of the Act, and the respondent's ship was liable to forfeiture.

[For the report of the above case, see 39 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Adm. p. 33.]

1870. { CHARLES JAMES ELPHINSTONE,
July 4, { appellant,
14. { THE REV. JOHN PURCHAS, CLERK,
respondent.

Ecclesiastical Law—Practice—Church Discipline Act (3 & 4 Vict. c. 86)—Promoter, Death of.

In a proceeding under the Church Discipline Act at the suit of a promoter, judgment was given in the Archdeacon's Court, and the promoter appealed to Her Majesty in Council. After the appeal was filed and before hearing, the promoter died. On motion to substitute a parishioner in the place of the original promoter:—Held, that it is the duty of the Court before which proceedings are pending, when a promoter dies, to allow a proper promoter to be substituted in the place of the original promoter.

[For the report of the above case, see 39 LAW J. Rep. (N.S.) Eccles. p. 124.]

1870.
Mar. 26.

THOMAS BYARD SHEPPARD, appellant; THE REV. WILLIAM JAMES EARLY BENNETT, respondent.

Church Discipline Act (3 & 4 Vict. c.
86)—Commission—Letters of Request— Citation—Articles—Sufficiency of.

In a proceeding under the Church Discipline Act against a clerk in orders for maintaining doctrine alleged to be heretical, the commission was to inquire as to certain works of the accused of which the titles and certain passages were given. The letters of request and the citation referred to the same works and passages. No charge was preferred before the Commissioners, or alleged in the letters of request or citation, in respect of the 29th Article of Religion; but the articles contained additional passages from the said works, and a charge (amongst others) of impugning the 29th Article of Religion:—Held, that the Commission is a mere preliminary step for the purpose of advising the bishop whether there is a prima facie case; that the letters of request are for the purpose of founding jurisdiction in the higher Court; that the citation need only state generically the offence charged so that the accused may know the nature of the offence he is called upon to answer; and that the citation was sufficient to enable the promoter to introduce into the articles the additional passages and charge of impugning the 29th Article of Religion.

In support of a charge of heresy, articles filed in the Arches Court set out passages from the works of the accused, in which he expressed approval of the works of certain other writers alleged to contain heretical doctrine:—Held, that the articles must set forth passages from the works of the accused in which he has maintained heretical doctrine; that it is not sufficient to set out passages of works of which the accused has expressed a general approval, and which contain passages he has not by his own publication accepted in their totality.

[For the report of the above case, see 39 LAW J. Rep. (N.S.) Eccles. p. 59.]

INDEX

TO THE REPORTS OF CASES

DECIDED BY THE

JUDICIAL COMMITTEE AND THE LORDS OF THE

PRIVY COUNCIL.

FROM MICHAELMAS TERM, 1869, TO TRINITY TERM, 1870.

ADMIRALTY.—Notice of intention to raise money by bottomry. Barron v. Stewart—The Panama, 67; Adm. 37 — Construction of sailing orders when ships crossing. General Steam Navigation Co. v. Hedley—The Velocity, 67; Adm. 20

— Foreign Enlistment Acts. Forfeiture of ship. Regina v. Carlin—The Salvador, 67; Adm. 33

APPEAL.—practice: facts known and brought before court below].—The Judicial Committee will not entertain an appeal upon facts which were known to the appellant at the time of hearing in the Court below, but which were not brought to the notice of the Court below.

Upon a petition for leave to appeal, it is the duty of the petitioner to state in the fullest and frankest manner all the possible circumstances of the case.

The appellant carried on business in partnership with S. & M. in London and also in Hong Kong. The firm being in difficulties, the appellant, who was in London, gave a power of attorney to S. at Hong Kong to act for him in all matters on behalf of the firm, and to take any proceedings in bankruptcy on his behalf, and on the 23rd of May, 1867, the firm was adjudicated bankrupt in the Supreme Court at Hong Kong, and the appellant was represented by counsel in the Supreme Court. In April, 1867, the appellant filed a petition in bankruptcy in England, and was adjudicated a bankrupt in England. This fact was known to the appellant's counsel, but was not brought to the notice of the Supreme Court:—Held, that inasmuch as the bankruptcy of the appellant in England was known and was not brought to the notice of the Court in Hong Kong, their Lordships would not entertain the fact of the bankruptcy in England on appeal. Lyall v. Jardine, 43

— To Court of Queen's Bench. See Lower Canada.

CANADA. See Deed, Lower Canada.

CERTIORARI. See Lower Canada.

COLONIAL LAW.—Cape of Good Hope: ordinances of Court of Policy: effect of Roman-Dutch law]. —By the Roman-Dutch law, ordinances of the Governor and the Court of Policy at the Cape of Good Hope form part of the lex scripta of the colony. Van Breda v. Silberbauer, 8

A landowner in the colony petitioned the Governor and Court of Policy to be relieved from certain ordinances made in respect to the right to the flow of certain water from his land into and upon the land of certain adjoining landowners, but "offered" to permit the flow of the water, subject to certain restrictions. By an ordinance of the Governor and Court of Policy, it was resolved to release the landowner from the former ordinances, and to accept the "offer" contained in his petition:—Held that, inasmuch as the legislature could only modify an existing law by passing a new law, such ordinance, though informal, had the force of law, Ibid.

— Cape of Good Hope: customs ordinance: construction of as to entry: penalties of goods]. —Ordinance No. 6 of the Cape of Good Hope, by section 24, provides that no goods shall be laden or unladen from any ship in the colony until due entry shall have been made of such goods and warrants granted for the unloading of the same. Section 25 provides that the person entering any goods shall deliver to the collector a bill of entry thereof, containing, amongst other things, the particulars of the quality and quantity of the goods, and the packages containing the same. Section 50 provides that every person who shall assist or be otherwise concerned in the unshipping, landing, or removal or harbouring goods liable to forfeiture, or into whose hands the same shall knowingly come, shall forfeit treble the value thereof. P. and M. carried on business in partnership at Cape Town. P. consigned 25 cases of glassware and 3 cases, each containing a carriage, and filled up with corks, to M. at Cape Town. On the arrival of the goods, M. made out one entry for 3 cases containing carriages and 25 cases of glassware. There was no entry in respect of the corks:—Held, first, that it is the duty of the person who applies to enter goods, for the purpose of having them unladen, to state the packages the unloading of which he asks for, and to identify those packages, and to state the particulars of the quality and quantity of the goods contained in the packages, and that the 3 cases containing the corks were forfeited. Secondly, that, inasmuch as there may be several entries on one bill of entry, the cases containing glassware were not forfeited. Thirdly, that under the circumstances, M. was liable to the penalties imposed by section 50. Graham v. Pocock, 38

CRIMINAL INFORMATION—assault: contempt of House of Assembly: demurrer—An information by the Attorney-General of New South Wales charged "That on the 26th of February, 1868, at Sydney, in the said colony, while the Legislative Assembly of the said colony was sitting, a member of the said Assembly, whose conduct had been, and was then, under its consideration, after having been heard in his place in the said Assembly in reference to such conduct, was, in accordance with the practice of the said Assembly, requested by the Speaker thereof to withdraw therefrom, and that the said member, in obedience to the said request, thereupon withdrew from the said Assembly, and that immediately on his so withdrawing, the respondent being a member of the said Assembly, in and upon the said member did make an assault, and him (the member) did then beat, wound, and ill-treat, in contempt of the said Assembly, in violation of its dignity, and to the great obstruction of its business:—Held, on demurrer, that the information charged in proper terms a common assault. That the words, "in contempt of, etc.," did not constitute a separate charge, or derogate from the charge of assault. Regina v. Macpherson, 59

DEED—evidence of execution by certificate of notary—In a petitory action in Lower Canada, plaintiff produced a deed of sale executed before a notary public in Upper Canada, and a certificate by such notary of the due execution of the deed. No further evidence of execution was produced:—Held, that the certificate of a notary public of the due execution of a deed in a colony regulated by English law does not dispense with proper evidence of execution, though the certificate is put in evidence in a colony regulated by French law, where such certificate is sufficient evidence. Nye v. James Macdonald, 34

ECCLÉSIASTICAL LAW—Disobedience to monition. Elevation of cup and paten. Kneeling or prostration. Martin v. Mackonochie, 66; Eccles. 11

— Death of promotor of suit. Elphinstone v. Purchas, 67; Eccles. 124 — Sufficiency of citation and articles on letters of request. Sheppard v. Bennett, 68; Eccles. 59

EXECUTOR—claim for an account of real estate and personal estate: laches—Testator bequeathed all his real and personal estate in Jamaica, after payment of debts and legacies, to the respondents, his grandchildren, to be apportioned when they should attain the age of twenty-one years, and appointed D. R. executor of his will and guardian in respect of the real estate. Testator died in 1832, and D. R. entered into possession of the real and personal estate. D. R. died in 1850, and appointed the appellant his executor. The respondents attained the age of twenty-one years in 1865, and in that year the appellant filed a petition praying that an account might be taken of the real and personal estate of the testator:—Held, that the appellant was entitled, notwithstanding the delay, as a matter of right to have an account taken of the personal estate of the testator, and inasmuch as D. R. had been appointed guardian in respect of the real estate, and had entered into possession of the same, accounts should also be taken of the rents and profits of the real estate of the testator. Smith v. O'Grady, 63 — Rights of by law of Jersey. See Jersey.

GOODS SOLD AND DELIVERED—constructive delivery: execution creditor: rights of pledgor and pledgee: delivery of pledge—Goods shipped at Liverpool for Quebec were taken on their arrival to the examining warehouse, and were entered as consigned to "M. & S.," and were marked "M. & S." By the regulations of the warehouse, consignees were entitled to possession on payment of freight and duty. M. & S. having obtained an advance on the goods from the appellants, signed a request note directed to the officer of the warehouse, directing him to "hold the goods subject to the order of the appellants, they paying duty and storage charged before removal." The officer wrote across the note "accepted," and signed it:—Held, on a seizure under a fi. fa. by the execution creditor of "M. & S.," that by the express agreement of the parties, followed by the acceptance of the officer of the warehouse, there was a valid constructive delivery of the property in the goods to the appellants sufficient for the purposes of the pledge. Young v. Lambert, 21

JERSEY—testamentary law: personal estate: rights of executors to possession—By the law and custom of Jersey a testator who dies leaving lawful issue can only dispose of a part of his personal estate, but the executors of such testator are entitled to possession of the entirety of the personal estate until they have fulfilled the duties of the administration. La Cloche v. La Cloche, 25

JURY—alien: de medietate linguae: peremptory challenge—“The Juries Statute Act, 1865,” of Victoria, by sect. 37, provides that every person arraigned for any treason felony or misdemeanour shall be admitted to challenge peremptorily to the number of twenty jurors. Sect. 38 provides that on the prayer of any alien informed against for felony the sheriff shall, by command of the Court, return for one-half of the jury a competent number of aliens, if so many shall be found in the town, etc., and that no such alien shall be liable to be challenged for want of qualification, “but that every such alien may be challenged for any other cause in like manner as if he were qualified.” An information was exhibited in Melbourne against the appellant for felony. The appellant prayed to be tried by a mixed jury, and challenged peremptorily an alien, one of such jury:—Held, that in absence of positive provision to the contrary, an alien juror was subject to peremptory challenge, and that the appellant had a right to such challenge. Levinger v. The Queen, 49

LOWER CANADA—Court of Queen's Bench: appeal from Superior Court: writ of certiorari: seigniorial Acts: Consolidated Statutes of Lower Canada [By the Consolidated Statutes of Lower Canada, c. 77. s. 23, it is provided, “That an appeal shall lie to the Court of Queen's Bench as a Court of Appeal and Error from any judgment rendered by the Superior Court for Lower Canada in any district, in all cases where the matter in dispute exceeds the sum of 20*l.* sterling.” Chapter 88. s. 17, provides, “That an appeal shall lie to the Court of Queen's Bench, sitting in appeal, from all final judgments rendered by the Superior Court after the 30th day of June, 1858, in all cases provided for by that Act and chapter 89 of these Consolidated Statutes, except in cases of certiorari.” Chapter 89 provides for proceedings upon writs of prohibition, certiorari, and scire facias, and section 6 states that “appeals from final judgment rendered under the Act, except in cases of certiorari, are provided for by chapter 88.” In a proceeding under the Seigniorial Acts of Lower Canada, the appellants obtained from the Superior Court a writ of certiorari to bring the proceedings into the Superior Court, which Court afterwards quashed the writ:—Held, first, that the Consolidated Statutes must be treated as one great act, and that the several enactments ought to be construed collectively, and with reference to one another; secondly, that the writ of certiorari is governed by the provisions of chapter 88, and that no appeal will lie in such a case from the judgment of the Superior Court to the Court of Queen's Bench. Boston v. Lelievre, 17

— See Deed.

MARINE INSURANCE—constructive total loss: notice of abandonment: insurable interest: disbursements—It is not necessary to use the word “abandoned” in a notice of abandonment; any equivalent expressions which inform the underwriters that it is the intention of the assured to give up to them the property insured on the ground of its having been totally lost is sufficient. Currie & Co. v. The Bombay Native Insur. Co., 1

The assured must not delay to give notice of abandonment, but sufficient time must be allowed to enable the assured to exercise their judgment whether the circumstances entitle them to abandon, Ibid.

Advances made by the charterer to the master at the port of loading to be repaid by deductions out of freight, give the charterer an insurable interest in a policy on disbursements, Ibid.

The appellants chartered a vessel for a voyage, and insured the cargo against total loss. In the course of the voyage the vessel went aground, became hogged, and sustained other injuries, and surveyors recommended her to be stripped with dispatch, and steps taken to save the cargo, but no attempt was made to do so; and after several days the master, fearing bad weather, sold the vessel and cargo for the benefit of all concerned. The vessel remained for some days in the same state, and the weather proving fine, the purchasers saved a large part of the cargo:—Held, that the appellants were not entitled to treat the cargo as having been totally lost, Ibid.

ORDINANCES—of Court of Policy. See Colonial Law.

SHIPPING. See Colonial Law. Marine Insurance.

STATUTE—Construction of. See Lower Canada.

WILL—Testamentary Powers. See Jersey.

TABLE OF CASES.

Barron v. Stewart (Adm. 37), 67	Nye v. Macdonald, 34
Boston v. Lelievre, 17	Panama, The (Adm. 37), 67
Currie & Co. v. Bombay Native Insur. Co., 1	Regina v. Carlin (Adm. 33), 67
Elphinstone v. Purchas (Eccles. 124), 67	Regina v. Macpherson, 34
General Steam Navigation Company v. Hedley (Adm. 20), 67	Salvador, The (Adm. 33), 67
Graham v. Pocock, 38	Sheppard v. Bennett (Eccles. 59), 68
La Cloche v. La Cloche, 25	Smith v. O'Grady, 63
Levinger v. Regina, 49	Van Breda v. Silberbauer, 8
Lyall v. Jardine, 43	Velocity, The (Adm. 20), 67
Martin v. Mackonochie (Eccles. 11), 66	Young v. Lambert, 21

PRINTED BY SPOTTISWOODS & CO.

New-street Square; 29 Chancery Lane; 30 Parliament Street; 38 Royal Exchange.

THE LAW JOURNAL REPORTS

FOR THE YEAR 1870:

CASES DECIDED IN THE Ecclesiastical Courts,

REPORTED BY
GEORGE CALLAGHAN, Esq. BARRISTER-AT-LAW;

AND ON APPEAL THEREFROM

TO THE Privy Council,

REPORTED BY
EDWARD BULLOCK, Esq. BARRISTER-AT-LAW.

MICHAELMAS TERM, 1869, TO MICHAELMAS TERM, 1870.

ECCLESIASTICAL.
NEW SERIES, VOL. XXXIX.

LONDON:

PRINTED BY SPOTTISWOODE AND CO. NEW-STREET SQUARE.

PUBLISHED BY EDWARD BRET INCE, 5, QUALITY COURT, CHANCERY LANE.

MDCCCLXX.

CASES ARGUED AND DETERMINED

IN THE

Ecclesiastical Courts,

AND ON APPEAL THEREFROM

TO THE

Privy Council,

COMMENCING WITH

MICHAELMAS TERM, 33 VICTORIÆ.

[IN THE COURT OF ARCHES.]

1869. }
Oct. 26-30. } SHEPPARD v. BENNETT.
Nov. 19. }

Office of Judge promoted in a Cause of Heresy—Commission under Church Discipline Act (3 & 4 Vic., c. 86)—Jurisdiction of Court—Refusal to admit additional Charge of Heresy in Articles.

In a proceeding under the Church Discipline Act against a clerk in holy orders, for publishing and maintaining certain heretical doctrines, a commission issued and reported that there was sufficient prima facie ground for further inquiry. The Bishop of the diocese in which the defendant held preferment sent the case by letters of request to the Court of Arches. The letters of request recited the proceedings before the Commissioners, and set out several extracts from works published by the defendant which in substance comprised the heretical doctrine which he was charged with maintaining, namely, "The actual presence of Our Lord in the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper; the visible presence of Our Lord upon the Altar or Table of the Holy Communion; that there is a sacrifice at the time of the celebration of the Eucharist; and that adoration or worship is due to the consecrated elements of the Lord's Supper." A citation (limited to the charges set forth in the letters of request) having been served upon the defendant, the promoter brought in articles which, in addition to the charges which had been the subject of inquiry before the Commissioners, further charged the defendant with maintaining and promulgating the heretical doctrine, "that the wicked eat the Body of Christ in the use of the Lord's Supper":—Held, firstly, that the jurisdiction of the Court was founded on and limited by the charges laid before the Commissioners, and that it had no authority to deal with any charges which were not laid before them. Secondly, that the charge of maintaining the doctrine of the "reception by the wicked" was a distinct and separate charge; and as such charge had not been preferred before the Commissioners, nor specified in the letters of request or citation, the articles were ordered to be reformed by striking out all that related to it.

NEW SERIES, 39.—ECCLES.

This was a cause or business of the office of the Judge promoted by Mr. Thomas Byard Sheppard, a member of the United Church of England and Ireland, against the Rev. William James Early Bennett, a clerk in holy orders, vicar of Frome Selwood, county of Somerset, and diocese of Bath and Wells, for alleged heresy.

B

The case was sent in the first instance to the Court of Arches by letters of request which ran as follows:—

Robert John, Baron Auckland, by Divine permission Bishop of Bath and Wells, to the Rt. Hon. Sir Robert Joseph Phillimore, Knight, Doctor of Laws, Official Principal of the Arches Court of Canterbury, lawfully constituted, your surrogate or some other competent judge in this behalf, greeting. Whereas we lately received from the Rt. Hon. and Rt. Rev. Father in God, Archibald Campbell, then by Divine permission Lord Bishop of London, but now by Divine permission Lord Archbishop of Canterbury, and Primate of all England, and Metropolitan, a copy of the report of the Worshipful Sir Travers Twiss, D.C.L., the Chancellor of the diocese of London; the Venerable William Hale Hale, Clerk, M.A., Archdeacon of London, &c., &c., the Commissioners appointed in and by a certain Commission under the hand and episcopal seal of the said then Lord Bishop of London, by virtue of and in accordance with the provisions of an Act of Parliament made and passed in the session of Parliament holden in the third and fourth years of the reign of her present Majesty Queen Victoria, intituled, 'An Act for better enforcing Church Discipline;' and which said Commission did enjoin, authorise and empower the Commissioners, or any three of them, to make inquiry as to the grounds of a certain charge made by Thomas Byard Sheppard, of the parish of Frome Selwood, in the county of Somerset, and our diocese of Bath and Wells, Gentleman, a member of the United Church of England and Ireland, residing in the said parish, against the Rev. William James Early Bennett, a clerk in holy orders of the said United Church of England and Ireland, Vicar of the said parish of Frome Selwood; the said charge being that he, the said William James Early Bennett, had within the diocese of London committed an offence against the laws ecclesiastical of this realm, by having caused to be printed and published within the said diocese certain works, in which he advisedly maintains or affirms doctrines directly contrary or repugnant to the articles and formularies of the United Church of England and Ireland, the said works being entitled respectively, "Some Results of the Tractarian Movement of 1833;" forming one of the essays contained in a volume entitled "The Church and the World," edited by the Rev. Orby Shipley, Clerk, printed and published in London in 1867; "A Plea for Toleration in the Church of England, in a Letter to the Rev. E. B. Pusey, D.D., Regius Professor of Hebrew, and Canon of Christ Church, Oxford, Second Edition," printed and published in London in the year 1867; and a "Plea for Toleration in the Church of England, in a Letter to the Rev. E. B. Pusey, D.D., Regius Professor of Hebrew, and Canon of Christ Church, Oxford, Third Edition," printed and published in London in the year 1868, and contained the following among other statements, in respect of which the said charge has been made, that is to say, in the essay entitled, "Some Results of the Tractarian Movement of 1833." (The letters then set out certain extracts from the works in question, the last, which was as follows, comprising the alleged heresies with which the defendant was charged:— "The three great doctrines on which the Catholic Church has to take her stand, are these: 1. The real objective presence of our Blessed Lord in the Eucharist; 2. The Sacrifice offered by the Priest; and 3. The Adoration due to the presence of our Blessed Lord therein." And then continued):—

And whereas it appears from the said report—That the said Commissioners did assemble by virtue of the said Commission in London House, St. James's Square, in the parish of St. James's, Westminster, in the diocese of London, on Thursday, the 5th of November, in the year of our Lord 1868, for the purpose of executing the said Commission. That all the proceedings before the said Commissioners were public. That the said Commissioners did examine witnesses on oath in reference to the said charge, and did hear counsel on both sides (the said witnesses, or some of them, being cross-examined by counsel alleging that he appeared on behalf of the said William James Early Bennett). That the said Commissioners did then adjourn to deliberate upon the case brought before them. That after due consideration, the said Commissioners having returned into the room where the said inquiry was so publicly held as aforesaid, the said Worshipful Chancellor of the diocese of London did, on behalf of the Commissioners, openly and publicly declare the opinion of the Commissioners in the following terms:—"The Commissioners have very carefully considered the questions submitted to them under this Commission, and hereby openly and publicly declare their unanimous opinion that there is a sufficient prima facie ground for instituting further proceedings." And whereas the said Commissioners transmitted to the then Lord Bishop of London under their hands and seals the depositions of the said witnesses taken before them, together with the works put in evidence, and also a report of the unanimous opinion of the said Commissioners present at the said inquiry that there was sufficient prima facie ground for instituting further proceedings against the said William James Early Bennett for having within two years last past been guilty of offending against the laws ecclesiastical, as charged by the said Thomas Byard Sheppard. And whereas such report, together with the said depositions of the said witnesses and the works put in evidence, has been filed in the Registry of the diocese of London. And whereas, together with the copy of such report transmitted to us by the said then Lord Bishop of London as aforesaid, there has also been transmitted a copy of the said depositions in accordance with the provisions of the said Act of Parliament, intituled, "An Act for better enforcing Church Discipline." And whereas no articles have been as yet filed in the Registry of our diocese of Bath and Wells, either by us or by the said Thomas Byard Sheppard against the said William James Early Bennett in respect of the charge inquired into before the said Commissioners. And whereas we, acting under the provisions of the said Act of Parliament, have thought fit to send the case by letters of request to the Court of Appeal of the province. Therefore, we, Robert John Baron Auckland, by Divine permission Lord Bishop of Bath and Wells, do request you the Right Honourable Sir Robert Joseph Phillimore, Doctor of Laws, Official Principal of the Arches Court of Canterbury, lawfully constituted, your Surrogate, or some other competent Judge in this behalf, to issue a citation or decree under seal of the said Court, citing the said William James Early Bennett to appear at a certain time and place therein to be specified, and answer to certain articles, heads, positions, or interrogatories, touching and concerning his soul's health, and the lawful correction and reformation of his manners and excesses, and more especially for having offended against the laws ecclesiastical, by having, within two years last past, caused to be printed and published within the diocese of London certain works, in which he advisedly maintains or affirms doctrine directly contrary or repugnant to the articles and formularies of the United Church of England and Ireland, the said works being entitled respectively, "Some Results of the Tractarian Movement of 1833," forming one of the essays contained in a volume entitled, "The Church and the World," edited by the Reverend Orby Shipley, clerk, printed and published at London in the year 1867; "A Plea for Toleration in the Church of England, in a Letter to the Reverend E. B. Pusey, D.D., Regius Professor of Hebrew, and Canon of Christ Church, Oxford, Second Edition," printed and published in London in the year 1867; and "A Plea for Toleration in the Church of England, in a Letter to the Reverend E. B. Pusey, D.D., Regius Professor of Hebrew, and Canon of Christ Church, Oxford, Third Edition," printed and published in London in the year 1868;—the said articles to be administered to him, the said William James Early Bennett, at the voluntary promotion of the said Thomas Byard Sheppard;—and finally to hear and determine the said cause according to the law and practice of the Court. In witness whereof we have hereunto set our hand and seal this 9th of April, in the year of our Lord 1869, and in the 15th year of our translation.

Auckland, Bath and Wells.

The letters of request were received by the Dean of the Arches, and in compliance with them a decree or citation was served upon the defendant, in which he was charged with having published certain works "in which he, the said James Early Bennett, advisedly maintains or affirms doctrines directly contrary or repugnant to the Articles and Formularies of the United Church of England and Ireland, which works are more particularly specified, set forth, and quoted in the letters of request hereinbefore recited, and so accepted by us aforesaid." No appearance having been given to the decree on the part of the defendant, he was pronounced in contempt, and the proceedings went on in penam.

The matter (on Oct. 26) came before the Court on the admission of the articles, which, in addition to the heresies specified in the letters of request, further charged the defendant with maintaining and promulgating the doctrine that "the wicked eat the Body of Christ in the use of the Lord's Supper" in a work written and published by him, and entitled, "An Examination of Archdeacon Denison's Propositions of Faith on the Doctrine of the Holy Eucharist, with a Prefatory Letter to the Lord Bishop of Bath and Wells." And the question (which was raised by the Court) was whether it was competent for the promoter to lay this further charge in the articles, the matter not having been the subject of inquiry before the Commissioners, nor specified in the letters of request, nor in the citation served upon the defendant?

A. J. Stephens (with him Dr. Tristram, Archibald, and B. Shaw), on Oct. 30, moved the admission of the articles.—The objection raised to the admission of the articles involves the consideration of five questions:—First, what is the office of the Commission issued by the Bishop under the Church Discipline Act? Secondly, what is the office of the letters of request? Thirdly, what is the office of the citation? Fourthly, what is the office of the articles? Fifthly, whether the articles charge an offence of a different nature from that alleged in the letters of request and citation? As to the first, the Commission is the creature of the Act, and the powers and duties of the Commissioners are therein clearly defined. The Commission is but a preliminary proceeding, and its object is to inform the Bishop whether there are sufficient grounds for the institution of a suit—Ditcher v. Denison (1), Farnall v. Craig (2), Sanders v. Head (3). Lincoln v. Day (4) is decisive as to the authority of the Court to deal with charges not brought before the Commissioners, and the principle of that case was recognised by Dr. Lushington in The Bishop of London v. Bonwell (5). As to the office of the letters of request, it has been defined in the recent case of Martin v. Mackenochie (6), and in the Ritual Commissioners' Report, p. 44. It is not necessary that they should follow any particular form, or that they should set out particular passages from the works which are alleged to contain the heretical doctrine charged against the defendant. The same remark applies to the citation. The office of the articles is to enter into a detailed account of the charge—Jones v. Jelf (7). It is competent to expand in the articles the charge contained in the letters of request. If the letters of request set forth a charge of alleged heresy as contained in a particular book, and recite only a few passages from such book, it is competent in the articles to set out other passages, and even to refer to other works written and published by the defendant. The articles here do not charge an offence of a different nature from that comprised within the letters of request and citation.

[Sir R. J. PHILLIMORE.—Should not the defendant have notice in the citation of the particular heresy with which he is charged?]

The citation is not settled by counsel, but by the registrar. Such as it is, however, it is sufficient. It need not set forth the nature of the heresy—Her Majesty's

- (1) 11 Moore P.C. 341.
- (2) 5 Notes of Cases, 570.
- (3) 3 Curt. 48.
- (4) 4 Notes of Cases, 299.
- (5) 6 Jurist (N.S.) 709.
- (6) 38 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Eccles. 9.
- (7) 8 L. T. (N.S.) 399.

Procurator General v. Stone (8). Lastly, the work entitled "An Examination of Archdeacon Denison's Propositions of Faith on the Doctrine of the Holy Eucharist" is incorporated by reference in "Some Results of the Tractarian Movement of 1833," and without it the language of that essay or review cannot be made intelligible to the Court.

Cour. adv. vult.

On the 19th of November judgment was given as follows:—

SIR R. J. PHILLIMORE.—Upon a former occasion when this case came before me, I made the following observations which I must now repeat:—"This is a case of very great importance to the defendant, and still more to the Church of which he is a minister. The diocesan of the defendant has allowed an individual layman to promote his office, and to act the part of public prosecutor against the defendant for having published certain works alleged to contain certain statements and positions which contravene the teaching of the Church. The defendant has not thought proper to appear in answer to the citation of his Metropolitan: this circumstance would be to be regretted in any case, but it is especially to be regretted in the present, inasmuch as many of the charges against the defendant appear to be that he has adopted and approved the positions of other persons, and those divines of very great reputation, upon the subject of his alleged heresy, and these other divines are not and cannot be cited before the Court in this suit to make their defence. The contumacy, therefore, of the defendant in refusing to appear to the citation of the Archbishop's Court, not only leaves without defence his own statements, but also those of the distinguished divines which he has adopted; and, moreover, places the Court in a position of great difficulty; because, while on the one hand the defendant ought not to be advantaged by his contumacy, on the other hand it is the duty of the Court to see that charges of this very serious nature, which must affect interests far beyond those of the defendant, are properly laid, and that justice is done in a matter of the gravest nature, while in the execution of its duty it is deprived of the ordinary assistance of counsel, and obliged to hear argument on one side only.

According to the usual and convenient practice of this Court, the criminal articles, if in the opinion of the accused party they do not contain the allegation of an offence which, if it were proved, would amount to a breach of ecclesiastical law, are objected to or demurred to, it being assumed for the purposes of the discussion that the allegations are true; and thus it often happens that the question of law, that is, whether the charges do shew a case of heresy or not, is decided upon when the admissibility of the criminal articles is debated, and thereby delay and expense are avoided. But after some reflection it appears to me that this course cannot be pursued in the present instance, and that, if there be any charges in the articles before me laid which might by any possible construction amount to an ecclesiastical offence, I ought to admit such articles to proof; reserving to myself, after proof has been given of the facts alleged, and after hearing argument on such proof, the consideration of the criminality of the defendant, and, if that criminality be established, the punishment to be awarded. The proceedings being in pœnam in this case, the admissibility of the articles is necessarily moved by counsel in Court, and the attention of the Court is necessarily called to them at this stage; and I must, therefore, while reserving as I have said the main question for the hearing, endeavour, though without the assistance of counsel for the defendant, to see that they are in such shape and form as duly to present the charges which it is competent to the prosecutor to lay, and which he hereafter undertakes to prove.

The articles which contain the criminal charges are laid under the general ecclesiastical or canon law, and not under the statute of Elizabeth. The jurisdiction of this Court in the present case is founded not on the general law which would have devolved the case in due course of appeal from the decision of the Bishop upon it, but on the Statute (3 & 4 Vict. c. 86) of her present Majesty; and according to that statute the Bishop of the place, in which the alleged offence of publishing heretical doctrines was committed by the defendant, issued a commission; that commission found a prima facie case for further inquiry, and the return of the commission was made to the Court of the Bishop of the diocese in which the defendant held preferment; that Bishop, declining to try the defendant, sent the case by letters of request to this Court, the acceptance of which the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council has decided to be compulsory upon it. My jurisdiction, therefore, it appears to me, is founded on and limited by the charges laid before the Commissioners, and that I have no authority to deal with any charges which were not laid before them. It is, moreover, a clear axiom of the law and practice of this Court—that no charges can be laid in criminal articles against a defendant, of which he was not apprized by the citation or decree which summoned him to appear before this Court. Applying these observations to the consideration of the articles before me, I must decide upon their admissibility in their present shape." I then proceed to point out various particulars, in which, it appears to me, that the articles must, in compliance with these principles, be reformed.

Upon Tuesday last the admissibility of these articles was discussed before the Court, and I was informed, by the counsel for the prosecutor, that, in consequence of my observations, the articles had undergone a partial reformation, by striking out all reference to the first edition of one of the works mentioned in the articles, and the Court was requested to permit some other reformation of a trifling character to be made, and this permission was granted. The objection, however, which the Court had suggested to the attention of the counsel with respect to a portion of the fifth article,—namely, that part which begins, "But this was not all. The university indeed had," &c., &c., down to the words, "when such, by God's mercy, may be had," and also the part beginning, "Then followed, in 1855, your voluminous work," &c., &c., down to the end of the article, and other portions of the articles referring to the same subject as is contained in the aforesaid portions of the fifth article,—was not admitted by the counsel to be valid, and it was argued that these portions of the articles were properly laid, and ought not to be struck out. This passage in the fifth article and the others connected with it have for their object to charge the defendant with having expressed an opinion in one of his works which contravenes the twenty-ninth of the thirty-nine Articles of Religion; the title of which twenty-ninth article is, "Of the wicked which eat not the body of Christ in the use of the Lord's Supper." By the other portion of the fifth article of charge, and by the other articles, the defendant is in substance charged with affirming the following doctrines, alleged to be heresies:—first, The actual presence of our Lord in the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper; second, The visible presence of our Lord upon the altar or table at the Holy Communion; third, That there is a sacrifice at the time of the celebration of the Eucharist; fourth, That adoration or worship is due to the consecrated elements of the Lord's Supper. The passage, therefore, in the fifth criminal article which charges the defendant with maintaining the doctrine that, "The wicked eat the body of Christ in the use of the Lord's Supper," contains a charge of a distinct and separate offence; for it is clear that the doctrine of the Real Presence may be holden and has been holden by those who deny the reception of the Eucharist by the wicked. The question which I now have to decide is, whether, in these particular proceedings, it is competent to the prosecutor to lay this charge, in addition to those which I have mentioned, against the defendant. The answer to this question must be sought in an examination of the statute of the 3 & 4 of Her Majesty, of the practice of the court in criminal cases, of the principles upon which that practice is founded in their application to the present case.

It appears to be admitted, or, at least, I think it is proved, that the particular charge in question was not preferred before the Commissioners. It is certainly not specifically set forth either in the letters of request to me, or the decree em-bodily those letters of request which was served upon the defendant, and which is the beginning of this suit.—Ditcher v. Denison (1). Nor is it a charge which can be raised by necessary implication, if that in a criminal suit were sufficient, from the passages recited in the letters of request and in the decree. It is contended, however, that I am bound to be ignorant of what passed before the Commissioners, and that the selection of passages in the letters of request and decree does not affect the question, inasmuch as they were superfluous and erroneously introduced in these instruments. In a case like the present, where letters of request are sent, not before, but after due issue and report of a Commission, it seems illogical and impossible wholly to separate the two, because the letters of request are founded upon the report of the Commissioners. These letters, therefore, necessarily recite, as in this case, the charge before the Commissioners, and their finding upon it, and the act directs that the depositions of the witnesses examined before the Commissioners and their report should be filed in the registry of the diocese. Sir Herbert Jenner said in Homer v. Jones (9): "It is very certain that he, the Bishop of Worcester, could not take any notice under the statute of this offence, which was committed beyond his jurisdiction. But it is said that, although the Bishop could not, yet that this Court, as possessing jurisdiction throughout the whole province of Canterbury, might receive the charge. Now, the case is sent here by letters of request, which letters embody the proceedings before the Commissioners, and those proceedings are the very foundation of the case before this Court. I am of opinion that the Commissioners can proceed only within the diocese of the bishop who issues the Commission; and I must presume that they have bounded their inquiries, as they ought to have done, within that limit, and I therefore reject this article." In The Bishop of London v. Bonnell (5) an objection was taken that the Court of Arches could not adjudicate upon charges not reported by the Commissioners, and Dr. Lushington, when the admissibility of the articles was debated, seems to have doubted as to the effect of the Commissioners' report on the proceedings in the articles, but in giving sentence he founded his decree only upon the charges that had been reported by the Commissioners; and when the case was appealed to the Privy Council, their Lordships said, "It is unnecessary for their Lordships to pronounce any opinion, whether, in the proceedings under the Church Discipline Act, the Court of Arches may entertain and adjudicate upon charges not reported by the Commissioners as fit to be enquired into, for the point really does not arise in this case. The authorities cited before their Lordships and in the Court below do not appear to be entirely in unison, and many arguments of weight may be urged on either side. If ever a case should come before their Lordships, the facts of which make a decision necessary, it will be their Lordships' duty to lay down the rule; the facts will then be presented more precisely, and they will have the advantage of hearing the points argued at the bar more fully than has now been done. But assuming the contention of the appellant to be well founded, more than one answer now occurs: First, the insertion of an objectionable item of charge will not vitiate others well laid, nor can it form any valid ground of objection to the judgment when the Judge has confined himself to the charges which are well laid. Now, in this case the learned Judge in the Court below, who was evidently quite aware of the nature and weight of the objection, has carefully excluded from the ground of his decision any fact of adultery in London or elsewhere, and has limited himself to the charges to which the objection does not apply." See Moore, P.O. vol. 14, p. 411. In the present case the letters of request informed me at great length of the charges which were laid before the Commissioners, and the last extract from the defendant's work contains a passage which, I think, must be fairly considered as comprising the alleged heresies for which he is prosecuted. The words are these: "The three great doctrines on which the Catholic Church has to take her stand are these: 1. The real objective presence of our Blessed Lord in the Eucharist; 2. The Sacrifice offered by the Priest; and 3. The adoration due to our Blessed Lord therein." I do not see why it would be more competent to this Court to try a charge not preferred before the Commissioners than it would be for the Bishop who issued the Commission if he had heard the cause himself after the finding of the Commissioners. For the Act expressly provides that a copy of the depositions taken before the Commissioners is to be filed in the Court and articles to be drawn up, and the whole context seems to shew that these articles must be confined to the charges which were laid before the Commissioners. The statute provides also (section 13) that when the case is sent by letters of request to the Court of Appeal of the Province, it is "to be there heard and determined according to the law and practice of such Court." Now there is no point of the law and practice of this Court more certain than that the articles cannot contain a charge which is not to be found in the citation, and the decree in this case, which is served on the defendant, is the citation. This important point of law and practice has been very often laid down. Perhaps no stronger instance can be found than the decision in Breeks v. Woolfrey (10). It was a question as to the admissibility of the articles in a cause of office, promoted by the Rev. John Breeks, the vicar of the parish of Carisbrooke, in the Isle of Wight, against Mary Woolfrey, widow, "for having unduly and unlawfully erected, or caused to be erected, a certain tombstone in the churchyard of the said parish of Carisbrooke, to the memory of Joseph Woolfrey, late of the said parish, deceased, and a certain inscription to be made thereon contrary to the articles, canons, and constitution, or to the doctrines and discipline of the Church of England." These were the words of the citation.

(9) 9 Jurist, 167.

"Dr. Addams opposed the admission of the articles. The grounds," he said, "on which the party is proceeded against in the articles are two. First, the erection of a tombstone without leave of the vicar of the parish; and, secondly, placing thereon an inscription contrary to the articles, canons, and constitution, or to the doctrine and discipline of the Church of England.

(10) 1 Curt. 882.

"Sir H. Jenner.—It is stated in the articles that it was done without leave of the incumbent.

"Dr. Addams.—No.

"Sir Herbert Jenner.—They are separate and distinct offences, but there is no mention in the citation of the leave of the incumbent; the articles ought to agree with the citation.

"Dr. Addams.—I am not disposed to take the objection.

"Sir Herbert Jenner.—But must not the Court take the objection, this being a criminal suit? If it was intended to proceed on the ground that the erection was without leave of the incumbent, it should have been stated in the citation." And, in giving judgment, the Court said: "The other branch of the case is subject to different considerations, namely, the erection of the stone without the consent of the incumbent, which is an ecclesiastical offence. It has been suggested in the argument, that the proceedings on this branch of the case should have been in the civil form, by monition; but it seems to me that this is the proper form of proceeding; I am not aware of any case, in which a different form has been followed. But this offence was not specified in the decree, or citation, served on the party. The only ground of illegality on the face of the citation consisted in the inscription; the erecting, or causing to be erected, a monument, without the leave of the incumbent, is a distinct and separate offence, which should have been set forth in the citation, in order that the party cited might know what she was called upon to answer. I am clearly of opinion that, according to the law and practice of this Court, the citation was insufficient to raise the question whether the consent of the incumbent had been obtained or not; and, on this part of the case likewise, I am of opinion that the articles are inadmissible."

It has been argued that the recital in the letters of request, and in the citation or decree, of the various passages containing the alleged heresy was superfluous and unnecessary, and that as the works from which these passages were extracted were also referred to in the citation, that Mr. Bennett may be articulated against for any heresy contained in those works, but the statute says that the "Law and Practice" of this Court is to be adopted. The extracts in question constitute, consequently, as it appears to me, what is technically called the præsertim of the charge; and that experienced and eminent ecclesiastical judge, Sir John Nicholl, says, "The præsertim is always construed as setting forth the nature of the principal charges; the general words as only including subordinate charges, eiusdem generis"—Bennett v. Bonaker (11).

In the decree or citation served on Mr. Bennett, he is charged with having published "certain works," in which "the said James Early Bennett advisedly maintains or affirms doctrines directly contrary or repugnant to the articles and formularies of the United Church of England and Ireland, which works are more particularly specified, set forth, and quoted in the letters of request hereinbefore recited, and so accepted by us as aforesaid." It could not be denied that by these words the præsertim is confined to the extracts, but it was said that this instrument was prepared in the registry and not by counsel. I believe that the usual course has been pursued; but it was clearly the duty of the legal advisers of the prosecutor who extracted the instrument, if they conceived it to have been not properly worded, to have applied for another instrument; at all events the defendant is entitled to the application of the law upon the instrument which was actually served upon him. The charge of heresy as to the doctrine of the reception of the Eucharist by the wicked is, as I have already said, a distinct and separate charge.

It has been also argued that it has not been usual, in these cases of heresy, that the citation should contain more than a general charge of heresy, leaving the particular nature of the heresy to be afterwards specified in the articles. One and a sufficient answer is that this is not the course which the prosecutor has thought proper to pursue in the present case. It was not denied by counsel that, if a particular heresy were specified in the citation, the charge of another heresy would not be admissible in the articles; and in point of fairness and justice to the defendant, it surely can make no difference whether he be charged with passages containing certain heresies, or with a distinct charge of maintaining those certain heresies.

The counsel for the prosecution referred me to a judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench, delivered in last Easter Term, from which, as well as from the explanation of counsel, I gather the following not unimportant facts with reference to the present question. First, it appears that the counsel for the prosecution, not being satisfied that they could lay the charge of this particular heresy in the present articles, applied to the present Bishop of London for a fresh commission against Mr. Bennett, in order that this very charge might be preferred against him. The Bishop of London, in the exercise of his episcopal discretion, refused to allow a fresh commission to issue, whereupon the prosecutor applied to the Court of Queen's Bench for a mandamus against his lordship. That Court refused to issue the mandamus, it is said, because they thought that the charge could be laid in the present articles. Certainly, if the Queen's Bench had expressed any such opinion I should have attended to it with all the respect and deference due to the opinion of such a tribunal, bearing in mind, nevertheless, that the subject of the pleadings in the Ecclesiastical Court was one with which their lordships could not be very familiar, and also that they had only heard the argument on one side of the question. But I do not find, from a perusal of the report, that any such conclusion can be fairly drawn. It appears to me that the mandamus was refused, first, because the inclination of the Court was, that the bishop had a legal discretion to exercise in the matter with which they could not interfere, and I may observe in passing that, if a bishop has not such a discretion, it is difficult to conceive how the government of any diocese can be properly carried on; secondly, on the ground that by the present proceedings the heterodoxy of the accused, with respect to the general subject-matter of the Eucharist, was sufficiently raised. On the grounds, therefore, that this particular charge of heresy was not preferred before the Commissioners, on whose report the subsequent proceedings are founded, and that it was not mentioned in the letters of request, or in the decree or citation, I should, having regard to the law and practice of this Court, and the authorities to which I have adverted, be of opinion that the articles must be reformed by striking out the portions which relate to it. Assuming, however, for the sake of argument, that these objections do not apply to the present case, there remains one of even a graver character to be stated.

C

(11) 3 Hagg. 24.

NEW SERIES, 39.—ECCLES.

This is a highly penal proceeding against the defendant. It is a criminal suit for the promulgation of heresy. The particular charge is not on account of a heresy distinctly stated or uttered in any sermon, or public act of preaching, or statement, connected with the discharge of his duties as incumbent of the parish committed to his charge. It is a heresy alleged to be contained in an essay or review upon ecclesiastical events in the Church since the year 1833. It is to be extracted from what purports to be an historical statement of a trial against another clergyman as long ago as the year 1856. The author remarks that Archdeacon Denison was condemned by the then Archbishop of Canterbury for teaching the doctrine of the real presence (not a quite accurate statement I may observe in passing), that the sentence was reversed, that a protest against the Archbishop's sentence was signed by seventeen priests, of whom the defendant is said to be one. It is contended that by this reference to the protest which is in a work not mentioned in the citation, he has made himself responsible in this suit, be it observed, for what is contained in that protest. The passage in the extract from the book (which book is before the Court), to which I was referred, as making him responsible, is as follows: "After this nothing further was heard of the silly trial of Ditcher v. Denison. It died a natural death. But what became of the doctrine? From 1853, when it passed the judgment of Heads of Houses in Oxford, to 1867, when at length no one is inclined to resist it, it has grown and multiplied with wonderful rapidity; according to the saying, 'Magna est veritas et praevalabit.'" When the context of the passage is examined it clearly appears that the writer is speaking, however inaccurately, not of the alleged specific heresy of the "reception of the Eucharist by the wicked" and the contravention of the 29th article of religion, but of the general doctrine of the real presence. The alleged heresy of maintaining that doctrine is charged in the articles, and the prosecutor will have the opportunity of contending that Mr. Bennett is punishable for maintaining it. To make the defendant chargeable with a particular heresy, on which in the work which is before the Court he is not commenting, simply because that heresy is to be found in a work referred to by him, which work is not before the Court, would be, I think, to establish a doctrine of constructive heresy in a criminal suit—a doctrine unknown to ecclesiastical jurisprudence since the abolition of the Star Chamber and the High Commission Court, and one which would be at variance with the spirit, if not with the letter, of the decisions given by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and by this Court in suits of this character.

After much consideration I have arrived at the conclusion, from the reasons which I have stated, that the articles must be further reformed by striking out all that relates to the charge of contravening the 29th Article of Religion as to the reception of the Eucharist by the wicked, and I direct them to be reformed accordingly.

The articles so reformed will, as I have already said, but for the sake of clearness will now repeat, still contain the following charges for alleged heresy:—1. The actual presence of our Lord in the sacrament of the Lord's supper. 2. The visible presence of our Lord upon the altar or table of the holy communion. 3. That there is a sacrifice at the time of the celebration of the Eucharist. 4. That adoration or worship is due to the consecrated elements of the Lord's Supper.

Leave to appeal was granted.

Proctors—Moore & Currey, for promotor.

[IN THE PRIVY COUNCIL.]

1869. } JOHN MARTIN, appellant, v. THE
Dec. 24. } REV. ALEXANDER HERIOT MAC-
KONOECHIE, respondent.*

Judicial Committee—Monition—Disobedience to—Holy Communion—Elevation of Cup and Paten—Kneeling or Prostration.

On appeal from the Arches Court in a proceeding under the Church Discipline Act, the respondent, a clerk in orders, was monished to abstain from the elevation of the cup and paten, during the administration of the Holy Communion, and from kneeling or prostrating himself before the consecrated elements during the prayer of consecration.

On a motion to enforce obedience to such monition, it appeared that the sentence of the Arches Court, which was affirmed by the Judicial Committee, monished the respondent not to elevate the elements "above the head of the respondent," and that the respondent had literally obeyed that monition. But their Lordships intimated, that any elevation as distinguished from the mere act of removing the elements from the table, and taking them into the hands of the minister, is not sanctioned by law.

It further appeared, that the respondent bowed one knee at certain parts of the prayer of consecration, to an extent that it, occasionally, touched the ground:—Held, that such a bowing of the knee was a breach of the monition, and that it is not necessary that a person should touch the ground, in order to perform an act of reverence.

This was a motion by the appellant in this appeal, praying their Lordships to enforce obedience by the respondent to the monition made on the appeal.

The appeal was from a decree of the official principal of the Arches Court of Canterbury, in a cause of the office of the Judge promoted by the appellant against the respondent, a clerk in holy orders of the United Church of England and Ireland, the Incumbent and Perpetual Curate of the parish of St. Alban's, Holborn.

The articles charged the respondent with having, within his said church, and within two years then last past, offended against the laws ecclesiastical, by having during the prayer of consecration, in the order of the administration of the Holy Communion, elevated the paten above his head, and permitted and sanctioned such elevation, and taken into his hands the cup, and elevated it above his head during the prayer of consecration, and permitted and sanctioned the cup to be so taken and elevated, and with having knelt or prostrated himself before the consecrated elements during the prayer of consecration, and permitted and sanctioned such kneeling or prostrating by other clerks in holy orders; and with having used lighted candles on the communion table during the celebration of the Holy Communion, at times when such lighted candles were not wanted for the purpose of giving light, and permitted and sanctioned such use of lighted candles.

* Present—The Lord Chancellor (Lord Hatherley), the Archbishop of York (Dr. Thomson), Lord Chelmsford, Sir J. Colvile, and Sir J. Napier.

The official principal pronounced that the respondent had offended against the laws ecclesiastical, by the elevation of the cup and paten in the manner charged during the administration of the Holy Communion, and did monish him to abstain from such practices for the future; but he declined to pronounce that the respondent had offended against the laws ecclesiastical, by having knelt or prostrated himself before the consecrated elements during the prayer of consecration, and by having permitted and sanctioned such kneeling or prostrating by other clerks in holy orders; and did also decline to pronounce that the respondent had offended against the laws ecclesiastical, by having used lighted candles on the communion table during the celebration of the Holy Communion, at times when such lighted candles were not required for the purpose of giving light, and by having permitted and sanctioned such use of lighted candles.

The appeal had reference only to the kneeling or prostration before the consecrated elements, and to the use of lighted candles.

On the 23rd of December, 1868, the Judicial Committee reported to her Majesty their opinion that the decree of the Court below ought to be amended; and that, in addition to the matters in which the respondent was, in the decree appealed from, pronounced to have offended, and from which he was thereby monished to abstain for the future, the respondent ought to be pronounced to have offended against the laws and canons of the Church of England, by having, within the church of St. Alban's, knelt or prostrated himself before the consecrated elements during the prayer of consecration; and also by having within the said church used lighted candles on the communion table during the celebration of the Holy Communion, at times when such lighted candles were not wanted for the purpose of giving light; and that the respondent ought to be admonished to abstain for the future from kneeling or prostrating himself before the consecrated elements during the prayer of consecration; also, from using in the said church lighted candles on the communion table during the celebration of the Holy Communion, at times when such lighted candles were not wanted for the purpose of giving light; and further, that the respondent ought to be condemned in the costs both in the Court below and in the Court of appeal.

On the 14th of January, 1869, the Report of their Lordships was confirmed by Order in Council.

On the 20th of January, 1869, the monition was served on the respondent.

Affidavits in support of the motion were filed on behalf of the appellant, alleging:—

That the respondent had, since the service of the said monition, at the commencement of Morning Prayer permitted eight lighted candles to be and remain upon a shelf, about six inches above the level of the Communion table, and which appeared to form part thereof, two of such candles being in candlesticks, and six in two candelabra, holding three candles each, such candlesticks and candelabra standing upon the said shelf. That the said eight candles were extinguished immediately before the commencement of the said Communion Service, up to which time they were kept continuously burning. That neither such lamps nor such candles were required for the purpose of giving light.

That since the service of the said monition, when the respondent, in celebrating the Holy Communion, came to that part of the Prayer of Consecration at which the Rubric directs the priest to take the paten into his hands, had paused in reading the said prayer; and that during such pause, and before taking the paten into his hands, the respondent bowed himself down to the Communion table; that he then stood upright, and immediately afterwards knelt down upon the steps leading to the Communion table; that after kneeling for a few seconds, he rose and again stood up, and took the paten into his hands, and raised it level with his head; that he then replaced the paten upon the Communion table; that he then again bowed down to the Communion table; that he then again stood upright, and immediately afterwards knelt down upon the steps leading to the Communion table; that after kneeling for a few seconds he again rose, stood up and proceeded with the said Prayer of Consecration until he came to that part at which the Rubric directs the priest to take the cup into his hands; that he then again paused in reading the said prayer; that during such pause, and before taking the cup into his hands, he bowed himself down to the Communion table; that he then stood upright, and immediately afterwards knelt down upon the steps leading to the Communion table; that after kneeling for a few seconds, he again rose and stood up, and took the cup into his hands and raised it level with his head; that he then replaced the cup upon the Communion table, and again bowed down to the Communion table; that he then rose and stood upright, and immediately afterwards knelt down upon the steps leading to the Communion table; that after kneeling for a few seconds he again rose, stood up, and proceeded with the Prayer of Consecration.

The respondent filed affidavits, stating that he had not, since the service of the said monition, prostrated himself or knelt on the steps leading to the Communion table, or elsewhere, when celebrating the Holy Communion, during any part of the Consecration Prayer; but he admitted that it was his practice during the Prayer of Consecration, when celebrating Holy Communion, and whilst standing before the holy table, reverently to bend one knee at certain parts of the said prayer, and that occasionally in so doing his knee momentarily touched the ground, but that such touching of the ground was no part of the act of reverence; and that having regard to the positions of the celebrating and assisting priests during the Consecration Prayer, as well as to the length and nature of their dress, it was not possible for any person in the body of the church to say whether the respondent did kneel or not.

The respondent filed a further affidavit, alleging that he had never intentionally or advisedly in any respect disobeyed or sanctioned any practices contrary to the provisions of the monition.

The appellant prayed their Lordships to declare that the respondent had not complied with the monition, inasmuch as he continued to elevate the cup and paten during the administration of the Holy Communion; to kneel or prostrate himself before the consecrated elements during the Prayer of Consecration; to use lighted candles on the Communion table at times when such lighted candles were not wanted for the purpose of giving light; and further that the monition might be enforced in such manner as their Lordships might think fit.

A. J. Stephens, Archibald, and Droop, for the appellant.—The respondent has not complied with the monition. He continues to elevate the cup and paten during celebration, and to kneel or prostrate himself before the consecrated elements during the prayer of consecration, and to use lighted candles on the Communion table at times when such candles are not wanted for the purpose of giving light. The affidavits shew that there has been no compliance with the monition.

[The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The monition forbids the use of lighted candles on the Communion table during the celebration of the Holy Communion, but the affidavits say that the candles were put out before the celebration.]

With reference to the lighted candles there has been an evasion of the judgment. The principle of the judgment was that there should be no lights of a symbolical or ceremonial character. There can, however, be no doubt as to the disobedience by the respondent in respect to that part of the monition which directs the respondent not to elevate the cup and paten, and not to kneel and prostrate himself during the prayer of consecration. This is in direct opposition to the judgment of the Privy Council in Martin v. Mackonochie (1).

[The LORD CHANCELLOR.—To constitute the offence the consecration must have taken place before the kneeling and prostration.]

The moment the priest takes the cup or bread into his hands the consecration commences. It may be assumed that the respondent obeyed the Rubric, and if so, he consecrated when he took the cup in his hands.

[The LORD CHANCELLOR.—This is a criminal charge, and it is necessary to construe the affidavits strictly.]

The cup is never elevated till after consecration. If it were not so, it would be an unmeaning ceremony. It is clearly established by the affidavits that the respondent has elevated the cup and paten.

Mr. Mackonochie appeared in person.—There is no legal means by which this Court can enforce obedience to the monition. The monition is therefore null and void.

[The LORD CHANCELLOR.—The only question now is whether the monition has been complied with.]

The elevation complained of, and condemned by the Judge of the Arches Court, has not in fact been continued. The elevation alleged in the affidavits in support of this motion, if there be any such elevation, is another and a different elevation. The elevation complained of was an elevation above the head; there has been no such elevation since the monition. With reference to the charge of kneeling, the affidavits are imperfect and incorrect. It has never been my practice to kneel, and certainly since the monition I have never knelt during the prayer of consecration. I may have knelt after the prayer of consecration was ended. This being a criminal charge, the appellant is bound to shew disobedience with the greatest strictness. I have yielded a fair obedience to the monition. I have only bent the knee. It may have accidentally touched the ground, but if so, it is no part of the act of reverence. The question then is, what is the meaning of the expression "kneeling?" It is defined in Bailey's Dictionary, "To bear oneself upon the knees." I maintain, as regards the charge of kneeling, that kneeling is a distinct posture. The body must rest upon the knees. It is true Dr. Johnson gives a different definition, but all his four examples fall within Bailey's definition: "To perform the act of genuflexion," "To bend the knee."

(1) 38 Law J. Rep. (n.s.) Eccles. 1.

When thou dost ask my blessing, I'll kneel down
And ask of thee forgiveness (2).

Ere I was risen from the place that shew'd
My duty kneeling, came a reeking post,
Stew'd in his haste, half breathing, panting forth
From Goneril, his mistress, salutation (3).

"A certain man, kneeling down" (4).
"At the name of Jesus every knee should bow" (5). Bowing the knee is a distinct act from kneeling. Bishop Taylor says, "As soon as you are dressed kneel down" (6). In every instance in the Prayer Book, "kneeling" is used to express the going upon the knees. Two things are necessary to a kneeling, first, that the body should rest on the knees; secondly, that it should be for an appreciable time.

[Sir J. NAPIER.—Is there any intermediate attitude recognised by the Rubric?]

I bend the knee as an act of reverence.

[The LORD CHANCELLOR.—It is not a question of motive.]

Then with regard to the alleged "prostration," I should contend that "prostration" is an extreme act of kneeling.

With reference to the elevation, the elevation which I was monished not to continue was the elevation as pleaded in the articles, which was an elevation "above the head." With reference to the use of lighted candles, the charge was that I used lighted candles on the Communion table during the celebration of the Holy Communion, when such candles were not wanted for the purpose of giving light. Now, the affidavits expressly shew that the candles have not been lighted during the celebration of the Holy Communion. It is clear, then, that there has been no violation of the monition in respect of the candles. I may add that I had no intention of disobeying the monition.

Stephens in reply.—The only question is whether the respondent has obeyed the monition. The monition must be construed in accordance with the Book of Common Prayer. The Rubric directs the priest to take the paten and cup into his hands. The monition orders the respondent not to elevate the paten and cup. There must be a distinction between taking the cup or paten into the hands and an elevation. To take is to lay hold of, and involves no further lifting than is necessary for such taking. To elevate is "to raise aloft." The degree of elevation which the respondent admits is not sanctioned by the Prayer Book. The monition must be construed with reference to the judgment, and the judgment expressly directs the respondent to continue in one posture till the Prayer Book directs him to change that posture, but the respondent must admit that his posture is changed. There is therefore a breach of the monition.

The LORD CHANCELLOR delivered the judgment of their Lordships.—In this case a motion has been made, calling upon their Lordships to take proceedings in order to enforce the monition which has been served upon the reverend respondent, with regard to the execution of a sentence, pronounced in the first instance by the Court of Arches. This sentence was in some degree extended and modified by the judgment which this Committee was called upon to pronounce, or rather by the decision which they were called upon, after argument, to recommend as fit to be made by an Order of Her Majesty in Council.

The order provided for several matters; as to three of which only it is now alleged that there has been a breach by the

(2) Shakspeare, K. Lear.

(3) Ibid.

(4) St. Matthew's Gospel, c. xvii. v. 14.

(5) Epistle to Philippians, c. ii. v. 10.

(6) Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

respondent of the monition issued in pursuance of the order. Those three matters are,—First, that he continues to elevate the cup and paten during the administration of the Holy Communion; secondly, that he continues to kneel or prostrate himself before the consecrated elements during the Prayer of Consecration; and thirdly, that he continues to use lighted candles on the Communion table, at times when such lighted candles are not wanted for the purpose of giving light.

In order to see how far that which is complained of has been a breach of the monition, we must of course in the first instance look to the monition itself. The monition having recited that the respondent was pronounced to have offended against the Statutes, Laws, Constitutions, and Canons of the Church of England, by having knelt or prostrated himself before the consecrated elements during the Prayer of Consecration, and also by having, within the said church, elevated the cup and paten during the Holy Communion, and also by having used lighted candles on the Communion table during the celebration of the Holy Communion, at times when such lighted candles were not wanted for the purpose of light, proceeds to direct him to abstain for the future from the elevation of the cup and paten during the administration of the Holy Communion, and from kneeling or prostrating himself before the elements during the Prayer of Consecration, and also from using in the said church lighted candles on the Communion table during the celebration of the Holy Communion, at times when such candles are not wanted for the purpose of giving light.

The evidence which is before their Lordships is addressed to these three several heads. We will deal with them in a different order from that in which they appear in the prayer of the application, and take the use of lighted candles on the Communion table, at times when such candles are not wanted for the purpose of giving light, in the first instance, because with reference to that part of the case, it appears to their Lordships that the affidavits do not make out the offence charged. In the first place, it appears that the offence charged is not in strict conformity with the monition, because the monition is itself confined to using those candles on the Communion table, during the celebration of the Holy Communion; and the charge which is made in the motion now before this Committee, is that they were used on the Communion table at times when they were not wanted for the purpose of giving light, leaving out the words, "during the time of Holy Communion."

Of course it is not competent for their Lordships to proceed beyond the actual monition which has been served upon the respondent. It is that which he is said to have disobeyed, and it is to disobedience of the monition only that their Lordships can address themselves.

It is plain upon the affidavits that the candles have not been lighted during the Holy Communion, for the course taken by the respondent has been this, that the candles are lighted, as he says they always have been, and were at the time of the proceedings herein being taken, and are kept burning up to the period of the Holy Communion, and then immediately before the commencement of the Holy Communion they are extinguished.

There is no doubt, therefore, in this case, of a literal compliance with the terms of the monition. The candles are not lighted during the period of the Holy Communion. They are lighted, indeed, when there is no necessity for their being lighted for the purpose of giving light, but they are extinguished before the Holy Communion; therefore the compliance with the terms of the monition has been literal and complete, and not, in that sense, evasive, for the respondent was limited to a particular time, in reference to the candles; and whatever one may feel as to the course of the reverend respondent, looking to the spirit of the monition, of course the monition could not go beyond the matters that were charged: the offence charged was one which he has abstained from; and in this respect, therefore, their lordships are clear that the prayer of this motion cannot be complied with.

The next charge is that he continues to elevate the cup and paten during the administration of the Holy Communion; and with reference to this matter, their Lordships feel that the case is placed in a position that is eminently unsatisfactory. On the former occasion the sentence of the Judge in the Court below was approved of with reference to this particular subject matter; therefore, that sentence is the sentence to which recourse must be had by their Lordships when interpreting the monition, which cannot of course proceed further than the sentence itself. The sentence in the Court below was thus worded: the respondent was ordered "to abstain for the future from the elevation of the cup and paten during the ministration of the Holy Communion, and also from the use of incense and from the mixing of water with the wine during the administration of the Holy Communion, as pleaded in the articles."

Their Lordships think that the words "as pleaded in the articles" must be applied to those several offences which were charged in the passage just quoted, namely, the elevation of the cup and paten, also the use of incense, and the mixing of water with wine; and their Lordships are thrown back, therefore, to the articles to see what it was that was there pleaded, and they find this state of circumstances. Originally the third article pleaded that there was an elevation of the cup and paten beyond what was necessary for the purpose of complying with the terms of the Rubric, which directs that at a particular part of the Prayer of Consecration, when the sacred elements are dealt with, the paten shall be taken into the hands, and at another part that the cup shall be taken into the hand or hands (for there is some little variation in the two parts of the Rubric itself) of the officiating minister. That would have been, as it appears to all their Lordships, a charge which would have raised a distinct and definite issue, whether the elevation of the paten or the elevation of the cup were or were not a bonâ fide raising it so far only as is necessary for anything to be raised, that is to be taken from the table, or whether or not there was some ulterior purpose, that is to say, an act of elevation wholly distinct from and going beyond what was necessary for the mere purpose of taking the paten and cup into the hands of the officiating minister.

But the words and otherwise were also inserted in the same third article in a part which rendered it very difficult to attach any definite sense to them. Those words are so vague that the learned Judge before whom the case first came, Dr. Lushington, conceived that he could not admit the article in that form, and that the words introduced such a degree of vagueness as to render it improper to call upon the respondent to answer the charge in its then shape, and therefore the learned Judge said that the article must be reformed.

In the reforming of that article those who reformed it appear to have gone beyond anything that was required by the decision of the learned Judge in the course of the argument upon the admission of the articles. They not merely struck out the words, "and otherwise," but they also materially varied the language by describing definitely in the reformed article the act which had been performed, namely, that it was an elevation of the elements "above the head of the respondent."

The article then became confined to that particular mode of elevation, instead of being a charge of elevation beyond what was necessary for the proper compliance with the Rubric; and, therefore, when the sentence of the Judge, which directs that he shall abstain for the future from the elevation "as pleaded in the articles," is considered, it appears to their Lordships that they are necessarily confined to that particular charge which is there contained, and that particular mode of elevation which is there complained of.

We have been thus particular in going through all the circumstances of this case, which is left, as it appears to their Lordships, in a very unsatisfactory position, because it is most desirable, and their Lordships are all of opinion that it should be distinctly understood that they give no sanction whatever to a notion that any elevation whatever of the elements, as distinguished from the mere act of removing them from the table and taking them into the hand of the minister, is sanctioned by law. It is not necessary for their Lordships to say more (but most undoubtedly less we cannot say) than that we feel nothing has taken place in the course of this cause that can possibly justify a conclusion that any elevation whatever, as distinguished from the raising from the table, is proper or is sanctioned. All that their Lordships can say upon the present occasion is, that the point has never yet been in these proceedings raised, that a particular and definite mode of elevation only has been averred and complained of, and with that particular and definite mode of elevation we have nothing further to do, because it is conceded on all sides that such particular mode has been departed from.

It is not for us to say how far the letter to which the respondent himself has referred, and in a part of which he says that the simple compliance with the Rubric, namely, taking the cup and the paten into his hands, would be sufficient for the purpose of satisfying a certain portion of his parishioners as regards the elevation of the elements, may or may not have misled the judges who had this case before them.

They say that the matter complained of having been discontinued, had not been complained of, that is, by the articles, and we have felt it to be right and proper to say that nothing we are now determining, can therefore be pleaded hereafter as a justification for any mode of elevation which is to be distinguished from the mere act of removing the elements from the table, and taking them into the hands of the minister.

Inasmuch, then, as the reverend respondent has said upon oath, and it is not now contravened, that his course of procedure has only been that which he says he adopted at the time of the first hearing of the matter, owing to the complaint made of the higher elevation spoken of in the articles, their Lordships think they cannot in that state of circumstances say that he has thereby committed a breach of the monition which has been served upon him.

The third matter which has been complained of is as follows; and as to this matter their Lordships think the case is open to very different considerations:—

The respondent was admonished “not to kneel or prostrate himself before the consecrated elements during the prayer of consecration;” and without going through the affidavits, the exact state of circumstances may be taken to be as they appear upon the affidavits made by the respondent himself and by Mr. Walker, the gentleman who was present on the several occasions referred to in the motion. The affidavits in support of the motion stated distinctly acts of prostration and of kneeling during the period of the prayer of consecration. Into the details of those affidavits it is unnecessary to enter, because in the affidavit of the respondent there is this which seems to set the case in a very clear light as far as the facts are concerned. The respondent says: “I did not on either of the days or times mentioned in the affidavits on which this motion is founded, nor have I ever since the service of the said monition on me, prostrated myself or knelt on steps leading to the Communion table, or elsewhere, when celebrating the Holy Communion during any part of the consecration prayer. I admit that it is my practice during the prayer of consecration when celebrating the Holy Communion,”—the time, therefore, is exactly fixed to which the monition would apply,—“and whilst standing before the holy table, reverently to bend one knee at certain parts of the said prayer, and occasionally in so doing my knee momentarily touches the ground, but such touching of the ground is no part of the act of reverence intended by me. Whether my knee may have thus momentarily touched the ground on either of the days mentioned in the said affidavits on which I am stated to be the celebrating priest, I am, of course, unable to say.” Mr. Walker is a little bolder upon that point, because he says this (and he was present on these days)—“I say that the respondent did not prostrate himself or kneel upon the steps leading to the Communion table or elsewhere at any time during the prayer of consecration on the 18th day of July and the 14th day of November, 1869, as mentioned in the affidavits; and to the best of my belief he did not touch the ground with either of his knees at all during that time on the occasions on which the respondent is accused of doing so.” Then he further says this: “And having regard to the positions of the celebrating and assisting priests during the consecration prayer, as well as to the length and nature of their dress, I do not believe that it is possible for any person in the body of the church to say whether the respondent did kneel or not."

Therefore, the case as stated is this: Mr. Mackonochie being enjoined against kneeling during this prayer, admits a gesture which he contends is not kneeling, but he admits a bowing of his knee, a bowing of it to an extent which occasions it at times momentarily to touch the ground, a bowing of it to an extent which renders it impossible (according to Mr. Walker's affidavit) for anybody to see whether he is or is not kneeling,—that is the distinct statement in the affidavits, namely, that nobody could see whether he is kneeling or not.

First of all their Lordships would consider the literal question which is before them, whether there has been even a literal compliance with the monition in this act of Mr. Mackonochie. Their Lordships are all of opinion that there has not been even a literal compliance; that Mr. Mackonochie has knelt; and that bowing the knee in the manner which he has described is kneeling; and that it is not necessary that a person should touch the ground in order to perform such an act of reverence as will constitute kneeling. Of course there may be such a bowing of the knee, as would not amount to kneeling in the sense of the monition, but Mr. Mackonochie very properly says that he takes no advantage of any suggestion of that sort—there may be an accidental bowing of the knee, arising from fatigue or otherwise; but here is a knee bent for the purpose of reverence and in such a manner that those who behold cannot tell whether or not what Mr. Mackonochie and Mr. Walker call kneeling, that is, touching the ground with the knee, has been arrived at, and indeed Mr. Mackonochie says that at certain times his knee has momentarily touched the ground. This seems to their Lordships to be literally kneeling.

But the case must be put much higher than that, because neither this tribunal nor any tribunal will suffer its orders to be tampered with by mere evasion; and a mere evasion it would be, to allow a person when ordered not to kneel (for the whole gist and purport of the order, as I shall presently show, being the kneeling by way of reverence) to say, "I did all that I could do towards so kneeling; I bowed my knee; I nearly touched the ground with it; I did not quite touch the ground, but I did it in such a manner that all my congregation, all who were attending and seeing that which I did, could not possibly tell whether I were kneeling in that sense or not." It would be intolerable to allow any order to be trifled with in such a manner as must be implied if their Lordships were to give place for a moment to any such argument on the part of Mr. Mackonochie as that this was a compliance with the order.

Now, with reference to this particular matter of kneeling, it is one, undoubtedly, of very great importance as regards the judgment which has been pronounced, and the occasion of that judgment. We cannot do better, with reference to this part of the subject, than to call attention to the purport and intent of the Book of Common Prayer, when prescribing what is to be done, and in omitting to prescribe that which it does not intend to be done. For that purpose I will refer to the judgment which was pronounced by Lord Cairns, as the judgment of the Judicial Committee on the former occasion (1). His Lordship thus expresses himself: "Their Lordships are of opinion that it is not open to a minister of the Church, or even to their Lordships, in advising her Majesty, as the highest Ecclesiastical Tribunal of Appeal, to draw a distinction, in acts which are a departure from or violation of the Rubric, between those which are important and those which appear to be trivial. The object of a Statute of Uniformity is, as its preamble expresses, to produce an 'universal agreement in the public worship of Almighty God,'—an object which would be wholly frustrated if each minister, on his own view of the relative importance of the details of the service, were to be at liberty to omit, or add to, or alter any of those details. The rule upon this subject has been already laid down by the Judicial Committee in Westerton v. Liddell (7), and their Lordships are disposed entirely to adhere to it: 'In the performance of the services, rites, and ceremonies ordered by the Prayer Book, the directions contained in it must be strictly observed; no omission and no addition can be permitted.'" And then upon this very subject matter his Lordship further proceeds to say,—“There would indeed be no difficulty in shewing that the posture of the celebrating minister during all the parts of the Communion Service was, and that for obvious reasons, deemed to be of no small importance in the changes introduced into the Prayer Book at and after the Reformation. The various stages of the service are, as has already been shewn, fenced and guarded by directions of the most minute kind, as to standing and kneeling,—the former attitude being prescribed even for prayers, during which a direction to kneel might have been expected. And it is not immaterial to observe that whereas in the first Prayer Book of King Edward the VIth, there was contained at the end a Rubric in these words:—‘As touching kneeling, crossing, holding-up of hands, knocking upon the breast, and other gestures, they may be used or left as every man’s devotion serveth, without blame,’—this Rubric was in the second Prayer Book of Edward the VIth, and in all the subsequent Prayer Books, omitted.”

We may further add an observation as to the extreme care which is taken in the Prayer Book to guard all persons who might feel a scruple with reference to kneeling at the reception of the Holy Communion from any inference that might thereby be raised in their minds of a nature contrary to that which was intended by the Prayer Book itself to be expressed, namely, any intention of adoration of the holy elements. This is most particularly and carefully guarded against, and the reason for such kneeling is explained, and said to be, “for a signification of our humble and grateful acknowledgment of the benefit of Christ, therein given to all worthy receivers, and for the avoiding of such profanation and disorder in the Holy Communion as might otherwise ensue.” Then it is explained:—“Yc lest the same kneeling should by any persons, either out of ignorance and infirmity, or out of malice and obstinacy, be misconstrued and depraved, it is hereby declared, that thereby no adoration is intended, or ought to be done, either unto the sacramental bread and wine there bodily received, or unto any corporal presence of Christ’s natural flesh and blood. For the sacramental bread and wine remain still in their very natural substances, and therefore may not be adored: for that were idolatry, to be abhorred of all faithful Christians.”

And again, carefully does our Church provide in her 28th Article against any such adoration as we have spoken of by this declaration—“The sacrament of the Lord’s Supper was not by Christ’s ordinance reserved, carried about, lifted up, or worshipped.”

Now that being so, and it being of the utmost importance that for the purposes of common prayer such union should be preserved as is essential to the happiness and comfort of all who are joining in this most holy ordinance, what can be a greater offence than the offence of either by addition or omission occasioning trouble or confusion in the minds of those who are invited to join in common prayer, and in one common act of reverence? Acts of reverence, where necessary, are enjoined; and the use of additional acts of reverence, where they are not enjoined, is, according to the judgment which has been pronounced in this very matter, a thing prohibited.

If, therefore, the reverend respondent, in performing his own special act of reverence, does it in such a manner that no one can tell whether he is not doing the very thing which he is prohibited from doing, and has performed that special act of reverence at a time when there is no direction in the Book of Common Prayer for that performance, he certainly does that which militates, in every possible view of the case, both in letter and spirit, against the monition which he has received, and the reasoning which occasioned that monition to be issued.

(7) Moore’s Special Rep. 187.

Whether or not Mr. Mackonochie can reconcile it with his view of what is right, that a judgment of this kind should be so narrowly scrutinised, that every possible limit should be placed upon it, and that notwithstanding the reasons which are assigned for it, namely, the desire of promoting uniformity in common worship, it should be, as far as possible, evaded, it is not for their Lordships to say. There may be some who feel great grief and sorrow at any act which may appear to be at variance with the common charity and love that should induce us at all times when assembled for worship, and most especially this highest and holiest act of worship, to be as far as possible of one mind, so that then at least our unity be not disturbed.

But what one is justified in saying, as regards the act which is now complained of as a breach of the monition, is this: that it is not possible, happily, to reconcile with the administration of our law in its narrowest sense, any mere evasion of that which the law sanctions, of that which the law has ordered, by an authority which binds this reverend gentleman, as it binds every subject of the realm, to strict obedience. That obedience may be rendered grudgingly, if so it must be; it may be rendered in a manner which I am sure the reverend gentleman would not tolerate on the part of any of his flock, if it were a question of obedience to a higher power; it may be rendered, therefore, strictly within the limits which are exactly prescribed by the monition, but that monition may not be evaded. A mere literal compliance is not all that even the law requires; the compliance must not be literal in a sense which is but evasive.

I will not, in the name of their Lordships, say more upon what I confess presses upon me individually very strongly, the narrowness of obedience shewn by the course taken, as to keeping the candles lighted until the very moment when they are forbidden, and then extinguishing them; and as to the elevation of the elements to something which, even on the affidavits themselves, appears to me to be more than necessary for simply taking the cup and paten into the hands of the officiating clergyman, since we have been obliged to hold that these acts were, nevertheless, in literal compliance with the monition having reference to the Articles.

But here, in this matter of the kneeling, their Lordships find that there is, first, not even a literal compliance with the order; and secondly, if, upon any strained interpretation of the word "kneeling" (for strained as it appears to their Lordships it would be), they could arrive at the conclusion that it did not preclude the act of bowing one knee so low that it must at times touch the ground, and in a manner which cannot possibly be distinguished from kneeling by those who witness the act; still, if it was a representation of the forbidden act, as nearly as the party charged dared to represent it, and in such a guise as to convey to all at a distance the impression that the act of kneeling was really performed, that would be a species of evasion of the order which a Court of Justice would find it right and due to the maintenance of its own force and vigour to visit as being itself a breach of the order which had been made.

For these reasons it has seemed to their Lordships (and it is the opinion of us all) to say that there has been a clear breach of this special monition.

Their Lordships next take into consideration what is proper and right to be done. They did not hear Mr. Stephens upon the question as to whether or not this tribunal has the means of enforcing its orders. Happily, it has been supplied (and I say "happily," because it would be in vain to establish a tribunal which has no power to enforce its orders) with abundant means for that purpose by the statutes which have been passed in that behalf; but into the examination of those means, and the different modes that might be adopted for that purpose, we are not, for the reason I am presently going to mention, about to enter. In declining to take any more severe step than that of compelling Mr. Mackonochie to pay the costs of this discussion, their Lordships have had to consider the affidavit which was last made by him, and to which they have been desirous to give the most favourable construction and allowance; and in that affidavit Mr. Mackonochie very properly says that he never intentionally or advisedly, in any respect, disobeyed the monition, or sanctioned any practice contrary to its provisions. I confess I think, as I have already intimated, that Mr. Mackonochie takes an extremely narrow view of that which the word "obedience" ordinarily implies, when he says that he has endeavoured to obey this order, but he does say that which, in a sense, for the purpose of clearing his contempt, he may have a right to claim the benefit of, that he never intentionally or advisedly, in any respect, disobeyed the monition.

He now, we hope, will learn that mere literal compliance in a merely evasive manner will not suffice. Literal compliance with regard to the actual limits of the order is, of course, all that he is held to in law; for an obedience to the spirit of the order, we can only trust to his own feelings and his own conscience. And when he thus tells us that it has not been, and is not his desire wilfully to disobey the law, or to disregard its monition, their Lordships think that they are bound, upon the first occasion of the matter being brought before them of any non-compliance with the order, to allow Mr. Mackonochie the benefit of that affidavit; and they do not think it necessary on the present occasion to do more, after expressing their opinion judicially that the monition has been disobeyed with reference to kneeling during the prayer of consecration, than to mark their disapprobation of such a course of proceeding by directing that he should pay the costs of the present application.

Their Lordships make no further order.

Proctors, Moore & Currey for appellant; the respondent in person.

[IN THE CHANCERY COURT OF YORK.]

1869. }
Dec. 1, 2. } NOBLE v. VOYSEY.*

Articles charging heresy—Reforming—Formularies of the Church contravened—The Homilies—Pleading.

Articles exhibited against a clergyman for maintaining, &c., doctrine contrary to that of the Church of England, after charging that the doctrine complained of was contrary to certain Articles of Religion, and certain parts of the Book of Common Prayer and of the Homilies, set out the particular Articles and portions of the Prayer Book, and proceeded as follows—“The doctrines, positions, or teachings, declared and taught in which said Articles of Religion, parts of the Book of Common Prayer, and Formularies of the said Church, are also more largely expressed in the godly and wholesome doctrine necessary for these times, contained in the following passages from the 1st and 2nd Book of the Homilies, namely, &c.”:—Held, that the articles might be admitted to proof in the above form.

This was a suit instituted under the Church Discipline Act, 3 & 4 Vict. c. 86, against the Rev. Charles Voysey, Vicar of Healaugh, in the county and diocese of York, for maintaining or affirming and promulgating doctrines contrary to the Articles and formularies of the Church of England, in a work published in London, entitled “The Sling and the Stone,” being a collection of sermons preached by Mr. Voysey in Healaugh church.

The Bishop of London, on the application of the promoter, issued a commission to enquire into the grounds of the charge; and the Commissioners having reported that there was prima facie ground for further proceedings, the case was sent, by letters of request from the Archbishop of York, as ordinary of the diocese in which Healaugh is situated, to the Chancery

* Before Granville Harcourt Vernon, Esq., M.A., Vicar-General and Official Principal of the Court of Appeal of the Province of York.

Court of York, the Court of Appeal of the province; and articles were subsequently exhibited in that Court against the defendant.

The articles, after setting out certain passages of the work in question, charged that in those passages the defendant had "maintained or affirmed, and promulgated doctrines contrary, or repugnant to, or inconsistent with certain of the Articles of Religion, certain parts of the Book of Common Prayer, and certain portions of the 1st and 2nd Books of Homilies." They then set out the particular Articles and parts of the Book of Common Prayer alleged to be contravened, and proceeded as follows—"The doctrines, teachings, or positions, declared and taught in which said Articles of Religion, parts of the Book of Common Prayer, and formularies of the said Church, are also more largely expressed in the godly and wholesome doctrine necessary for these times, contained in the following passages from the 1st and 2nd Books of the Homilies, namely, &c." (setting out the passages).

The promoter having moved that the Articles be admitted to proof,—

Mr. Voysey in person moved, inter alia, that they should be reformed by striking out every passage referring to the Homilies, on the ground that the Homilies were not binding on the clergy, the doctrines contained in them being expressly declared by the 35th Article of Religion (1) to be necessary for the times when the Articles were framed, and that it was not to be inferred thence that they are necessary for the present time.

Archibald and Cowie, for the promoter, contended that he was entitled to refer to

(1) "The 2nd Book of Homilies, the several titles whereof we have joined under this Article, doth contain a godly and wholesome doctrine, and necessary for these times, as doth the former Book of Homilies, which were set forth in the time of Edward the Sixth; and therefore we judge them to be read in churches by the ministers, diligently and distinctly, that they may be understood of the people."

the Homilies in explanation of the Articles of Religion, and that to this extent the Homilies (where not inconsistent with the Articles themselves) constituted a standard of doctrine—Bishop of Salisbury v. Williams (2); and that the proper mode in which reference may be made to the Homilies is that indicated in the 11th Article of Religion "On justification," which states "that we are justified by faith only is a most wholesome doctrine, and very full of comfort, as more largely is expressed in the Homily of Justification."

(They also referred to Sheppard v. Bennett (3), where the same form of pleading was allowed by Sir R. J. Phillimore.

Cur. adv. vult.

On the following day, Dec. 2—

THE OFFICIAL PRINCIPAL admitted the articles to proof in the above form, saying that he saw no reason for making any reformation whatever in them.

Articles admitted accordingly.

Proctors—in the appeal, Moore & Currey; solicitors, J. B. Lee, for promoter; Shaen & Roscoe, for defendant.

[IN THE COURT OF ARCHES.]

1869. } THE BISHOP OF WINCHESTER
Nov. 19. } v. WIL.

Abatement of Suit—Office of Judge voluntarily promoted by Bishop of Diocese—Resignation of See by Bishop—Amendment of Title.

The Bishop of the diocese in which the accused clerk held preferment sent the cause in the first instance, by letters of request, to the Court of Arches. The Court accepted the letters of request, and issued a decree calling upon the defendant to appear. The defendant appeared, and after the articles

(2) 1 N.R. 199, per Dr. Lushington, D.A.

(3) In the Arches Court of Canterbury, reported ante p. 1.

had been brought in and admitted, the Bishop, who was the promoter of the cause, resigned his see:—Held, that the cause had not abated by reason of such resignation, and leave was granted to amend the title of the cause by altering the designation of the promoter.

This was a cause or business of the office of the Judge promoted by the late Bishop of Winchester against the Rev. R. H. E. Wix, M.A., a clerk in holy orders, Vicar of the ecclesiastical Parish of St. Michael and All Angels, Swanmore, in the Isle of Wight, in the county of Southampton and diocese of Winchester, for having offended against the laws ecclesiastical.

The case was sent in the first instance to the Court of Arches, under the provisions of the Church Discipline Act (3 & 4 Vict. c. 86), by letters of request, dated the 14th of May, 1869, signed by the then Bishop of Winchester, the voluntary promoter of the cause. The Court accepted the letters of request, and issued a decree or citation calling upon the defendant to appear. The defendant's proctor entered an appearance on his behalf, and after the articles had been brought in and admitted, the said Bishop of Winchester duly and canonically resigned his see. His resignation was accepted, on the 29th October, 1869, by the Archbishop of Canterbury, his ecclesiastical superior, and on the 11th November, 1869, the Queen, by an order in Council, declared the see of Winchester to be vacant.

The matter now came before the Court on an act on petition, dated the 12th November, 1869, which was brought in by the defendant. It set forth the above facts, and alleged that by reason of the resignation of the Bishop of Winchester, and of the said see being then vacant, the cause had abated and come to an end, and prayed that the defendant might be dismissed from further observance of justice therein.

The proctors for the promoter, in answer to the act on petition, denied that the cause had abated as alleged, and prayed the Court to reject the prayer of the defendant, and to order the title of the cause to be amended by describing the promoter as the Right Rev. Charles Richard Sumner, D.D., late Lord Bishop of Winchester.

A. Charles, for the defendant, submitted that it was by virtue of his episcopal capacity the Bishop had promoted the suit, and that the effect of his resignation upon the proceedings was the same as if he were dead. The proceedings resembled proceedings at common law; and by the common law a suit instituted by a Bishop abated by his resignation—Comyn's Digest, tit. Abatement, H. 46. It was in the discretion of the Court to allow the title of the cause to be amended, but the case was one in which that discretion ought not to be exercised.

Dr. Deane (with him Dr. Tristram) for the promoter.—The rules of common law procedure do not apply to this Court. It is true the suit was sent here by the Bishop in his episcopal capacity, by letters of request, but as soon as the letters of request were accepted by this Court, the Bishop was functus officio—Maidman v. Malpas (1). Dr. Sumner is, however, still the promoter of the suit, and all that is necessary is that the Court should allow a formal amendment to be made in respect of title.

SIR R. J. PHILLIMORE.—In this case there are two applications before the Court—one on behalf of the clerk accused of an ecclesiastical offence, that the Court will pronounce the suit to have abated by reason of the Bishop of Winchester, who originally promoted it, having ceased to occupy his see of Winchester; the other on behalf of the promoter of the office of the Judge, that the Court will allow the title of the cause to be altered by striking out the description of the bishop, and substituting the "Right Rev. Charles Richard Sumner, D.D., late Lord Bishop of Winchester." The question is novel in practice, because the registrar, after careful search, has been unable to find any direct precedent; but it is not difficult, I think, to decide according to principle. The subject for the consideration of the Court to day is naturally divided into these two heads—First, has the Court any discretion to exercise at all upon the matter? and, secondly, if it has any discretion, how ought that discretion to be exercised? Mr. Charles, who has put the matter clearly and ably on behalf of his client, has pressed upon the Court certain analogies of common law in respect of criminal charges and accusations. But I remember what was said by Lord Wensleydale, delivering the judgment of the Privy Council in Sherwood v. Ray (2), that the proceedings of the Ecclesiastical Courts are not governed by the rules of the common law, or any analogies which they furnish; and certainly I should be very loth to adopt the analogy of the common law at a time when it was in its most defective condition, and on points in which it has undergone, in deference to common sense and justice, very considerable reformation. I must dismiss, then, those analogies altogether from my consideration.

(1) 1 Hag. Cons., 205, 208.

It is necessary to state shortly the exact state of the proceedings before me at which the applications are made. The case was sent to this Court, by letters of request, by the late Bishop of Winchester. It rested with him, in the exercise of his episcopal office, to determine whether the suit should proceed or not, and in what manner. It was optional with him to cause his office to be promoted before himself, or to send the case by letters of request to be heard before this Court, either appointing a private person (his secretary, for instance) to carry on the proceedings in his own name, or by appearing himself as a voluntary promoter of the office of the Judge. He has exercised his discretion by adopting the latter course. This discretion he had exercised before he resigned his see, and as soon as this Court became properly in possession of the cause, the bishop in his official capacity had no longer any control over the proceedings. Having sent the case by letters of request to this Court under the statute 3 & 4 Vict. c. 86, and having resolved upon that mode of conducting the criminal suit, the Court, according to the recent decision of the Privy Council, had no option left it but to accept the letters of request. Well, the Court accepted the letters of request, and issued a decree, which being served upon the party, brought him before the Court, and at this moment the Court has before it the promoter of the office of the Judge and the accused clerk. It is true that the late bishop is the promoter of the cause, but, as I have said, a private person might, with his sanction, have acted as the promoter. Further, the promoter of the office of this Court must not be confounded with the promoter of the office of the Bishop of Winchester; and the cause being now in this Court, it is the office of the Archbishop of Canterbury, acting through the Court, and not the office of the bishop, that is being promoted. The question, therefore, when it is so stated, becomes, as it appears to me, one of extreme simplicity, and it is simply this: whether the promoter of the office of the Court, having, from the circumstance of his resignation of the see of Winchester, undergone a change of designation or title, the Court shall allow the cause to go on with that change of designation inserted in it, or dismiss the cause altogether? I don't know if I have a discretion to exercise in this matter; but I am certain that if I have, it ought to be exercised, both for the interests of the Church and upon the principles of common justice in a case of this description, by refusing to allow a technical objection of this kind to be sustained, and by granting the application for the alteration of the title of the cause. And that is the decision at which the Court has arrived.

I must dismiss the defendant's petition. I order the title of the cause to be amended according to the prayer of the promoter. A new proxy must be given in Bishop Sumner's own name.

Proctors—Moore & Currey, for promoter; G. H. Brooks, for defendant.

[IN THE COURT OF ARCHES.]

1870. } THE OFFICE OF THE JUDGE
 Jan. 10, 11. } PROMOTED BY BISHOP SUM-
 Feb. 3. } NER v. WIX.

Church Discipline Act—Rites and Ceremonies—"Gospel Lights"—Use of Lighted Candles on "Re-table" during Celebration of Holy Communion—Incense.

In a proceeding under the Church Discipline Act, the defendant, a clerk in orders, was charged with having caused or permitted two lighted candles to be held, one on each side of the priest, when reading the Gospel, such lighted candles not being then required for the purpose of giving light:—Held, an addition to the rites or ceremonies prescribed by the law, and therefore unlawful.

It was proved in a proceeding under the Church Discipline Act, that the defendant, a clerk in orders, during the celebration of the Holy Communion, used lighted candles which were placed on a "re-table," being a piece of furniture distinct from and standing behind the Holy Table, when such lighted candles were not wanted for the purpose of giving light; and that he also used incense for censuring persons and things immediately before and after the celebration of the Eucharist:—Held, that the use of the lighted candles was illegal, whether regarded as falling under the category of "ceremonies" or "ornamenta;" and that the use of the incense was also unlawful, as being subsidiary and preparatory to the celebration of the Holy Communion.

This was a cause sent in the first instance to the Court of Arches, under the provisions of the Church Discipline Act (3 & 4 Vict. c. 86) by letters of request, dated the 14th of May, 1869, signed by the then Bishop of Winchester, the voluntary promoter of the cause. The defendant appeared, and after the articles had been brought in and admitted, the Bishop of Winchester duly and canonically resigned his see. The title of the cause was thereupon amended (see Winchester v. Wix (1), and it now came on for hearing before the Dean of the Arches.

Dr. Deane, with him Dr. Tristram, for the promoter.

A. Charles for the defendant.

The facts and arguments are stated in the judgment, which was delivered on the 3rd of February as follows:—

SIR R. J. PHILLIMORE.—In this case the office of the judge is promoted by the late Bishop of Winchester against the Rev. Richard Hooker Edward Wix, vicar of St. Michael and All Angels, Swanmore, in the Isle of Wight.

The case comes before this Court by letters of request from the diocese of Winchester, and Bishop Sumner having ceased to be bishop of the see of Winchester, continues to be the promoter of the suit.

The defendant is charged with the ecclesiastical offences of adding to the ceremonies and rites prescribed by the law to be used in church, by the burning of lights and the use of incense.

The charges with respect to the burning of lights are contained in the following articles:—

"3rd. That the said Richard Hooker Edward Wix, in the church of the said perpetual curacy or vicarage of St. Michael and All Angels, Swanmore, on the following Sundays, to wit, on the 7th day of February, on the 28th day of March, on the 18th day of April, and on the 23rd day of May, all in the year 1869, used lighted candles on the communion table in the said church, or on a ledge or shelf immediately above the said communion table, the said ledge or shelf having the appearance of being affixed to and forming part of the said communion table, during the celebration of the Holy Communion at times when such lighted candles were not required for the purpose of giving light, and permitted and sanctioned such use of lighted candles."

"5th. That the said Richard Hooker Edward Wix, in the said church on the following Sundays, to wit, on the 28th day of March, on the 18th day of April, and on the 23rd day of May, all in the year 1869, used lighted candles placed in candlesticks standing on each side of the communion table during the celebration of the Holy Communion, at times when such lighted candles were not required for the purpose of giving light, and permitted and sanctioned such use of lighted candles."

E

(1) ante, 22.

NEW SERIES, 39.—ECCLES.

"7th. That the said Richard Hooker Edward Wix, in the said church, on Sunday, the 28th day of March, 1869, caused or permitted two lighted candles to be held, one on each side of the priest when reading the Gospel, such lighted candles not being then required for the purpose of giving light."

I will deal with the last article first, because it is admitted on behalf of the promoter that the practice therein complained of has been de facto discontinued by Mr. Wix since the service upon him of a monition by the bishop, dated the 3rd of April in last year, and before the commencement of this suit; at the same time Mr. Wix contends that the practice is lawful, and the judgment of the Court is prayed by the promoter thereupon.

I am of opinion that the practice charged in this article is unlawful, as an addition to the rites or ceremonies prescribed by the law. I am glad, therefore, that Mr. Wix obeyed the monition of his ordinary, and must admonish him not to return to the use of this practice.

With respect to the charge contained in the 3rd article, Mr. Wix offers the following defence in his responsive plea (3rd article):—

He says the charge against him—

"Is in part untruly pleaded, for he alleges that on the said days in the said third article mentioned, the said lighted candles were not placed on the communion table, or on a ledge or shelf immediately above the same as therein alleged, but upon a certain other table called a re-table, the said re-table standing distinct and separate from, and not forming or appearing to form part of, and not being affixed or appearing to be affixed to the said communion table."

And he denies that the use of such lighted candles is an unlawful addition to, or deviation from, the forms prescribed by the law.

With respect to the charge in the 5th article, the defendant admits the fact to be true as stated, but makes a similar denial with respect to the law.

The charges with respect to the unlawful use of incense are contained in the following articles:—

"9th. That the said Richard Hooker Edward Wix, in the said church on the following Sundays, to wit, on the 7th day of February, on the 28th day of March, on the 18th day of April, and on the 23rd day of May, all in the year 1869, used incense for censuring persons and things in and during the celebration of the Holy Communion, or as subsidiary thereto, and permitted and sanctioned such use of incense."

The defendant in his responsive plea (article 9) denies that he on the days in the article mentioned used incense for censuring persons and things in and during the celebration of the Holy Communion, or as subsidiary thereto, or permitted or sanctioned such use of incense as in the said article alleged. And the defendant further says that he used, and permitted, and sanctioned the use of incense on the days in the said article mentioned not for censuring persons or things nor in or during the celebration of the Holy Communion, nor as subsidiary thereto, but for other and lawful purposes.

"11th. That the said Richard Hooker Edward Wix, in the said church on the following Sundays, to wit, on the 7th day of February, on the 28th day of March, on the 18th day of April, and on the 23rd day of May, all in the year 1869, used incense in and during the celebration of the Holy Communion, or as subsidiary thereto, and permitted and sanctioned such use of incense."

As to this article, the defendant in his responsive plea (art. 11) denies that he on the days in the said 11th article mentioned used incense in and during the celebration of the Holy Communion, or as subsidiary thereto, or permitted and sanctioned such use of incense.

"13th. That the said Richard Hooker Edward Wix, in the said church, on the following Sundays, to wit, on the 7th day of February, on the 28th day of March, on the 18th day of April, and on the 23rd day of May, all in the year 1869, used incense during Divine Service, or as subsidiary thereto, and permitted and sanctioned such use of incense."

As to this article, the defendant in his responsive plea (art. 13) denies that he used or permitted or sanctioned the use of incense on the days in the said 13th article mentioned, during Divine Service, or as subsidiary thereto, but he admits that he used incense in a proper and lawful manner on the said days.

"15th. That the said Richard Hooker Edward Wix, in the said church, on the following Sundays, to wit, on the 7th day of February, on the 28th day of March, on the 18th day of April, and on the 23rd day of May, all in the year 1869, ceremonially used incense, and permitted and sanctioned such ceremonial use of incense."

As to this article, the defendant in his responsive plea (art. 15) denies that he on the days in the said article mentioned used incense ceremonially, or permitted or sanctioned such ceremonial use of incense.

It appears from the evidence that what is called the re-table is a separate and distinct piece of furniture from the holy table; that it is placed behind the holy table; and that the ledge or shelf of it, to use the words of the witness, "appears like a mantle-piece" over the holy table; that on this re-table stood two large candles and twelve branch candles, and that on each side of the holy table there stood a large candlestick which rested on the ground. All these candles were lighted at the time and in the manner which I will now state. And I may remark that the counsel for Mr. Wix admitted very properly that the evidence given by the witness Cooper was substantially correct, and did not cross-examine him. It appears from his evidence that after the third collect for grace had been said, then there was a sermon; after which the remaining prayers were said, concluding with the apostolic benediction. After this the candles were lighted by a chorister; there was a procession by the minister and choir then formed, and they went from the church to the vestry. After which, another procession came from the vestry with censers and incense burning, went to the holy table, where the priest stirred up the incense, and censed all the things on the re-table and holy table, while he himself was censed by a boy behind him. After which the censers and incense were carried by a boy into the vestry, accompanied it should seem by one of the priests, another priest remaining at the holy table. After the communion service was over the censers were again fetched from the vestry; another procession was formed, and the lights were extinguished. There were no lighted candles on the holy table itself; there was no incense burning during the time of the celebration of the Eucharist. Between the close of the morning prayers and the beginning of the communion service some of the congregation left the church and other persons came in, and a bell was rung to denote that the communion service had begun. These four facts which are proved in the case are much relied upon by the counsel for Mr. Wix as materially differing the present case from that of Martin v. Mackonochie (2); so much so as to make this present case one primæ impressionis.

It has been forcibly contended that the two judgments of Martin v. Mackonochie (2) and Liddell v. Westerton (3) are irreconcilable in principle, and that I ought to follow the doctrine laid down in the former, and not in the latter case. If, indeed, the duty were cast on me of demonstrating that the two decisions were in every respect harmonious as to the principle on which they proceeded, I might perhaps, though I do not say that I should, find the task a difficult one to execute, more especially with respect to the weight apparently given to the injunctions of Edw. VI. in Liddell v. Westerton, and their entire rejection in Martin v. Mackonochie (2), when they were relied upon for the purpose of showing that the burning of two candles to represent the true light of the world was illegal. But I am happy to think that no such duty is imposed upon me in the present case. The lights which were burnt in this case were not upon the holy table or "high altar," and therefore are unaffected by the injunctions; and the lighting and the burning of them in the manner and the circumstances proved appears to me to fall under the category of ceremonies. Nor are they, in the language of the Privy Council in Martin v. Mackonochie (2), "inert and unused," but things actively employed as a part of a ceremony, and are therefore illegal according to my own decision in the same case. It is not necessary that I should pass any opinion upon the legality of these things, if they were decorations, and neither "ornaments" nor ceremonies. It will be remembered that the candles were lit and burning during the whole of the Communion Service.

(2) 38 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Eccles. 1; s.c. 2 Law Rep. P.C. 365.

(3) Moore's Special Report.

Now with respect to the use of incense, the principal defence is that it was employed during an interval between two services, and neither belonged to nor was subsidiary to either. I cannot take this view of the state of facts which is proved by the evidence. I think the fair result of that evidence is that incense was used in the interval between two services which would otherwise have immediately succeeded each other; almost the same congregation was present at both services and in the interval between them. It is true that after the incense had been removed a bell was rung to signify that the second service was about to begin; but looking at all the circumstances I think it would be unreasonable and unjudicial not to conclude that the burning of the incense was intended to be subsidiary and preparatory to the celebration of the Holy Communion. I am bound therefore to pronounce that the use of the incense as well as the lighting and burning of the candles according to the facts admitted to be proved in this case, were illegal acts, and that Mr. Wix ought to have obeyed altogether, as he did partially, the monitions of his ordinary, which are set forth in the articles, and I must admonish him to abstain from such practices for the future, and I must condemn him in the costs of this suit.

Proctors—Messrs. Moore & Currey, for promoter;
Mr. G. H. Brooks, for defendant.

[IN THE COURT OF ARCHES.]

1869. }
Nov. 27, 29. } ALPHINSTONE & PURCHAS.
1870. }
Feb. 3. }

Church Discipline Act—Rubrics, Construction of—Vestments—Holy Communion, Administration of—Wine mixed with Water—Wafer Bread—Rites and Ceremonies.

The ornaments of the minister, to which the present rubric refers, are those mentioned in the first Prayer Book of Edward 6, and no ecclesiastical censure can attach for their use in the prescribed manner in the performance of divine service. They are, for ministers below the order of bishops, and when officiating at the Communion Service, cope, vestment or chasuble, surplice, alb and tunicle; in all other services the surplice only, except that in cathedral churches and colleges the academical hood may be also worn. The cap called a "biretta," though not mentioned, may be worn by the minister as a decent protection to the head when needed.

Provided that the mingling be not made at the time of the celebration, so as to constitute a new rite or ceremony, it is lawful for the minister to administer wine mixed with water, instead of wine, to the communicants at the Lord's Supper.

The rubric directs that the bread used in the administration of the Holy Communion shall be broken by the priest during the course of the prayer of consecration, but it does not require that the bread so used should be of any particular shape. The bread may be "wafer bread," or bread made in the special fashion and shape of circular wafers.

It is contrary to the 82nd canon, and has no warranty in primitive use or custom, to leave the holy table without any decent covering during divine service, even though there should be no administration of the Holy Communion.

It is contrary to the rubric, viz., that which precedes the Lord's Prayer at the beginning of the Communion Service, for the minister to read the collects next before the epistle for the day in the Communion Service, standing in front of the holy table, with his back to the people, or, while reading the collects following the creed, to stand in front of the middle of the holy table at the foot of the steps leading up to the same, with his back to the people; and though, perhaps, not governed by any positive order in a rubric, it is contrary to the intent of the Prayer Book for the minister to read the epistle in the communion service with his back to the people, the epistle not being a prayer addressed to God, but a portion of the Scripture read to the people.

The minister has no warranty in the Prayer Book for announcing the celebration of the holy communion as a "high celebration of the holy eucharist," or for giving notice of holy days other than those which the Church has directed to be observed, and which are to be found after the preface of the Prayer Book, under the head of "A Table of all the Feasts that are to be observed in the Church of England throughout the year."

Rites and ceremonies falling within the judgments in Martin v. Mackonochie and Flamank v. Simpson.

This was a proceeding under the Church Discipline Act (3 & 4 Vict. c. 86) brought by letters of request from the Bishop of Chichester into the Court of Arches. It was promoted by Charles James Elphinstone, of Brighton, in the county of Sussex, a colonel in Her Majesty's army, against the Rev. John Purchas, clerk, perpetual curate or minister of St. James's Church or Chapel, at Brighton, in the county of Sussex, and diocese of Chichester, and province of Canterbury. The defendant did not appear to the citation, and the proceedings were carried on in panam.

The charges articulated against the defendant are fully set out in the judgment. The most serious of them related to the wearing of certain vestments, viz., copes, chasubles, albs with patches called apparels, tippets of a circular form on the shoulders, gold stoles, coloured stoles, dalmatics, tunics or tunicles, and caps called "birettas," by the defendant and by other officiating ministers with his consent during the celebration of divine service.

The case was heard during Michaelmas Term last, and occupied the Court two days (27th and 29th of November).

A. J. Stephens (with him Dr. Tristram, Archibald, and B. Shaw), for the promoter.

Our. adv. vult.

On the 3rd of February judgment was given as follows:—

SIR R. J. PHILLIMORE.—This case comes before me by Letters of Request from the Bishop of Chichester. The decree by Letters of Request was served on Mr. Purchas on the 9th of October, and the case was heard during last term. Mr. Purchas has not appeared to the citation, and the proceedings have therefore been carried on in panam. I deferred my judgment, in order to consider the various authorities that were cited and the arguments adduced by counsel,—a burden which pressed the more heavily upon the Court, inasmuch as the case was heard ex parte,—and also because some of the same points were raised in a proceeding against Mr. Wix, which was argued before the Court at the beginning of this term, and in which I have just given judgment.

Mr. Purchas is perpetual curate of the perpetual curacy of St. James' Chapel in the parish of Brighton. The benefice is created by an Act of Parliament, 7 Geo. 4. c. 3, which enacts that the repairs shall be executed by a particular person, and that the bread and wine for the Holy Communion shall be provided by the perpetual curate, but contains no provisions as to churchwardens. The chapel and the perpetual curate are made subject to the ordinary jurisdiction of the Lord Bishop of Chichester. The incumbent of this chapel seems to have no cure of souls. The chapel itself, with a certain portion of the pews and seats, and the rents, profits, and proceeds, are by the statute vested in a person of the name of Nathaniel Kemp, his heirs and assigns (§ 9). The promoter of the office of the judge in this case is described as a colonel in Her Majesty's army, and as "of Brighton;" but I do not remember that it appeared that he is a member of the congregation of the chapel, or in any way connected with it.

The suit, like the preceding one against Mr. Wix, is in form criminal; and the articles are 44 in number; they underwent some reformation; and now I think the articles of charge are contained in 35 of them. They accuse the defendant of various ritual acts and observances, which are said to contravene the Acts of Uniformity, the Canons, and the general law of the Church. They enter into minute details and specifications,—some of a character extremely trivial, which it is impossible not to regret should ever have occupied the time of this Court; but others are of a graver character.

With respect to the evidence given before me in proof of these articles, I think it enough to say that it has been sufficient, with occasional exceptions, which I have noticed in its proper place, substantially to support them.

The most serious matter is that which relates to the wearing of certain vestments by Mr. Purchas and by other officiating ministers with his consent during the celebration of divine service. The articles which contain these charges are as follows:—

“XXXIV. That you, the said Rev. John Purchas, in the said church or chapel of St. James’s, Brighton, aforesaid, on several occasions (to wit, etc.) used and wore a certain vestment called a cope while performing morning prayer, or parts of the service appointed for morning prayer, and before commencing the Communion Service as officiating minister. That you also, on several occasions (to wit, etc.) while present in the said church or chapel, and responsible as perpetual curate or minister thereof for the due performance of divine service therein, sanctioned and authorized the wearing of a cope by other officiating clergymen while performing morning prayer, or parts of the service appointed for morning prayer, and before the commencement of the Communion Service.

“XXXV. That you, the said Rev. John Purchas, in the said church or chapel of St. James’s, Brighton, aforesaid, on several occasions (to wit, etc.) used and wore a certain vestment called a cope while performing evening prayer, or parts of the service appointed for evening prayer, as officiating minister; and also on several occasions (to wit, etc.) while present in the said church, and being responsible, as perpetual curate or minister thereof, for the due performance of divine service therein, sanctioned and authorized the wearing of a cope by other clergymen while performing evening prayer, or parts of the service appointed for evening prayer, as officiating ministers.

“XXXVI. That you, the said Rev. John Purchas, in the said church or chapel of St. James’s, Brighton, aforesaid, on several occasions (to wit, etc.) used and wore a vestment called a chasuble while officiating in the Communion Service and in the administration of the Holy Communion, and on the said days and times, while present in the said church and yourself officiating, and while responsible, as perpetual curate or minister thereof, for the due performance of divine service therein, sanctioned and authorized the wearing of a chasuble by other clergymen while also officiating in the Communion Service and in the administration of the Holy Communion in the said church or chapel.

“XXXVII. That you, the said Rev. John Purchas, in the said church or chapel of St. James’s, Brighton, aforesaid, on divers occasions (to wit, etc.) caused or suffered certain clergy, forming part of the clergy then officiating or taking part in the ceremonial of divine service at morning prayer, to wear certain other vestments—to wit, albs with patches called ‘apparels,’ and also to wear tippets of a circular form on their shoulders, instead of such surplices or surplices and hoods as are accustomed to be worn, and on Sunday, February the 7th, 1869, and Good Friday, 1869, you, the said Rev. John Purchas, yourself wore such tippet, as aforesaid.

“XXXVIII. That you, the said Rev. John Purchas, in the said church or chapel of St. James’s, Brighton, aforesaid, on divers occasions (to wit, etc.) at evening prayer wore a scarlet stole embroidered with crosses over your surplice, and at morning service, on Tuesday, February the 2nd, 1869, wore a gold stole over a garment called an alb, and have usually within two years last past worn a stole of some colour during divine service in your said church or chapel. That on divers occasions (to wit, etc.) you caused or suffered certain of the clergy officiating or assisting at the Communion Service, in your presence, in the said church or chapel, to wear certain other vestments (to wit, dalmatics, tunics or tunicles, and albs) instead of surplices, and you yourself also, at such times, when officiating in the Communion Services, have worn a certain vestment (to wit, an alb) instead of a surplice, and you yourself also then wore, and caused or suffered to be worn by other officiating clergy, a girdle, amice, and maniple; and you also on divers occasions (to wit, on Sunday, February the 28th, 1869, and on divers other days within two years last past) wore, and caused or suffered certain of the other clergy officiating or assisting at the Communion Service to wear, a stole crosswise, that is to say, crossed over the breast, and you also wore or bore in your hand, and also caused or suffered to be worn or borne in the hand in your presence by other officiating clergy in the said church or chapel on divers occasions a certain cap or covering for the head called a biretta.

"XXXIX. That the said vestments in this last and in the four next preceding articles mentioned were worn, on the several occasions therein mentioned, as a matter of ceremony by the said clergy whilst so officiating, and were, as a matter of ceremony, of divers colours, and some of them (to wit, the said copes, chasubles, and stoles) of gaudy and variegated colours, the particular hue and pattern of the same being varied, as a matter of ceremony, according to the days and times on which the same were so worn."

The rubric (for I shall use this expression for the sake of clearness), which it is admitted contains the law as to the vestments of the bishop, priest, and deacon, is as follows:—

"And here it is to be noted that such ornaments of the church, and of the ministers thereof at all times of their ministration, shall be retained and be in use as were in this Church of England by authority of Parliament, in the second year of the reign of King Edward the Sixth."

As to the construction of this Rubric, according to the general principles of legal interpretation, I must say that, after a repeated and attentive perusal of the language, it does per se appear to me as plain and simple as any which is to be found in any statutory enactment. Lord Coke says that "loquendum est ut vulgus" is to be assumed as the principle which underlies the language of enactments; and I really do not believe that any person of plain common sense and ordinary intelligence who reads this language, uninfluenced by considerations arising from supposed consequences, would hesitate as to the interpretation of it. He would say, with the Privy Council in Liddell v. Westerton, it "obviously" meant that the same ornaments which were used in the first and second years of Edward VI. "may still be used." He would perfectly understand why the Puritan party objected to this Rubric, "Forasmuch as this Rubric seemeth to bring back the cope, albe, etc., and other vestments forbidden by the Common Prayer Book, 5 & 6 Edw. 6th, and so our reasons alledged against ceremonies under our eighteenth general exception, we desire it may be wholly left out;" and why the House of Lords should at the same time suggest as a consideration, "whether the Rubric should not be mended, where all vestments in time of divine service are now commanded, which were used 2 Edward VI."—(Cardwell's Conferences, pp. 274, 314.)

And I am convinced that, if the subject to which the language refers were not one which excites some of the strongest passions and feelings of our nature, but was one of an ordinary indifferent and civil character, no dispute would ever have been raised with respect to the plain and natural meaning of that language. Much ingenuity has been exerted to shew that the obvious meaning is not the true one, and in fact that not only the structure of the sentence must be altered, but other words must be introduced into it before it can receive a legitimate construction. Accordingly it has been argued before me that the rubric in question ought to be read as if the words were as follows:—"That all ornaments which were in use at the time when Charles II.'s Act of Uniformity was passed were henceforth to be retained and used, if they were likewise contained in the First Book of Edward VI." It is not too much to say that, before such interpretation can be legally adopted, the departure from the "obvious" meaning of the language employed must be demonstrated to be required by the nature of the subject to which it is applied ; and I am thus brought to another consideration, namely, as to the difficulty which is, so to speak, imported from without, or, in other words, the supposed consequences which would flow from the obvious rendering of the language. The consequences which would follow upon the use of the particular vestments specified in the First Prayer Book of Edward VI. would, it is alleged, be the restoration of Roman ceremonies in the Church of England, abhorrent to the principles on which her reformation was conducted. In the judgment in Martin v. Mackonochie (1), I stated at considerable length, citing a great number of authorities in support of the position, what I conceived to be the true legal status of the Church of England with respect to her doctrines and her ceremonies ; namely, that as to both, she had regard to the undivided Church, and to primitive and Catholic doctrine and usage, rejecting those novelties and additions which the Curia of Rome had from time to time imposed upon its subjects. To all that I said upon this matter in the case of Martin v. Mackonochie (1) I steadily adhere. I do not find that any contrary position was laid down by their Lordships of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, and it is a satisfaction to me to be able to add to this list of authorities before cited by me, that of the present Bishop of Ely, who, in his recent charge, places the position of our Church upon a similar foundation.

That very learned prelate says :—

"The Reformation here, at least, was intended to be, and in the main became, not a lawless throwing off of lawful authority, not a wanton division from the body of the Church of Christ, but rather a firm and reverent maintenance of the right of each national church to minister its own laws and discipline, and to regulate its own faith and worship, specially when other churches refused reformation, and an external force strove to suppress and smother the cry for it wherever it was raised. We denied, and we still deny,

(1) 37 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) 17 Eccles. Cas. ; s. c. 2 Law Rep. 117 A. & E.

that this was schism ; we did not separate from the churches of France or Spain, or Germany or Italy."—(Charge, p. 59.)

And again :—

"I have tried to turn your thoughts to the earliest ages of the Christian faith ; you well know that the professed principle of the English Reformation was, a recalling of faith and a readjusting of ceremonial to the pattern, as far as possible, of the primitive church."—(Ibid. p. 90.)

It is a mistake in law, as well as in history, to conceive that the position of the Church of England with respect to the Roman Church can be ascertained by citations of the violent vituperations to be found during the heat of religious conflict in the writings of some extreme reformers—many of whom upon examination will be found to be just as hostile to the present doctrines and ceremonies of England as they were at that time to those of Rome. And this remark is especially applicable to foreign reformers whose churches were constructed on a different basis from that of the Church of England, though perhaps it is not impertinent to observe, that the gorgeousness of the vestments and the ritual which the Scandinavian reformers were not afraid to leave to their church, far exceeds any that was contemplated by the First Prayer Book of Edward VI.

The principal vestments complained of in this case afford a strong illustration of the truth of my general remark : they are mentioned in the first Prayer Book as a "vestment" and a "cope." And when it was argued that the cope could not be legally worn by Mr. Purchas, because it was symbolical of Roman error and corruption, it was admitted that it was specially retained by the existing law as proper, if not absolutely necessary, to be worn in cathedral and collegiate churches. The surplice itself, which it is now contended ought to be worn instead of these vestments, was, and I believe is now, considered by the Presbyterians as one of the worst rags of Popery which the Church of England has retained.

And here, perhaps, it is not irrelevant to advert to the language of Hume, in describing the state of parties in England on the eve of the great Rebellion :—

"But the grievances which tended chiefly to inflame the Parliament and nation, especially the latter, were the surplice, the rails placed about the altar, the bows exacted on approaching it, the liturgy, the breach of the Sabbath, embroidered copes, lawn sleeves, the use of the ring in marriage, and of the cross in baptism. On account of these," he adds (I am not now concerned with the justice of his censure), "were the popular leaders content to throw the Government into such violent convulsions; and, to the disgrace of that age and of this island, it must be acknowledged that the disorders in Scotland entirely, and those in England mostly, proceeded from so mean and contemptible an origin."—Hume's History of England, vol. vi. ch. 54, p. 388.)

I dismiss the argument of consequences from my consideration, and proceed to apply the usual canons of interpretation to the rubric before me.

The rubrics in regard of vestments in the first Prayer Book of Edward VI., to which I am referred by the present rubric, were as follows:—

(1.) At the beginning of the Communion Service—

"The Priest that shall execute the holy ministry shall put upon him the vesture appointed for that ministration, that is to say, a white albe, plain, with a vestment or cope. And where there be many Priests or Deacons, there so many shall be ready to help the Priest in the ministration as shall be requisite, and shall have upon them likewise the vestures appointed for their ministry, that is to say, albes, with tunicles."

(2.) At the end of the Communion Service—

"And though there be none to communicate with the Priest, yet these days (after the Liturgy ended) the Priest shall put upon him a plain albe or surplice, with a cope, and say all things at the altar (appointed to be said at the celebration of the Lord's Supper) until after the offertory."

(3.) At the end of the Book of Common Prayer, after the exposition "of ceremonies":—

"In the saying or singing of matins and evensong, baptizing, and burying, the minister, in parish churches or chapels annexed to the same, shall use a surplice; and in all cathedral churches and colleges, the archdeacons, deans, provosts, masters, prebendaries, and fellows, being graduates, may use in the choir, besides their surplices, such hoods as pertaineth to their several degrees which they have taken in any university within this realm; but in all other places every minister shall be at liberty to use any surplice or no. It is also seemly that graduates when they do preach should use such hoods as pertaineth to their several degrees. And whensoever the bishop shall celebrate the Holy Communion in the church, or execute any other public ministration, he shall have upon him, besides his rochette, a surplice or albe, and a cope or vestment; and also his pastoral staff in his hand, or else borne or holden by his chaplain."

These rubrics were abolished by the Second Prayer Book of Edward VI., which substituted the following:—

"The minister at the time of the Communion, and at all other times in his ministration, shall use neither alb, vestment, nor cope; but being archbishop or bishop, he shall have and wear a rochet, and being a priest or deacon shall have and wear a surplice only."

All these rubrics, and the services to which they belong, were repealed in the reign of Queen Mary (1 Mar. Sess. 2. cap. 2).

By the next Act of Uniformity (1 Eliz. c. 2. s. 25), it was enacted—

"That such ornaments of the church, and of the ministers thereof, shall be retained and be in use as was in this Church of England by authority of Parliament in the second year of King Edward VI., until other order shall be taken by the authority of the Queen's Majesty, with the advice of Her Commissioners appointed and authorized under the Great Seal of England for causes ecclesiastical, or of the Metropolitan of this realm."

Annexed to this statute by s. 2, was the Queen's Prayer Book, the rubric to which was as follows:—

"And here it is to be noted that the minister, at the time of the Communion, and at all other times of his ministration, shall use such ornaments in the church as were in use by authority of Parliament in the second year of the reign of King Edward VI., according to the Act of Parliament set in the beginning of this book."

F

It will be observed that the words "retained and," which do occur in the Act, were omitted in this rubric; and they do not appear in the rubric of the Prayer Book of King James, which is identical with that of Elizabeth.

It is admitted that on the passing of this statute, the vestments prescribed by the first Prayer-book came into legal use; but it has been contended that Queen Elizabeth exercised the power given her by the statute, and "took other order."

If any such further order were taken in compliance with the statute, it must be in one of four ways:—

(1.) Either by the Injunctions of 1559, or (2) the Advertisements of 1564–5, or (3) the Canons of 1603–4, or (4) the Canons of 1640. Of these four the Advertisements were principally relied upon as the execution of the further order, though the Canons of 1603–4 were also prayed in aid. Before, however, I consider these two modes of execution, I will say a word as to the Injunctions and the Canons of 1640. The Injunctions, which I think must upon the whole be considered as having been issued by the royal authority alone, and as not having statutory authority, do not contain any express order with regard to the vestments; but the archbishop and certain bishops afterwards drew up "Interpretations and further considerations of these Injunctions for the better direction of the clergy;" among which is to be found the following:—

"Concerning the Book of Service."

"First. That there be used only but one apparel; as the cope in the ministration of the Lord's Supper, and the surplice in all other ministrations."—(1 Cardwell, Doc. Annals, p. 238.)

With respect to the Canons of 1640, they contain no provision as to the subject of vestments. I come therefore to a consideration of the Advertisements. Those which refer to the present question are as follows:—

"Item. In ministration of the Holy Communion in the cathedral and collegiate churches, the principal minister shall use a cope, with gospeller and epistoler agreeably; and at all others prayers to be sayde at the Communion Table, to use no copes but surpliceses."

"Item. That the deane and prebendaries weare a surpsease with a silke hooode in the quyer; and when they preache in the cathedrall or collegiate church to weare their hooode."

"Item. That every minister sayinge any publique prayers, or ministeringe of the Sacramentes, or other rites of the church, shall weare a comely surpsease, with sleeves, to bee provided at the charges of the parish."—(1 Cardwell, Doc. Annals, p. 326.)

The authority usually referred to with respect to these Advertisements is Strype's Life of Parker (Vol. i., chap. 20). Cardwell in his Documentary Annals, and Hallam in his Constitutional History (Vol. i., p. 179, 6th edition), and Collier in his Ecclesiastical History, dealing with this question of the Advertisements, refer as to their principal authority to Strype, in the Annals (Vol. i., p. 419, folio), and in his Life of Parker. And, though by no means always an accurate transcriber, his notes appear to be the fountain from which the history of this matter has been principally derived. Burnet, for instance, relies exclusively upon this authority (Ref., Vol. iii., p. 588). The history of these Advertisements seems to reflect the doubtful state of all church authority at the time when they were issued. The Puritan party were freely condemning and disregarding the rites and ceremonies of the restored church, and by the influence of their patron, the Earl of Leicester, in the Privy Council, were continually thwarting the various orders put forth by the Queen and by the prelates for the purpose of enforcing the uniformity of a decent ritual. The Queen, exasperated by the conduct of the Puritans in 1564, ordered the Archbishop, with the aid of certain other bishops, members of the Ecclesiastical Commission, to draw up certain Articles or Ordinances, the object of which was to secure as great an amount of decent ritual as the circumstances of the time would permit. Archbishop Parker and some of the bishops drew up the articles required; but, says Strype, "because the book wanted the Queen's authority, they thought fit not to term the contents thereof, Articles or Ordinances, by which names they at first went, but by a modest denomination, viz., Advertisements." The Queen, it is probable from conflicting motives, partly from the influence of Leicester, and partly from an apprehension of weakening the rubric which referred to the second year of Edw. VI., refused her official sanction to these Advertisements, and as I think Dr. Cardwell correctly states,—

"Left them to be enforced by the several bishops on the canonical obedience imposed upon the clergy, and the powers conveyed to the Ordinaries by the Act of Uniformity. Their title and preface certainly do not claim for them the highest degree of authority; and although Strype infers from certain evidence which he mentions (Parker, Vol. i., p. 819) that they afterwards received the royal sanction, and recovered their original title of Articles and Ordinances, it seems more probable that they owed their force to the indefinite nature of episcopal jurisdiction, supported, as in this instance was known to be the case, by the personal approval of the Sovereign."—Cardwell's Doc. Ann., Vol. i., p. 322.)

Collier observes that—

"The 'Advertisements' were checked at present by the interposing of the Earl of Leicester, of Knolles, and some other court patrons of the Dissenters; however, afterwards they recovered their first title of Ordinances, and were given in charge at a metropolitical visitation in the year 1576."—(Collier's Eccles. Hist. of Great Britain. Ed. 1840. Vol. vi., p. 399.)

"A loud outcry," says Mr. Lathbury (History of Book of Common Prayer, p. 72, note 9), "was raised by the Puritans against the Advertisements as though some rites had been imposed, whereas they were only intended to enforce such as were already in use, because some of the clergy were lax in their practice. They were allowed by the Queen to be published, but not under Her Majesty's authority; consequently they never possessed the same force as the Injunctions. As, however, they are quoted in the 24th Canon, they are still of some importance. Long after, in this reign, we find the Puritans objecting to the cope as in general use. 'Doe not the people think a more grievous fault is committed if the minister doe celebrate, etc., without a surplesse or a cope, than if the same through his silence should suffer an hundred souls to perish.' (Parte of Register, 45.) The cope is mentioned frequently in the same work (62, 84.)" I cannot find that Archbishop Parker, anxious as he was to enforce these Advertisements, ever said or wrote that they were issued under the authority of the statutes.

I think the fair result of the history derived from printed books on the subject is, that the Queen never gave her official or legal sanction to these "Advertisements," but allowed them to be issued by the prelates with the assurance that they had her personal sanction; and I may add that, to the best of my belief, no legal treatise of authority, and no judgment of a court of justice has ever yet pronounced that these "Advertisements" were issued under the conditions which the statute of Elizabeth required.

It is said, however, that though it has been hitherto supposed that these Advertisements were issued without the observance of the conditions prescribed in the statute, and therefore illegally, that recent discoveries in the State Paper Office have brought to light documents which establish that these conditions were complied with, and that the Advertisements had therefore statutable authority. I am unable to draw so large an inference from the manuscript document, copied from the State Paper Office, which has been submitted to me. It does not seem to me to do more than contain a recital in an informal document, "that the Advertisements were sett out by Her Majesties authoritee," which would not carry the matter further, I think, than the reference to them in the 24th Canon, "according to the Advertisements published Anno 7 Eliz." or, as the Latin version has it, "juxta admonitiones in septimo Elizabethæ promulgatas." It is impossible to conceive that the authority which published these Canons was not perfectly aware both of the fact and law relating to these Advertisements, and the manner in which they are referred to would rather lead to the inference that they were not at that time considered to have per se a statutable authority. But this point does not appear to me to be of much importance, so far as the present case is concerned, for two reasons.—First, there are no prohibitory words, such as were contained in the Rubric to the second Prayer Book of Edward VI., with regard to the ornaments of ministers,—and this omission is worthy of notice,—for the gloss which all ecclesiastical history, contemporaneous and subsequent, would give to the Advertisements is, that they provided that the ornaments of the minister should not fall below a certain point; not that it should exceed that point. The object of the Advertisements was to give notice that the minimum of ornament mentioned in them would be enforced by authority, just as, with regard to the vestment of the Holy Table, the 82nd Canon prescribed that it should be “covered with a carpet of silk or other decent stuff,” and Dr. Lushington held that this excluded other vestments of the altar,—but their Lordships observed in Liddell v. Westerton (2):—

“Next as to the embroidered cloths, it is said that the Canon orders a covering of silk, or of some other proper material, but that it does not mention, and therefore by implication excludes more than one covering. Their Lordships are unable to adopt this construction. An order that a table shall always be covered with a cloth surely does not imply that it shall always be covered with the same cloth, or with a cloth of the same colour or texture. The object of the canon seems to be to secure a cloth of a sufficiently handsome description, not to guard against too much splendour” (Moore, p. 188).

This view that, where it was intended to prohibit as well as to prescribe, express words of prohibition were used, is further confirmed by the language of the Advertisements themselves; for instance, the Advertisement which relates to prayers to be said in the cathedral at the Holy Table, when there is no celebration of the Eucharist;—

(2) Moore's Special Report.

“Item in ministration of the Holy Communion in the cathedrall and collegiate churches, the principall minister shall use a cope with gospeller and epistoler agreeably, and at all other prayers to be sayde at the Communion Table to use no copes but surplices.”—(1 Cardwell, Documentary Annals, p. 326.)

It was more faintly argued that, even if the Advertisements did not execute the power given by statute, the Canons of 1603–4 had this effect. Upon this argument it is to be observed, in the first place, that they contain no prohibitory words; and it is upon this very ground that one of them as I have already said, which gave directions as to the covering of the Holy table, was held by the Privy Council not to be exhaustive, or to exclude the use of other coverings. In the second place, it is, to say the very least, questionable whether the words “by the authority of the Queen’s Majesty,” with the approval of the particular persons mentioned therein, could confer any power upon the succeeding monarch. And, thirdly, the Canons of 1603–4 were made in Convocation with the consent of the Crown and under the statute of Henry VIII. (35 Hen. VIII. c. 19), and were the creatures of the distinct ecclesiastical legislature known to the constitution of this country; and it seems to me impossible to hold, because the Crown ratified what the Convocation did, that a Canon so enacted by Convocation under the statute of Henry VIII. could be an execution of a power under a totally different statute: And it is moreover fatal to the argument, that the Metropolitan was not a member of this Convocation, as appears by the recital in the Crown’s writ prefixed to the Canons, the Bishop of London presiding during the vacancy of the see. Lastly, and this remark applies equally to the Advertisements, unless the words “be retained,” are to have a special construction put upon them—a subject which I will presently consider—a subsequent statute, which expressly revived a prior statute inconsistent with the Advertisements of Queen Elizabeth, would, by necessary implication, repeal them.

I have already observed that the words “be retained” are in the statute, though not in the Prayer Book of Elizabeth. Now is there any reason for supposing that this variance was intentional or significant? or was the variance accidental and insignificant, because the words were treated as an amplification of the words "be in use"? I think the last is the true solution, and certainly the Privy Council in Liddell v. Westerton (2) were of this opinion; they had to construe the words "be retained" as well as the words "be in use"; they drew no distinction between the two expressions; they did not rule that the ornaments of the Church could not be legal unless they satisfied the double condition, of being in use at the time when the rubric of Charles II. became law, and also of their being prescribed by the Prayer Book of Edward VI. On the contrary, referring to the difference of language between the statute and the rubric of Elizabeth, they said:—

"It will be observed that this rubric does not adopt precisely the language of the statute, but expresses the same thing in other words. The statute says, 'such ornaments of the Church and of the ministers thereof shall be retained and be in use,' the rubric, 'that the minister shall use such ornaments in the church.'"—(Moore, p. 159.)

In truth, there would be an insuperable difficulty in satisfying the supposed condition that the ornaments must have been de facto in use; for what ornaments were in use at the time of the Restoration? The churches had been for many years in the possession of the Presbyterians—where they had not been driven out by the Independents; neither Catholic doctrine nor ritual could be found in the churches until after St. Bartholomew's day.

Nor is the difficulty lessened if the condition be interpreted to imply that the ornaments must be de jure in use; that would take us back, passing over the Protectorate of Cromwell, to the last year of Charles I.'s reign, that is, if my observations as to the Advertisements and Canons are correct, to the Elizabethan Act of Uniformity, and would give a meaning to the words "be retained" in Charles II.'s rubric, which it is admitted they had not in Elizabeth's Act of Uniformity.

Bearing in mind the importance of the question, I have endeavoured not to shrink from any part of the arduous duty which has devolved upon me. But I am bound to say that I think this rubric has already received a construction from an authority which is binding upon me. It has been twice considered and elaborately reviewed by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, first in the case of Liddell v. Westerton (2), secondly, in the case of Martin v. Mackonochie (3), and in both instances precisely the same construction was put upon it.

In Liddell v. Westerton (2) the language was as follows:—

"Their Lordships, after much consideration, are satisfied that the construction of this rubric which they suggested at the hearing of the case is its true meaning, and that the word 'ornaments' applies, and in this rubric is confined to those articles the use of which in the services and ministrations of the Church is prescribed by the Prayer Book of Edward the Sixth."

"The term 'ornaments' in ecclesiastical law is not confined, as by modern usage, to articles of decoration or embellishment, but it is used in the larger sense of the word ornamentum, which, according to the interpretation of Forcellini's Dictionary, is used 'pro quocumque apparatu, seu instrumento.' All the several articles used in the performance of the services and rites of the Church are 'ornaments'; vestments, books, cloths, chalices, and patens, are amongst Church ornaments; a long list of them will be found extracted from Lyndwood, in Dr. Phillimore's edition of Burn's Ecclesiastical Law, vol. i., pp. 375–7. In modern times organs and bells are held to fall under this denomination.

"When reference is had to the First Prayer Book of Edward the Sixth, with this explanation of the term 'ornaments,' no difficulty will be found in discovering amongst the articles of which the use is there enjoined, ornaments of the church, as well as ornaments of the ministers. Besides the vestments differing in the different services, the rubric provides for the use of an English Bible, the new Prayer Book, a poor man's box, a chalice, a corporas, a paten, a bell, and some other things."—(Moore, pp. 156-7.)

(3) 38 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Eccles. 1; a. c. Law Rep. 2 P.C. 365.

In Martin v. Mackonochie (3) their Lordships say:—

"The construction of this rubric was very fully considered by this Committee in the case of Westerton v. Liddell, already referred to; and the propositions which their Lordships understand to have been established by the judgment in that case may thus be stated:—

"First, the words 'authority of Parliament' in the rubric refer to and mean the Act of Parliament 2 & 3 Edward VI., c. 1, giving parliamentary effect to the first Prayer Book of Edward VI., and do not refer to or mean Canons or Royal Injunctions, having the authority of Parliament, made at an earlier period.

"Second, the term 'ornaments' in the rubric means those articles, the use of which, in the services and ministrations of the Church, is prescribed by that Prayer Book.

"Third, the term 'ornaments' is confined to these articles.

"Fourth, though there may be articles not expressly mentioned in the rubric, the use of which would not be restrained, they must be articles which are consistent with, and subsidiary to, the services; as an organ for the singing, a credence table from which to take the sacramental bread and wine, cushions, hassocks, &c.

"In these conclusions and in this construction of the rubric, their Lordships entirely concur."

It certainly would seem at first sight that these judgments have made my course plain. I have, in obedience to them, but to inquire whether these "ornaments of the minister" are to be found in the first Prayer Book of Edward VI.; if they are, to pronounce them legal,—if not,—illegal.

Two objections are raised to the application of the plain and clear language of these judgments to the present case, first, it is said that the question of the ornaments of the minister was not directly before the Court in Liddell v. Westerton, but only the ornaments of the church; and this is literally true; but how little can it avail to prevent the application of the same rule to both kinds of ornament. The reasoning covers equally both kinds of ornament. The common rules of grammar and sense require that I should not divide a sentence and apply a predicate, equally applicable to both subjects contained in it, to one only. I am not at liberty, if I were so inclined, to question the judgment as to the ornaments of the Church, nor would it become me to express any doubt as to the logic on which it is built. I am bound to follow where that judgment leads me; and if so, I must on the like premises arrive at the like conclusion.

Secondly, it is objected that the words "shall be retained" modify the application of the judgment in Liddell v. Westerton (2) to the case before me.

But in what way do these words produce this effect? Because they are equally applicable to both classes of ornaments, and must have been fully considered by the Privy Council in both the judgments, and in neither was any attempt made to lay a particular stress upon them, much less to attach to them the important consequences with which it is now sought to make them pregnant.

I must not omit to notice the argument drawn from the Visitation Articles since the statute of Charles II., and the alleged contemporanea expositio afforded by them, and by the fact of the non-usage of the vestments in question. First, as to the Visitation Articles, the same principle applies to them as to the Advertisements and Canons, and indeed as to every attempt to procure a decent ritual since Queen Elizabeth's time; namely, that the authorities were content to order the minimum of what was requisite for this purpose, having, for the reasons which I have explained in my former judgment in Martin v. Mackonochie (1), great difficulty in obtaining even that minimum. And so with regard to the argument as to the legality of a church-rate for objects of ritual, I have nothing to add to the observations which I made in that case as to the insufficiency of this argument. Nor is it necessary to repeat what was said in that case, and the preceding case of Liddell v. Westerton (Moore, p. 172), that no amount of desuetude can repeal the obligations of a statute, much less render its provisions unlawful. But it has been urged that the admitted disuse, till within a very recent period, of these ornaments since the Restoration affords a contemporanea expositio which removes all doubt as to the meaning of the rubric. In the first place, this argument implies that the words of the rubric are such as to raise a doubt, whereas in themselves the words are perfectly plain and clear. In the second place, the disuse is practically accounted for by the circumstances to which I have just adverted in dealing with the argument from the visitation articles. In truth, however, the argument is bad from the vice of proving a great deal too much; the same argument would make the copes in the cathedrals unlawful, which it is admitted they are not; the use of the surplice in preaching unlawful, which is the proper dress; and à converso would establish the legality of the use of the black gown, which has no warrant of law; and would render unlawful the credence table, and this last ornament affords a special illustration of the inapplicability of this argument. At the time of the decision in Liddell v. Westerton, the credence table had been universally disused; I believe there were not half a dozen exceptions throughout England; and this disuse had led to a continued and universal violation of the rubric, in placing the elements upon the holy table before the commencement of the service, which, as their lordships observed, was "certainly not according to the order prescribed." Their lordships, therefore, disregarded this usage, and sanctioned the credence table, because it enabled the provisions of the rubric to be executed. And so the doctrine of the contemporanea expositio was strongly urged against the lawfulness of the cross, either as an ornament or as a decoration; the disuse of it in the Church of England was clearly established, but their lordships thought that the circumstances of the time fully accounted for this, and in spite of their proved disuse in the churches of this country, said, "That crosses, as distinguished from crucifixes, have been in use, as ornaments of churches, from the earliest periods of Christianity; that when used as mere emblems of the Christian faith, and not as objects of superstitious reverence, they may still lawfully be erected as architectural decorations of churches."—(Moore, p. 175.)

Nor upon this head is it to be omitted that, though the effect of this rubric in bringing back the vestments of Edward VI. had been pointed out by the Puritans in Charles I.'s time, as I have stated, no denial of this consequence was ever given by the authorities on behalf of the church; and that subsequently to the date of this rubric no judicial authority, no legal commentator, has questioned the effect of this rubric in legalizing the vestments of the second year of Edward VI.

Burn, in the third volume of his Ecclesiastical Law, after reciting the rubric in the present Prayer Book, proceeds as follows:—

"Therefore it is necessary to recur in this matter to the Common Prayer Book established by Act of Parliament in the second year of King Edward VI., in which there is this rubric:—'In the saying or singing of matens and evensonge, baptyzmg and burying, the minister in paryshe churches, and chapels annexed to the same, shall use a surples. And in all cathedrall churches and colledges the archdeacons, deanes, provestes, maisters, prebendaryes, and fellowes, beinge graduates, may use in the quiere, beside theyr surplesses, such hoodes as pertaineth to their severall degrees whiche they have taken in any universitie within this realme. But in all other places every minister shall be at libertie to use any surples or no. It is also seemly that graduates, when they dooe preache, should use suche hoodes as pertayneth to theyr severall degrees.'

"So that in marrying, churching of women, and other offices not here specified, and even in the administration of the Holy Communion, it seemeth that a surplice is not necessary. And the reason why it is not enjoined for the Holy Communion in particular is because other vestments are appointed for that ministration, which are as followeth:—'Upon the day, and at the time appointed for the ministracion of the Holy Communion, the priest that shall execute the holly ministry shall put upon hym the vesture appointed for that ministracion, that is to say, a white albe plain, with a vestment or cope. And where there be many priestes or deacons, there so many shall be ready to helpe the priest in the ministracion as shall be requisite, and shall have upon them likewise the vestures appointed for their ministry, that is to say, albes, with tunacles.'"

"NOTE.—The albe differs from the surplice in being close-sleeved.

"'And whensoever the byshop shall celebrate the Holye Communion in the church, or execute any other publique ministracion, he shall have upon him, besyde his rochette, a surples or albe, and a cope or vestment, and also hys pastoral staffe in hys hand, or elles borne or holden by hys chaplyne'" (p. 437).

Mr. Stephens, in his elaborate edition of the Book of Common Prayer, published for the Ecclesiastical History Society, after citing the foregoing rubrics, says:—

"All the rubrics just quoted were omitted in 1552, and never appeared again. The only rubric respecting ornaments in the second Common Prayer Book of Edward VI., confirmed likewise by Act of Parliament, was directed against the use of the cope and pastoral staff. These ornaments, however, were again introduced by the rubric of 1559, which brought us back not to the second book of Edward VI., but to the first. And this rubric of 1559, slightly altered, was a second time authorized at the last review.

"Copes were worn at Durham and Westminster till the middle of the last century, and copes are worn now by the bishops at the coronations; indeed all the directions contained in the first book of Edward VI., as to the ornaments of the church and of the ministers thereof at all times of their ministracion, are by Stat. 14 Car. 2. c. 4, the statute law of the Anglican Church."—(Vol. i., p. 367.)

In October, 1864, a Commission under the Clergy Discipline Act was issued by the late Bishop of Exeter, to inquire into certain charges against the curate of Helston, the principal one being the use of the surplice in preaching. The Bishop, in his judgment upon this point, after stating the several statutes and rubrics, says:—

"From this statement it will be seen that the surplice may be objected to with some reason; but then it must be because the law requires 'a white albe plain, with a vestment or cope.' Why have these been disused? Because the parishioners—that is the churchwardens, who represent the parishioners—have neglected their duty to provide them; for such is the duty of the parishioners by the plain and express canon law of England (Gibson, 200). True it would be a very costly duty, and for that reason, most probably, churchwardens have neglected it, and archdeacons have connived at the neglect. I have no wish that it should be otherwise. But, be this as it may, if the churchwardens of Helston shall perform this duty, at the charge of the parish, providing an albe, a vestment, and a cope, as they might in strictness be required to do (Gibson, 201), I shall enjoin the minister, be he who he may, to use them. But until these ornaments are provided by the parishioners, it is the duty of the minister to use the garment actually provided by them for him, which is the surplice."

This judgment will be found reported in Mr. Stephen's Book of Common Prayer (Vol. i., p. 377), and in his Ecclesiastical Statutes (Vol. ii., p. 2046).

I do not know how I can better close my observations upon this subject than by reciting the language of the Privy Council in Liddell v. Westerton (Moore, p. 159):—

"The rubric to the Prayer Book of January 1st, 1604, adopts the language of the rubric of Elizabeth. The rubric to the present Prayer Book adopts the language of the statute of Elizabeth; but they all obviously mean the same thing, that the same dressess and the same utensils or articles which were used under the first Prayer Book of Edward VI. may still be used."

I am of opinion that the plain words of the statute, according to the ordinary principles of interpretation, and the construction which they have received in the two judgments of the Privy Council, oblige me to pronounce that the ornaments of the minister mentioned in the first Prayer Book of Edward VI. are those to which the present rubric referred; and

I cannot therefore pass any ecclesiastical sentence against Mr. Purchas for wearing them.

The next question is, What are these ornaments?

They are, for ministers below the order of bishops, and when officiating at the Communion Service, cope, vestment or chasuble, surplice, alb, and tunicle; in all other services the surplice only, except that in cathedral churches and colleges the academical hood may be also worn. The other vestments worn by Mr Purchas, and the cope at any other time but the Communion Service, are unlawful, and may not be worn. It is unlawful, therefore, for Mr. Purchas to wear or authorize to be worn, a cope at morning or at evening prayer; albs with patches called apparels, tippets of a circular form, stoles of any kind whatsoever, whether black, white, or coloured, and worn in any manner; dalmatics and maniples, which latter ornament, it appears from the evidence, was worn on one occasion by one of the officiating clergymen, though it does not appear that Mr. Purchas wore one himself. As to the girdle and the amice it is not proved that Mr. Purchas wore them or suffered them to be worn.

With respect to the covering or cap called a "biretta," which Mr. Purchas was proved to have carried in his hand, and a clergyman to have worn in a procession, it appears to me as innocent an ornament as a hat or a wig, or as a velvet cap, which latter is not uncommonly worn by bishops, clergy, and laity as a protection to the head when needed. The 74th Canon, which is still in force, and which enjoins decency of apparel to ministers when out of their houses, provides that "no ecclesiasticall persons shall weare any coife or wrought night-caps, but onely plaine night-caps of blacke silke, sattin, or velvet." And the 18th Canon provides that "no man shall cover his head in the church or chappell in the time of divine service, except he have some infirmity, in which case let him wear a night-cap or coife," which word "night-cap" is not to be understood as a covering worn in bed, but as a kind of close-fitting cap, as is shown by the words in the Latin Canons, "pileolo aut ricâ."

NEW SERIES, 39.—ECCLES.

And I do not pronounce this particular kind of black cap, called a biretta, so worn, to be unlawful.

With respect to the colour of the vestments, which I have pronounced to be lawful, the rubric is silent, except in the case of the alb and surplice; and the expert in such matters, who was produced as an authority by the promoter, deposed that the vestments which were used in Mr. Purchas's church were in every respect such as were in use in the Church in the second year of Edward VI.

There are various charges relating to particular kinds of processions organized by Mr. Purchas in his church, which I will now deal with; they are to be found in the following articles:—

"IV. That you, the said Rev. John Purchas, on the several occasions in this article hereinafter mentioned, in the said church or chapel of St. James's, Brighton (to wit, &c.), immediately before, but at the hour appointed for the commencement of the prayers appointed to be read at morning and evening service respectively, and without any break or interval, and as connected with and being the beginning of and a part of the rites and ceremonies of public worship on the said several occasions, in the presence of the congregation then assembled in the said church or chapel of St. James's, Brighton, for the purpose of hearing divine service, formed, or caused to be formed, a procession composed of a thurifer carrying an incense-vessel containing incense, swinging the same; a crucifer bearing a crucifix, or large cross, with a figure of the Saviour thereon; two acolytes, or boys dressed in red and white, with red skullcaps on their heads, and bearing lighted candles; several deacons, or other persons, bearing one or more silk banners, with a cross or other device embroidered on each of such banners; divers choristers dressed in red and white; a person, called a ceremoniarus, in cassock and cotta, with blue tippet; two persons, called rulers of the choir, in copes; you, the said Rev. John Purchas, and the other officiating minister of the day, in copes; that the procession so formed proceeded round the said church or chapel of St. James's, singing a certain hymn, being No. 100 of the hymns contained in a book called 'Words of the Hymnal noted,' or some other hymn from the same book; and that immediately on the return of each of such processions on each of the said several occasions to the choir, the prayers for the day were commenced; and that on a certain other occasion, to wit, on Sunday, February the 28th, 1869, immediately after the benediction at evening service, and without any break or interval, and as connected with and forming the conclusion of and part of the rites and ceremonies of public worship, formed, or caused to be formed, a like procession to the one immediately herein-before mentioned, and proceeded therewith round the said church, singing as aforesaid in the presence of the congregation assembled."

G

"XIV. That you then,"—that is, after doing certain acts, which fall under another category, and which I will consider presently—"formed or caused to be formed a procession consisting of a thurifer with his incense vessel containing incense, the crucifer with a large crucifix, acolytes or boys with lighted candles, the person called ceremoniarus, an assistant minister, and you, the Rev. John Purchas, in a cope, followed by several members of the congregation each with a lighted candle; that the procession so formed proceeded round the interior of the said church or chapel singing; that thereupon afterwards you, the said Rev. John Purchas, took off your cope, and wearing a white alb with gold stole and chasuble, proceeded to the Communion Table and, after being yourself censured, commenced the Communion Service, during the reading of which the congregation extinguished their candles. That after the collect and epistle had been read the said candles were, during the reading of the Gospel, again lighted and were then again extinguished, each of the acts in this article hereinbefore set forth, being of the nature of and intended by you as and constituting a religious ceremony."

"XXVI. That you, the said Rev. John Purchas, in the said church or chapel of St. James's, Brighton, aforesaid, on the Sunday next before Easter, March the 21st, 1869, at morning service, and during or immediately after the conclusion of morning prayer, and before the commencement of the Communion Service, sprinkled or caused to be sprinkled with so-called holy water, and blessed or consecrated, or caused to be blessed or consecrated, and censured, or caused to be censured, divers palm branches then lying on a table placed near to the Communion Table, and that after the said morning prayer was concluded you caused the said palm branches to be distributed to yourself and to divers other clerks in Holy Orders, to persons of the choir and members of the congregation then and there present in the said church or chapel; and that you then caused to be formed a procession in the said church or chapel, with a crucifix borne before it, and consisting of the thurifer, choristers, priests, and others, which said procession then proceeded round the interior of the said church or chapel, chaunting, and elevating the said palm branches, and accompanied with lighted candles; and that on the return of the procession the Communion Service was immediately commenced and proceeded with, the whole taking place in the presence of the congregation then assembled to hear Divine Service as a part of Divine Service, and as a ceremony connected therewith, without break or intermission."

It appears to me, from the evidence, that these particular processions have been so conducted as to constitute a further rite or ceremony in connection with the morning and evening service, and in addition to those prescribed by the rubrics for those services. I must, therefore, placing them under this category, pronounce them illegal.

The following articles, which I have grouped together, contain charges against Mr. Purchas for using, during the time of, or so immediately connected with, the prescribed service as to be practically undistinguishable from it, rites or ceremonies other than and additional to those prescribed in the Book of Common Prayer:—

"V. That on a certain occasion (to wit, &c.) you, the said Rev. John Purchas, in the said church or chapel of St. James's, Brighton, aforesaid, caused a group of acolytes, or attendants, to stand or kneel round you, and a person called the crucifer to stand by the side of you, bearing a crucifix or gilt cross, with the figure of the Saviour thereon, as a matter of ceremony during the reading by you, the said Rev. John Purchas, of the Gospel in the Communion Service; that on certain other occasions (to wit, &c.), the 'Te Deum' being on each of such occasions sung as a part of evening service immediately after the evening prayers, in the said church or chapel of St. James's, Brighton, aforesaid, the congregation remaining in the said church or chapel during the singing thereof, you, the said Rev. John Purchas, during the singing thereof, caused the said crucifer, with his said crucifix, and the bearers of banners, to stand holding the same as a matter of ceremony near to you, the said Rev. John Purchas, and in front of the Holy Table."

"XIII. That you, the said Rev. John Purchas, did, in the said church or chapel of St. James's, Brighton, aforesaid, on Ash Wednesday, February the 10th, 1869, at morning service, immediately after the conclusion of the Communion, and before commencing the Communion Service (you being then the officiating minister), proceed, as a matter of ceremony in connection with the Divine Service of the day, to take from the Holy Table a certain vessel, previously placed thereon, filled with a black powder being or resembling ashes; and did then bless or consecrate the same, and did then rub a portion of such powder on the foreheads of certain persons, members of the congregation, who then knelt before you for that purpose (to wit, a certain other clergyman then present, the person called the ceremoniarus, a person called a ruler of the choir, and certain acolytes, or boys); and did further then publicly invite any other members of the congregation to come forward for the like purpose; after which, none others having come forward, the Communion Service was commenced and proceeded with."

"XIV. That you, the said Rev. John Purchas, on the day of the Purification of the Virgin Mary, February the 2nd, 1869, in the said church or chapel of St. James's, Brighton, aforesaid, in the morning, and when no artificial light was necessary, during the performance of Divine Service, to wit, while the Litany was being read, censed or caused to be censed, and afterward sprinkled or caused to be sprinkled with holy water, or water previously blessed or consecrated, a number of candles then placed and being on a small table close to the Communion Table, and that you then, after the Litany was finished and before the commencement of the Communion Service, lighted the said candles, and distributed them to divers members of the congregation who then, by your direction or sanction, held up the same so lighted."

The charges contained in the latter part of this article I have already considered.

"XXI. That you, the said Rev. John Purchas, in the said church or chapel of St. James's, Brighton, aforesaid, on divers occasions (to wit, &c.), caused a small bell to be rung divers times during the Prayer of Consecration in the service of the Holy Communion, such ringing being simultaneous and connected with the consecration of the elements, and with the elevation of them, as in the preceding articles mentioned."

"XXII. That you, the said Rev. John Purchas, on several occasions, in the said church or chapel of St. James's, Brighton, aforesaid (to wit, &c.), caused to be said or sung, before the reception of the elements and immediately after the Prayer of Consecration in the Communion Service, the words or hymn or prayer commonly known as 'The Agnus,' that is to say:—'O Lamb of God that takest away the sins of the world, have mercy on us;' which said words are appointed to be said only as a part of the said hymn or prayer at the conclusion of the said service, namely, after the reception of the elements by the communicants is completely ended, and after the Lord's Prayer and the other prayer then appointed and the Gloria have been said, and immediately before the final blessing."

"XXVIII. That you, the said Rev. John Purchas, in the said church or chapel of St. James's, Brighton, aforesaid, on Sunday, March the 14th, 1869, at evening service, and immediately on the conclusion of your sermon, gave notice that on the next day there would be 'a mortuary celebration for the repose of a sister at eleven o'clock;' and that on Monday morning, March the 15th, 1869, while performing Divine Service in the said church or chapel, namely, while reading the Communion Service, immediately after the collect for the Queen, and before the Epistle, you interpolated and said the following words, that is to say:—'O God! whose property is ever to have mercy and to forgive, be favourable unto the soul of this Thy servant' (thereby meaning the soul of the deceased person for whose repose the said mortuary celebration was made), 'and blot out all her iniquities, that she may be loosed from the chains of death, and be found meet to pass unto the enjoyment of life and felicity through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.' After which, 1 Thess. chap. iv., verse 13 to verse 18, was read as the Epistle, and the rest of the service was proceeded with, John chap. vi., verse 37 to verse 40, being read as the Gospel."

"XXXIII. That you, the said Rev. John Purchas, in the said church or chapel of St. James's, Brighton, aforesaid, on Whit Sunday evening, May the 16th, 1869, at the usual hour for, and immediately before the commencement of evening prayer, and in the presence of the congregation then assembled to hear Divine Service, made, received, or admitted a new acolyte or choir boy, by causing him then to kneel on one of the steps before the Holy Table, and reading some words or sentences out of a book, and making the sign of the cross over him, and putting into his hands a candlestick with candle, and afterwards, in like manner, putting into his hands decanters or glass bottles of wine and of water, those actions collectively being intended as and constituting a religious rite or ceremony."

I think these articles are substantially proved; and that in these circumstances the additional rites or ceremonies must be considered as illegal, on the principle of the decision in Martin v. Mackonochie (3); and I accordingly admonish Mr. Purchas to abstain from the use or sanction of the particular rites and ceremonies so charged for the future.

I now approach the consideration of a group of articles which have been proved, and which appear to me to be expressly governed by the judgments in Martin v. Mackonochie (3) and Flamank v. Simpson (4). They are as follows:—

"VIII. That you, the said Rev. John Purchas, in the said church or chapel of St. James's, Brighton, aforesaid, did, on the said 8th day of November, 1868, the 17th day of January, 1869, and the 16th day of May, 1869, cense or permit to be censed, during Divine Service, the said crucifix, so placed and standing on the said Holy Table or narrow ledge as in the 6th preceding article mentioned."

"X. That you, the said Rev. John Purchas, in the said church or chapel of St. James's, Brighton, aforesaid, on divers occasions (to wit, &c.) used lighted candles on the Holy Table or Communion Table (or on a ledge immediately over the said table, and appearing and intended to appear part thereof), during the celebration of the Holy Communion, as a matter of ceremony, and at times when such lighted candles were not wanted for the purpose of giving light, and permitted and sanctioned such use of lighted candles."

"XII. That you, the said Rev. John Purchas, in the said church or chapel of St. James's, Brighton, aforesaid (on the day, &c.) used incense for censuring persons and things, and for other purposes, as a matter of ceremony, in and during the celebration of the Holy Communion, and also in and during other parts of Divine Service, and there permitted and sanctioned such use of incense."

"XV. That you, the said Rev. John Purchas, in the said church or chapel of St. James's, Brighton, aforesaid, in and during the Communion Service, on divers occasions (to wit, &c.), during the celebration of the Holy Communion, and as part of the ceremonies thereof, mixed water with the sacramental wine used in the administration of the Holy Communion, and permitted and sanctioned such mixing and the administration to the communicants of the wine and water so mixed."

"XVII. That you, the said Rev. John Purchas, in the said church or chapel of St. James's, Brighton, aforesaid, on divers occasions (to wit, &c.), during the prayer of consecration in the Order of the Administration of the Holy Communion, elevated the paten or one of the wafers on the Communion Table for the Holy Communion above your head, and permitted and sanctioned such elevation by the other officiating ministers, and took into your hands the cup and elevated it above your head during the prayer of consecration aforesaid, and permitted and sanctioned the cup to be so taken and elevated, as aforesaid, by the other officiating ministers, and that you also, during such prayer of consecration, knelt or prostrated yourself, and sanctioned such kneeling or prostrating by the other officiating ministers."

(4) 36 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Eccles. 4 (P.C.) 28; s.c. Law Rep. 1 P.C. 463.

"XXIII. That you, the said Rev. John Purchas, in the said church or chapel of St. James's, Brighton, aforesaid, on Whit Sunday morning, May the 16th, 1869, during the Communion Service, as officiating minister, after receiving the alms contributed at the offertory, elevated the same, and then, placing the same for a moment on the Holy Table, did forthwith remove the same and hand them to an acolyte or attendant, who took them away and placed them on the Credence Table, instead of suffering the same to remain on the Holy Table."

The next article seems to me to contain charges undistinguishable in principle from the practices which are condemned in those judgments, and in that which I have just delivered in the case of Mr. Wix. It was duly proved, and is as follows:—

"XI. That you, the said Rev. John Purchas, on Christmas Day, 1868, on the day of the Purification of the Virgin Mary, February the 2nd, 1869, and on Easter Sunday, 1869, used lighted candles standing on and about and before the Communion Table during the performance of other parts of the morning service than the Communion Service, as a matter of ceremony, and when they were not wanted for the purpose of giving light. That you also during the whole of Divine Service on Easter Sunday, 1869, kept a very large lighted candle, called a paschal taper, placed and standing towards the south side of the Communion Table, as a matter of ceremony, and when it was not wanted for the purpose of giving light. That you also, at various times, during the performance of Divine Service (to wit, &c.), caused acolytes, or attendants, as a matter of ceremony, to bear about, move, set down, and lift up various lighted candles when the same were not needed to give light."

I admonish Mr. Purchas to abstain for the future from doing or sanctioning the acts so charged in these seven articles.

I have now to consider the charge of administering the Holy Eucharist wine with which a little water has been mingled. The article containing this charge is as follows:—

"XVI. That you, the said Rev. John Purchas, in the said church or chapel of St. James's, Brighton, aforesaid, on Whit Sunday, May the 16th, 1869, administered wine mixed with water instead of wine to the communicants at the Lord's Supper."

I had occasion to consider this subject in my judgment in Martin v. Mackonochie (1), and I then observed:—"It appears that from a very early period, the precise date is uncertain, a custom prevailed amongst Christians of adding a very small quantity of water to the wine which forms one element of the Blessed Sacrament. This custom, whether it arose from a belief that the wine used by the Jews at the Passover, and by our Lord at the Last Supper, was mingled with water, or from some reason symbolical of his passion, is wholly unconnected with any papal superstition, or any doctrine which the Church of England has rejected. It has the warrant of primitive antiquity and of the undivided church in its favour."

To the authorities there cited I would add this from Dr. Smith's Dictionary of the Bible, title "Wine," vol. iii., p. 1778. "The wine was mixed with warm water on these occasions," referring to the Passover, "as implied in the notice of the warming kettle." (Pesach. 7. s. 13.) "Hence in the early Christian Church it was usual to mix the sacramental wine with water, a custom as old, at all events, as Justin Martyr's time (Apol. i. 65)." I also referred to the rubric in the first Prayer Book, and the omission of the order "putting thereto a little pure and clear water" in the latter Prayer Books; and I decided that "the ceremony or manual act of mixing the water with the wine during the celebration of the Eucharist" was illegal.

At the same time I added, "I do not say that it is illegal to administer to the communicants wine in which a little water has been previously mixed." At that time I had in my mind, among other authorities, that of Bishop Andrewes, who appears to have used the mixed chalice in the Chapel Royal all the time he was Dean of it, and who in the form that he drew up for the consecration of a church expressly directed it to be used (Wheatley, Common Prayer, p. 281); and that of Bishop Cosin, who, speaking of the practice under the Elizabethan Prayer Books, says, "Our Church forbids it not, for aught I know, and they that think fit may use it, as some most eminent among us do at this day." (Notes on the Book of Common Prayer, 1st series, p. 154, Works, vol. v.)

The subject is treated of with much learning by Mr. Palmer in his Origines Liturgicæ; he says:—"In the Church of England the wine of the Eucharist was always, no doubt, mixed with water. In the canons of the Anglo-Saxon Church, published in the time of King Edgar, it is enjoined that 'no priest shall celebrate the Liturgy unless he have all things which pertain to the Holy Eucharist, that is, a pure oblation, pure wine, and pure water.' In after ages we find no canons made to enforce the use of water, for it was an established custom. Certainly none can be more canonical, and more conformable to the practice of the primitive church. In the English church it has never been forbidden or prohibited, for the rubric which enjoins the priest to place bread and wine on the table, does not prohibit him from mingling water with that wine."—(Vol. ii., p. 76.)

In this opinion, provided that the mingling be not made at the time of the celebration so as to constitute a new rite or ceremony, I agree. I therefore pronounce that Mr. Purchas has not been guilty of a canonical offence in this matter.

The twentieth article charges as follows:—

"XX. That you, the said Rev. John Purchas, in the said church or chapel of St. James's, Brighton, aforesaid, on divers occasions (to wit, &c.), in the administration of the Holy Communion, used wafer bread (being bread made in the special shape and fashion of circular wafers) instead of bread such as is usual to be eaten, and did administer the same to the communicants, that is to say, one such wafer to each of them."

My first observation upon this article is, that it is not proved as laid; the witness Verrall deposed that the bread was in the form of a thin wafer; that he saw it administered to the communicants, but was not sufficiently close to know that what was administered was not a portion of each wafer. The present rubric directs that the priest is to break the bread during the course of the prayer of consecration. There is no evidence before me that the wafer was not broken; and the only question I have to consider is, whether wafer bread, that is, bread in the shape of a wafer, may lawfully be administered.

The rubric which governs this question is as follows:—"And to take away all occasion of dissension and superstition, which any person hath or might have concerning the bread and wine, it shall suffice that the bread be such as is usual to be eaten; but the best and purest wheat bread that may conveniently be gotten." This rubric varies from that of the Second Prayer Book of Edward VI., only by the substitution of the words, "all occasion of dissension and superstition" for "the superstition."

Previously to these rubrics unleavened bread was used in our Church, and this custom was continued by the First Prayer Book of Edward VI., the rubric to which was as follows:—

"For avoiding of all matters and occasion of dissension, it is meet that the bread prepared for the Communion be made, through all this realm, after one sort and fashion, that is to say, unleavened and round, as it was afore, but without all manner of print, and something more larger and thicker than it was, so that it may be amply divided in divers pieces; and every one shall be divided in two pieces at the least, or more, by the discretion of the minister, and so distributed. And men must not think less to be received in part than in the whole, but in each of them the whole body of Our Saviour Jesus Christ."

It appears, therefore, that while the first rubric prescribed a uniformity of size and material, the later and the present rubric are contented with the order that the purest wheaten flour shall suffice, and the bread may be leavened according to the use of the Eastern, or unleavened according to the use of the Western, Church. The Elizabethan rubric, which is practically the same as the present, received this contemporanea expositio from that Queen's Injunctions (A.D. 1559), which were as follows: Item—

"Where also it was in the time of King Edward the Sixth used to have the Sacramental bread of common fine bread, it is ordered for the more reverence to be given to the holy mysteries, being the Sacraments of the body and blood of our Saviour Jesus Christ, that the same Sacramental bread be made and formed plain, without any figure thereupon, of the same finenesse and fashion round, though somewhat bigger in compasse and thicknesse, as the usuall bread and wafer" (variously printed water), "heretofore named singing-cakes, which served for the use of the private masse."—(Annotated Book of Common Prayer, p. 198.)

And in 1570 Archbishop Parker wrote as follows to Sir W. Cecil:—

"January 8, 1570.

"Sir,—Where upon the return of my Lord of London from the court, we had communication of the communion bread, and he seeming to signify to me that your honour did not know of any rule passed by law in the Communion Book that it may be such bread as is usually eaten at the table with other meats, etc.; I thought it good to put you in remembrance, and to move your consideration in the same. For it is a matter of much contention in the realm; where most part of Protestants think it most meet to be in wafer-bread, as the injunction prescribeth; divers others, I cannot tell of what spirit, would have the loaf-bread, &c. And hereupon, one time at a sessions would one Master Fogg have indicted a priest for using wafer-bread, and me indirectly for charging the wafer-bread by injunction; where the judges were Mr. Southcoots and Mr. Gerrard, who were greatly astonished upon the exhibiting of the book. And I being then in the country, they counselled with me, and I made reasons to have the injunction prevail.

"First, I said, as her Highness talked with me once or twice in that point, and signified that there was one proviso in the Act of the Uniformity of Common Prayer, that by law is granted unto her, that if there be any contempt or irreverence used in the ceremonies or rites of the Church, by the misusing of the orders appointed in the book, the Queen's Majesty may, by the advice of her commissioners, or metropolitan, ordain and publish such further ceremonies, or rites, as may be most for the reverence of Christ's holy mysteries and Sacraments, and but for which law her Highness would not have agreed to divers orders of the book; and by virtue of which law she published further order in her injunctions both for the Communion-bread, and for the placing of the Tables within the quire. They that like not the injunctions force much the statute in the book. I tell them that they do evil to make odious comparison betwixt statute and injunction, and yet I say and hold, that the injunction hath authority by proviso of the statute. And whereas it is said in the rule, that 'to take away the superstition which any person hath, or might have, in the bread and wine, it shall suffice that the bread be such as is usually to be eaten at the table with other meats, &c.' 'It shall suffice,' I expound, where either there wanteth such fine usual bread, or superstition be feared in the wafer-bread, they may have the Communion in fine usual bread; which is rather a toleration in these two necessities, than is in plain ordering, as is in the injunction.

"This I say to shew you the ground which hath moved me and others to have it in the wafer-bread; a matter not greatly material, but only obeying the Queen's Highness, and for that the most part of her subjects dialiketh the common bread for the Sacrament. And therefore, as her Highness and you shall determine, I can soon alter my order, although now quietly received in my diocese, and I think would breed some variance to alter it. I hear also that in the court you be come to the usual bread. Sir, the great disquiet babbling that the realm is in in this matter maketh me thus long to babble, and would be loth that now your saying or judgment should be so taken as ye saw a law that should prejudice the injunction."—(Correspondence of Archbishop Parker, No. 283, p. 375.)

This is an authority which must command great respect in this Court, and from which I see no reason to dissent, more especially as it proceeds upon a principle of construction similar to that to which I have already adverted as having been adopted in Westerton v. Liddell (2), with respect to the covering of the Holy Table. I should add that, according to Bishop Cosin, this "liberty of using wafer-bread" was continued in divers churches of the kingdom—and in Westminster for one—till the 17th of King Charles, i.e. A.D. 1643.—(Works, vol. v., p. 481.) I am of opinion that no offence against ecclesiastical law has been proved to have been committed by Mr. Purchas in this matter.

The 6th and 7th Articles contain the following charges:—

"VI.—That you, the said Rev. John Purchas, on the several occasions hereinafter in this article mentioned, in the said church or chapel of St. James's, Brighton, aforesaid (to wit, on Sunday, November the 1st, 1868; Sunday, November the 8th, 1868; Sunday, January the 31st, 1869), placed or caused to be placed on the Holy Table, or on a narrow ledge resting thereon or connected therewith, or fixed immediately above the same, so as to appear to the congregation to be in contact or connection with the Holy Table, a large metal crucifix with a figure of the Saviour thereon (the same being intended for a ceremonial or religious purpose, and not being a part of the architectural decorations of the church, but being placed on such ledge with the object and intention of being made to appear a part of the furniture of the Holy Table); and that you, on the said several occasions, allowed the same so placed to remain there during the performance of Divine Service, and during the celebration of the Holy Communion. That you, the said Rev. John Purchas, also, during Lent (to wit, on Sunday, February the 28th, 1869; on Sunday, March the 14th, 1869; and on Good Friday, March the 26th, 1869), having covered, or caused to be covered, the said crucifix so placed on the Holy Table or narrow ledge as aforesaid, with a white veil striped with a red cross, allowed the same to remain on the said Holy Table or narrow ledge so covered during the performance of Divine Service. That you also afterwards (to wit, on Easter Sunday, March the 28th, 1869), having previously removed, or caused to be removed, such veil, kept the said crucifix during Divine Service so uncovered; the circumstance of the said crucifix being so kept covered and uncovered, being intended as and constituting on each of the said occasions a ceremonial and symbolical observance during and connected with such Divine Service."

"VII. That you, the said Rev. John Purchas, in the said church or chapel of St. James's, Brighton, aforesaid, on the following occasions (to wit, on Sunday, November the 8th, 1868; January the 17th, 1869; and Whit Sunday, May the 16th, 1869), did immediately before and during the performance of Divine Service bow and do reverence to the said crucifix."

I think I am bound to conclude from the evidence before me, unimpeached as it is by any other testimony, and in the absence of any explanation, that the crucifix has been introduced into or connected with the performance of the services prescribed by the Prayer Book, so as to constitute an additional rite or ceremony. And I must admonish Mr. Purchas to abstain from the practice complained of in these Articles.

The next charge in order is the IXth. "That you, the said Rev. John Purchas, in the said church or chapel of St. James's, Brighton, aforesaid, on divers occasions (to wit, &c.), caused vases of flowers to be placed on the Holy Table, or on a narrow ledge resting thereon, or fixed immediately above the same, so as to appear, and with the object and intention of being made to appear, to the congregation to be in contact or connection with the Holy Table, and allowed them to remain so placed on each of the said occasions during the performance of Divine Service. That you also, during Lent, 1869, caused the said vases of flowers to be removed and taken away; and again afterwards, more especially on Easter Sunday, March the 28th, 1869, and on Whit Sunday, May the 16th, 1869, replaced, or caused to be replaced, the said vases with the same or other flowers; and that you also profusely decorated, or caused to be profusely decorated, the said Holy Table with flowers, the circumstance of such vases and flowers being so placed and kept on the Holy Table, or removed therefrom, being intended by you as and constituting a ceremonial and symbolical observance."

With regard to this charge, there is no evidence that the flowers were used as an additional rite or ceremony, or as an ornament in the sense affixed to that word in the judgment of the Privy Council in Liddell v. Westerton (2). They appear to me an innocent and not unseemly decoration, and one not ministering or subsidiary to any usage or doctrine which the Church has rejected or abrogated, and to be in the same category with the branches of holly at Christmas, and the willow blossoms on Palm Sunday, with which our churches have very generally been adorned. I have considered the Bishop of Exeter's judgment on this point to which I was referred, of which I think it is enough to say that it was given nearly ten years before the decision in Liddell v. Westerton (2) had settled the law, and drawn the distinction between ornaments (ornamenta) and decorations.

And here I must draw attention to the language of the Privy Council in Martin v. Mackonochie (3):—

"There is a clear and obvious distinction between the presence in the Church of things inert and unused, and the active use of the same things as a part of the administration of a sacrament or of a ceremony. Incense, water, a banner, a torch, a candle and candlestick may be parts of the furniture or ornaments of a church; but the censuring of persons and things, or, as was said by the Dean of Arches, the bringing in incense at the beginning or during the celebration, and removing it at the close of the celebration of the Eucharist; the symbolical use of water in Baptism, or its ceremonial mixing with the sacramental wine; the waving or carrying the banner; the lighting, cremation, and symbolical use of the torch or candle; these acts give a life and meaning to what is otherwise inexpressive, and the act must be justified, if at all, as part of a ceremonial law."

NEW SERIES, 39.—ECLAS.

I do not pronounce that Mr. Purchas has been guilty of an ecclesiastical offence in this matter.

The 29th article charges as follows:—

"That you, the said Rev. John Purchas, in the said church or chapel of St. James's, Brighton, aforesaid, on the occasion of a celebration of the Holy Communion at midnight on Christmas Eve, the 24th of December, 1868, placed or caused to be placed, on a shelf just above the credence table in the said church a modelled figure of the infant Saviour, with two lilies on either side, the same being so then placed as a part of the ceremonial of the service of that night, and which was subsequently removed; and that on Whit Sunday, May the 16th, 1869, you placed, or caused to be placed, in the said church or chapel, above and hanging over the Holy Table, a figure, image, or stuffed skin of a dove in a flying attitude, and kept the same so placed during Divine Service, the same being so then placed and kept as a part of the ceremonial of the service."

I think the result of the evidence is that these figures, having regard to the time and the services during which they were brought in and removed, being also emblematic in their character, were ceremonially used upon the occasions referred to, and that, according to the judgment in Martin v. Mackonochie (3), they were therefore illegal. It is very possible, however, that these things, perfectly innocent in themselves, were in fact not so used as to fall under the prohibition which attaches to the introduction of new ceremonies; and that, if an explanation had been offered, or other evidence adduced by the defendant, I might have arrived at the conclusion that the things in question belonged merely to the category of what the Privy Council have termed "inert" decorations, and were not actively used in the service; in which case, as at present advised, I should not have pronounced them illegal.

H

The 24th article charges as follows:—

"That you, the said Rev. John Purchas, in the said church or chapel of St. James's, Brighton, aforesaid, on Good Friday, 1869, when there was no administration of the Holy Communion, caused or permitted the Holy Table to be and remain during Divine Service without any decent covering, such as is enjoined and required by the 82nd Canon of the Church."

The leaving of the Holy Table wholly bare and uncovered during Divine Service is, I believe, a practice without warrant from primitive use or custom; but it is certainly contrary to the 82nd Canon, which governs this question, and is therefore illegal.

The 25th article charges as follows:—

"That you, the said Rev. John Purchas, in the said church or chapel of St. James's, Brighton, aforesaid, on Sunday, December the 27th, 1868; on Palm Sunday, 1869; and on Whit Sunday, May the 16th, 1869, caused holy water, or water previously blessed or consecrated, to be poured into divers receptacles for the same in and about the said church, in order that the same might be used by persons of the congregation before and during the time of Divine Service, by way of ceremonial application thereof; and yourself used the same, or caused or permitted the same to be used by others."

There is no evidence to sustain the averments that Mr. Purchas caused holy water or water previously blessed or consecrated to be poured into divers receptacles in and about the church, or that he blessed or consecrated any water, or that he used it himself, or that he caused it to be used by others; there is evidence that there was water in the church, and that some of the congregation crossed themselves with it.

I am of opinion that the criminal charges laid against Mr. Purchas in this Article are not proved.

The 31st, 32nd, and part of the 19th Articles charge as follows:—

"XXXI. That you, the said Rev. John Purchas, in the said church or chapel of St. James's, Brighton, aforesaid, on divers occasions (to wit, &c.), during the saying of the Apostles' creed and Nicene creed, and at the pronouncing of the Absolution in the order for the Holy Communion, and at the giving of the elements to the communicants, and on certain other occasions (to wit, during Divine Service, on Sunday evening, February the 7th, 1867" (sic), "and Whit Sunday evening, May the 16th, 1869), during the pronouncing of the Benediction, after the sermon, and on certain other occasions (to wit, during the Communion Service on Ash Wednesday, February the 10th, 1869, and on Sunday, February the 28th, 1869), when about to mix water with the wine, and when about to consecrate the same, you, being then the officiating minister, made the sign of the cross by the appropriate gesture for that purpose, the same being intended as and constituting a ceremony."

"XXXII. That you, the said Rev. John Purchas, in the said church or chapel of St. James's, Brighton, aforesaid, you being present, and responsible for the due performance of Divine Service therein, on Sunday morning, January the 31st, 1869, during the Communion Service, directed, caused, or permitted and sanctioned, a certain clergyman then assisting you in the performance of Divine Service by reading the Gospel for the day, to kiss the book from which he read the Gospel, such kissing of the book being intended as and constituting a matter of ceremony, the said book, during such reading of the Gospel, being, in a ceremonial manner, held before him by a deacon or attendant."

"XIX. That you, the said Rev. John Purchas, on a certain occasion (to wit, on Sunday morning, January the 31st, 1869), in the said church or chapel of St. James's, Brighton, aforesaid, while reading the prayer for the 'whole state of Christ's Church militant here on earth,' stood with your back to the people, in front of the middle of the Holy Table and while reading the word 'oblations,' as a religious ceremony took up the chalice, then being on the said Holy Table, and elevated it above your head."

The ruling of the Privy Council in the case of Martin v. Mackonochie (3), with respect to the kneeling of the priest during the Communion Service, seems to me to apply to the acts of devotion complained of in these articles, which I must therefore pronounce illegal.

The latter part of Article XVII.—I have already referred to the charges contained in the former part—charges as follows:—

"And that you also, during the whole of such prayer of consecration, stood at the middle of that side of the Holy Table which, if the said Holy Table stood at the east end of the said church or chapel (the said table in St. James's Chapel, in fact, standing at the west end thereof), would be the west side of such table, in such wise that you then stood between the people and the said Holy Table, with your back to the people, so that the people could not see you break the bread or take the cup into your hand."

I must observe that the rubric does not require that the people should see the breaking of the bread or the taking of the cup into the priest's hands; and, if it did so prescribe, the evidence in this case would establish that all the congregation could see him take the cup into his hands, and some of them, at least, could see him break the bread. But in truth the question appears to me to have been settled by the Privy Council in the case of Martin v. Mackonochie (3):—

"The rubric before the prayer of consecration then follows, and is in these words:—

"'When the priest, standing before the table, hath so ordered the bread and wine that he may with the more readiness and decency break the bread before the people, and take the cup into his hands, he shall say the prayer of consecration, as follows.'

"Their Lordships entertain no doubt on the construction of this rubric that the priest is intended to continue in one posture during the prayer, and not to change from standing to kneeling, or vice versa; and it appears to them equally certain that the priest is intended to stand and not to kneel. They think that the words 'standing before the table' apply to the whole sentence; and they think that this is made more apparent by the consideration that acts are to be done by the priest before the people, as the prayer proceeds (such as taking the paten and chalice into his hands, breaking the bread, and laying his hand on the various vessels), which could only be done in the attitude of standing" (p. 382).

I dismiss this charge against Mr. Purchas.

The 18th Article charges as follows:—

"That you, the said Rev. John Purchas, on a certain occasion (to wit, on Sunday morning, November the 1st, 1868), directed, sanctioned, or permitted a certain other clergyman, then officiating for you, in the presence of you, the said Rev. John Purchas, to read the collects next before the epistle for the day in the Communion Service, standing in front of the middle of the Holy Table, with his back to the people; and that on a certain other occasion (to wit, Sunday morning, January the 17th, 1869), you, the said Rev. John Purchas, read such collects yourself, standing with your back to the people."

As to this charge the proof is that both Mr. Purchas and the assistant clergyman on the several occasions stood before the Holy Table with their backs to the people. It is not proved that the assistant clergyman, on the occasion mentioned, stood before the people. The rubric which governs the position of the minister at this period of the service is the one preceding the Lord's Prayer at the beginning of the Communion Service:—"And the priest, standing at the north side of the table, shall say the Lord's Prayer, with the collect following, the people kneeling;" and, after the interval of the Ten Commandments, the rubric enjoins the priest "to stand as before." I am aware that learned persons hold that these words, "the north side," mean "the north side of the table's front," and possibly they do so; but, in the absence of any argument before me to this effect, I think I must take the prima facie meaning of the rubric, and consider it as the north side of the whole table; and upon this ground I must decide against Mr. Purchas upon this article.

Two charges are contained in that part of the 19th Article to which I have not as yet referred:—

(a.) "And that on a certain other occasion (to wit, on Sunday evening, January the 31st, 1869) you, the said Rev. John Purchas, did, in the said church or chapel, during the performance of Divine Service, and while reading the collects following the creed, stand in front of the middle of the Holy Table at the foot of the steps leading up to the same, with your back to the people:"

(b.) "And that on a certain other occasion, during the performance of Divine Service, in the said church or chapel (to wit, on Sunday morning, February the 7th, 1869), you, the said Rev. John Purchas, directed, sanctioned, or permitted the epistle in the Communion Service to be read in your presence by a minister standing with his back to the people."

The first offence appears to me plainly contrary to the rubric; and the second, though, perhaps, not governed by any positive order in the rubric, is obviously contrary to the intent of the Prayer Book, the epistle not being a prayer addressed to God, but a portion of the scripture read to the people.

The 30th article charges as follows:—

"That you, the said Rev. John Purchas, in the said church or chapel of St. James's, Brighton, aforesaid, on Sunday morning, November the 1st, 1868, publicly during the performance of Divine Service, that is to say, at the conclusion of the Nicene Creed, gave notice that on the morning of the next day there would be 'a high celebration of the Holy Eucharist' at eleven o'clock; and that you, on the same day, after the sermon, gave, or caused to be given, notice that on the next Friday, 'being the Feast of St. Leonard,' there would be a celebration of the Holy Eucharist at eleven o'clock; and that on Sunday, the 8th of November, 1868, after the Nicene Creed, you gave notice that the Holy Eucharist would be celebrated on Wednesday, 'being the Feast of St. Martin;' and on Friday, 'being the Feast of St. Britius.' And that on Sunday morning, January the 31st, 1869, after the Nicene Creed, you gave notice that 'on Tuesday next, being the Festival of our Lady, there would be a high celebration of the Holy Eucharist at eleven o'clock in the morning.'"

The Prayer Book does not warrant, in my opinion, this particular mode of announcing that the Eucharist will be celebrated. According to the rubric, after the Nicene Creed notice is then to be given of the Communion, and according to the rubric after the church militant prayer, "When the minister giveth warning for the celebration of the Holy Communion . . . after the sermon or homily ended he shall read this exhortation following." It appears to me that the epithet "high" has no sanction from the rubric, and, though perhaps in itself not very material, cannot legally be used. It appears from the evidence that at different times notices were given that the feasts of St. Leonard, St. Martin, and St. Britius would be observed. The rubric, after the Nicene Creed, directs that "the curate shall declare unto the people what holy-days or fasting days are in the week following to be observed." Mr. Purchas is not charged with having violated the law by omitting to give notice of these holy-days or fasting days, but by having given notice of holy-days which the Church has not directed to be observed. I think the holy-days which are directed to be observed are those which are to be found after the preface of the Prayer Book, under the head of "A Table of all the Feasts that are to be observed in the Church of England throughout the year." The feasts of St. Leonard, St. Martin, and St. Britius are not among these; I therefore think the notices of them were improper, and I must admonish Mr. Purchas to abstain from giving such notices for the future.

This is my judgment upon the particular charges brought against the defendant; but I cannot conclude it without once again referring to the general question to which these charges relate. In the judgment in Martin v. Mackonochie (1) I said:—

"Before I proceed to consider the greater question, whether they are ceremonies forbidden by the Ecclesiastical Law of England, and more especially by that part of it which consists of the provisions of the Prayer Book and the Statute of Uniformity, I think it right to draw attention to the judgment of the Church universal, and especially of 'that pure and apostolical branch of it established in this realm,' upon the general subject of ceremonies.

"And from that judgment it will, I think, appear that an essential distinction is drawn between those which are, from their origin, immutable, and those which it is competent to the proper authorities to mould according to the varying necessities and exigencies of each particular church" (p. 136).

I then cited various authorities upon this point, and I added,—

"I have thought it expedient to recite the foregoing authorities upon the nature of rites and ceremonies, in order to fortify my position, that the questions now pending before me in no way affect the relations of the Church of England to the Church Catholic, but have reference solely to matters of detail and order in her ministrations, which every independent church has at all times claimed and exercised" (p. 146).

I have deemed it well to repeat this language upon the present occasion, because I think that the proposition which it embodies would, if temperately and impartially considered, tend to prevent the litigation and allay the discord which is at the present moment distracting the energies and weakening the authority of our Church.

Now with respect to the question of costs, I shall condemn the defendant in the costs of all those charges which have been substantiated against him, and as the defendant has not appeared I shall make no order as to the costs of those charges which the promoter has failed to substantiate.

The course which the Registrar will probably think it proper to pursue will be to tax the promoter's whole costs of suit, and subsequently to deduct from that sum such a proportion as he may think fairly represents the cost of the unsubstantiated charges. It will probably be found a case in which a very close estimate cannot be made; and considerable discretion, subject to the revision of the Court, must be left to the Registrar.

Proctors—Moore & Currey, for promoter.

[IN THE COURT OF ARCHES.]

1869. }
Nov. 26, 29. }

LEE V. MEREST.

Simony—12 Anno, St. 2. c. 12. s. 2.—
Misconduct—No issue given in by Defendant—Rules 9, 10, 11 (Rules and Regulations 1867)—Practice—Tithes—deed, Production of.

In a criminal suit instituted against a clerk in holy orders by the secretary to the Bishop of Worcester, it was proved that the defendant had been guilty of simony, by reason of his having corruptly and simoniacally obtained presentation and institution to his vicarage, and also of conduct unbecoming a clergyman in unlawfully threatening a certain person to publish a libel upon him with the intent of extorting money:

The Court founding its sentence, in respect of the offence of simony, upon the general ecclesiastical as well as statute law, pronounced that the defendant was a disabled person in law to have the vicarage, and that his presentation thereto, and his admission and institution thereupon, were void and frustrate, and of no effect in law; and having regard to all the circumstances of the case, the offence of misconduct as well as that of simony, it further pronounced upon him a sentence of deprivation from the ministry and from the performance of all clerical functions whatsoever in the province of Canterbury, and condemned him in the costs of the suit.

And it directed the registrar to apprise the Queen's proctor of the sentence in order that Her Majesty might exercise her right of presentation to the vacant benefice given by 12 Anne, St. 2. c. 12.

The defendant in a criminal suit, appeared, by his proctor, to the citation and prayed articles. On the admission of the articles, the proctor intimated that he was not in a position to give in either an affirmative or negative issue, and praying justice, submitted himself to the judgment of the Court. The Court fixed a day for the hearing, and proceeded with the cause as if a negative issue had been pleaded.

In a criminal suit instituted for simony the patron was called as a witness and required to produce the deed of conveyance to him of the advowson of the vicarage in respect of the presentation to which the alleged simony had been committed. It was admitted that the deed was in Court, but the witness declined to produce it on the ground that it was a title-deed. The Court, notwithstanding, ordered its production.

This was a cause or business of the office of the judge, promoted by Mr. John Benjamin Lee, secretary to the Bishop of Worcester, against the Rev. James John Merest, a clerk in holy orders, vicar of the parish of Upton Snodsbury, in the county and diocese of Worcester, for simony, and also for conduct unbecoming a clergyman in unlawfully threatening the Rev. Murray Richard Workman to publish a libel upon him with the intent of extorting money.

The case was sent in the first instance, under the provisions of the Church Discipline Act (3 & 4 Vict. c. 86), by letters of request under the hand and seal of the Bishop of Worcester, to the Court of Arches. The letters of request were accepted, and a decree having been served upon the defendant, Clarkson, as his proctor, entered an appearance on his behalf and prayed articles. Skipwith, proctor for the promoter, brought in articles, which were admitted. Subsequently Clarkson declared that he was not in a position to give a negative or affirmative issue, and praying justice, submitted himself to the judgment of the Court, which fixed a day (November 26) for the hearing of the cause.

The articles alleged :—

1. That by the laws, canons, and constitutions ecclesiastical of this realm, all clerks and ministers in holy orders are particularly enjoined and required to be grave, reverend, and orderly in their general deportment and behaviour in every respect, and to abstain from any excess whatever, and from anything that may give rise to scandal, &c., &c.

2. That by the same laws, canons and constitutions ecclesiastical, if a clerk in holy orders of the Church of England be simoniacally promoted or presented to any benefice or living ecclesiastical, he is deprivable of same by reason of such simoniacal promotion or presentation, on due examination and proof thereof, and if such clerk shall have been a party or privy to such simoniacal promotion or presentation, he shall be adjudged guilty of simony. And that by an Act passed in the 12th year of the reign of Queen Anne, being an Act for the better maintenance of curates within the Church of England, and for preventing any ecclesiastical person from buying the next avoidance of any such preferment, if any person shall for any sum of money, reward, gift, profit or advantage, directly or indirectly, or for or by reason of any promise, agreement, grant, bond, covenant or other assurance of or for any sum of money, reward, gift, profit or benefit whatsoever, directly or indirectly, in his own name or in the name of any other person, take, procure or accept the next avoidance of or presentation to any benefice with cure of souls or living ecclesiastical, and shall be presented thereupon, such presentation and every admission, institution, investiture and induction upon the same shall be utterly void, frustrate and of no effect in law, and such agreement shall be deemed a simoniacal contract, and the person so corruptly taking, procuring and accepting the said benefice or living ecclesiastical aforesaid, shall thereupon be adjudged a disabled person in law to have and enjoy the said benefice, and shall also be subject to the pains and penalties inflicted by the law ecclesiastical.

3. That you, the said James John Merest, are and have been for two years last past, a clerk in holy orders of the said Church of England.

4. That by deed, dated the 29th day of February, 1868, the Rev. Henry O'Donnel, clerk, conveyed the advowson of the vicarage and parish church of Upton Snodsbury, in the county and diocese of Worcester, to one Murray Richard Workman.

5. That the said Murray Richard Workman purchased the said advowson from the said Henry O'Donnel with your knowledge, privity and consent, with intent to present you, the said James John Merest, to the said vicarage and parish church upon the then next avoidance thereof, in pursuance of an agreement made by and between you and the said Murray Richard Workman in that behalf.

6. That about the end of the year 1867, or the beginning of the year 1868, you, the said James John Merest, made an agreement or promise, by which you undertook to pay the said Murray Richard Workman a sum of money, or otherwise to reward, profit, or benefit the said Murray Richard Workman, in consideration of his procuring for you the next avoidance of or presentation to the said vicarage and parish church, or of his presenting you, or causing you to be presented to the same, on the next avoidance thereof.

7. That you were thereupon, and in pursuance of such agreement or promise of or for a sum of money, reward, profit, or benefit, as in the last preceding article mentioned, presented to the said vicarage and parish church by the said Murray Richard Workman on the next avoidance thereof, which said next avoidance took place by and upon the resignation of the said Rev. Henry O'Donnel, on or about the 25th day of March, 1868.

8. That in or about the month of June, 1868, it was agreed between you, the said James John Merest and the said Murray Richard Workman, that in consideration of the said Murray Richard Workman obtaining for you the said next avoidance of or presentation to the said vicarage and parish church, or of his presenting or causing you to be presented to the same on such next avoidance as aforesaid, the said Murray Richard Workman should commence an action against you in the Court of Exchequer of Pleas at Westminster, to recover the sum of £350, as for money lent to you by the said Murray Richard Workman, and that you should suffer judgment by default in the said action; and that on the 10th day of June, 1868, an action was accordingly commenced in the said court, in which the said Murray Richard Workman was plaintiff, and you, the said James John Merest, were defendant; and on the 22nd day of June, 1868, the said Murray Richard Workman signed judgment against you in the said action for the sum of £350. and costs.

9. That on the 3rd day of August, in the said year 1868, you, the said James John Merest, were upon the presentation aforesaid admitted and instituted to the vicarage and parish church of Upton Snodsbury by the Right Reverend Father in God, Henry, by Divine permission, Lord Bishop of Worcester, after you had made and subscribed the declaration against simony, required by the Clerical Subscription Act, 1865.

10. That by reason of the premises, you, the said James John Merest, have been guilty of the offence of simony, and have knowingly entered into a simoniacal contract; and have, by reason of an agreement and promise of or for a sum of money, reward, gift, profit, benefit, or advantage, taken, procured, or accepted the next avoidance of or presentation to the said vicarage and parish church, and have been presented to the same thereupon.

11. That by reason of the premises, you, the said James John Merest, have been corruptly and simoniacally promoted and presented to the said vicarage and parish church.

The articles further charged the defendant with having been convicted at the assizes held at Worcester, on Thursday, the 4th of March, 1869, of unlawfully threatening the said Murray Richard Workman to publish a libel upon him, with intent to extort money from him.

The case (on Nov. 26) came before the Court on hearing.

thing I can get for you, and for some time to come the only one likely.

"Yours faithfully,

"M. R. Workman.

"The Rev. J. J. Merest.

"Your uncle's allowance will not come until about January 6th, and he must not be asked for it. I enclose a cheque for 5l."

Mr. Workman said he had no doubt he had received answers to these letter, but he had not kept them. Taking those letters with their history, as proved in this Court, in conjunction with the dates and the transactions to which I have referred, especially the transaction by which judgment for 350l. was recovered by "arrangement" between the presentee and the patron, it would be difficult to doubt that the presentation to this living was the result of a corrupt and simoniacal contract between the patron and the presentee. But that difficulty becomes a moral impossibility when it is remembered that it was competent to the defendant, as his proctor must have informed him, to have entered the witness box, and have rebutted by an explanation, if such were in his power, the otherwise irresistible inference of guilt arising from the testimony and the circumstances to which I have adverted.

I am of opinion that the promoter of my office has proved both the charges laid in the articles against the defendant. It is not necessary that I should refer to authorities for the purpose of establishing the jurisdiction of this Court in cases of simony. That authority, both as it rests upon the General Ecclesiastical Law and upon the Statute Law, cannot be gainsaid; though happily the reported instances in which it has been exerted have been few and far between. The cases will be found collected under the title "Simony" in the last edition of Burn's Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. III. By the general law and by the 40th Canon of 1604, as by the statute 31 Eliz. c. 6, the offence of simony is considered as one of a very grave character; and, though the oath formerly taken under the 40th Canon by the presentee against simony has been abolished by 28 & 29 Vict. c. 122, by the 2nd section of that statute a solemn declaration against simony has been substituted for it. The defendant, though not technically guilty of perjury, must have deliberately made upon a very solemn occasion a very solemn declaration which he knew at the time he made it to be absolutely false. The statute 12 Anne, Stat. II. c. 12, has not, as far as I am aware, been ever put in force by the Ecclesiastical Court. By the 2nd section of that statute, the obtaining by a clergyman the next avoidance of or next presentation to any benefice is treated as a simoniacal contract, and the presentation and institution are to be utterly void, frustrate and of no effect in law, the simoniacal presentee is to be adjudged a disabled person in law to have the same benefice, and the Crown is to present for the next turn. I see no reason why this statute should not be put in force by this Court; but I found my sentence as well upon the general Ecclesiastical as the Statute Law. I must, in accordance with the exigency of the law, pronounce that the defendant is a disabled person in law to have or enjoy the vicarage and parish church of Upton Snodsbury, that his presentation thereto, and his admission and institution thereupon, are void and frustrate and of no effect in law;—and, having regard to all the circumstances of this case, and the offence of misconduct apart from the charge of simony proved against him, I must pronounce upon the defendant a sentence of deprivation from the ministry, and from the performance of all clerical functions whatsoever in the province of Canterbury; and I must order this sentence to be promulgated in the usual manner by affixing the same to the door of the church of Upton Snodsbury for the usual time. I must further condemn the defendant in the costs of this suit. I shall also direct the registrar to apprise the Queen's Proctor of this sentence, in order that Her Majesty may exercise the right of presentation to the vacant benefice given by the statute.

Proctors—L. Skipwith, for promoter; Clarkson. Son & Greenwell, for defendant.

allowed to go by default "by arrangement," as Mr. Workman in his evidence said, between the parties. Mr. Workman afterwards issued execution on his property, and levied 5*l*. On the 3rd of August the defendant was instituted, upon the presentation of Mr. Workman, to the benefice. The dates of these transactions, taken in conjunction with their character, and with the position of the parties, all of whom I regret to say are clergymen, are calculated of themselves to excite a grave suspicion of corrupt practices connected with the presentation to this living. That suspicion has been turned into complete proof by the evidence which has been adduced before me. The defendant, who has appeared in the suit by a proctor, has not appeared by counsel or in person before me in Court; he has declined to plead any defence or give any issue; but by his proctor, who is still before the Court, has prayed justice.

It appears from the evidence that some quarrel took place between Mr. Workman and the defendant, from which probably has arisen the means of unravelling this transaction. Certain letters were produced in evidence before me, and were proved to have been used before the magistrates who committed the defendant for trial at Worcester. Among those letters were two, which Mr. Workman proved were in his handwriting, and were produced to him by the defendant's solicitor, when he, Workman, was cross-examined by the solicitor. The first letter bears date November 19th, 1867, and is as follows:—

"Church and School Gazette Office,
" 10, Southampton Street, Strand, w.c.,
" November 19th, 1867.

"My dear Sir,

"As all the small livings are very dear in proportion, and your capital is not sufficient to obtain one with possession, I propose getting some assistance for you, but in doing this I must act without your knowledge, or my endeavours might be abortive. Hence I am silent for your own sake, and you also must be the same. Suffice it to say that the course I propose will cost you nothing. I wish to have Marston in Derbyshire for you, and failing that a rectory in North Devon, worth 160*l*. and a house. This, however, is dearer, and Marston must be had if possible. You should not attempt Branksea when the weather is bad.

NEW SERIES, 39.—ECCLES.

"Yours faithfully,

"M. R. Workman.

"The Rev. J. J. Merest.

"P.S.—You must preserve the strictest silence about the names of any livings mentioned to you, or your succession will be prevented."

The second letter is dated December 19th, 1867, and is as follows:—

"Church and School Gazette Office,
" 10, Southampton Street, Strand, w.c.,
" December 19th, 1867.

"My dear Sir,

"I enclose a copy of another letter for the bishop, which please send at once. The whole affair has been so far conducted very cleverly, and I am anxious for you not to spoil it by the least injudicious act or word. I have no time for more upon this subject to-day. As regards Upton Snodsbury the income is from tithe and glebe, and the present net 120*l*. about, capable of improvement. There is only single duty, and each rector has either held a curacy, or made that extra by occasional duty. It is three miles from Spetchley and six from Worcester. There is no house at present, but will be one shortly, and in the meantime you can have reasonable lodgings either at Spetchley, or nearer into Worcester. It is a very nice place indeed, and to my mind you could not have a more eligible little living. It is the Presentation not Advowson. You have not enough money for the latter, and these small livings are all much dearer in proportion. In fact they are most difficult to get hold of at all, and the trouble and difficulty I have had for you cannot well be told. I spoke of Marston, but you would have to wait some time for it, and Upton is nicer. I withheld the name, having promised to do so, till I heard definitely from your uncle, but he will render no help, and you want a small sum. I have now applied elsewhere, and if I can arrange all things I shall have to see you. I can help you to improve the income of Upton, and you can go to it at once. It is the cheapest and the nicest thing I can get for you, and for some time to come the only one likely.

"Yours faithfully,

" M. R. Workman.

"The Rev. J. J. Merest.

"Your uncle's allowance will not come until about January 6th, and he must not be asked for it. I enclose a cheque for 5l."

Mr. Workman said he had no doubt he had received answers to these letters, but he had not kept them. Taking those letters with their history, as proved in this Court, in conjunction with the dates and the transactions to which I have referred, especially the transaction by which judgment for 350l. was recovered by "arrangement" between the presentee and the patron, it would be difficult to doubt that the presentation to this living was the result of a corrupt and simoniacal contract between the patron and the presentee. But that difficulty becomes a moral impossibility when it is remembered that it was competent to the defendant, as his proctor must have informed him, to have entered the witness box, and have rebutted by an explanation, if such were in his power, the otherwise irresistible inference of guilt arising from the testimony and the circumstances to which I have adverted.

I am of opinion that the promoter of my office has proved both the charges laid in the articles against the defendant. It is not necessary that I should refer to authorities for the purpose of establishing the jurisdiction of this Court in cases of simony. That authority, both as it rests upon the General Ecclesiastical Law and upon the Statute Law, cannot be gainsaid; though happily the reported instances in which it has been exerted have been few and far between. The cases will be found collected under the title "Simony" in the last edition of Burn's Ecclesiastical Law, Vol. III. By the general law and by the 40th Canon of 1604, as by the statute 31 Eliz. c. 6, the offence of simony is considered as one of a very grave character; and, though the oath formerly taken under the 40th Canon by the presentee against simony has been abolished by 28 & 29 Vict. c. 122, by the 2nd section of that statute a solemn declaration against simony has been substituted for it. The defendant, though not technically guilty of perjury, must have deliberately made upon a very solemn occasion a very solemn declaration which he knew at the time he made it to be absolutely false. The statute 12 Anne, Stat. II. c. 12, has not, as far as I am aware, been ever put in force by the Ecclesiastical Court. By the 2nd section of that statute, the obtaining by a clergyman the next avoidance of or next presentation to any benefice is treated as a simoniacal contract, and the presentation and institution are to be utterly void, frustrate and of no effect in law, the simoniacal presentee is to be adjudged a disabled person in law to have the same benefice, and the Crown is to present for the next turn. I see no reason why this statute should not be put in force by this Court; but I found my sentence as well upon the general Ecclesiastical as the Statute Law. I must, in accordance with the exigency of the law, pronounce that the defendant is a disabled person in law to have or enjoy the vicarage and parish church of Upton Snodsbury, that his presentation thereto, and his admission and institution thereupon, are void and frustrate and of no effect in law;—and, having regard to all the circumstances of this case, and the offence of misconduct apart from the charge of simony proved against him, I must pronounce upon the defendant a sentence of deprivation from the ministry, and from the performance of all clerical functions whatsoever in the province of Canterbury; and I must order this sentence to be promulgated in the usual manner by affixing the same to the door of the church of Upton Snodsbury for the usual time. I must further condemn the defendant in the costs of this suit. I shall also direct the registrar to apprise the Queen's Proctor of this sentence, in order that Her Majesty may exercise the right of presentation to the vacant benefice given by the statute.

Proctors—L. Skipwith, for promoter; Clarkson, Son & Greenwell, for defendant.

[IN THE PRIVY COUNCIL.]

1870. } THOMAS BYARD SHEPPARD, ap-
 Mar. 26. } pellant; THE REV. WILLIAM
 } JAMES EARLY BENNETT, re} spondent.*

Church Discipline Act (3 & 4 Vict. c. 86)—Commission—Letters of Request—Citation—Articles—Sufficiency of.

In a proceeding under the Church Discipline Act against a clerk in orders for maintaining doctrine alleged to be heretical, the commission was to inquire as to certain works of the accused of which the titles and certain passages were given. The letters of request and the citation referred to the same works and passages. No charge was preferred before the Commissioners, or alleged in the letters of request or citation, in respect of the 29th Article of Religion; but the articles contained additional passages from the said works, and a charge (amongst others) of impugning the 29th Article of Religion:—Held, that the Commission is a mere preliminary step for the purpose of advising the bishop whether there is a prima facie case; that the letters of request are for the purpose of founding jurisdiction in the higher Court; that the citation need only state generically the offence charged so that the accused may know the nature of the offence he is called upon to answer; and that the citation was sufficient to enable the promoter to introduce into the articles the additional passages and charge of impugning the 29th Article of Religion.

In support of a charge of heresy, articles filed in the Arches Court set out passages from the works of the accused, in which he expressed approval of the works of certain other writers alleged to contain heretical doctrine:—Held, that the articles must set forth passages from the works of the accused in which he has maintained heretical doctrine; that it is not sufficient to set out passages of works of which the accused has expressed a general approval, and which contain passages he has not by his own publication accepted in their totality.

This was an appeal from a decree of the Official Principal of the Arches Court of Canterbury, in a cause of the office of the Judge promoted by Thomas Byard Sheppard, of the parish of Frome Selwood, in the diocese of Bath and Wells, against the Rev. William James Early Bennett, a Clerk in Orders of the Church of England, the vicar of the said parish of Frome Selwood.

* Present, the Lord Chancellor (Lord Hatherley), the Archbishop of York (Dr. Thomson), the Bishop of London (Dr. Jackson), Sir Joseph Napier, and Lord Justice Giffard.

The cause was promoted in the Arches Court by virtue of letters of request under the episcopal seal of the Rt. Rev. Baron Auckland, Lord Bishop of Bath and Wells. By such letters of request, the bishop did, by virtue of the Church Discipline Act, request the said Official Principal to issue a citation, citing the respondent to appear at a certain time and place and to answer to certain articles for having offended against the laws ecclesiastical by having, within two years last past, caused to be printed and published within the diocese of London certain works, in which he advisedly maintains or affirms doctrine repugnant to the articles and formularies of the Church of England, the said works being entitled respectively, "Some Results of the Tractarian Movement of 1833," forming one of the essays contained in a volume entitled "The Church and the World," edited by the Rev. Orby Shipley, clerk, printed and published in London in the year 1867; "A Plea for Toleration in the Church of England, in a letter to the Rev. E. B. Pusey, D.D., Regius Professor of Hebrew and Canon of Christ Church, Oxford, second edition," printed and published in London in the year 1867; and "A Plea for Toleration in the Church of England, in a letter to the Rev. E. B. Pusey, D.D., Regius Professor of Hebrew and Canon of Christ Church, Oxford, third edition," printed and published in London in the year 1868; and finally, to hear and determine the cause according to the law.

No appearance was given to the citation, and in default of appearance articles were filed, and the Judge appointed to hear on the admission thereof.

On the 30th of October, 1869, the Judge, having heard counsel on behalf of the appellant, directed the articles to be reformed, by omitting all such parts thereof as charged the respondent with contravening the 29th Article of Religion, entitled Of the wicked which eat not the body of Christ in the use of the Lord's Supper.

From this decree the present appeal was brought.

The case in the Court below, with the Commission, letters of request, and citation, will be found reported in 39 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Eccl. p. 1.

Mr. A. J. Stephens, Dr. Tristram, Mr. Archibald, and Mr. Shaw.—The first question to be determined is: What is the office of the Commission? This depends on the language of the Church Discipline Act. The proceedings before the Commission are preliminary. The jurisdiction of the Arches Court is not limited by the Commission—Sanders v. Head (1), The Bishop of London v. Bonwell (2), Ditcher v. Denison (3). The Commission is to advise the bishop upon the matters alleged, whether there is any prima facie case against the accused so as to justify further proceedings. The letters of request are the only machinery by which the case is brought into the Arches Court, Sheppard v. Bennett (4). They are the foundation of the jurisdiction of the Arches Court. The jurisdiction of the Arches Court is not founded on or limited by the charges referred to the Commissioners. The citation must be framed so that the accused may be able to know the nature of the charge made against him, as, for example, whether the charge is one of heresy or one of immorality, Steward v. Francis (5). It is, however, immaterial in this case, because the charges here are the same throughout all the proceedings. The Commission, the letters of request, and the citation, all allege the same offence. The charge in the articles does not exceed the charge contained in the letters of request. It is not necessary to specify in these preliminary proceedings each particular heresy, Flamank v. Simpson (6), Heath v. Burder (7), Wil- liams v. Bishop of Salisbury (8). Then as to the articles: The prosecution is not confined to the works published by the person accused. A clerk who advisedly expresses approval in his works of the works of other persons which contain heretical doctrine, thereby adopts the contents of these works, and makes them his own. Can it be said that he is not liable for his conduct? The works referred to in the passages set out in the articles have been expressly approved of by the respondent. The doctrine of the real presence in the Lord's Supper cannot be separated from the doctrine of the reception by the wicked. A person is liable, both civilly and criminally, for the words of others which he adopts—Reg. v. Slaney (9), Darby v. Ouseley (10), Thornton v. Stephen (11), Watts v. Fraser (12), Hodgson v. Oakeley (13).

No appearance was entered on behalf of the respondent.

The LORD CHANCELLOR delivered the judgment of their Lordships:—

The appeal presented to the Committee upon this occasion is an appeal from a decision of the Judge of the Court of Arches, by which he has directed certain articles that have been brought against the Rev. William James Early Bennett to be reformed "by omitting all such parts thereof as charge the respondent in the appeal with contravening the 29th Article of Religion, entitled 'Of the Wicked which eat not the Body of Christ in the use of the Lord's Supper;'" and the learned Judge came to that conclusion upon two distinct grounds, both of which have been argued before us. We have not had the advantage of hearing counsel on the other side, in consequence of Mr. Bennett not appearing in the course of these proceedings; but, having heard the case very ably and fully argued by Mr. Stephens, we feel ourselves in a condition to pronounce the conclusion at which we have now arrived, namely, that the learned Judge's decision

(1) 3 Curt. 48.

(2) 6 Jur. (N.S.) 709.

(3) 11 Moore P.C. 341.

(4) 38 Law J. Rep. (N.S.) Eccles. 49.

(5) 3 Curt. 214.

(6) 36 Law J. Rep. Eccl. 4.

(7) 16 Moore, P.C. 1.

(8) 2 Moore, P.C. (N.S.) 376.

(9) 5 Car. & P. 213.

(10) 1 Hurl. & N. 267.

(11) 2 Moo. & R. 45.

(12) 7 Car. & P. 369.

(13) 1 Rob. Eccl. Cases, 322.

is correct—although, as there are two grounds upon which that decision was rested, we feel it necessary to explain upon which of those two grounds we think it right to agree with him in his conclusion.

Their Lordships cannot concur in the view which he appears to have taken as the first ground upon which he rested his decision, but they think that the second ground which he took, and which goes more to the merits and substance of the case, is a substantial ground, and one upon which the decree may well be, and ought to be, supported.

He states the first of his two grounds thus: "On the grounds, therefore, that this particular charge of heresy was not preferred before the Commissioners, on whose report the subsequent proceedings are founded, and that it was not mentioned in the letters of request, or in the decree or citation, I should, having regard to the law and practice of this Court, and the authorities to which I have adverted, be of opinion that the articles must be reformed by striking out the portions which relate to it." The reason for his arriving at that conclusion appears to be this. Mr. Bennett had published a certain number of pamphlets or works, and the first step taken under the statute was that of issuing a commission to inquire whether or not proceedings should be had against him, on account of positions maintained in those publications, this commission being issued by the bishop pursuant to the statute. What the commission were directed to inquire into was this: they were to make inquiry as to the grounds of a certain charge made by the promoter of this proceeding, Mr. Sheppard, against Mr. Bennett, the charge being that he (Mr. Bennett) "had, within the diocese of London, committed an offence against the laws ecclesiastical of this realm, by having caused to be printed and published within the said diocese certain works, in which he advisedly maintains or affirms doctrine contrary or repugnant to the articles and formularies of the United Church of England and Ireland, the said works being entitled respectively"—and then the titles are set out; after which are these words, "and containing the following among other statements, in respect of which the said charge has been made, that is to say;" and then the commission proceeds to set forth a number of passages selected from those various writings, all following this heading, "containing the following among other statements."

Upon the finding of the commission that there was ground for further proceeding, letters of request were forwarded by the bishop to the archbishop, requesting that a citation or decree should be issued under the seal of the Court of Arches, citing Mr. Bennett "to appear at a certain time and place therein to be specified, and answer to certain articles, heads, positions, or interrogatories touching and concerning his soul's health, and the lawful correction and reformation of his manners and excesses, and more especially for having offended against the laws ecclesiastical, by having, within two years last past, caused to be printed and published, within the diocese of London, certain works, in which he advisedly maintains or affirms doctrine directly contrary or repugnant to the articles and formularies of the United Church of England and Ireland, the said works being entitled respectively;" and then all the titles are given, and only the titles of these works; and then the letters state that the articles are "to be administered to him, the said William James Early Bennett, at the voluntary promotion of the said Thomas Byard Sheppard;" and the archbishop is required finally "to hear and determine the said cause according to the law and practice of the Court."

Upon that there follows the decree or citation, which, reciting the commission and reciting the letters of request, proceeds to cite the respondent in the following manner, namely, that he is to answer the charge, the charge being that he has committed an offence by publishing these works, the titles of which are again set forth; and then in the decree or citation are also added these words, "containing the following among other statements, in respect of which the said charge has been made, that is to say," then giving the whole of the various passages which were cited from the books in the original proceedings before the commission.

Now, to proceed by steps in this matter:

with reference to the commission, their Lordships do not think it necessary to dwell at any length upon the proceeding as set forth in the commission, for this simple reason, the commission is merely a preparatory step taken by those whom the bishop is, if he think fit, to call together to consult and advise with him as to whether or not a sufficient prima facie case is made out, so as to render it desirable and fitting that he should have the case further inquired into before a regular tribunal; and when the commission sitting for that purpose have once found, as this commission did find, that there is reason for proceeding, they have performed their duty, and, after that duty is performed, the bishop, acting upon their suggestion and advice, proceeds by letters of request to confer jurisdiction upon the Superior Court to determine the matter, not by way of appeal, but in the first instance, which he by the statute is authorised to do.

When, therefore, that step has been once passed, it seems to their Lordships unnecessary to consider any further what was or what was not before the commission, although in this case nothing will be found to depend upon it, because the subsequent proceedings seem to have taken their regular course. But there may be other cases in which such circumstances will not occur; therefore, it is desirable that one should at once state what appear to their Lordships to be the proper function and course of proceeding of the commission, namely, simply advising the bishop on the matters which are alleged before him, leaving the bishop to take his own course after that has been done, and to bring the matter in such form as he thinks fit by letters of request before the higher Court.

The bishop then, by the letters of request, founds jurisdiction in the higher Court, which could not proceed, except upon such letters of request, until the bishop had heard and disposed of it in his own Court; and, having so founded the jurisdiction, the letters also set forth that upon which he desires citation to be issued to the clerk who is alleged to have offended.

In this citation their Lordships are quite clear that all that is necessary to be done is to state generically the offence with which the clerk is charged. He must be told undoubtedly what charge it is that is brought against him. But that may be done in terms reasonably precise without going into any minute degree of detail—so that, in short, he should not be tried on a charge of heresy, when perhaps it may be some other charge which is to be alleged in the articles. He must have the offence generically stated in such terms as to lead him to know what the matter is which he is called upon to answer, but the detail of that charge will be made in the articles to be exhibited, for the purpose of giving him full information. He is expressly told in the citation that articles will be exhibited against him. To those articles he will be called upon to put in his answer; and, as regards the charge itself, it is not necessary that it should enter into the minute details and particulars which it is essential that the articles afterwards should dwell upon.

Therefore, in this case the citation seems to have been quite sufficient for the purpose for which it was issued, namely, telling Mr. Bennett that he was charged with having, in certain publications of his which were enumerated, offended by setting forth doctrine which was contrary to the doctrines held by the Church of England; and it proceeded in a manner which it is not at all necessary, as it appears to their Lordships, that it should do, to set forth fully certain passages from those works which he is so alleged to have published. But their Lordships do not agree with the learned Judge that those passages are to be taken as forming part of what is technically called the "prosertim," or the special subject-matter with which he is charged. The special subject-matter with which he is charged is quite sufficiently set forth for the purpose for which the citation is issued, as "the having published these books," in which are contained the passages that are alleged afterwards in the articles to constitute the offence.

The passages or extracts are set forth in a manner which no doubt left him no reason to complain, because they do state very specially and particularly (more so, their Lordships think, than is absolutely necessary) the particular heads under which he was supposed to have offended. That might have been left to the articles. They were, however, set forth in the original citation. Without them he would have no reason to complain whatever, because he would know for what purpose he had been cited before the Court, and he would know in what books the charges would be found. He would also know that in due course of time articles would be exhibited, bringing before him specifically the nature of those charges.

So far, therefore, we should have thought there would be no ground for saying that the promoter should not be at liberty to introduce a charge against Mr. Bennett of impugning the 29th Article, by setting forth that the wicked partake of the Lord's body and blood in receiving the holy communion, if it had been only on this ground that the passages from the publications supposed to contain that opinion had not been set forth in the citation, provided the passages were to be found in the books, and were afterwards minutely and specifically to be set forth in the articles which the respondent would have, ultimately, to answer.

The sole point remaining, therefore, is to see whether or not the articles, as set forth, are supported by passages from the works in question, the publishing of which is charged as an offence. Now that, no doubt, is a more grave and important part of the case, and upon this, which is the second ground of objection to the articles which the learned Judge has directed to be reformed, their Lordships have come to the conclusion, that they ought to agree with him in his decision. He says this,—“Assuming, however, for the sake of argument, that these objections do not apply to the present case, there remains one of even a graver character to be stated. This is a highly penal proceeding against the defendant. It is a criminal suit for the promulgation of heresy. The particular charge is not on account of a heresy distinctly stated or uttered in any sermon, or public act of preaching, or statement connected with the discharge of his duties as incumbent of the parish committed to his charge. It is a heresy alleged to be contained in an essay or review upon ecclesiastical events in the Church since the year 1833. It is to be extracted from what purports to be an historical statement of a trial against another clergyman as long ago as the year 1856. The author narrates that Archdeacon Denison was condemned by the then Archbishop of Canterbury, for teaching the doctrine of the Real Presence (not a quite accurate statement, I may observe in passing), that the sentence was reversed, that a protest against the Archbishop's sentence was signed by seventeen priests; of these the defendant is said to be one. It is contended, that by this reference to the protest, which is in a work not mentioned in the citation, the defendant has made himself responsible in this suit, be it observed, for what is contained in that protest.”

Now, without adopting every word of what is said by the learned judge in his reasoning upon the subject, in principle it appears to their lordships to be correct to say, that the promoter must find, in the first instance, as the foundation of the articles alleging that erroneous doctrine has been promulgated, something contained in the publication which he alleges the accused to have issued forth, something which lays the ground of the special charge which he puts forth in his articles; and upon that part of the case it may be well to refer to what has been said by the Lord Chancellor in delivering the opinion of the Judicial Committee in the case of the “Essays and Reviews,” the case of the Bishop of Salisbury v. Williams, and the mode in which he puts the necessity of stating, in the articles of charge, the passages upon which the promoter intends to rely as justifying the articles. I am citing from 2 Moore's Reports (N.S.) p. 423 :—“These prosecutions are in the nature of criminal proceedings, and it is necessary that there should be precision and distinctness in the accusation. The articles of charge must distinctly state the opinions which the clerk has advisedly maintained and set forth the passages in which those opinions are stated; and, further, the articles must specify the doctrines of the Church which such opinions or teaching of the clerk are alleged to contravene, and the particular articles of religion, or portions of the formularies which contain such doctrines. The accuser is, for the purpose of the charge, confined to the passages which are included and set out in the articles as the matter of the accusation; but it is competent to the accused party to explain from the rest of his works the sense or meaning of any passage or word that is challenged by the accuser."

Then what has to be done is this: there must be set forth in the articles, as is set forth here in the 12th, in the 18th, and the 25th articles, what it is that is charged against the clerk, and what is the article of religion or portion of the formularies of the Church containing doctrine which the clerk is alleged to have impugned. Well, that has been complied with properly in these articles so far, by stating that he has impugned the doctrine contained in the 29th Article of our thirty-nine Articles, and that he has impugned it, because he has stated that the wicked receive the body and blood of our Lord in the Holy Communion. So far the articles perform their duty, but then we have to see whether there are specified the passages in which he, the clerk, is alleged to have stated an opinion controverting that article. Feeling that to be required, the promoters refer in the 12th article, to the 5th previous article, as setting forth the passages; in the 18th article they refer to the sixth article, and in the 25th article they refer to the 7th previous article. To the 5th, 6th, and 7th articles, therefore, we must look to see what are the passages in the writings of Mr. Bennett in which the erroneous doctrine is said to be contained.

The only passage which has been pointed out to their Lordships' attention in the 5th article is this: it is a very long article, and there are numerous passages cited in it, but the only passage bearing upon this point, that is cited, is contained in page 13 of the appendix, beginning at line 50. Having spoken a good deal about the Real Presence in the previous part, Mr. Bennett proceeds to say:—"Among others, Archdeacon Denison taught the doctrine of the Real Presence to his candidates for ordination; and thence arose the extraordinary trial of the faith which terminated in an ignominious conclusion at Bath." We observe, therefore, that he refers entirely to Archdeacon Denison's teaching the doctrine of the Real Presence, a doctrine of an entirely different character—whatever be the view of any persons with reference to its being a correct or incorrect doctrine—from that doctrine which is struck at by the 29th of the thirty-nine Articles, as is evidenced (a fact, as we have already pointed out during the argument) by the very framers of the Articles themselves. The one doctrine may be held, as the learned judge in the Court below says, without the other doctrine being held by the same person who holds the first. Therefore we find nothing relating to the 29th Article there.

Then, having thus referred to what Archdeacon Denison taught as to the doctrine of the Real Presence, Mr. Bennett proceeds to say:—"The doctrine (which, of course, is the same doctrine) was condemned by the Archbishop of Canterbury in his own person, but the judgment was resisted. The Church was harassed by an unworthy and undignified contest, which ended in nothing, while several priests of determined mind entered their solemn protest" (and then, by innuendo, the framer of the article says, "thereby meaning and intending a certain protest signed by, amongst others, you, the said William James Early Bennett, and which protest is hereinafter, in this article, set forth") "against the whole proceeding of the Archbishop, reiterating the doctrine and challenging a new verdict for the truth. This protest was signed by seventeen priests, two of whom were Dr. Pusey and Mr. Keble, and appealed in 'the first instance,' to a free and lawful synod of the bishops of the province of Canterbury, and then, if need be, to a free and lawful synod of all the Churches of our communion, when such, by God's mercy, may be had." After this, nothing further was heard of the silly trial of Ditcher v. Denison. It died a natural death. But what became of the doctrine?"—the doctrine, clearly the doctrine of the Real Presence. "From 1853, when it passed the judgment of the Heads of Houses in Oxford, to 1867, when at length no one is inclined to resist it, it has grown and multiplied with wonderful rapidity, according to the saying, Magna est veritas, et prevalebit. In 1857, he whom now it has pleased God to take to his rest, the saintly John Keble, set forth the seal and conclusion of the whole, in his own beautiful and loving way, in a work entitled 'Eucharistic Adoration.' From that moment the whole question has been suffered to advance in peace."

In those words it is impossible to find a single sentence affecting the 29th Article. As their Lordships have stated before, the doctrine of the Real Presence is not a doctrine in contravention of that Article, whether it be a doctrine in contravention of any other or not.

Then the only way in which it is sought to make out that the doctrine of the 29th Article has been contravened by inference by Mr. Bennett is this:—the promoter says there is a reference to the protest against the Archbishop of Canterbury's judgment in Ditcher v. Denison. He says, farther, "That protest was signed by you, the accused, Mr. Bennett;" and, therefore, "You have so referred to this protest as to justify us in saying, that you have, within two years, committed the offence of impugning the 29th Article." The protest itself was signed far more than two years ago, and it appears to me, therefore, I confess, that it is exactly the same whether the protest was signed by Mr. Bennett himself or by any other person, and that the protest is in exactly the same position as the book published by Mr. Keble, or any other work that has been referred to by Mr. Bennett in his own publications. You cannot rely upon the protest itself as being that on which you can found a ground for charging Mr. Bennett, because of course he cannot be charged upon that which he signed so many years ago; but you must find a recognition of that protest—not merely a reference to it, but a recognition of that protest, and an adoption of it in toto, or an adoption of it so far as it specially teaches any erroneous doctrine. Of course, if Mr. Bennett had set out the protest, and said, "To this, and every word of it, I agree," or if he had set out the particular part of the protest which, on reading it, you would say does deal in a manner apparently, at all events, inconsistent with the 29th Article, and said, "As to this portion I agree," or even, possibly, if he had said (I do not wish to say more, as we are upon a hypothetical case), "There is nothing in this protest from beginning to end, which I signed many years ago, from which I see any reason to depart;" any such mode of reference as that might have raised a very different question, but the only reference we find to the protest is a qualified one, a reference entirely dealing with the doctrine of the Real Presence; and it is impossible, as it seems to their Lordships, to say that, upon that ground, the promoter is entitled to import into this charge a passage which is not to be found in any one of the books which Mr. Bennett has published, but in a document of a totally different character, one proceeding from sixteen other persons (it is said to have proceeded from him too), and which contains a variety of statements, one of which is selected to fix a charge upon Mr. Bennett, but as to which Mr. Bennett himself is totally silent in the books before the Court.

NEW SERIES, 39.—ECCLES.

It appears to us, therefore, as far as the 12th article is concerned, which is founded solely upon this 5th article, that it does not conform to the rule laid down in the Essays and Reviews case, namely, of specifying the passages in which the clerk is said to have offended in such a manner as to bring him within the cognizance of the Court at the present period, namely, a passage or passages written and published by the clerk in those books which he is alleged to have written and published within the last two years.

We must now go to the 6th article, upon which the 18th article is founded. In that 6th article there is a somewhat nearer approach to a recognition, but still very far from being an actual adoption,—a somewhat nearer approach, say, to a recognition of the alleged erroneous doctrine by Mr. Bennett, in consequence of the peculiar wording of his reference to a work published, not by himself, but by Dr. Pusey, some considerable time since.

The passage is as follows:—"Then followed, in 1855, your voluminous work." Then the framer of the article says, "meaning thereby the work of the Rev. E. B. Pusey, entitled, 'The Doctrine of the Real Presence as contained in the Fathers from the death of S. John the Evangelist to the Fourth General Council vindicated, in Notes on a Sermon, "The Presence of Christ in the Holy Eucharist," preached A.D. 1853 before the University of Oxford.'" And Mr. Bennett goes on, "being principally a catena of the Fathers, to prove the catholicity of the doctrine which you advocated. And then followed again, in 1857, in order to bring the doctrine fully home, and apply it to the English Church, another volume, concerning which there could be no mistake, for it bore this remarkable title, 'The Real Presence of the Body and Blood of Our Lord Jesus Christ the Doctrine of the English Church, with a Vindication of the Reception by the Wicked, and of the Adoration of Our Lord Jesus Christ truly present.' And then followed upon this the work of our most dearly lamented friend John Keble, entitled, 'Eucharistical Adoration,' in which is clearly set forth that very worship which we are now endeavouring to follow, that very adoration which we now teach our people to use as due and right to give to the 'Presence of our Blessed Lord upon our altars.'"

K

The first remark to be made upon that quotation is this, that it is quite clear that Mr. Bennett is not adverting to the doctrine of the reception by the wicked, because if that had been so, and if he was referring to Dr. Pusey's pamphlet as indicating the truth of that peculiar error (if such it be), then the promoter would have found the passage in Mr. Bennett's own work. He would have set forth the passage in which Mr. Bennett, speaking of that doctrine, cites Dr. Pusey with approbation as supporting him in that view. What is quite clear from the ending of the passage is this, that he is here supporting the doctrine of the Adoration and the doctrine of the Real Presence. Those are subjects on which have been framed other articles, as to which he is called upon by the learned judge in the Court below to answer. The articles exist upon both those heads, and those articles he will have to answer. Dealing with that, he says in effect that the catholicity of the doctrine advocated by Dr. Pusey has been fully brought home to the English Church. Then he gives the title of the work, which involves three subjects, the Real Presence, the Reception by the Wicked, and the Adoration of our Lord as being present. These are all totally distinct heads of doctrine. Then he says, to shew to which he is referring, "And then followed upon this the work of our most dearly lamented friend John Keble, entitled, 'Eucharistical Adoration,' in which is clearly set forth that very worship which we are now endeavouring to follow, that very adoration which we now teach our people to use," and so on.

It is clear, therefore, what are the particular points, as clear as the previous case to which he is calling attention, namely, the Real Presence and the Adoration; and it is too much to say that, because a title embodies three subjects, and the respondent speaks approvingly of the work, and speaks of it as establishing the doctrine as to two of those subjects, therefore he is to be held as having expressed approbation as to the third doctrine contained in the title-page. Although he intimates that he is glad to receive the book, because there can be no mistake on the particular points which he wishes to hold forth to the public as being the right and proper doctrine, there is no ground for coming to the conclusion that, because he thus approves, as he does clearly approve, of the work as supporting these two doctrines, therefore ex necessitate he must be held to approve of the third doctrine, and that, consequently, such work of Dr. Pusey is to be held forth as a ground for supporting the 18th article. In other words, it would be to make him answerable for Dr. Pusey's doctrine without his having distinctly and avowedly in words adopted it.

In the 7th article, which is referred to in the 25th, and, indeed, both in the 6th and 7th articles, there is another passage, on which it is alleged that the learned Judge in the Court below ought to have admitted the 25th article. I am reading from the 6th article, where the words are,—“That the said propositions so hereinbefore in this article referred to as having been maintained by the said Archdeacon Denison are certain propositions maintained by him in certain works or writings, for which he was cited to appear before the then Archbishop of Canterbury, under 3 & 4 Vict. c. 86, at a Court held by his Grace in the city of Bath, in the year 1856, and are as follows:—

 ‘1. That the body and blood of Christ are really present in the consecrated bread and wine. 2. That the body and blood of Christ are really present in the consecrated bread and wine after a manner not material, or, as it is said “corporeal,” but immaterial and spiritual. 3. That the body and blood of Christ being really present after an immaterial and spiritual manner in the consecrated bread and wine are therein and thereby given to all, and are received by all who come to the Lord’s Table.’”

Now, Mr. Bennett has not given his explicit approbation to those three propositions which are cited by the pleader, and only cited by the pleader, as being the propositions which were in question in Archdeacon Denison’s case; but all he has said is this:—“We have the celebrated legal case of Archdeacon Denison. Archdeacon Denison maintained, in various propositions, the real objective presence of our Blessed Lord in the Eucharist. His doctrine was impugned, and he was cited before the Church Courts. The Archbishop of Canterbury, in propria persona, came to Bath to try the question. It broke down.” There, again, he is only saying exactly what he said before. He says that the archdeacon maintained the doctrine of the Real Presence, and the pleader puts it thus:—“Besides that, there were several other doctrines, and because there were I have a right to hold Mr. Bennett answerable as having set forth now within these two years passages in which he impugns the 29th Article of the Church of England.”

The 25th article, which refers to the 7th, is in the same words as the 18th, and subject to exactly the same remarks. It refers to the 7th article; and on page 20 of the appendix the passage is found again about Mr. Keble and the Eucharistic Adoration. At the bottom of page 20 the words are:—“Archdeacon Denison maintained in various propositions the real objective presence of our Blessed Lord in the Eucharist. His doctrine was impugned, and he was cited before the Church Courts.” All that has been read before, and also the passage about the Archbishop of Canterbury in propria persona going down to try the question. Then it goes on:—“Nothing could be shewn to prove that it was a false doctrine, or to dislodge the archdeacon from the position which he then maintained, and still does maintain, and, maintaining, is still Archdeacon of Taunton. Is it fair, then, to ignore this matter of history, these facts known universally; and, when they thus stand out unassailable, to treat them as though they never had been? Is it fair, when the doctrines have thus been proved over and over again to be true, still to recur to them, and pronounce them false, and to say that ceremonies, because they symbolize them, and draw with them a reverential worship attached to them, make us idolatrous?”

Then the pleader sets out the propositions, and he wishes to fasten his logic upon Mr. Bennett as being Mr. Bennett’s logic, and to treat the propositions of Archdeacon Denison as being propositions adhered to by Mr. Bennett, upon which he is entitled to rely as impugning, on the part of Mr. Bennett, the 29th Article.

Now, I confess, having gone through those passages, it seems to me (and their Lordships appear to concur) that the articles which are to specify the doctrines impugned must specify the opinions which the clerk has advisedly maintained, and they must set forth the passages in which those opinions are maintained. It is not a compliance with those requisites to set forth other passages in works which he has approved of generally, because those works contain passages which that clerk has not by his own publication supported, maintained, or accepted in their totality and generality. No man certainly would be safe if it were to be held that, because approbation is expressed by him of a particular writer upon topics such as these, where the shades of opinion of all men are so minute, and so very delicate and refined, according to the turn of each person's mind—he were to be made answerable for opinions as being his which are not his, but are contained in some work of the general character of which he has expressed his approbation.

It appears, therefore, to their lordships that the learned Judge was justified on that ground in directing the articles to be reformed in the particulars which he has mentioned, because the articles do not set forth the passages from Mr. Bennett's work in which Mr. Bennett maintains any doctrine impugning the 29th Article.

As to what may subsequently take place in the Court below it is not for their Lordships to pronounce an opinion. They have merely to deal with the appeal as it comes before them. They have simply to say whether the Judge was right or not in directing the articles to be reformed to the extent to which he has directed them to be reformed.

Therefore, being of the same opinion as the learned Judge, their lordships will humbly recommend to Her Majesty that the appeal be dismissed; and, as Mr. Bennett has not appeared, there will be nothing said about costs.

Proctors—Moore & Currey.

[IN THE COURT OF ARCHES.]

1870.
June 16, 17, 18. } SHEPPARD v. BENNETT.
July 23.

Doctrine of the Holy Eucharist—Real Presence—Eucharistic Sacrifice—Adoration.

The doctrine of a visible presence of our Lord in the Holy Eucharist is at variance with all the formularies of the Church of England upon the subject, at variance with the language of the service of the Holy Communion, of the 28th Article of Religion, and of the Catechism; but to describe the mode of presence as "objective, real, actual, and spiritual" is not contrary to the law.

It is lawful for a clergyman to speak in some sense of the "Eucharistic Sacrifice," and therefore in some sense also of the "sacrifice offered by the priest," and the "sacrificial character" of the holy table. Where accordingly, when treating of the doctrine of sacrifice, the defendant, a clerk in holy orders, used language which was consistent with the doctrine of a sacrament of commemoration, and did not necessarily imply a sacrifice of propitiation, it was held that he had not exceeded the liberty of expression which the law allows upon the subject.

Though the adoration of the consecrated elements may not, the adoration of the spiritual presence of Christ in the Eucharist may lawfully be maintained, and accordingly, it does not contravene the law of the Church to thus speak of the Eucharist: "Who myself adore and teach the people to adore Christ present in the sacrament, under the form of bread and wine, believing that under their veil is the sacred body and blood of my Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ."

This was a criminal suit promoted against the Rev. William James Early Bennett, clerk, Vicar of Frome Selwood, in the county of Somerset, and diocese of Bath and Wells, for maintaining and promulgating heretical doctrines. The heresy charged against the defendant was contained in certain works printed and published by him, entitled "Some Results of the Tractarian Movement of 1833" (an essay in a book entitled "The Church and the World"), and "A Plea for Toleration in the Church of England, in a Letter to the Rev. E. B. Pusey, D.D., Regius Professor of Hebrew, and Canon of Ch. Ch., Oxford," 2nd and 3rd editions. It was charged that in those works the defendant maintained and affirmed the following doctrine:—First, The actual presence of our Lord in the sacrament of the Lord's supper. Second, The visible presence of our Lord upon the altar or table of the holy communion. Third, That there is a sacrifice at the time of the celebration of the Eucharist. Fourth, That adoration or worship is due to the consecrated elements of the Lord's Supper.

In proof of these charges, the subjoined extracts, among others from the works in question, were relied upon:—

"Some Results of the Tractarian Movement of 1833."

(A.) "The real question as to the success of any work must be determined by its ultimate, not by its immediate results; by its generally pervading character, not by local or temporary failures. We must compare the position of the Church as she was before the year 1833, not with those unhappy periods when a momentary pressure was laid upon her, such as that of the Durham Letter, the Jerusalem Bishopric, or the Gorham Judgment, at all which periods the weak and the unstable fell to the ground bewildered; but we must compare 1833 with 1867. We must look at the doctrines as then maintained with those now maintained, and that generally; we must look at the character and lives of the clergy, at the hold which the Church has upon the poor; we must look, not at her episcopal representation in the House of Lords, but at her sacerdotal representation at her altars, and her doctrinal representation in her pulpits and her schools. When we have done this, but not till then, shall we be able to say what have been the results of the Tracts for the Times."

(B.) "The doctrine of the Holy Eucharist. Two questions are here involved; the doctrine of sacrifice and of the real presence. Dr. Newman tells us, in his Apologia, 'when a correspondent, in good faith, wrote to a newspaper to say that the sacrifice of the Holy Eucharist spoken of in the tract, was a false print for sacrament, I thought the mistake too pleasant to be corrected before I was asked about it.' This may be a fair representation of the doctrine held by the general average of the bishops and clergy at that time; and of course, therefore, in the world any idea of a sacrifice in the blessed Eucharist would have been a chimera. An act of memorial—an agape or love feast, a solemn record of Jesus' passion and death—that would have been the sum total of the general idea of the Holy Eucharist in those days."

(C.) "When Dr. Pusey, in 1843, put forth his remarkable sermon, entitled, Holy Communion, a Comfort for the Penitent, the world was startled. Yes:—and much more than the world: the learned university itself was startled. The sermon stated, 'The same reality of the divine gift makes it angel's food to the saint, and a ransom to the sinner. And both because it is the body and blood of CHRIST. Were it only a thankful commemoration of His redeeming love, or only a shewing forth of His death, or only a strengthening and refreshing of the soul, it were indeed a reasonable service, but it could have no direct healing to the sinner. To him its special joy is, that it is his Redeemer's very broken body; it is His blood which was shed for the remission of his sins. In the words of the ancient Church, 'he drinks his ransom,' he eateth 'the very body and blood of the Lord, the only sacrifice for sin.' God poureth out for him 'the most precious blood of His only begotten; they are fed from the Cross of the Lord,' because they eat His body and blood.' For this doctrine, this holy comforting doctrine, this true Catholic doctrine—who would believe it now?—our dear friend was absolutely condemned by the University of Oxford and suspended for two years. But, patience! The learned University of Oxford had to learn as well as the rest of the world—it condemned because it was ignorant—time advanced—the same Doctor preached again when his suspension was over, and reiterated the condemned doctrine. Ten years had passed, and the same sermon was continued as though nothing had intervened, and then the doctrine was received. How dignified, how grand, how noble was that patient waiting for the teaching of time! The second sermon is entitled, The Presence of Christ in the Holy Eucharist. The sermon states, 'The presence of which our Lord speaks has been termed sacramental, supernatural, mystical, ineffable, opposed not to what is real, but to what is natural. It is a presence without us, not within us only: a presence by virtue of our Lord's words, although to us it becomes a saving presence, received to our salvation through our faith..... The word body is no figure. For our Lord says, 'This is My body;' and not so only, but 'This is My body which is given for you.' Since then it was His true body which was given for us on the Cross, it is His true body which is given to us in the Sacrament. The manner of the presence of the body is different. The body which is present is the same; for He has said, 'This is My body which is given for you.'"

(D.) "The priests or priest and deacon, formerly standing with faces opposite each other, and leaning over the altar in apparently amicable conference, now appear in their sacerdotal position, as though they were in reality occupied in the great sacrifice which it is their office to offer. Formerly, an ordinary surplice, and frequently not over clean or seemly, covered the person of the ministering priest, no difference being manifested between that and all other offering of prayer; now the ancient vestments present to crowds of worshippers the fact, that here before God's altar is something far higher, far more awful, more mysterious, than aught that man can speak of, namely, the presence of the Son of God in human flesh subsisting. And towards this are tending all the ancient rites of the Church which are now in course of restoration. The solemn music and the smoke of the incense go up before God, assuring the world that here is no appearance only of love, but a reality and a depth which human hearts cannot fathom, nor even the angels themselves. The incense is the mediation of Jesus ascending from the altar to plead for the sins of man."

A Plea for Toleration in the Church of England, second edition :—

(E.) "The greater part of the priesthood does now maintain and set forth without flinching those doctrines which were then" (that is, in the year 1830) "to say the least, held in abeyance. To speak only of myself, I have worked steadily onwards as far as my humble powers have enabled me, cheered and instructed by The Tracts for the Times, and your own" (that is to say, the said Rev. E. B. Pusey's) "more special teaching in Oxford to 'contend earnestly for the faith once delivered unto the saints'—that faith seeming to me to derive its whole efficacy from a right appreciation, primarily of the doctrine of the incarnation, and, depending on that, the real, and actual, and visible presence of our Lord upon the altars of our churches. Without that doctrine as containing and inferring the sacerdotal office of the priest and the sacrificial character of the altar, there would seem to me no Church at all. It could not but be that somehow the words of our blessed Lord must be true—'Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of Man and drink His blood, ye have no life in you.'"

(F.) "In proportion as the doctrines of the real presence and Eucharistic sacrifice have found their way into the faith of congregations, so have ceremonial observances increased, and have become more and more acceptable. That which I taught first in 1842 I have naturally followed up when the opportunity came; and it is now my happiness to say, that I have been enabled, with God's blessing, to realise many things in the dignified observance of the blessed sacrament which I then only dreamed of as possible. I have been enabled to revive the ancient Catholic vestments, and to use, together with them, many beautiful ceremonies, which, though of late years fallen into desuetude, always formed a part of the service of the Eucharist in olden times."

(G.) "Our Eucharistic office, instead of being, as in too many instances it used to be, mutilated, and curtailed of its fair portions, and very often a mere dead piece of formalism, has become a living, real, spiritual offering of Jesus Christ upon the altar."

(H.) "Well, I do not know what others of my brethren in the priesthood may think—I do not wish to compromise them by anything that I say or do—but seeing that I am one of those who burn lighted candles at the altar in the daytime; who use incense at the holy sacrifice; who use the eucharistic vestments; who elevate the blessed sacrament; who myself adore, and teach the people to adore, the consecrated elements, believing Christ to be in them; believing that under their veil is the sacred body and blood of my Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ;—seeing all this it may be conceived that I cannot rest very much at ease under the imputations above recited."

(I.) "Is it really the case that the Church of Rome is the only communion in which men may hold the doctrines of the real presence and the eucharistic sacrifice, and be in proportion reverential in their devotions and adore God in that blessed offering? Is the Church of England to stand aloof and be singular in the aspect of a dead intellectual monotony, excluding all that has faith, passion, love, or feeling in her devotions?"

(K.) "It is not for a chasuble or a cope, lighted tapers or the smoke of incense, the mitre or the pastoral staff, that we are contending; but, as all those who think deeply on either side of the question know full well, for the doctrines which lie hidden under them. No one of the commonest capacity would either undergo the trouble or encounter the expense which is unavoidably connected with the proper observance of religious ceremonies, if it were only for the external show which was to be gained in them."

(L.) "The Church of England, as all Catholic churches, is agreed upon this, and, therefore, the Bishop of London, though he may not be so just, is still in his generation the wiser (if he desire at once to go to the root of the matter) not to heed the ritual but plunge at once into the doctrine. Let us ascertain, then, what the doctrine is which is brought into question. It is threefold—I. The real objective presence of Our Blessed Lord; II. The sacrifice offered by the priest; and III. The adoration due to the presence of Our Blessed Lord in the Holy Eucharist."

A Plea for Toleration in the Church of England, third edition :—

(M.) "I therefore send forth this third edition with as little comment as possible, and in precisely the same language as that which was used in the first and second editions, save and except the two passages referred to, omitting also the postscript, which, by the events in the Church which have occurred in the interval, has now no bearing on the subject. The reader will observe that in the two first editions, at page 3, the words were:—'The real actual and visible presence of our Lord upon the altars of our churches.' In the present edition he will find at page 2 the following words substituted:—'The real and actual presence of our Lord under the form of bread and wine upon the altars of our churches.' He will also observe that at page 14, in the former editions, the words were:—'Who myself adore and teach the people to adore the consecrated elements, believing Christ to be in them—believing that under their veil is the sacred body and blood of my Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.' He will now find the following words substituted:—'Who myself adore and teach the people to adore Christ present in the Sacrament, under the form of bread and wine, believing that under their veil is the sacred body and blood of my Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.' My meaning and that which passed through my mind in writing the original passages was precisely the same as that which is now conveyed in the words substituted, but as the original words were liable to a different construction from that in which I used them, I therefore most willingly in this edition adopt another formula to express my meaning. The formula now adopted, and which, without any doubt, will convey the doctrine of the real presence, as the Church would teach it, has been suggested to me by him whose name stands at the head of this pamphlet" (the Rev. E. B. Pusey, D.D.); "one to whom the whole Church would implicitly bow and all revere. I have no hesitation in adopting his words as my own fully and completely, and on this basis am ready with him patiently to contend for the faith once delivered to the saints, and, if need be, gladly to suffer."

(N.) "The three great doctrines on which the Catholic Church has to take her stand are these:—I. The real objective presence of our Blessed Lord in the Eucharist; II. The sacrifice offered by the priest; and III. The adoration due to the presence of our Blessed Lord therein."

[The defendant did not appear, and the proceedings were carried on in pœnam. The case was heard on the 16th, 17th, and 18th of June.]

A. J. Stephens (with him Dr. Tristram, Archibald, and B. Shaw), for the promoter, contended that on the subject of the Lord's Supper, the doctrine which was held and taught by the Church of England was this:—That the natural body of Christ, that is the true actual human body, now, in a glorified and spiritual condition, is in Heaven, and not here. That, consequently, there is no presence of the true body of Christ in the elements at any time. That the body and blood are not present upon consecration in the elements on the altar, or in the hand of the minister. That the body of Christ is not received by the hand or mouth of the communicant, nor by any corporal mode of reception, but only in a heavenly and spiritual manner, by the means of faith alone—that is to say, the body of Christ is given by God only, and not by the priest—is eaten by the soul only, and not by the mouth. That, since the body and blood of Christ are not present in the elements on the altar, nor in the hands of the priest, there can be no offering or sacrifice of the body and blood of Christ made by the priest to God. That such supposed sacrifice of Christ by the priest is derogatory to the one single and all-sufficient sacrifice of the death of Christ, made, once for all, upon the Cross. That,—since the true substance of bread and wine remains in the consecrated elements, and may not be adored without idolatry; and since the true body and blood are in Heaven, and not in the elements, and therefore may not therein be adored,—no adoration is due, or ought to be done to or towards the sacramental elements. And that the doctrines maintained and promulgated by the defendant were consequently in direct opposition to the authoritative teaching of the Church, and contravened its formularies.

Cur. adv. vult.

The following judgment was delivered on the 23rd of July by SIR R. J. PHILLIMORE.—This is a criminal suit in which the office of the judge is promoted in this Court by virtue of letters of request from the late Bishop of Bath and Wells. The promoter of the office is Mr. Sheppard, a parishioner of Frome Selwood; the defendant is the Rev. William James Early Bennett, vicar of that parish. The defendant has not appeared, and the proceedings are therefore carried on in pœnam.

The admission of the articles was moved before me on the 26th of October, 1869 ; and on the 30th of that month I directed the articles "to be reformed, by omitting all such parts thereof as charge the respondent with contravening the 29th Article of Religion, entitled 'Of the Wicked which eat not the Body of Christ in the use of the Lord's Supper.'"

From this an appeal was prosecuted, by permission of the Court, to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, who on the 26th of March, 1870, affirmed the judgment of this Court ; and on the 8th of April the cause was by order in Council duly remitted to me. No further steps, however, were taken in the prosecution of the suit until the 3rd of June ; nor was the remission filed until shortly before that time, after I had thought it my duty to call attention in open Court to the delay, it being the established practice of the Court to dismiss a suit when not conducted with all reasonable expedition.

I have been informed that the delay was occasioned by an unsuccessful application to the present Bishop of Bath and Wells for further letters of request, in order to warrant a fresh charge against the defendant. I am of opinion, however, that the instrument of remission ought to have been filed immediately on execution ; and for the future I shall expect that this course be taken.

Nature of the Charge.

The defendant is charged with the maintenance and promulgation of certain heresies alleged to be contained in an essay entitled "Some Results of the Tractarian Movement of 1833," contained in a book entitled The Church and the World ; and also in the second and third editions of a pamphlet entitled "A Plea for Toleration in the Church of England, in a letter to the Rev. E. B. Pusey, D.D., Regius Professor of Hebrew, and Canon of Ch. Ch., Oxford." The formal evidence respecting the position of Mr. Bennett as a beneficed clerk in holy orders, and that which was requisite to establish the authorship and publication of the works in question has been duly given in this Court.

The criminal articles charge the defendant with having promulgated certain doctrines respecting the Holy Communion which may be classed under the following categories :—
1. Opinions with respect to the presence of our Lord in the Blessed Sacrament ; 2. Opinions with respect to a sacrifice said to be offered in the administration of that Sacrament ; 3. Opinions with respect to the adoration of the consecrated elements and of our Lord in that Sacrament. It is alleged in the criminal articles that Mr. Bennett has promulgated opinions upon all these subjects which are heretical, and which contravene the formularies of our Church.

In two former judgments I have stated that in order fully to understand and duly to construe these formularies, one fundamental truth must be borne in mind—namely, that the end and object of our Church was so to reform her doctrine and ritual as to bring them into general harmony with those of the Primitive Catholic Undivided Church.

This truth is indeed elementary to all who have studied the ecclesiastical history of England, and examined the legal foundations upon which the Church was established in these realms ; nevertheless, it is a truth to which in former litigation, perhaps I may be permitted to say, due prominence has scarcely been given, or which has been occasionally lost sight of in the multiplicity of facts and details which surround the gradual progress of that epoch which is somewhat vaguely called the Reformation in this kingdom.

It was, perhaps, never more clearly stated than in the quaint but vigorous language of the very learned Donne, when preaching on the observance of Trinity Sunday, he said, "which day, our Church, according to that peaceful wisdom, wherewithal the God of peace, of unity, and concord, had inspired her, did in the Reformation retain and continue, out of her general religious tenderness, and holy loathness to innovate anything in those matters which might be safely, and without superstition, continued and entertained. For our Church, in the Reformation, proposed not that for her end, how she might go from Rome, but how she might come to the truth ; nor to cast away all such things as Rome had depraved, but to purge away those depravations, and conserve the things themselves, so restored to their first good use.—Donne's Works, Vol. II. Ser. xlii. p. 248.

I have again drawn attention to this legal and historical fact, because on no subject, perhaps, has it a more important bearing than on the subject of the due construction of those parts of our formularies which relate to the Holy Sacraments.

Historical Notice of the Formularies.

Some historical notice of these formularies in their relation to the sacraments naturally precedes a consideration of their true meaning and construction.

Early in the year 1530 the first Confession of the Saxon Reformers was presented at the Diet in Augsburg to the Emperor Charles V. This document, known as the "Confession of Augsburg," appears to have influenced the first formularies of faith drawn up in England after the rejection of the Papal supremacy by Convocation in 1534. The 13th Article of the Confession, "de usu sacramentorum," teaches that sacraments are not only badges (note) of our Christian calling, but rather signs and testimonies of God's will towards us, ordained for the purpose of exciting and confirming faith. It also condemns those who maintained that sacraments justify "ex opere operato," and neglected to teach that faith is required to the profitable use of sacraments. — Hardwick's History of the Articles, p. 28. The 10th Article, "De cœnâ Domini," declares that the body and blood of Christ are truly present (Wahrhaftiglich unter Gestalt des Brots und Weins im Abendmahl gegenwärtig sey) (vere adsint), and are distributed to the recipients. It also censures those who maintained a contrary tenet. — Hardwick's History of the Articles, p. 27.

Meanwhile the Church of England had her full share of the religious trouble which distracted the rest of Christendom, and during which "the favourers of the old and the new learning," according to a phrase current at that time, arranged themselves, the former under the leadership of Gardiner, Bishop of Winchester, and the latter under Cranmer and Ridley; and there sprang up a variety of sects, among which the Anabaptists were conspicuous, threatening the destruction of the Church. In 1536 appeared the ten English Articles of Religion, which were probably composed by a committee of divines, over whom Henry VIII. either personally, or by means of his Vicar-General, presided. The 4th Article was entitled the "Sacrament of the Altar," and set forth that "under the form and figure of bread and wine, which we there presently do see and perceive by outward senses, is substantially and really comprehended the very self-same body and blood of our Saviour, which was born of the Virgin Mary, and suffered upon the cross for our redemption;" that "the very self-same body and blood of Christ, under the same form of bread and wine, is corporally, really, and in very substance, exhibited, distributed, and received unto and of all them which receive the said Sacrament; and that as a consequence the Sacrament is to be used with all due reverence and honour, and after careful self-examination." — Hardwick's History of the Articles, p. 54.

It is very doubtful whether these Articles were ever sanctioned by Convocation; their direct influence, whatever it was, appears to have been destroyed, by the promulgation of another formulary of faith, entitled "The Institution of a Christian Man," which was published in the following year, 1536, upon which (Hardwick's History of the Articles, p. 59) these articles were to a great extent engrafted. It was called the Bishops' Book, and the influence of Cranmer and Ridley prevailed when it was compiled. It contained, among other things, an exposition of the Seven Sacraments, and an article on "The Sacrament of the Altar," which taught that under the form and figure of bread and wine verily, substantially, and really was contained the very self-same body of our Saviour Christ which had been born and crucified; and that "the very self-same body and blood of Christ is corporally, really, and in the very substance, exhibited, distributed, and received of all them which receive the Sacrament."

In 1543, the next Formulary, entitled "The Necessary Doctrine and Erudition of a Christian Man," or "the King's Book," was published. It appears to have been approved by Convocation. — Jenkyns' Cranmer, I.—XXXVII., s. 188, 189 [note]. — Hardwick on the Articles, 59 [note]. It may be observed that the account given by Burnet on this point, as indeed on many others, is loose and inaccurate. — Archbp. Laurence, Bampton Lect. 1. Note 4.

This work was in great measure a revised edition of the Bishops' Book; but of it Collier not unjustly observes, "it seems mostly to lose ground and reform backwards" — Eccl. Hist., Vol. II., 191. In fact the influence of Gardiner caused the restoration in this work of some exclusively Roman doctrines which had been omitted in the Bishops' Book.

In the meanwhile, however, it appears that with a view to effect an agreement between the Augsburg reformers and the Church of England, thirteen Articles were compiled in 1538, under the influence of Cranmer. They never obtained any legal status, but it seems certain that they had great influence on the present Articles, if indeed they were not their groundwork. — Hardwick on the Articles, p. 69.

After this time, Henry VIII. carried on some negotiations with the German reformers, as to adopting in a greater or less degree the tenets of the council of Augsburg. But various circumstances gave Bishop Gardiner an ascendancy over Henry, to which we owe "the bloody statute of the Six Articles," which was enacted by convocation and Parliament in 1539 (31 Hen. 8. c. 14), and by which the belief in the doctrine of Transubstantiation was enforced. This Act was repealed by 1 Edw. 6. c. 12, in 1547.

On the accession of Edward VI. in 1547,

L

Cranmer's influence was very great, and entirely prevailed over that of Gardiner and his colleagues. In that year, it is not unimportant to observe, the first book of Homilies was put forth under the auspices of Cranmer.

In 1548, the King appointed Cranmer and other divines "to draw an order of divine worship, having respect to the pure religion of Christ in the Gospel, and to the practice of the primitive Church."

The result was, our first Prayer Book of 1548. The Act was passed early in 1549.

In 1548, Cranmer put forth on his own authority a catechism translated from the original of Justus Jonas. It was of a decidedly Lutheran character.—Archbp. Lawrence, Bampton Lect., 16, 17 [note].

In 1552, the second Prayer Book was published.

In the same year appeared the forty-two Articles of religion; and Cranmer in this compilation made great use of the Augsburg confession.

The "Necessary Doctrine of a Christian Man," except in so far as it was modified by the Prayer Book, and perhaps by the Homilies, was still the standard of belief until the promulgation of the forty-two Articles. They were promulgated under the authority of the Crown in Latin and English in 1553; they were said to have been "agreed on by the Bishops and other learned and godly men." It is doubtful whether they ever received the sanction of convocation; they were not enacted by Parliament.

Cranmer and Ridley were the chief compilers of the Prayer Book and of these Articles.

In the compilation of the latter it is probable that Cranmer had the greater share.

The subject of the Holy Eucharist presented the greatest difficulty to the compilers of our formularies. Whether regard was had to the expediency of uniting reformed Churches abroad, or members of the Church at home, Cranmer's opinion on this subject inclined to that of Luther, but his erudition was chiefly if not entirely derived from Ridley.—Hook's Lives of the Archbishops of Canterbury, Vol. II., N.S., p. 365.

From what source this prelate derived his opinion is therefore a matter of great moment, to be hereafter considered. In this place I will only notice that there is a not unimportant difference between the Article as to the Lord's Supper in this compilation, and the Article on that subject in the compilations of 1562 and 1571.

Queen Elizabeth succeeded to the throne in 1558, and the master-mind which presided over the next compilation of the Articles was that of Archbishop Parker. The second Prayer Book of Edward VI. was restored with certain alterations; but, though Parker was from the first anxious to recast the Articles of religion, it was not till the year 1562 that they were discussed by convocation, and having been adopted by it, were ratified by the Crown in 1563. No subscription, however, was required to the Articles till the year 1571, when it was enforced both by a Canon of Convocation and an Act of the Legislature.

It is to be observed with respect to the Articles of 1563, that the Latin copy, which was legally binding upon the clergy, did not contain the 29th Article, as to the reception of the Eucharist by the wicked. This 29th Article does, however, appear in the authorized version of the Articles of 1571, though there is reason to doubt whether it ever was comprised "in the book imprinted," to which in the most singular manner the statute 13 Eliz. c. 12 alone refers as an authority for the Articles.

The second book of the Homilies was first published in the year 1562.

The first part of the Catechism was a portion of Edward VI.'s First Prayer Book; but the latter part, which relates to the holy Sacraments, was added by the authority of James I., after the Hampton Court Conference, and was probably written by Bishop Overall, then Dean of St. Paul's; to it the present Act of Uniformity, 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 2, gives the force of a statute.

When the last and present Prayer Book was enacted by the statute of Charles II., some alterations were made in the service of the Holy Communion which will require notice hereafter, but the Articles, Catechism, and Canons underwent no change.

Historical Notice of the Doctrine of the Holy Eucharist.

To this brief historical and legal sketch of the formularies of our Church in their relation to her doctrine of the Holy Eucharist, I will add a few words as to the position which this doctrine occupied before and during the time when these various formularies were put forth.

For more than 800 years "no curious and intricate speculations," to use Hooker's weighty language, Vol. II., p. 3, hindered or abated the faith of Christendom in the words of the Divine Founder of this Holy Sacrament. The command "Take, eat, this is my body; drink ye all of this, this is my blood," was obeyed with holy reverence, present joy, and unenquiring faith. The whole undivided Church believed in the great mystery of a presence of our Lord in the Eucharist.

The language of the Fathers on this subject indeed was often ardent, mystical, and rhetorical, adapted to persuade and to induce practice rather than to convince by accurate reasoning or strict logic; and in their writings both the supporters of a carnal presence in the elements and of the doctrine of no presence have sought in later times for a confirmation of their respective tenets. But these writings, it must be remembered, were the works of men who wrote without the necessity for accurate precision of language, which an existing controversy on the subject written about imposes on the writer, for no controversy then existed as to the mode in which Christ was present in this Sacrament, though it may be observed in passing that distinct statements of a spiritual presence in the elements are to be found in these writings. Bishop of Ely on the Articles, pp. 679, 680.

In the middle of the ninth century, Paschasius Radbert, Abbot of the Monastery of New Corbey, in Saxony, wrote a treatise in which he maintained or was supposed to maintain that after consecration the very body and blood, the same flesh in which Christ was born and in which He died, was physically substituted for the bread and wine, which, however, still appeared to remain. The doctrine was immediately protested against; the principal opponent had been a monk of the monastery of Old Corbey, and then presided over a monastery in Amiens, by name Ratramn (sometimes erroneously called Bertram). Ratramn, at the request of Charles the Bald, examined the book of Paschasius, and answered it, maintaining that the true doctrine of the Church was a real spiritual presence of Christ under the covering or veil (sub tegumento, velamine, specie) of the elements. This work became, from subsequent events, of great importance to the whole Church, and especially to the Church of England.

About the year 970, Ælfric, Abbot of Malmesbury, wrote a sermon of the Pascal Lamb and of the Sacramental Body and Blood of Christ, and a letter to Wulfstone, Archbishop of York, in both of which he maintained the doctrine of Ratramn, and in the former of which he reproduced the argument and some of the principal passages of Ratramn, "pœne ad verbum," as the learned Cave says.

From circumstances too numerous to be here stated, the new doctrine of Paschasius was upholden at Rome, and after many struggles and much persecution was finally embodied in the Fourth Latin Council of Lateran (A.D. 1215), by the new name, coined, as the great Canonist Suarez admits, for the purpose, of "transubstantiatio."

But in the fifteenth century, and at the time of the Reformation, this doctrine was again submitted to severe scrutiny; and, as has so often happened, the arbitrary and violent conduct of Rome in attempting to force upon the consciences of men an exclusive, uncatholic, and unjustifiable definition of a holy mystery, produced every kind of variety of opinions and speculation respecting it. The Greek Church has wisely refrained from such an attempt.—See Palmer's Treatise on the Church, vol. i. p. 172.) Cranmer, or at least Ridley, and afterwards Parker, endeavoured to steer a safe course, looking for the beacon of Catholic and primitive teaching as their guide. The Roman system generated that state of things which Durandus not inaptly describes,—

"Corpore de Christi lis est, de sanguine lis est,
"Deque modo lis est, non habitura modum." (1)

Germany and Switzerland teemed with differences of opinion on this subject.

The subtler doctors of Rome have sought to maintain transubstantiation by the averment that though the property of the elements was changed, the accidents of colour, shape, taste, &c., remained the same. Luther taught, or was supposed to teach, that the elements and the actual body were blended together; and his teaching has been designated, improperly, according to high authority, by the term "consubstantiation" or "impanation." Zwinglius taught that the Eucharist was a bare commemoration of the death of Christ, and the bread and wine merely tokens to remind us of His death (2).

(1) Cited by Bishop Forbes in his Consid. modesta, p. 380.

(2) The following verses are taken from Beaumont's "Psyche, or Love's Mystery, the intercourse between Christ and the Soul," 1642. He was Regius Professor of Divinity at Cambridge for twenty-nine years:—

"104.

"Needs will they peep into the manner how
This hidden miracle to pass was brought,
And madly, being not content to know
What Christ thought fit to teach them, study out
They know not what, and make this banquet prove
A Sacrament of war, and not of love."

"105.

"Some press too near, and spy what is not there,
Some carelessly take what is there away,
Some will confess no miracle, for fear
That consequent be ushered in, which they

It is probable that during the reign of Henry VIII., Cranmer had not ceased to believe in transubstantiation, though it is difficult to be at all certain upon this point. But with respect to Ridley, it is certain, not only that Ratramn "first pulled him by the ear" (Works, p. 206), to borrow Ridley's expression, but that he derived from the work of Ratramn (which appears to have been first printed at Geneva in 1532, and which he first became acquainted with in 1545), those opinions upon the presence which he ever afterwards maintained, and which he endeavoured, as it should seem successfully, to instil into Cranmer. — 3 Jenkyn's Cranmer, 143. — Hampden's Bampton Lectures. — 2 Robertson's Christian Church, 288 (note). — Bishop of Ely on the Articles, 704-5. — Ridley's Works, 166, 169.

It is perhaps even more remarkable that in the reign of Elizabeth the Anglo-Saxon Homily of Ælfric was printed by order of Archbishop Parker, who, as will presently be seen, subscribed it in company with his suffragans, as containing both the ancient and present teaching of the Church on the Presence. There are, indeed, two exceptions of passages manifestly stuffed in or "infarced," as the expression is, as a pious fraud by some believer in transubstantiation, but which were no part of the original Homily.

Upon the whole it will appear, I think, from an examination of the formularies, and from the language of the authorities which I am about to cite, that they were intended to set forth, and do set forth, the doctrine of a real spiritual Presence in the Holy Eucharist. It may be said with truth that on some formularies this doctrine is more doubtfully or more faintly impressed than on others; but the result which I have stated is not only the legal inference from the construction of all the formularies, but also especially from those which are in their nature the most important and as a matter of history, the latest in date. — Bishop of Ely on the Articles, 678. Though,

Resolve to stop, or that their faith should be,
Forced to confess more than their eyes can see."

"107.

"Some sift existence, substance, accidents,
Concomitance, through logick's busy sieve:
Trans, sub, and con, by strange experiments
They bould so long, that they themselves deceive:
For whilst to win the precious flower they strain,
The coarse and refuse bran is all they gain."

indeed, that there is a change in the holy elements after consecration, and that they then convey in a divine ineffable way the body and blood of Christ, seem necessary inferences from the language of the communion service alone.

When I come to examine the specific charges against the defendant, it will be my duty to consider whether the Church has defined in any way the mode of this Presence, and if so, whether she has defined it by an affirmative dogma, or whether she has contented herself with a declaration against particular modes, and, with the exception of those so declared against, left an entire liberty to her children upon this subject.

Principles of Judicial Construction applicable to Cases like the present.

The general position that the formularies of the Church do allow within certain limits a liberty of private opinion has been laid down by the Ecclesiastical Courts and by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. And I think it will be convenient to cite in this place the exact language which in various cases has been applied by these tribunals to this subject.

In the first reported case, that of H. M. Procurator General v. Stone, Lord Stowell, sitting in the Consistory of London, said:—

"I think myself bound at the same time to declare, that it is not the duty nor inclination of this Court to be minute and rigid in applying proceedings of this nature; and that if any Article is really a subject of dubious interpretation, it would be highly improper that this Court should fix on one meaning, and prosecute all those who hold a contrary opinion regarding its interpretation. It is a very different thing where the authority of the Articles is totally eluded, and the party deliberately declares the intention of teaching doctrines contrary to them."—H. M. Proctor v. Stone, 1 Consist. p. 428.

And in the case of Mr. Gorham the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council said:—

"There are other points of doctrine respecting the Sacrament of Baptism which we are of opinion are, by the rubrics and formularies (as well as by the Articles), capable of being honestly understood in different senses; and consequently we think that, as to them, the points which were left undetermined by the Articles are not decided by the rubrics and formularies, and that upon these points all ministers of the Church, having duly made the subscriptions required by law (and taking Holy Scripture for their guide), are at liberty honestly to exercise their private judgment without offence or censure.

"Upright and conscientious men cannot in all respects agree upon subjects so difficult; and it must be carefully borne in mind that the question and the only question for us to decide, is, whether Mr. Gorham's doctrine is contrary or repugnant to the doctrine of the Church of England as by law established. Mr. Gorham's doctrine may be contrary to the opinions entertained by many learned and pious persons, contrary to the opinion which such persons have, by their own particular studies, deduced from Holy Scripture, contrary to the opinion which they have deduced from the usages and doctrines of the Primitive Church, or contrary to the opinion which they have deduced from uncertain and ambiguous expressions in the formularies; still, if the doctrine of Mr. Gorham is not contrary or repugnant to the doctrine of the Church of England as by law established, it cannot afford a legal ground for refusing him institution to the living to which he has been lawfully presented."—Gorham v. Bishop of Exeter. The Gorham Case by E. F. Moore, p. 471.

"In the examination of this case, we have not relied upon the doctrinal opinions of any of the eminent writers, by whose piety, learning, and ability the Church of England has been distinguished; but it appears that opinions, which we cannot in any important particular distinguish from those entertained by Mr. Gorham, have been propounded and maintained, without censure or reproach, by many eminent and illustrious prelates and divines, who have adorned the Church from the time when the Articles were first established. We do not affirm that the doctrines and opinions of Jewel, Hooker, Usher, Jeremy Taylor, Whitgift, Pearson, Carlton, Prideaux, and many others, can be received as evidence of the doctrine of the Church of England, but their conduct, unblamed and unquestioned as it was, proves, at least, the liberty which has been allowed of maintaining such doctrine."—Gorham v. Bishop of Exeter. The Gorham Case by E. F. Moore, p. 472.

"We express no opinion on the theological accuracy of these opinions or any of them. The writers whom we have cited are not always consistent with themselves, nor are the reasons upon which they found their positions always valid; and other writers of great eminence, and worthy of great respect, have expressed very different opinions. But the mere fact that such opinions have been propounded and maintained by persons so eminent, and so much respected, as well as by very many others, appears to us sufficiently to prove that the liberty which was left by the Articles and Formularies has been actually enjoyed and exercised by the members and ministers of the Church of England."—Gorham v. Bp. of Exeter. The Gorham case by E. F. Moore, p. 474.

And in the case of Burder v. Heath, Dr. Lushington, who had been one of the Lords of the Privy Council in the Gorham case, sitting as Judge of the Court of Arches, observed:—

"And I apprehend that the course to be followed is, first, to endeavour to ascertain the plain grammatical sense of the Article of Religion said to be contravened, and if that Article admit of several meanings, without any violation of the ordinary rules of construction or the plain grammatical sense, then I conceive that the Court ought to hold that any such opinion might be lawfully avowed and maintained."

"If, indeed, any controversy arise whether any given meaning is within the plain grammatical construction, the Court must form the best judgment it can, with this assistance, as I have already said, that if the doctrine in question has been held without offence by eminent divines of the Church, then, though perhaps difficult to be reconciled with the plain meaning of the Articles of Religion, still a Judge in my position ought not to impute blame to those who hold it. That which has been allowed or tolerated in the Church ought not to be questioned by this Court."—Burder v. Heath, 15 Moore, p. 46.

And again the learned Judge says:—

"Before concluding, I think it right to explain why I do not advert to the many authorities which the zeal and learning of counsel have produced. My reason is this, that, in my judgment, not one of these authorities does that which was required in this case, namely, shew that some divine of eminence has held, without reproach from ecclesiastical authority, doctrines in substance the same as those Mr. Heath has promulgated; whatever opinions may have been held in the vast field of polemical divinity, I find none which support Mr. Heath or justify him. In the Gorham case the Judicial Committee had the advantage of being able to quote, in support of their judgment, and in justification of Mr. Gorham, passages from the writings of divines of the highest authority."—Burder v. Heath, 15 Moore, p. 64.

And again:—

"No explanation has been offered which in any way shews that Mr. Heath's opinions can be reconciled with the Articles, nor has any eminent divine been shewn to have shared his views. Mr. Heath therefore must be condemned by the Articles imposed by law, and which the law alone can change."—Burder v. Heath, Brodrick & Freemantle, Privy Council Judgments, p. 229.

In the recent case, commonly called the case of Essays and Reviews, Lord Westbury, delivering the judgment of the Privy Council, said:—

"Our province is, on the one hand, to ascertain the true construction of those Articles of Religion and formularies referred to in each charge, according to the legal rules for the interpretation of statutes and written instruments; and on the other hand, to ascertain the plain grammatical meaning of the passages which are charged as being contrary to or inconsistent with the doctrine of the Church, ascertained in the manner we have described."

"It is obvious that there may be matters of doctrine on which the Church has not given any definite rule or standard of faith or opinion; there may be matters of religious belief on which the requisition of the Church may be less than Scripture may seem to warrant; there may be very many matters of religious speculation and inquiry on which the Church may have refrained from pronouncing any opinion at all. On matters on which the Church has prescribed no rule, there is so far freedom of opinion that they may be discussed without penal consequences. Nor in a proceeding like the present are we at liberty to ascribe to the Church any rule or teaching which we do not find expressly and distinctly stated, or which is not plainly involved in or to be collected from that which is written."—Williams v. The Bishop of Salisbury, and Wilson v. Fendall, Moore's P.C. Rep. (N.S.) vol. ii. p. 425.

And again his Lordship said:—

"There remained the Communion Service and the Athanasian Creed. The material passage in the Communion Service is in these words: 'O terrible voice of the most just judgment which shall be pronounced upon them, when it shall be said unto them, Go, ye cursed, into the fire everlasting which is prepared for the Devil and his Angels.' In like manner the Athanasian Creed declares that they that have done evil shall go into everlasting fire. Of the meaning of these words, 'everlasting fire,' no interpretation is given in the formularies which are referred to in the charge. Mr. Wilson has urged in his defence that the word 'everlasting' in the English translation of the New Testament, and of the Creed of St. Athanasius, must be subjected to the same limited interpretation which some learned men have given to the original words which are translated by the English word 'everlasting,' and he has also appealed to the liberty of opinion which has always existed without restraint among very eminent English divines upon this subject."—Williams v. The Bishop of Salisbury, and Wilson v. Fendall, Moore's P.C. Rep. (N.S.) vol. ii. p. 432.

And again:—

"We are not required, or at liberty, to express any opinion upon the mysterious question of the eternity of final punishment, further than to say that we do not find in the formularies, to which this Article refers, any such distinct declaration of our Church upon the subject, as to require us to condemn as penal the expression of hope by a clergyman that even the ultimate pardon of the wicked, who are condemned in the day of judgment, may be consistent with the will of Almighty God."—Williams v. The Bishop of Salisbury, and Wilson v. Fendall, Moore's P.C. Rep. (N.S.) vol. ii. p. 433.

Special Charges.—1. Visible Presence of Our Lord in the Holy Eucharist.

The charge against the defendant which I purpose first to consider is contained in the 15th and 16th articles, and is founded on a passage in the second edition of his work, entitled A Plea for Toleration, &c. In that work he speaks "of the visible presence of our Lord upon the altars of our churches."

I have read these words with much surprise and sorrow.

If a private clergyman of the Church of England, holding no position which renders it in any way incumbent upon him to publish his opinions to the world at all, nevertheless steps out of the ordinary course of his parochial duty to discharge the office of a public writer upon the most awful mystery of our holy religion, the least that our Church has a right to expect from him is the knowledge and erudition of a theologian, and the use of the most careful and well considered language.

The great divines of our Church, feeling and knowing the mode of Christ's presence to be a mystery which is rather to be adored in the silence of the heart than made the subject of controversy, have, as it were, feared to tread when they approached the precincts of it; and, being well versed both in history and theology, knowing therefore how much hasty, ill-chosen, inadequate, and presumptuous expressions upon this subject have contributed to the schisms of Christendom, and fearful of leading others astray, have been silent, or, if it were necessary to speak, studiously guarded and reverently careful in their language.

"All things considered," says Hooker, "and compared with that success which truth hath hitherto had by so bitter conflicts with errors in that point, shall I wish that men would more give themselves to meditate with silence what we have by the sacrament, and less to dispute of the manner how? If any man suppose that this were too great stupidity and dulness, let us see whether the apostles of our Lord themselves have not done the like. It appeareth by many examples, that they of their own disposition were very scrupulous and inquisitive, yea, in other cases of less importance, and less difficulty, always apt to move questions. How cometh it to pass, that so few words of so high a mystery being uttered, they receive with gladness the gift of Christ, and make no shew of doubt or scruple."—Hooker, E. P., vol. ii., p. 3; ed. 1825.

"Where God himself doth speak those things, which either for height and solemnity of matter, or else for secrecy of performance, we are not able to reach unto, as we may be ignorant without danger, so it can be no disgrace to confess we are ignorant. Such as love piety will as much as in them lieth know all things that God commandeth, but especially the duties of service which they owe to God. As for his dark and hidden works, they prefer, as becometh them in such cases, simplicity of faith before that knowledge, which curiously sifting what it should adore, and disputing too boldly of that which the wit of man cannot search, chilleth for the most part all warmth of zeal, and bringeth soundness of belief many times into great hazard."—Ibid. p. 12.

Of the impropriety of his language the defendant seems to have been made aware; but, unfortunately, not until he had committed the very rash act of publishing it to the world. I have no hesitation in pronouncing that the expression "visible presence of our Lord upon the altars of our churches" is in its plain meaning at variance with all the formularies of our Church upon the subject, at variance with the language of the service of the Holy Communion, of the 28th Article, and of the Catechism.

The doctrine which it expresses, to use the language of our Articles, "overthroweth the nature of a sacrament," even more than transubstantiation.

I may add also, that whatever figurative language may be found in the sermons of eastern Fathers before controversy arose on this subject, I have not been able to find that such a doctrine has ever been maintained in the dogmatic teaching of our own or of any other branch of the Church.

I will consider presently the legal effect of the substitution in a later edition of other language than that which I have here condemned.

2. Other Modes of the Presence in the Holy Eucharist.

I have now to consider the charges, which relate to the modes of the presence in the Eucharist, other than that which I have condemned, and which form the subject of the 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, 14th, 17th, 21st, 22nd, 23rd, and 24th articles. I find them to be substantially as follows:—

That in the sacrament of the Lord's Supper there is an actual presence of the body and blood of our Lord in the consecrated bread and wine;

That there is an actual presence of the true body and blood of our Lord in the sacramental bread and wine, without or external to the communicant, by virtue of, upon and after the consecration of the same, irrespectively of the faith and worthiness of the communicant, so as to be received by all communicants irrespectively of their faith and worthiness;

That there is an actual presence of the true body and blood of our Lord in the consecrated bread and wine, without or external to the communicants prior to and separate from the act of reception by the communicants.

That in the Holy Communion the natural body and blood of our Saviour Christ are not only in heaven, but here, to wit, upon or before the altars or communion tables of the Church in the consecrated elements;

That in the Holy Communion the natural body and blood of our Saviour Christ are not only in heaven, but here, to wit, upon or before the altars or communion tables of the Church under the form or veil of bread and wine;

That the body and blood of our Lord are actually and objectively present upon the altars or communion tables of the Church under the form or veil of, and in the sacramental bread and wine, by virtue of, upon, and after the consecration of the same, irrespectively of the faith and worthiness of the communicant, so as to be received by all communicants irrespectively of their faith and worthiness;

That the body and blood of our Lord are actually and objectively present upon the altars (thereby referring to the communion tables) of the Church under the form or veil of, and in the consecrated bread and wine, prior to and separately from the act of reception by the communicants.

The first question for consideration is, whether the passages extracted from the work of the defendant do contain the opinions which are so charged against him. After an attentive perusal of the passages extracted, I have arrived at the conclusion that they do not contain the opinions relating to the presence of the natural body and blood of our Saviour which are charged in the 11th, 17th, and 24th articles.

The passage which makes the nearest approach to the support of this charge is, I think, in the extract lettered D. in the 5th article, where he speaks of "the fact, that here, before God's altar, is something far higher, far more awful, more mysterious, than aught that man can speak of, namely, the presence of the Son of God in human flesh subsisting." It seems to me that the author, whose language is lamentably loose and inaccurate, did not mean by these words any more than the presence of the incarnate Son of God, and did not mean to express any opinion as to the presence of his natural flesh and blood. And this opinion is confirmed by a comparison of the passage cited with other passages in his work, such as, for instance, one of the passages cited in the articles before me, lettered G. "a living real spiritual offering of Jesus Christ upon the altar," and the often repeated expression that the presence of which he speaks is one under the veil of the elements of the bread and wine, and various other passages which upon the whole lead me to the conclusion that he did not contemplate a physical or natural presence of our Lord. I therefore consider the criminal articles on this point, 11, 17, and 24, not to be proved.

With respect to the other charges, of which I have given the summary, and which are stated at length in the 8th, 9th, 10th, 14th, 21st, 22nd, and 23rd articles, I think that they do fairly represent the opinions of the defendant contained in the passages set out, with one exception, namely, the words "irrespectively of the faith and worthiness of the communicant," which appear to point to an offence against the 29th Article of religion, which was charged in the original articles and struck out by the Court. It may, however, be that these words are merely used in the sense of "prior to and separately from the act of reception by the communicants;" and if so, they seem to me to fairly represent the opinion of the defendant.

Object and Intention of the Formularies.

I have now to consider whether these opinions contravene the formularies of the Church, as contained in the passages set forth in the 28th article of charge.

The authority upon which our Church principally relied in her formularies with respect to the sacraments was that of S. Augustine. His authority is especially referred to in the articles; portions of which are indeed almost translations from his works; and Overall made the definition of S. Augustine, as subsequently moulded by the schoolmen, the basis of the doctrine on the sacrament contained in our Catechism (3). The "Sacramentum" is sometimes used as the "sacrae rei signum," although, as the 25th Article expressly asserts, a "signum efficax," as distinguished from a "signum merum," a sign, that is to say, by which, "as by an instrument" (Art. 27), the thing signified is effected. Sometimes "sacramentum" is used more explicitly for the entire "ritus," in its internal and external elements. As a rite it consists of three parts, the outward elements, which are the signum, the res, which is the inward part or thing signified, that is, as our Catechism saith, "The body and blood which are verily and indeed taken and received by the faithful in the Lord's Supper," and the "virtus" or "the benefits whereof we are partakers thereby," that is the strengthening and refreshing of our "souls with the body and blood of Christ, as our bodies are by the bread and wine." It is in this way that the sacrament of the Lord's Supper is spoken of in our Catechism. Bp. Hampden in his Bampton Lectures thus remarks:—

"Theologians have not been content to rest on the simple fact of the divine ordinance, appointing certain external rites as essential parts of divine service on the part of man, available to the blessing of the receiver; but they have treated the sacraments as effusions of virtue of Christ, physically quickening and strengthening the soul, in a manner analogous to the invigoration of the body by salutary medicines. The word 'sacrament' itself, as understood in the Latin Church, is founded on this notion. Though derived from the military oath of the Romans, and so far bearing the mark of that derivation, as it denotes a solemn pledge of faith on the part of the receiver, in its established theological use it corresponded more properly with μυστήριον of the Greeks. It expressed, at first, accordingly, any solemn mysterious truth of religion; and afterwards, by the usage of the schools, was appropriated to those acts in particular by which grace was conceived to be imparted to the soul, under outward and visible signs. The definition indeed, given in the Catechism of the Church of England, is exactly what the scholastic theory suggests; so far, at least, as the language of it characterises the nature of a sacrament. It is in the subsequent application of this definition that the Church of England has modified and improved on the fundamental idea of the scholastic doctrine, whilst the idea itself is presented, as being part of the very texture of technical theology."—Bp. Hampden's Scholastic Philosophy, Lecture VII., p. 32. See also note B, p. 313.

The 28th Article "of the Lord's Supper" says, "The supper of the Lord is not only a sign of the love that Christians ought to have among themselves one to another, but rather a sacrament of our redemption by Christ's death;" and it adds, that to the worthy partaker the bread is a partaking of the body of Christ, and the cup a partaking of the blood of Christ; and the 29th Article says, that the wicked, "though they do carnally and visibly press with their teeth, as S. Augustine saith, the sacrament of the body and blood of Christ, yet in nowise are they partakers of Christ, but rather to their condemnation do eat and drink the sign or sacrament of so great a thing."

The first part of the Homily concerning the Sacrament contains the following passage: "Neither need we to think that such exact knowledge is required of every man

(3) Sacrificium ergo visibile sacrificii sacramentum, id est, sacrum signum est.—Augustin. De Civ. Dei. Lib. x. c. 5.

Sacramentum est sacrae rei signum. Dicitur tamen sacramentum etiam sacrum secretum, sicut sacramentum divinitatis; ut sacramentum sit sacrum signans: sed nunc agitur de sacramento secundum quod est signum. Item, sacramentum est invisibilis gratiae visibilis forma.—Lombard. Sent. Lib. iv. dist. 1.

that he be able to discuss all high points in the doctrine thereof; but thus much we must be sure to hold, that in the supper of the Lord there is no vain ceremony, no bare sign, no untrue figure of a thing absent (Matt. xxvi.);” that is, we ought to hold affirmatively that it is the true figure of a thing present.

The doctrine contained in these formularies excludes the Zwinglian account of the sacraments. On this point I will cite the opinion of Dr. Liddon, Professor of the Exegesis of Holy Scripture in the University of Oxford, and Canon of St. Paul’s.

“As our Lord’s divinity is the truth which illuminates and sustains the world-redeeming virtue of His death, so in like manner it explains and justifies the power of the Christian Sacraments as actual channels of supernatural grace. To those who deny that Jesus Christ is God, the Sacraments are naturally nothing more than ‘badges or tokens’ of social co-operation. The one Sacrament is only ‘a sign of profession and mark of difference, whereby Christian men are discerned from others that be not christened.’ The other is at best ‘only a sign of the love that Christians ought to have one towards another.’ Thus Sacraments are viewed as altogether human acts; God gives nothing in them; He has no special relation to them. They are regarded as purely external ceremonies, which may possibly suggest certain moral ideas by recalling the memory of a Teacher who died many centuries ago. They help to save His name from dying out among men. Thus they discharge the functions of a public monument, or of a ribbon or medal implying membership in an association, or of an anniversary festival instituted to celebrate the name of some departed historical worthy. It cannot be said that in point of effective moral power they rise to the level of a good statue or portrait, since a merely outward ceremonial cannot recal character, and suggest moral sympathy as effectively as an accurate rendering of the human countenance in stone, or colour, or the lines of an engraving. Rites, with a function so purely historical, are not likely to survive any serious changes in human feelings and associations. Men gradually determine to commemorate the object of their regard in some other way, which may perhaps be more in harmony with their personal tastes; they do not admit that this particular form of commemoration, although enjoined by the Author of Christianity, binds their consciences with the force of any moral obligation; they end by deciding that it is just as well to neglect such commemorations altogether.

“If the Socinian and Zwinglian estimate of the Sacraments had been that of the Church of Christ, the Sacraments would long ago have been abandoned as useless ceremonies. But the Church has always seen in them, not mere outward signs addressed to the taste or to the imagination, nor even signs (as Calvinism asserts) which are tokens of grace received independently of them, but signs which, through the power of the promise and words of Christ, effect what they signify. They are ‘effectual signs of God’s grace and goodwill towards us, by which He doth work invisibly in us.’ Thus in baptism the Christian child is made ‘a member of Christ, a child of God, and an inheritor of the kingdom of Heaven;’ and ‘the body and blood of Christ are verily and indeed taken and received by the faithful in the Lord’s Supper.’ . . .

“That depreciation of the Sacraments has led with general consistency to depreciation of our Lord’s Eternal Person is a simple matter of history. True, there have been and are believers in our Lord’s Divinity, who deny the realities of sacramental grace. But experience appears to shew that their position is only a transitional one. For history illustrates this law of fatal declension even in cases where sacramental belief, although imperfect, has been far nearer to the truth than is the naturalism of Zwingli. Many of the most considerable Socinian congregations in England were founded by the Presbyterians who fell away from the Church in the seventeenth century. The pulpit and the chair of Calvin are now filled by men who have, alas! much more in common with the Racovian catechism than with the positive element of the theology of the Institutes. The restless mind of man cannot but at last push its principle to the real limit of its application, even although centuries should intervene between the premiss and the conclusion. Imagine that the Sacraments are only picturesque memorials of an absent Christ, and the mind is in a fair way to infer that the Christ Who is thus commemorated as absent by a barren ceremony is Himself only and purely human.” — Liddon’s Bampton Lectures, 1866; Lecture viii. p. 719.

I hold it to have been the intention of the formularies to exclude the Zwinglian doctrine of bare commemoration with respect to the Lord’s Supper, although that error be not expressly mentioned.

The next error is, however, by name prohibited. “Transubstantiation,” the Article says “(or the change of the substance of bread and wine) in the Supper of the Lord, cannot be proved by Holy Writ; but is repugnant to the plain words of Scripture, overthroweth the nature of a sacrament, and hath given occasion to many superstitions.” (Art. 28.) This is the only mode of the presence which is eo nomine proscribed by the Articles. And I am not therefore surprised to find that in his charge of the year 1866 to the clergy of his diocese, the Bishop of St. David’s, in contrasting our Communion service with the Roman missal, and our doctrine of the Lord’s Supper with that of Rome, should say :—

“And here I cannot refrain from pausing for a moment to remark, that there is perhaps no head of theological controversy in which our Church stands in more advantageous contrast with Rome, or in which we have more reason thankfully to recognise her characteristic moderation, than this. The tenet of Transubstantiation, decreed as an article of faith, combines in itself the two extremes of irreverent rationalism and presumptuous dogmatism." . . . —Charge delivered by the Bishop of St. David's (1866), p. 96.

M

"The Church of England, on the contrary, has dealt with this subject in a spirit of true reverence as well as of prudence and charity. She asserts the mystery, inherent in the institution of the Sacrament, but abstains from all attempts to investigate or define it, and leaves the widest range open to the devotional feelings and the private meditations of her children with regard to it. And this liberty is so large, and has been so freely used, that apart from the express admission of Transubstantiation, or of the grossly carnal notions to which it gave rise, and which, in the minds of the common people, are probably inseparable from it, I think there can hardly be any description of the real presence, which, in some sense or other, is universally allowed, that would not be found to be authorised by the language of eminent divines of our Church; and I am not aware, and do not believe, that our most advanced Ritualists have in fact overstepped those very ample bounds." — Charge delivered by the Bishop of St. David's (1866), pp. 97, 98.

Authorities as to the Construction of the Formularies relating to the Holy Eucharist.

Having regard to the canons as to the liberty of clergymen laid down in the judgments to whom I have referred, I venture to support the position of the Bishop of St. David's with the following authorities.

And first let me begin with those two authorities, to whom I have already referred, and who demonstrate the identity of the present doctrine of the Church of England with that which she has maintained from Anglo-Saxon times upon the subject of the presence in the Eucharist.

I select the following passages from the famous treatise of Ratramn:—

"Nunc redeamus ad illa, quorum causa dicta sunt ista; videlicet, corpus et sanguinem Christi. Si enim nulla sub figura mysterium illud peragitur, iam mysterium non rite vocitatur; quoniam mysterium dici non potest, in quo nihil est abditum, nihil à corporalibus sensibus remotum, nihil aliquo velamine contextum. At ille panis qui per Sacerdotis ministerium Christi corpus efficitur, aliud exterius humanis sensibus ostendit; et aliud interius fidelium mentibus clamat. Exterius quidem panis, quod antè fuerat, forma præstenditur, color ostenditur, sapor accipitur. At interius longè aliud, multoque pretiosius multoque excellentius intimatur; quia cæleste, quia divinum, id est Christi corpus ostenditur; quo non sensibus carnis; sed animi fidelis intuitu, vel aspiciatur, vel accipitur, vel comeditur. Vinum quoque, quod Sacerdotali consecratione Christi sanguinis efficitur sacramentum, aliud superficie tenuis ostendit; aliud interius continet.

Quid enim aliud in superficie; quam substantia vini conspiciatur? Gusta, vinum sapit; Odora, vinum redolet; Inspice, vini color intuetur. At interius si consideres, jam non liquor vini, sed liquor sanguinis Christi credentium mentibus et sapit, dum gustatur; et agnoscitur, dum conspiciatur; et probatur, dum odoratur. Hæc ita esse dum nemo potest abnegare, claret; quia panis ille vinumque figuratè Christi corpus et sanguis existit. Non enim secundum quod videtur, vel carnis species nullo pane cognoscitur, vel in illo vino cruoris unda monstratur: cum tamen post mysticam consecrationem nec panis, jam dicitur, nec vinum, sed Christi corpus et sanguis." — Bertrami Presbyteri De Corpore et Sanguine Domini, &c., pp. 9-11. Edition published at Geneva, 1541; see also English edition, published at Dublin, 1753.

"Quærendum ergo est ab eis, qui nihil hinc figuratè volunt accipere, sed totum in veritatis simplicitate consistere; secundum quod demutatio facta sit: ut iam non sint quod antè fuerant, videlicet, panis atque vinum; sed sint corpus atque sanguis Christi? Secundum speciem namque creature, formamque rerum visibilibus, utrumque hoc, id est, panis et vinum, nihil habent in se permutatum." — Bertrami, pp. 13, 14.

"Sicut ergo paulò ante quam pateretur, panis substantiam et vini creaturam convertere potuit in proprium corpus quod passurum erat, et in suum sanguinem qui post fundendus extabat: sic etiam in deserto manna et aquam de petrà in suam carnem et sanguinem convertere prævaluit quamvis longè post et caro illius in cruce pro nobis pendenda, et sanguis eius in ablutionem nostram fundendus superabat." — Bertrami, pp. 23, 24.

"Item consequenter: in illo sacramento Christus est: quia corpus Christi est. Non ergo corporalis esca, sed spiritualis est. Quid apertius; quid manifestius; quid divinius? Ait enim; in illo sacramento Christus est. Non enim ait ille panis et illud vinum Christus est. Quod si diceret, Christum corruptibilem (quod abest) et mortalitatem subiectum predicaret. Quidquid enim in illa esca vel cernitur vel gustatur corporaliter, corruptibilitati constat obnoxium esse. Addit, quia corpus Christi est.

"Insurgit et dicis, Ecce manifestè illum panem, et illum potum corpus esse Christi confitetur. Sed, attende quemadmodum subjungitur. Non ergo corporalis esca, sed spiritualis est. Non igitur sensum carnis adhibeas. Nihil enim secundum eum hic decernitur. Est quidem corpus Christi, sed non corporale, sed spirituale. Est sanguis Christi, sed non corporalis, sed spiritualis. Nihil igitur hic corporaliter, sed spiritualiter, sentiendum. Corpus Christi est, sed non corporaliter, et sanguis Christi est, sed non corporaliter." — Bertrami, pp. 40, 41.

"Ponamus adhuc unum patris Augustini testimonium, quod et dictorum fidem nostrorum astruat, et sermonis marginem ponat. In sermone quem fecit ad populum de sacramento altaris, sic inquit, Hoc quod videtis in altari Dei, jam transacta nocte vidistis. Sed quid esset, quid sibi vellet, quam magnæ rei sacramentum contineret, nondum audistis. Quod ergo videtis, panis est, et calix, quod vobis etiam oculi vestri renuntiant: quod autem fides vestra postulat instruenda, panis, est corpus Christi; calix est sanguis Christi. Breviter quidem hoc dictum est quod fide fortè sufficiat: sed fides instructionem desiderat. Dicit enim Propheta: Nisi credideritis, non intelligetis. Potestis ergo dicere mihi, præcepisti ut credamus: expone ut intelligam. Potest enim animo cujuspiam cogitatio talis oboriri: Dominus noster Jesus Christus novim unde acceperit carnem, de Virgine scilicet Mariæ, infans lactatus est, nutritus est, crevit, ad juvenilem ætatem perductus est, à Judæis persecutionem passus est, ligno suspensus est, interfectus est, de ligno depositus est, sepultus est, tertio die resurrexit, quo die voluit, in cælum ascendit, illuc levavit corpus suum, inde venturus est judicare vivos et mortuos, ibi est modò sedens ad dexteram Patris. Quomodo panis corpus eius; et calix, vel quod habet calix; quo modo ejus est sanguis? Ista fratres, ideo dicuntur sacramenta quia in eis aliud videtur, et aliud intelligitur. Quod videtur speciem habet corporalem, quod intelligitur fructum habet spiritualem. Ista venerabilis Author dicens, instruit nos quid de proprio corpore Domini, quod de Mariæ natum, et nunc ad dexteram Patris sedet, et in quo venturus est judicare vivos et mortuos; et quid de isto, quod super altare ponitur, et populo participatur, sentire debeamus. Illud integrum est, neque ullâ sectione dividitur, nec ullis figuris obvelatur. Hoc verò quod supra mensam Domini continetur, et figura est, quia sacramentum est: et exterius quod videtur speciem habet corpoream quæ pascit corpus: interius verò quod intelligitur, fructum habet spiritualem, qui vivificat animam" (4).

(4) Bertrami, ib., pp. 61—64.

The learned Cave says, "Bertramus, rectius Ratramnus, natione ut videtur Gallus in veteri monasterio Corbeienſi monachus et presbyter tandem favente Carolo Calvo in diocesi Suessoniensi cœnobii præpositus. Claruit anno 840 quo circa tempore vel paulo ante ad scribendum se accinxit."

He wrote "De Virgine Dominum parturiente," "De Predestinatione," 849; et paulo post decantatissimum illum de Eucharistia libellum in lucem emississe videtur."

"De Corpore et Sanguine Domini liber in quo quam aptè quam disertè de re Eucharisticâ agit et transubstantiationis dogma prout in scholis pontificiis explicatur quam dilucidè refellit, norant quot quot vel prima theologiæ tyrocinia posuerunt."

Then he repels the calumny of the Romanists that the word was corrupt and interpolated; and speaks of Ælfric's works,—

"Adversus quot fidem faciunt tot vetusti codices et Ælfrici nostri qui anno 960 floruit homilia Paschalis ex Ratramni libello pœne ad verbum desumpto."

Of Paschasius Radbertus (Cave says), "gente Gallus natus est anno circiter 786. Prima pietatis et doctrinæ tyrocinia posuit inter monachos qui majori monialium Suessionensium cœtui inserviebant," he entered under Adelard 844. "Præfecturam cœnobii Corbeiensis obtenuit."

Of this book of Bertram's Bishop Hampden says :—

"The opposition of controversy, whilst it led the orthodox to assert an actual presence of the incarnate Christ under the sacramental symbols of bread and wine, made them charge their adversaries with holding the sacraments to be only signs, memorials of Christ's passion, and not the actual oblation. And this may account for the pointed expression in one article, that 'The supper of the Lord is not only a sign of the love which Christians ought to have among themselves, but rather is a sacrament of our redemption.' In denying an actual communication of Christ to the sacred emblems, it became necessary to guard against the construction of asserting a merely commemorative rite, and thus evacuating the sacrament of its holy burthen of grace. For neither Ratramn, in opposing the doctrine of Paschase, nor afterwards Berenger, in advocating the views of Erigena against Lanfranc, appear to have held that the Eucharist was nothing more than a sign. Ratramn, indeed, distinctly asserts a real presence, though he does not admit a presence of the crucified body of Christ in the consecrated bread and wine. It is a real and true presence that he asserts, the virtue of Christ acting in the way of efficacious assistance to the receiver of the sacrament. The Church of England doctrine of the sacraments, it is well known, is founded on the views given by this author. Cramer and Ridley are said to have studied his work together, and to have derived their first ray of light on the subject from that study."—Bishop Hampden's Bampton Lectures, 1832.—Lecture VII. p. 320.

And the Bishop of St. David's, in his charge of 1857, remarks :—

"And as Paschasius and Ratramn no doubt frequently communicated at the same altar, so notwithstanding the wide divergency of their opinions, they may have done so with equal benefit to themselves. But the consequences of their dispute were not of slight moment, and are seen and felt at this day. Paschasius contributed more than any individual before Lanfranc to the preponderance of that belief which became the dogma of transubstantiation. Ratramn's treatise, as is well known, exercised a most powerful influence on the mind of Ridley, and was thus mainly instrumental in fixing the doctrine of the Church of England on the Eucharist, or rather in restoring that of the Anglo-Saxon Church, as expounded in exact conformity to the ideas and partly to the very words of Ratramn, by Ælfric, in the Paschal Homily, where he teaches, 'This mystery is a pledge and a symbol; Christ's body in truth. This pledge we hold mystically,

"Primus auctor (fatente ipsomet Bellarmino de Script. Eccles. p. 226) qui serio et copiose scripsit de veritate Corporis et Sanguinis Domini in Eucharistia." Cave however pronounces even of Paschasius, "non pauca tradere quas cum receptâ Ecclesiæ Romanæ doctrinâ nequaquam conveniunt." ib. 32.

until we come to the truth, and then will this pledge be ended." — Mr. Thorp's Translation, Vol. II. p. 273, in the publications of the Ælfrie Society.

"Most justly therefore did Canon Hopkins observe (in the dissertation prefixed to his edition of the treatise, ed. 1868, c. 5, p. 105), that 'the doctrine of Ratramn was the very same doctrine which the Church of England embraced as most consonant to scripture and the fathers.' Which is not what our adversaries would put upon us, that the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper is a naked commemoration of our Saviour's death, and a mere sign of His body and blood, but an efficacious mystery, accompanied with such a divine and spiritual power as renders the consecrated elements truly, though mystically, Christ's body and blood, and communicates to us the real fruits and saving benefits of His bitter passion. And this is the doctrine of Bertram in both parts of his work." — Appendix to Charge of Bishop of St. David's, 1857, p. 135.

Next in order of date and importance are the works of the Anglo-Saxon Abbot of Malmesbury and St. Alban's, Ælfrie, who was, perhaps, also Archbishop of Canterbury from 995 to 1005. — Anglia Sacra, Vol. I. p. 125; Lingard, Hist. and Antiq. of Anglo-Saxon Church, Vol. II., pp. 311, 5, 99. His sermon of the "Paschall Lambe" was first printed in Saxon character, and in Queen Elizabeth's reign published, as I have already said, by Archbishop Parker, and subscribed by him and his suffragans; the object being to shew that the doctrine of the Eucharist in the English Church was not an innovation upon but a revival of the Catholic faith.

To the publication of this work Parker prefixed the following preface:—

"As the writings of the Fathers even of the first age of the Church be not thought on all parts so perfect that whatsoever thyng hath been of them spoken ought to be received, without all exception (which honour trulye themselves both knewe and also have confessed to be only due to the most holy and tryed word of God), so in this sermon here published some thynges be spoken not consonant to sounde doctrine, but rather to such corruption of great ignorance and superstition as hath taken root in the Church of long time, being overmuch cumbered with monckery.

"As where it speaketh of the Masse to be profitable to the quick and the dead; of the mixture of water with wyne, and whereas here also is reported made of ij vayne miracles . . . with some other suspicious words sounding to superstition. But all these things that be thus of some reprehension be as it were but by the way touched; the full and whole discourse of all the former part of the sermon and almost of the whole sermon is about the understanding of the Sacramentall bread and wine how it is the bodye and bloude of Christ our Saviour, by which is revealed and made known what hath been the common taught doctrine of the Church of England on this behalf many hundredth years agoe contrarye to the unadvised wrytyng of some nowadays. Now that thys foresaid Saxon Homely with the other testimonies before alledged doe fullye agree to the olde auncient bookes (whereof some bee written in the olde Saxon and some in the Lattynne) from whence they are taken; these here underwritten upon delegant perusing and comparing the same, have found by conference that they are truly put forth in print without any adding or withdrawing anything for the more faithful reporting of the same and therefore for the better credite thereof, have subscribed their names:—

"Matthewe, Archbishop of Canterbury; Thomas, Archbishop of York; Edmund Bishop of London; James, Bishop of Durham; Robert, Bishop of Winchester; William, Bishop of Chichester; John, Bishop of Hereford; Richard, Bishop of Elye; Edwine, Bishop of Worcester; Nicholas, Bishop of Lincoln; Richard, Bishop of St. Davys; Thomas, Bishop of Lichfield and Coventary; John, Bishop of Norwich; John, Bishop of Carlisle; Nicholas, Bishop of Bangor.

"With divers other personages of honour and credit subscribing their names, &c."

Parker entitled this book—

"A sermon of the Paschall Lambe, and of the Sacramentall Body and Bloude of Christ our Saviour, written in the olde Saxon tounge before the Conquest, and appoynted in the reigne of the Saxons to be spoken unto the people at Easter before they should receive the Communion, and now first translated into our common Englishe speche."

I select the following extracts:—

"We Christens keep Christes resurrection as the time of Easter these vii. dayes, because, through Hys sufferinge and rising we be delivered and be made clean by going to this holy housel, as Christ sayth in His Gospel, 'Verely, verely, I say unto you, ye have no life in you, except ye eate my Flesh and drinke my Bloud. He that eateth my Flesh, and drinketh my Bloud, abideth in me, and I in him, and hath the everlasting life; and I shall rise him up at the last day.' 'I am the lively bread that came down from Heaven, not so as your forefathers eate the Heavenlye bread in the wilderness and afterwarde dyed. He that eateth thys bread he liveth for ever.' He blessed bread before his sufferinge, and divided it to His disciples, thus saying: 'Eate this bread, it is my Body, and do this in my remembrance.' Also He blessed wyne in a cuppe, and said: 'drink ye all of thys. Thys is My Bloude that is shedde for many in forgeuenesse of sinnes.'

"The Apostles dyd as Christ commaunded, that is, they blessed bread and wine to housell agayne afterwarde in His remembrance. Even so also their successors and all priestes by Christes commaundement doe bless bread and wine to housell in hys name with the apostolike blessing.

"Now, several men have often searched, and do yet often search, howe bread that is gathered of corne, and through fyers heated baked, may bee turned to Christes body, or how wyne that is pressed out of many grapes is turned through any blessing to the Lordes Bloude.

"Now, saye we to suche men, that some thinges be spoken of Christ by signification, some by things certain.

"Why, then, is the holy housell called Christ's body, or his Bloude, if it be not truly that it is called? Truly, the bread and the wyne, which by the masse of the priest be hallowed shewe one thyng without to humayne understanding and an other thing they call within, to believing myndes. Without they bee sene bread and wyne both in figure and in taste: but they be truly, after the hallowing, Christes Body and Hys Bloude, through ghostly mystery. Beholde, now, we see two thynges in this one creature, after true nature, the water is corruptible water, and after ghostlye mysterie hath healing myghte. So also if we beholde the holy housell after bodely understanding, then we see that it is a creature corruptible, and mutable: if we acknowledge therein ghostly myght, then understand we that lyfe is therein, and that it giveth immortalitie to them that eat it with beliefe; much is betwixt the invisible myghte of the holy housell, and the visible shap of hys proper nature. It is naturally corruptible bread, and corruptible wyne, and is by myghte of God's worde truly Christes Bodye and Hys Bloode, not so, notwithstanding bodely but ghostly. Much is betwixt the Body Christ suffered in and the bodye that is hallowed to housell; his ghostly Body, which we call the housell, is gathered of many cornes, without bloude and bone, without lymme, and without soule, and, therefore, nothing is to be understode therein bodelye, but all is ghostly to be understode. Whatsoever is in that housell which giveth substance of lyfe that is of the ghostlye myghte, and invisible doing—therefore, is the holy housell called a mysterie, because there is one thing in it seene, and another thing understode—that which is ther sene, hath bodely shape, and that we do there understand, hath ghostlye myght.

"Certaynely Christes Bodye which suffered death and rose from death, never dyeth henceforth: but is eternal and impassible. The housell is temporall not eternall. Corruptible, and dealed into sundry parts; chewed between teeth, and sent into the bellye, howbeit, nevertheless, after ghostlye myght, it is all in every part. Many receive the holy bodye: and yet, notwithstanding it is so all in every parte, after ghostly mysterie; though to some man fall a lesse deale, yet there is no more myghte, notwithstanding, in the more parte, than in the lesse, because it is all in each man after the invisible myght.

"Thys mystery is a pledge and a figure, Christes body is truth itself. Thys pledge we do keepe mystically until that we be come to the truth itselfe, and then is this pledge ended. Trulye, it is so as we before have said, Christes bodye and Hys bloude, not bodelye, but ghostlye. And ye shoulde not search how it is done, but holde it in your beliefe that it is so done.

"Let us heare the apostles wordes about this mystery; Paule the Apostle speaketh of the old Israelites thus, writing in his Epistle to faithfull men, All our forefathers were baptised in the cloud and in the sea; and all they eat the same ghostlye meat, and drank the same ghostlye drink. They drank trulye of the stone that followed them and that stone was Christ. Neither was the stone then from which the water ranne, bodely Christ, but it signified Christ, that calleth thus to all beleaving and faithfull men: whosoever thirsteth, let him come to me and drinke. And from his bowels floweth lyuely water! This he sayde of the holy ghost, whom he receiveth which beleaveth on hym.

"The Apostle Paule, sayth that the Israelites did eat the same ghostly meate, and drink the same ghostly drinke: because the Heavenly meate that fed them forty years, and the water which from the stone did flow, had signification of Christes bodye and Hys bloude, that now be offered dayly in God's Church. It was the same which we now offer, not bodely, but ghostly.

"We sayd unto you, a little before, that Christ hallowed bread and wyne to housell before His suffering, and sayd, This is my body, and my bloud. Yet, he had not then suffered. But so, notwithstanding, He turned through invisible might, the bread to His own body, and the wyne to His bloude, as He before did in the wilderness, before that He was borne a man, when He turned that heavenly meat to His fleshe, and the flowing water from the stone to Hys own bloude.

"Very many ate of the Heavenly meate in the wilderness, and drank the ghostlye drinke, and were nevertheless dead, as Christ sayd. And Christ ment not the death which none can escape, but the everlastyng death which some of the folke deserved for their unbelieve.

"The Saviour sayde, He that eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, hath everlasting life. He bade them not to eat the body which he was encompassed with, nor the blood to drink which He shed for us; but He meant with those wordes, the holy housell, which ghostly is His body and His blood; and he that tasteth it with believing hart hath the eternal lyfe. In the old law faithful men offered to God divers sacrifices, that had foresignification of Christes body, which for our sinnes He himselfe to His heavenly Father hath since offered as a sacrifice."—A Sermon of the Paschall Lambe, etc. Lumley, 1849. Also printed in Homilies of the Anglo-Saxon Church, vol. ii., published in 1846.

I will now refer to the letter of Ælfric, already mentioned, to Wulfstone, Archbishop of York, also translated into English in the reign of Elizabeth, and commented upon by the learned Dr. Routh, as a valuable illustration of the Church's doctrine as to the Eucharist.

"Christ himselfe blessed housell before His suffering. He blessed the bread and brake thus speaking to His apostles: Eate this bread, it is my body. And agayne He blessed one chalice with wyne and thus also speaketh vnto them: Drinke ye all of this, it is myne own blood of the Newe Testament which is shed for many in forgiveness of synnes. The Lord which halowed housel before His suffering and sayeth that the bread was His owne body and that the wyne was truly His blood, He haloweth daily by the hands of the priest bread to His body, and wyne to His blood in ghostly mystery, as we read in bokes. And yet that lively bread is not bodely so notwithstanding: not the self same body that Christ suffered in. Nor that holy one is the Saviour's blood which was shed for vs in bodely thing, but in ghostly understanding. Both be truly that bread Hys body, and that wyne also Hys blood, as was the Heauenly bread, which we call Manna, that fed forty yerre God's people. And the cleare water which did then runne from the stone in the wilderness, was truly his blood, as Paule wrote on summe of his epistles."—Ex Adfrici Epistola ad Wulfstanum Archiepiscopum Eboracensem, Saxonice scripta; in Anglicam linguam, regnante Elizabetha, in Latinam vero, interprete Abrahamo Wheloco, conversa. Routh, Scriptorum Ecclesiasticorum Opuscula, vol ii., pp. 169–175.

The next authority to which I refer is that of Bishop Ridley. In his examination at Oxford it was articulated against him:—

"First, that thou Nicholas Ridley, in this high University of Oxford, Anno 1554, in the months of April, May, June, July, or in some one or more of them, hast affirmed, and openly defended and maintained, and in many other times and places besides, that the true and natural body of Christ, after the consecration of the priest, is not really present in the sacrament of the altar."

To this Ridley answers:—

"In a sense the first article is true, and in a sense it is false; for if you take really for vere, for spiritually, by grace and efficacy, then it is true that the natural body and blood of Christ is in the sacrament vere et realiter, indeed and really; but if you take these terms so grossly that you would conclude thereby a natural body having motion to be contained under the forms of bread and wine, vere et realiter, then really is not the body and blood of Christ in the sacrament, no more than the Holy Ghost is in the element of water in our baptism."

The answer being cavilled at, he added this explanation:—

"For both you and I agree herein, that in the sacrament is the very true and natural body and blood of Christ, even that which was born of the Virgin Mary, which ascended into Heaven, which sitteth on the right hand of God the Father, which shall come from thence to judge the quick and the dead; only we differ in modo, in the way and manner of being; we confess all one thing to be in the sacrament, and dissent in the manner of being there. I, being fully by God's word thereunto persuaded, confess Christ's natural body to be in the sacrament indeed by spirit and grace, because that whosoever receiveth worthily that bread and wine receiveth effectuously Christ's body, and drinketh His blood (that is, he is made effectually partaker of His passion); and you make a grosser kind of being, enclosing a natural, a lively, and a moving body, under the shape or form of bread and wine. Now, this difference considered, to the question thus I answer, that in the sacrament of the altar is the natural body and blood of Christ vere et realiter, indeed and really, for spiritually, by grace and efficacy; for so every worthy receiver receiveth the very true body of Christ. But if you mean really and indeed, so that thereby you would include a lively and a moveable body under the forms of bread and wine, then, in that sense is not Christ's body in the sacrament really and indeed."

The second article of charge against him is:—

(2.) "Item, that in the year and months aforesaid thou hast publicly affirmed and defended, that in the sacrament of the altar remaineth still the substance of bread and wine."

Ridley says:—

"In the sacrament is a certain change, in that bread which was before common bread is now made a lively presentation of Christ's body, and not only a figure, but effectuously representeth his body; that even as the mortal body was nourished by that visible bread, so is the natural soul fed with the heavenly food of Christ's body, which the eyes of faith see, as the bodily eyes see only bread. Such a sacramental mutation I grant to be in the bread and wine, which truly is no small change, but such a change as no mortal man can make, but only that omnipotency of Christ's word."—Ridley's Works, pp. 271–4.

From his Disputation at Oxford I extract the following passages:—

"He that sitteth there is here present by mystery and grace: and that is holden of the godly, such as communicate here, not only sacramentally with the hand of the body, but, much more wholesomely, with the hand of the heart, and by inward drinking is received, but by the sacramental signification is holden of all men."
—Ridley's Works, p. 223.

"I grant the bread to be converted and turned into the flesh of Christ; but not by transubstantiation, but by sacramental converting or turning. 'It is transformed,' saith Theophylact, in the same place, 'by a mystical benediction, and by the accession or coming of the Holy Ghost unto the flesh of Christ. He saith not by expulsion or driving away the substance of bread, and by substituting or putting in its place the corporal substance of Christ's flesh.' And whereas he saith, 'It is not a figure of the body,' we should understand that saying, as he himself does elsewhere, add 'only,' that is, it is no naked or bare figure only. For Christ is present in the mysteries; neither at any time as Cyprian saith, doth the Divine Majesty abstract Himself from the divine mysteries." . . . —Ridley's Works, p. 230.

And in answer to the following argument of Curtop :—

"That which is in the cup is the same that flowed from the side of Christ.

"But true and pure blood did flow from the side of Christ :

"Ergo, His true and pure blood is in the cup,— Ridley says,— "It is His true blood which is in the chalice, I grant, and the same which sprang from the side of Christ. But how? It is blood indeed, but not after the same manner, after which manner it sprang from his side. For here is the blood, but by way of a sacrament. Again I say, like as the bread of the sacrament and of thanksgiving is called the body of Christ given for us; so the cup of the Lord is called the blood which sprang from the side of Christ; but that sacramental bread is called the body, because it is the sacrament of his body. Even so likewise the cup is called the blood also which flowed out of Christ's side, because it is the sacrament of that blood which flowed out of his side, instituted of the Lord himself for our singular commodity, namely, for our spiritual nourishment; like as baptism is ordained in water to our spiritual regeneration.

Curtop.—"The sacrament of the blood is not the blood.

Ridley.—"The sacrament of the blood is the blood; and that is attributed to the sacrament, which is spoken of the thing of the sacrament.

* * * * *

Weston.—"That is very well. Then we have blood in the chalice.

Ridley.—"It is true; but by grace, and in a sacrament."

From the Homily concerning the Sacrament, the first part, I take this passage :—

"Neither need we to think that such exact knowledge is required by every man, that he be able to discuss all high points in the doctrine thereof; but thus much we must be sure to hold, that in the Supper of the Lord there is no vain ceremony, no bare sign, no untrue figure of a thing absent (Matt. xxvi.). But, as the Scripture saith, the Table of the Lord, the bread and cup of the Lord, the memory of Christ, the annunciation of His death, yea, the communion of the body and blood of the Lord, in a marvellous incorporation, which, by the operation of the Holy Ghost (the very bond of our conjunction with Christ), is through faith wrought in the souls of the faithful, whereby not only their souls live to eternal life, but they surely trust to win to their bodies a resurrection to immortality (1 Cor. x.). The true understanding of this fruition and union, which is betwixt the body and the head, betwixt the true believers and Christ, the ancient Catholic fathers, both perceiving themselves and commending to their people, were not afraid to call this supper, some of them, the salve of immortality and sovereign preservative against death; other, a deific communion; other, the sweet dainties of our Saviour, the pledge of eternal health, the defence of faith, the hope of the resurrection; other, the food of immortality, the healthful grace, and the conservatory to everlasting life. Iren. lib. iv. cap. 34; Ignat. Epist. ad Ephes. Dionysius, Origen, Optat.; Cyp. de Cena Domini; Atha. de Pec. in Spir. Sanct. All which sayings, both of the Holy Scripture and godly men, truly attributed to this celestial banquet and feast, if we would often call to mind, Oh! how would they inflame our hearts to desire the participation of these mysteries, and oftentimes to covet after this bread; continually to thirst for this food! Not as especially regarding the terrene and earthly creatures which remain, but always holding fast and cleaving by faith to the Rock, whence we may suck the sweetness of everlasting salvation."

In Jewel's Apology I find these expressions :—

"Panem et vinum dicimus esse sans et celestia mysteria corporis et sanguinis Christi, et illis Christum ipsum, verum panem eternæ vitæ sic nobis præsentem exhiberi, ut ejus corpus, sanguinemque per fidem vere sumamus."

And again :—

"* * * Nec tamen cum ista dicimus, extenuamus Cenam Domini, aut eam frigidam tantum ceremoniam esse docemus, et in ea nihil fieri, quod multi nos docere calumniantur. Christum enim aperimus, vere esse præsentem exhibere in Sacramentis suis, in Baptismo ut eum induamus; in Cenâ, ut eum fide et spiritu comedamus, et de ejus cruce ac sanguine habeamus vitam eternam; idque dicimus non perfunctorie, et frigide, sed re ipsâ et vere fieri. . . . Christus ipse totus quantus est, offertur et traditur."

Bishop Overall, in his Additional Notes to the Book of Common Prayer, on the words "That we, receiving these Thy creatures of bread and wine, &c., may be partakers of His blessed body and blood," says :—

"Together with the hallowed elements of the bread and wine, we may receive the body and blood of Christ, which are truly exhibited in this Sacrament, the one as well as the other.

"These words, as I once conferred with a Papist, were mightily excepted against, because forsooth they must acknowledge no bread and wine, but a desition of the nature and being of both. My answer was, that here we term them so before consecration; after that we call them so no more, but abstain from that name, because our thoughts might be wholly taken up with the spiritual food of Christ's body and blood. So in the thanksgiving following we say, That hast vouchsafed to feed us who have duly received these holy mysteries, with the spiritual food of the most precious body and blood of Thy Son, &c. In the meanwhile we deny not the bread and wine to remain there still as God's creatures. And I wonder the Papists should so contend for this same desitio panis et vini, whenas, in their own service or mass, they abstain not from these words, THY CREATURES, after consecration, as we do. See the book, PER QUEM OMNIA DOMINE RONE CREAS! A certain argument that the Church of Rome never meant to teach that doctrine, which private men, the late doctors and schoolmen, have brought up and propagated."—Appendix to Nicholls on the Book of Common Prayer.

And on the words "And if any of the bread and wine, &c.":—

"It is confessed by all divines that upon the words of the consecration, the body and blood of Christ is really and substantially present, and so exhibited and given to all that receive it, and all this not after a physical and sensible but after an heavenly and incomprehensible manner. But there yet remains this controversy amongst some of them, whether the body of Christ be present only in the use of the Sacrament and in the act of eating, and not otherwise. They that hold the affirmative, as the Lutherans (in Confess. Sax.) and all Calvinists, do seem to me to depart from all antiquity, which places the presence of Christ in the virtue and benediction used by the priest, and not in the use of eating the Sacrament."—Appendix to Nicholls on the Book of Common Prayer.

George Herbert, who has been called "the saintly," says:—

"The country parson, having to administer the Sacrament, is at a stand with himself how or what behaviour to assume for so holy things. Especially at communion time he is in great confusion, as being not only to receive God, but to break and administer him. Neither finds he any issue in this, but to throw himself down at the Throne of Grace, saying, Lord, Thou knowest what Thou didst, when thou appointedst to be done thus, therefore do Thou fulfil what Thou didst appoint, for Thou art not only the feast, but the way to it."—Priest to the Sacrament.

Archbishop Laud, in his memorable contest with the Papist Fisher, observes:—

"And for the Church of England, nothing is more plain than that it believes and teaches the true and real presence of Christ in the Eucharist."

And again—

"As for the learned of those zealous men that died in this cause in Queen Mary's days, they denied not the real presence simply taken, but as their opposites forced transubstantiation upon them, as if that and the real presence had been all one. Whereas all the ancient Christians ever believed the one, and none but modern and superstitious Christians believe the other Nay, Archbishop Cranmer comes more plainly and more home to it than Erith. 'For if you understand,' saith he, 'by this word really reipset; that is in very deed and effectually; so Christ, by the grace and efficacy of His passion, is indeed and truly present, &c. But if by this word really you understand corporaliter, corporally in His natural and organical body, under the forms of bread and wine, it is contrary to the holy word of God.' And so likewise Bishop Ridley. Nay, Bishop Ridley adds yet further, and speaks so fully to this point, as I think no man can add to his expression; and it is well if some Protestants except not against it. 'Both you and I,' saith he, 'agree in this; that in the Sacrament is the very true and natural body and blood of Christ, even that which ascended into heaven, which sits at the right hand of God the Father, which shall come from thence to judge the quick and the dead; only we differ in modo, in the way and manner of being. We confess all one thing to be in the Sacrament, and dissent in the manner of being there. I confess Christ's natural body to be in the Sacrament by spirit and grace, &c. You make a grosser kind of being enclosing a natural body under the shape and form of bread and wine.' So far and more, Bishop Ridley. And Archbishop Cranmer confesses that he was indeed of another opinion, and inclining to that of Zuinglius, till Bishop Ridley convinced his judgment and settled him in this point. . . ."

Laud v. Fisher, Cardwell's ed., Oxford, 1839, pp. 245-49.

Bishop Andrewes, in his answer to Bellarmine, says:—

"The Cardinal is not, unless willingly, ignorant, that Christ hath said, 'This is my body,' not 'This is my body in this mode.' Now about the object we are both agreed; all the controversy is about the mode. The 'This is,' we firmly believe; that 'it is in this mode' (the bread, viz., being transubstantiated into the body), or of the mode whereby it is wrought, that 'it is,' whether in, or with, or under, or transubstantiated, there is not a word in the Gospel. And because not a word is there, we rightly detach it from being a matter of faith; we may place it amongst the decrees of the schools, not among the articles of faith. What Durandus is reported to have said of old (Neand. Synop. Chron., p. 203) we approve of. 'We hear the word, feel the effect, know not the manner, believe the presence.' The presence, I say, we believe, and that no less true than yourselves. Of the mode of the presence, we define nothing rashly, nor, I add, do we curiously inquire; no more than how the blood of Christ cleanseth us in our baptism; no more than how in the Incarnation of Christ the human nature is united in the same Person with the Divine."—Answer to Bellarmine, p. 11.

Again:—

"And I may safely say with good warrant from those words especially and chiefly, which as He Himself saith of them, are 'spirit and life,' even those words, which joined to the element make the blessed Sacrament."—Answer to Bellarmine, p. 11.

And again:—

"All witnesses testify in favour of mutation, immutation, transmutation, but there is no mention of substantial, or of substance. Nor do we deny the preposition trans, and we acknowledge the elements to be transmuted. But we seek in vain for substantial. Nor do we deny that the elements are changed by the benediction, so that the consecrated bread is not that which nature has formed, but that which the benediction has consecrated, and even changed by consecration. And we believe with Nyssen that the nature of the bread and wine was changed, but neither he nor we to be transubstantiated.—Answer to Bellarmine.

"Beloved," Donne says, "in the blessed, and glorious, and mysterious Sacrament of the body and blood of Christ Jesus, thou seest Christum Domini, the Lord's salvation, and thy salvation, and that thus far with bodily eyes, that bread which thou seest after the consecration is not the same bread which was presented before, not that it is transubstantiated to another substance, for it is bread still, (which is the heretical riddle of the Roman Church, and Satan's sophistry, to dishonour miracles by the assiduity, and frequency, and multiplicity of them,) but that it is severed, and appropriated by God in that ordinance to another use. It is other bread; so as a judge is another man upon the bench than he is at home in his own house.

* * * * *

"Luther (speaking of the Roman Church) infers well, that since miracles are so easy and cheap, and obvious to them, as they have induced a miraculous transubstantiation, they might have done well to have procured one miracle more, a trans-accidentation, that since the substance is changed, the accidents might have been changed too, and since there is no bread, there might be no dimensions, no colour, no nourishing, no other qualities of bread neither, for, these remaining, there is rather an annihilation of God, in making him no God by being a contradictory God, than an annihilation of the bread, by making that which was formerly bread God himself, by that way of transubstantiation.

"But yet though this bread be not so transubstantiated, we refuse not the words of the fathers, in which they have expressed themselves in this mystery. Not Irenæus's est corpus, that that bread is his body now, not Tertullian's fecit corpus, that that bread is made his body which was not so before, nor St. Cyprian's mutatus, that that bread is changed, not Damascen's supernaturaliter mutatus, that that bread is not only changed so in the use, as when at the king's table certain portions of bread are made bread of essay, to pass over every dish whether for safety or for majesty; not only so civilly changed; but changed supernaturally; no, nor Theophylact's transformatus est (which seems to be the word that goes farthest of all), for this transforming cannot be intended of the outward form and fashion, for that is not changed; but be it of that internal form, which is the very essence and nature of the bread, so it is transformed, so the bread hath received a new form, a new essence, a new nature, because whereas the nature of bread is but to nourish the body, the nature of this bread now is to nourish the soul, and therefore, Cum non dubitavit Dominus dicere, hoc est corpus meum, cum signum daret corporis, since Christ forbore not to say, This is my body, when he gave the sign of his body, why we should forbear to say of that bread, This is Christ's body, which is the Sacrament of his body."—Donne's Works, Vol. I. pp. 73, 74, 75.

Bishop Cosin, who was one of the Convocation committee which prepared our present Prayer Book, and who wrote the history of transubstantiation, observes in it:—

"3. We believe a presence and union of Christ with our soul and body, which we know not how to call better than sacramental, that is, effected by eating; that while we eat and drink the consecrated bread and wine, we eat and drink therewithal the body and blood of Christ, not in a corporal manner but some other way, incomprehensible, known only to God, which we call spiritual; for if with St. Bernard and the fathers a man goes no further, we do not find fault with a general explication of the manner, but with the presumption and self-conceitiveness of those who boldly and curiously inquire what is a spiritual presence, as presuming they can understand the manner of acting of God's Holy Spirit. We contrarywise confess with the fathers, that this manner of presence is unaccountable, and past finding out, not to be searched and pried into by reason, but believed by faith. And if it seems impossible that the flesh of Christ should descend, and come to be our food, though so great a distance, we must remember how much the power of the Holy Spirit exceeds our sense and our apprehensions, and how absurd it would be to undertake to measure his immensity by our weakness and narrow capacity, and so make our faith to conceive and believe what our reason cannot comprehend.

"4. Yet our faith doth not cause or make that presence, but apprehends it as most truly and really effected by the word of Christ; and the faith whereby we are said to eat the flesh of Christ, is not that only whereby we believe that he died for our sins (for this faith is required and supposed to precede the sacramental manducation), but more properly, that whereby we believe those words of Christ, 'This is my body;' which was St. Austin's meaning when he said, 'Why dost thou prepare thy stomach and thy teeth? Believe and thou hast eaten.' For in this mystical eating, by the wonderful power of the Holy Ghost, we do invisibly receive the substance of Christ's body and blood, as much as if we should eat and drink both visibly.

"5. The result of all this is, that the body and blood of Christ are sacramentally united to the bread and wine, so that Christ is truly given to the faithful; and yet is not to be here considered with sense or worldly reason, but by faith, resting on the words of the Gospel. Now it is said, that the body and blood of Christ are joined to the bread and wine, because that in the celebration of the Holy Eucharist, the flesh is given together with the bread, and the blood together with the wine. All that remains is, that we should with faith and humility admire this high and sacred mystery, which our tongue cannot sufficiently explain, nor our heart conceive."—Bp. Cosin, History of Popish Transubstantiation, Ch. 3. Oxford Trans.

N

With respect to the citation of Cosin's from St. Augustine, "Believe and thou hast eaten," it is to be remarked that in the office of The Communion of the Sick the Rubric provides that if for any just impediment (several of which are specified), a man "do not receive the Sacrament of Christ's body and blood, the curate shall instruct him, that if he do truly repent him of his sins, and steadfastly believe that Jesus Christ hath suffered death upon the cross for him, and shed His blood for his redemption, earnestly remembering the benefits he hath thereby, and giving Him hearty thanks therefore, he doth eat and drink the body and blood of our Saviour Christ profitably to his soul's health, although he do not receive the Sacrament with his mouth."

Our Prayer Book follows in this, as in many other respects, the Salisbury Missal, which borrows the words of St. Augustine, "crede et manducasti."

The insertion of these words in the Salisbury Missal seems to confirm the opinion of Mr. Keble, who suggests, in the preface to his edition of Hooker's Works, that the Rubric can be meant only "for rare and extraordinary cases, cases as strong in regard of the Eucharist, as that of martyrdom, or the premature death of a well-disposed catechumen, in regard of baptism."—Hooker's Works, Vol. I., Preface, p. 87.

I return to the language of Cosin :—

"So then (to sum up this controversy by applying to it all that hath been said), it is not questioned whether the body of Christ be absent from the Sacrament duly administered according to His institution, which we Protestants neither affirm nor believe; for, it being given and received in the Communion, it must needs be that it is present, though in some manner veiled under the Sacrament, so that of itself it cannot be seen. Neither is it doubted or disputed whether the bread and wine, by the power of God and a supernatural virtue, be set apart and fitted for a much nobler use, and raised to a higher dignity, than their nature bears; for we confess the necessity of a supernatural and heavenly change, and that the signs cannot become Sacraments but by the infinite power of God, whose proper right it is to institute Sacraments in His Church, being able alone to endure them with virtue and efficacy. Finally, we do not say that our blessed Saviour gave only the figure and sign of His body, neither do we deny a sacramental union of the body and blood of Christ with the sacred bread and wine, so that both are really and substantially received together, but (that we may avoid all ambiguity) we deny that, after the words and prayer of consecration, the bread should remain bread no longer, but should be changed into the substance of the body of Christ, nothing of the bread but only the accidents continuing to be what they were before. And so the whole question is concerning the transubstantiation of the outward elements, whether the substance of the bread be turned into the substance of Christ's body, and the substance of the wine into the substance of His blood; or, as the Romish doctors describe their transubstantiation, whether the substance of bread and wine doth utterly perish, and the substance of Christ's body and blood succeed in their place, which are both denied by Protestants."—Hist. of Transubstantiation, Ch. iv. § 6, p. 175.

"I was the more willing to be long in transcribing these things at large, out of public confessions of Churches and the best of authors, that it might the better appear how injuriously Protestant divines are calumniated by others unacquainted with their opinions, as though by these words 'spiritually' and 'sacramentally' they did not acknowledge a true and well understood real presence and communication of the body and blood of Christ in the blessed Sacrament. Whereas on the contrary they do professedly own it in terms as express as any can be used."—Ibid. pp. 168–9.

Bishop Forbes, Professor of Hebrew at Oxford and Bishop of Edinburgh in 1633, wrote a very careful and learned treatise on ecclesiastical matters, which he entitled Considerationes Modestæ et Pacificæ. He says :—

"Tutissima et rectissima videtur illorum Protestantium, aliorumque sententia, qui corpus et sanguinem Christi vere, realiter, et substantialiter in Eucharistia adesse, et sumi existimant, imo firmissime credunt, sed modo humano ingenio incomprehensibili, ac multo magis inexorabili, soli Deo noto, et in scripturas nobis non revelato, non quidem corporali, et per oralem sumptionem, sed neque etiam solo intellectu, ac pura puta fide, sed alia ratione, soli Deo, ut dictum est, cognito, illiusque omnipotentis relinquenda."

"In cœna enim per admirabilem virtutem Spiritus Sancti, invisibiliter substantiæ corporis Christi communicamus, ejus participes efficitur, haud secus ac si visibiliter panem et sanguinem ejus ederemus et biberemus. In baptismo lavacrum est, sed hic alimentum. Baptismus ingressus est in Ecclesiam. Coena nutrimentum in ecclesiâ et conservatio. Baptismus est salus, Sacramentum corporis Christi vita (ut ait Aug. De Peccatorum Merit. et Remiss. lib. 1. c. 24. Vide P. Picherellum De Missa, pag. 208 et 210), et ad mysticam manducationem verum Christi corpus non tantum animæ, sed etiam corpori nostro, spiritualiter tamen, hoc est, non corporaliter, exhibetur, et sane alio ac diverso, nobisque propinquiori modo, licet occulto, quam per solam fidem : ut recte Arch. Spalat. ubi supra, pag. 237). 'Et licet Johan. cap. 6. de esu sacramenti non agat, etc. inquit P. Picher., pag. 193, tamen de eodem carnis Christi manducatione spirituali, mysticaque cum Christo conjunctione; illic certe per fidem de conjunctionis initio; in Sacramento autem conjunctionis majore propinquitate, augmento, confirmatione, et strictiore arctioreque vinculo loquitur. Et fides qua proprie Christi caro in Eucharistia spiritualiter, h.e. incorporaliter, manducatur non est ea sola, ut quidam dicunt, qua Christus pro peccatis nostris crucifixus et mortuus creditur; Ea enim fides præsupponitur quidem et prærequiritur sacramentali manducationi sed non est ejus propria; sed ea fides est qua creditur verbo Christi dicentis, Hoc est corpus meum, etc. Credere enim Christum ibi esse præsentem, etiam carne vivificatrice, et desiderare eam sumere, nimirum hoc est spiritualiter et recte eam manducare in Eucharistia: unde Aug. super Joan. tract. 25. Quid paras dentem et ventrem? crede et manducasti, etc. ut doctiores norant et notant.

“Denique gravissime erratur, quando Christum non esse realiter in Eucharistia, hisce ratiunculis urgetur. Christus est in coelo, loco circumscriptus, etc. igitur non est reipesa vel realiter in Eucharistia. Nemo enim sanæ mentis, Christum e coelo vel e dextra patris descendere visibiliter aut invisibiliter, ut in coena vel siquis localiter adsit, existimat. Fideles omnes unanimi consensu et uno ore profitentur se firmiter retinere articulos fidei, Ascendit in coelos, sedet ad dextram Patris, et modum hujus præsentie credere se non esse naturalem, corporalem, carnalem, localem per se, etc., absque ulla tamen colorum desertione, sed supernaturalem, videri scripta Buceri Anglica, pag. 548, etc. Nimis tamen audacter quamplurimi, multis retro sæculis, atque imprimis hoc nostro rixosissimo; nimis inquam audacter, imo plus satis crasse et materialiter de præsentie modo loquuti sunt, hodieque loquuntur, quem nos infinitæ Dei sapientie et potentie omnino relinquendum censemus.”—Considerationes Modestæ et Pacificæ. Ed. 1658, pp. 374, 387.

Jackson, President of Corpus Christi College, Oxford, and Dean of Peterborough, (1638), perhaps the most learned of our divines, says:—

“This distillation of life, and immortality from his glorified human nature, is that which the ancient and orthodox Church did mean in their figurative and lofty speeches of Christ's real presence, or of eating his very flesh, and drinking his very blood in the Sacraments. And the sacramental bread is called his body and the sacramental wine his blood, as for other reasons, so especially for this, that the virtue or influence of his bloody sacrifice”—the distinction to which I have adverted must be here borne in mind between the res and the virtus sacramenti—“is most plentifully and most effectually distilled from heaven unto the worthy receivers of the Eucharist, and unto this point and no further will most of the testimonies reach, which Bellarmine in his books of the Sacraments, or Maldonate in his Comments upon the Sixth of St. John, do quote out of the fathers for Christ's real presence by transubstantiation; or which Chemnitius, that learned Lutheran, in his books, De duabus in Christo Na- turis and De Fundamentis eanæ Doctrinæ, doth avouch for consubstantiation. And if this much had been as distinctly granted to the ancient Lutherans, as Calvin in some places doth, the controversy between the Lutheran and other reformed Churches had been at an end when it first began; both parties acknowledging St. Cyril to be the fittest umpire in this controversy.”—Jackson's Works, vol. x. pp. 41–2. Oxford Edition, 1844.

One of the most important writings of St. Cyril, to whom Dr. Jackson refers, is his letter written to Nestorius, which was afterwards the basis of the decree of the Council of Ephesus (A.D. 431) which Council condemned the heresy of Nestorius with respect to the human nature of our Lord. One of the arguments adduced in this letter for the true doctrine is derived from the admitted presence and partaking of our Lord's body in the holy Eucharist; and the distinction is established between the body of our Lord, which is life-giving, and the body of a man, however holy, which is not.

The whole passage is as follows. It is one of those collected by the learned Dr. Routh in his work intended to show the close connection between our Church and the Primitive Church, and deserves careful consideration:—

Ἀναγκαίως δὲ κεινὸν προσθήσομεν καταγγέλλοντες γὰρ τὸν κατὰ σάρκα θάνατον τοῦ μονογενοῦς Υἱοῦ τοῦ Θεοῦ, τοῦτέστιν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, τὴν τε ἐκ νεκρῶν ἀναβίωσιν, καὶ τὴν εἰς οὐρανὸς ἀνάληψιν ὁμολογούντες, τὴν ἀναμάρτητον ἐν ταῖς Ἐκκλησίαις τελούμενην θυσίαν, πρόσμιν τε οὕτω ταῖς μυστικαῖς εὐλογίαις καὶ ἀγιασμοῖς, μέτοχοι γινόμενοι τῆς τε ἁγίας σαρκὸς, καὶ τοῦ τιμίου αἵματος τοῦ πάντων ἡμῶν Σωτῆρος Χριστοῦ, καὶ οὐχ ὡς σάρκα κοινὴν δεχόμενοι μὴ γένοιτο οὕτε μὴν ὡς ἀνδρὸς ἡγιασμένου, καὶ συναφθέντος τῷ Λόγῳ κατὰ τὴν ἐνότητά τῆς ἁγίας, ἡγουν ὡς θέλει ἐνοικῆσιν ἐσχηκός, ἀλλ' ὡς ζωοποιὸν ἀληθῶς, καὶ ἰδιαν αὐτοῦ τοῦ Λόγου. Ζῶν γὰρ ὢν κατὰ φύσιν ὡς Θεός, ἐπειδὴ γέγονεν ἐν πρὸς τὴν ἑαυτοῦ σάρκα, ζωοποιὸν ἀπέφηεν αὐτὴν ὥστε κἂν λέγῃ πρὸς ἡμᾶς, Ἄμην ἀμὴν λέγω ὑμῖν, ἐὰν μὴ φάγητε τὴν σάρκα τοῦ Υἱοῦ τοῦ ἀνθρώπου, καὶ πίνετε αὐτοῦ τὸ αἷμα, οὐχ ὡς ἀνθρώπου τῶν καθ' ἡμᾶς ἐνδὸς καὶ αὐτὴν εἶναι λογιούμεθα, πῶς γὰρ ἡ ἀνθρώπου σὰρξ ζωοποιὸς ἔσται κατὰ φύσιν τὴν ἑαυτῆς; ἀλλ' ὡς ἰδιαν ἀληθῶς γενομένην τοῦ δι' ἡμᾶς καὶ υἱοῦ καὶ ἀνθρώπου γεγονότος τε καὶ χρηματισσατος. (Z).—Routh, Scriptorium Ecclesiasticorum Opuscula, vol. i. p. 25.

The Council of Ephesus is one of the “first Four General Councils” referred to in 1 Eliz. c. 1. § 35.

Bishop Ken, whose name needs no introduction, in his exposition of the Church Catechism, uses this language:—

As to “Parts outward.”

“Glory be to Thee, O adorable Jesus, who, under the outward and visible part, the ‘bread and wine,' things obvious and easily prepared, both which 'thou hast commanded to be' received, dost communicate to our souls the mystery of divine love, the 'inward and invisible grace,' Thy own most blessed 'body and blood, which are verily and indeed taken and received by the faithful in Thy Supper;' for which all love, all glory, be to Thee."

As to "Real presence."

"I believe, O crucified Lord, that 'the bread which we break,' in the celebration of the Holy Mysteries, is the communication of Thy body, and the cup of blessing which we bless is the communication of Thy blood; and that Thou dost as effectually and really convey Thy body and blood to our souls by the bread and wine, as Thou didst Thy Holy Spirit, by Thy breath and Thy disciples; for which all love, all glory, be to Thee.

"Lord, what need I labour in vain to search out the manner of Thy mysterious presence in the Sacrament, when my love assures me Thou art there? All the faithful who approach Thee with prepared hearts, they well know Thou art there; they feel the virtue of divine love going out of Thee to heal their infirmities and to inflame their affections; for which all love, all glory, be to Thee.

"O holy Jesus, when at Thy altar I see the bread broken and the wine poured out, 'O teach me to discern Thy body there;' O let those sacred and significant actions create in me a most lively remembrance of Thy sufferings; how Thy most blessed body was scourged, and wounded, and bruised, and tormented; how Thy most precious blood was shed for my sins, and set all my powers on work to love Thee, and to celebrate Thy love in thus dying for me."—Ken's Prose Works, p. 324.

Bishop Jeremy Taylor, whose authority was much relied on by counsel for the promoter, says:—

"Some so observe the literal sense of the words that they understand them also in a natural. Some so alter them by metaphors and preternatural significations, that they will not understand them at all in a proper way. We see it, we feel it, we taste it, and we smell it to be bread; and by philosophy we are led into a belief of that substance whose accidents these are, as we are to believe that to be fire which burns, and flames, and shines. But Christ also affirmed concerning it, This is my body: and if faith can create an assent as strong as its object is infallible, or can be as certain in its conclusions as sense is certain in its apprehensions, we must at no hand doubt but that it is Christ's body. Let the sense of that be what it will, so that we believe those words and (whatsoever that sense is which Christ intended) that we no more doubt in our faith than we do in our sense, and then our faith is not reprovable. It is hard to do so much violence to our sense as not to think it bread; but it is more unsafe to do so much violence to our faith as not to believe it to be Christ's Body. But it would be considered that no interest of religion, no saying of Christ, no reverence of opinion, no sacredness of the mystery is disavowed, if we believe both what we hear and what we see. He that believes it to be bread, and yet verily to be Christ's Body, is only tied also by implications to believe God's omnipotence, that he who affirmed it can also verify it. And they that are forward to believe the change of substance can intend no more, but that it be believed verily to be the Body of our Lord. And if they think it impossible to reconcile its being bread with the verity of being Christ's Body, let them remember that themselves are put to more difficulties, and to admit of more miracles, and to contradict more sciences, and to refuse the testimony of sense, in affirming the special manner of transubstantiation. And therefore it were safer to admit the words in their first sense, in which we shall no more be at war with reason, nor so much with sense, and not at all with faith. And for persons of the contradictory persuasion, who to avoid the natural sense, affirm it only to be figurative, since their design is only to make this Sacrament to be Christ's Body in the sense of faith, and not of philosophy, they may remember that its being really present does not hinder, but that all that reality may be spiritual; and if it be Christ's Body, so it be not affirmed such in a natural sense and manner, it is still only the object of faith and spirit; and if it be affirmed only to be spiritual, there is then no danger to faith in admitting the words of Christ's institution, This is my Body. I suppose it to be a mistake to think whatsoever is real must be natural, and it is no less to think spiritual to be only figurative; that is too much, and this is too little; philosophy and faith may well be reconciled, and whatsoever objection can invade this union may be cured by modesty."

And again:—

"In the Sacrament that body which is reigning in heaven is exposed upon the table of blessing, and his body which was broken for us is now broken again, and yet remains impassable. Every consecrated portion of bread and wine, does exhibit Christ entirely to the faithful receiver, and yet Christ remains one, while He is wholly ministered in ten thousand portions; so long as we call these mysterious, and make them intricate to exercise our faith, and to represent the wonder of the mystery, and to increase our charity, our being inquisitive into the abyss can have no evil purposes. God hath instituted the rite in visible symbols to make the secret grace as present and discernible as it might, that by an instrument of sense our spirits might be accommodated as with an exterior object to produce an eternal act. But it is the prodigy of a miraculous power by instruments so easy to produce effects so glorious; this then is the object of wonder and adoration."—Life of Christ.

And again:—

"This may suffice for the word 'real,' which the English Papists much use, but, as it appears, with much less reason than the sons of the Church of England; and when the real presence is denied, the word 'real' is taken for 'natural,' and does not signify 'transcendenter,' or in his just and most proper signification. But the word 'substantialiter' is also used by Protestants in this question, which I suppose may be the same with that which is in the Article of Trent, 'Sacramentaliter præsens Salvator substantiâ suâ nobis adest,' 'in substance, but after a Sacramental manner:' which words if they might be understood in the sense in which the Protestants use them, that is really, truly, without fiction or the help of fancy, but 'in rei veritate,' so, as Philo calls spiritual things ἀνευκράτους οὐσίας, 'most necessary, useful and material substances,' it might become an instrument of a united confession.

* * * * *

"One thing more I am to note in order to the same purposes; that, in the explication of this question, it is much insisted upon, that it be inquired whether, when we say we believe Christ's body to be 'really' in the Sacrament, we mean, 'that body, that flesh, that was born of the Virgin Mary,' that was crucified, dead and buried? I answer, I know none else that He had, or hath: there is but one body of Christ, natural, and glorified; but he that says, that body is glorified, which was crucified, says it is the same body, but not after the same manner: and so it is in the Sacrament; we eat and drink the body and blood of Christ, that was broken and poured forth; for there is no other body, no other blood, of Christ; but though it is the same which we eat and drink, yet it is in another manner: and therefore, when any of the Protestant divines, or any of the fathers, deny that body which was born of the Virgin Mary, that which was crucified, to be eaten in the Sacrament—as Bertram, as St. Jerome, as St. Clemens Alexandrinus, expressly affirm; the meaning is easy; they intend it is not eaten in a natural sense; and then calling it 'corpus spirituale,' the word 'spiritual' is not a substantial predication, but is an affirmation of the manner, though in disputation it be made the predicate of a proposition, and the opposite member of a distinction. 'That body which was crucified, is not that body that is eaten in the Sacrament'—if the intention of the proposition be to speak of the eating it in the same manner of being; but 'that body which was crucified, the same body we do eat,'—if the intention be to speak of the same thing in several manners of being and operating: and this I noted, that we may not be prejudiced by words, when the motion is certain and easy: and thus far is the sense of our doctrine in this article."—Life of Christ, p. 427.

And again :—

"And certainly he could on no pretence have challenged the appellation of Christian, who had dared either himself to invade the holy rites within the canals, or had denied the power of celebrating this dreadful mystery to belong only to sacerdotal ministrations. For either it is said to be but common bread and wine, and then, if that were true indeed, anybody may minister it, but then they that say so are blasphemous, they count the blood of the Lord τὸ αἷμα τοῦ θεοῦ βιωτικόν (as St. Paul calls it in imitation of the words of institution), the Blood of the Covenant or New Testament, a profane or common thing; they discern not the Lord's body; they know not that the bread which is broken is the communication of the Lord's body. But if it be a holy, separate, or divine and mysterious thing, who can make it (ministerially I mean), and consecrate or sublime it from common or ordinary bread, but a consecrate, separate, and sublimed person?"

And further :—

"And certainly there is not a greater degree of power in the world than to remit and retain sins, and to consecrate the sacramental symbols into the mysteriousness of Christ's body and blood; nor a greater honour than that God in heaven should ratify what the priest does on earth, and should admit him to handle the sacrifices of the world, and to present the same which in heaven is presented by the eternal Jesus."—Clerus Domini. The Divine Institution and Necessity of the Office Ministerial, written by the especial command of King Charles I., sec. 5. Heber's edition, vol. xiv. p. 452-459.

Dr. Hey, Norrisian Professor of Divinity, in his lectures on the Articles, observes :—

"Latimer, in the Disputation at Oxford in 1554 (or in the Paper which he gave in), said that he maintained the real presence of Christ in the Eucharist, but not the corporal (see Fox, or Collier, A.D. 1554). Archbishop Secker (Lect., vol. ii. p. 251) says, the Church has always acknowledged the real presence. Yet Wheatley (page 320) says it (real essential presence of Christ's natural flesh and blood) was not allowed at first; in the time of Edward VI. it seemed to approach so near transubstantiation. Fulke, on Heb. i. 6, denies reality of Christ's corporal presence. Queen Elizabeth seems to have been willing to comprehend as many as possible in the new English Church; and with that view to have endeavoured to use a language which all might adopt who did not profess transubstantiation in the strictest sense, and which might nevertheless be used by those who did not admit any presence of Christ in the Eucharist perfectly corporal. Such language would comprehend all Lutherans, and some Papists. I think this remark will be sufficient to account for the change of the expressions in the 28th of our present Articles (on which Bishop Burnet speaks judiciously), and for the language in the second Book of Homilies, both as to the word 'Incorporation' and the insisting on Faith and spiritual eating of the Sacrament."—Hey's Lectures in Divinity, vol. iv. p. 331.

Bishop Pearson, in his great work on the Creed, observes :—

"Vain, therefore, was that old conceit of Eutyches, who thought the union to be made so in the natures, that the humanity was absorbed and wholly turned into the Divinity, so that by that transubstantiation the human nature had no longer being. And well did the ancient fathers, who opposed this heresy, make use of the Sacramental union between the bread and wine and the body and blood of Christ, and thereby shewed that the human nature of Christ is no more really converted into the Divinity, and so ceaseth to be the human nature, than the substance of the bread and wine is really converted into the substance of the body and blood, and thereby ceaseth to be both bread and wine; from whence it is by the way observable, that the Church in those days understood no such doctrine as that of transubstantiation."—Bishop Pearson on the Creed, Article III., vol. i. p. 258. Burton's edition.

Saravia was successively Prebendary of Gloucester, Canterbury, and Westminster. He was in 1607 one of the translators of the Bible. He lived on terms of intimate friendship with Hooker, as Isaac Walton relates. He wrote in Latin a treatise on the Holy Eucharist, which has been recently translated. He says :—

"In a Sacrament there be three things to be considered which be severally to be distinguished. The outward visible sign, and the invisible and heavenly thing united sacramentally to the sign. The third thing, that which floweth from them, is the benefit of the Sacrament. Concerning those two parts Augustine saith, 'What we say is this—what we endeavour by every means to prove is this—namely, that the sacrifice of the Church is made up of two things, consisteth of two things, the visible form of the Elements and the invisible flesh and blood of our Lord Jesus Christ—that is of the 'Sacramentum,' and of the 'Res Sacramenti'—that is the body of Christ. Now orthodox divines declare that the virtue of the Sacrament is a different thing from the Sacrament itself—that is a different thing from those two parts of which the Sacrament is made up. Augustine writeth upon the Gospel of St. John: 'For now also,' he saith, 'we receive the spiritual food; but the Sacrament is one thing, the virtue of the Sacrament is another.' The same father in the same place: 'If any one shall eat of It, he shall not die: but this pertaineth to the virtue of the Sacrament, not to the visible Sacrament.' Therefore the Sacrament is to be considered apart by itself, as it consisteth of the visible form of the elements and the invisible flesh and blood of our Lord Jesus Christ."—Treatise of the Holy Eucharist, p. 23. London, 1855.

Bishop Andrewes again, in his Apology for the answer which I have already cited to Bellarmine, says :—

"Now, Ambrose says that the nature is changed; and so indeed it is. For, as the Cardinal knows full well, the nature of the element is one, that of the Sacrament is another. Nor do we deny that the nature of the element is changed by the benediction, so that the bread as soon as consecrated is no longer the bread as nature formed it, but as the benediction has consecrated it; and by consecration also changed."—Page 263.

"Again, that grave author (who bears the name of Cyprian, yet is not Cyprian) says, that 'the bread is changed in nature not in appearance;' which we deny not, but deprecate the Cardinal's gloss upon it, explaining, 'the nature, i.e. the substance; and the appearance, i.e. the substance.' For, when the Almighty Power of the Word is added, the nature is changed, so that what was before a bare element now becomes a divine Sacrament, retaining, however, its former substance. This is taught by the words which immediately succeed, which are part of the same sentence, although by you they are always, not very honestly, cut out. As in the person of Christ both the humanity was manifest and the divinity concealed; so the divine essence, the visible Sacrament, enters. Verily, the conjunction between the visible Sacrament and the invisible subject-matter of the Sacrament is the same as that which exists between the humanity and the divinity of Christ, where, unless you are willing to savour of the doctrine of Eutyches, the humanity is not transubstantiated into the divinity."—Page 265.

"Both of them, Gelasius and Theodoret, argue against Eutyches; and from their testimony it is clear that the transmutation which takes place in the Sacrament is not a change of substance. I add also Augustine—'This is what we assert and approve of by all means; that the sacrifice of the Eucharist consists of two things, the visible appearance of the elements and the invisible flesh and blood of our Lord Jesus Christ, of the Sacrament and the subject-matter of the Sacrament, even as the person of Christ is evidently made up of God and man; since Christ is truly God and truly man. For everything contains the nature and truth of these things of which it is made up. But the Sacrament of the Church is made up of two things, namely, the Sacrament and the subject-matter of the Sacrament, that is, the Body of Christ.'"—Page 265.

Brevint, who died Dean of Lincoln about 1695, published a work called Christian Sacrament and Sacrifice, in which he says :—

"Hence it appears what crime it is not to discern the Lord's Body. It is to do worse than Esau did who sold his birthright for a trifle. It is to value at the same rate the anointing of a prophet and the composition of a performer. It is to take the Lord's Body for a despicable morsel of bread; in a word, it is to perform the action of a beast that devours but the gross and earthy matter of this Sacrament, and to have nothing of a Christian or rational creature who elevates his soul to that Body which by Christ's institution it represents, and to the grace of that Body which it promises. For, since the proper essence of sacred signs or Sacraments consists not in what they are in their nature, but in what they signify by divine institution, hence it happens infallibly that when the Sacraments are abused, the injury must needs light not upon them in their own natural being, bread, wine, and water, which upon this account are not at all considerable, but upon the Holy Mysteries, the Body and Blood of Christ Himself who is the main object of their formal being, that is, their signification. And therefore the Apostle speaks most exactly when he says that whosoever eats of this bread unworthily, doth not discern or doth not sanctify, but uses as a common and profane thing the very Body of Jesus Christ."—Christian Sacrament and Sacrifice, s. v. s. 9.

Thorndike, Master of Sidney Sussex College, Prebendary of Westminster, one of the Commissioners at the Savoy Conference for revising the Book of Common Prayer, in his Laws of the Church, says:—

"But if I allow them that make it more than such a sign to have departed from a pestilent conceit, and utterly destructive to Christianity, I cannot allow them to speak things consequent to their own position when they will not have these words to signify that the elements are the body and blood of Christ when they are received, but become so upon being received with living faith; which will allow no more of the body and blood of Christ to be in the Sacrament than out of it. For the act of living faith importeth the eating and drinking of the flesh and blood of Christ, no less without the Sacrament than in it. . . . If 'This is my Body,' 'This is my Blood,' signifieth no more than 'This is the sign of my Body and Blood,' then is the Sacrament of the Eucharist a mere sign of the body and blood of Christ, without any promise of spiritual grace; seeing that, being now a Sacrament, by being become a Sacrament it is become no more than a sign, of the body and blood of Christ, which, though a living faith spiritually eateth and drinketh when it receives the Sacrament, yet it should have done no less without receiving the same."—Laws of Church, Book III. Ch. ii., p. 6, 1st edition, 1659.

"As the eating and drinking of Christ's flesh spiritually by faith presupposes the flesh of Christ crucified and His blood poured forth, so must the eating of it in the Sacrament presuppose the being of it in the Sacrament, to wit, by the being and becoming of it a Sacrament; unless a man can spiritually eat and drink the flesh and blood of Christ in and by the Sacrament, which is not in the Sacrament when he eats and drinks it, but by his eating and drinking of it comes to be there.

"But if the flesh and blood of Christ be not there by the virtue of the consecration of the elements into the Sacrament, then cannot the flesh of Christ and His blood be said to be eaten and drunk in the Sacrament, which are not in the Sacrament by being a Sacrament, but in him that eats and drinks it. For that which he finds to eat and drink in the Sacrament cannot be said to be in the Sacrament, because it is in him that spiritually eats and drinks it by faith. Either, therefore, the flesh and blood of Christ cannot be eaten and drunk in the Eucharist, or it is necessarily in the Sacrament when it is eaten and drunk in it; in which if it were not, it could not be eaten and drunk in it."—Laws of Church, Book III. Ch. ii., page 6.

"If these things be true, it will be requisite that we acknowledge a change to be wrought in the elements by the consecration of them into the Sacrament. For how should they come to be that which they were not before, to wit, the Body and Blood of Christ, without any change? And in regard of this change the elements are no more called by the name of their nature and kind after the consecration, but by the name of that which they are become. Not as if the substance thereof were abolished, but because it remains no more considerable to Christians; who do not, nor are to look upon, this Sacrament with any account of what it may be to the nourishment of their bodies by the nature of the elements, but what it may be to the nourishment of their souls by the Spirit of God assisting in and with His Flesh mystically present in it. But this change consisting in the assistance of the Holy Ghost which makes the elements in which it dwells the Body and Blood of Christ, it is not necessary that we acknowledge the bodily substance of them to be any way abolished."—Laws of Church, Book III., Ch. ii., p. 16.

And again,—

"It is not here to be denied that all ecclesiastical writers do with one mouth bear witness to the presence of the Body and Blood of Christ in the Eucharist, neither will any of them be found to ascribe it to anything but the consecration, or that to any faith but that upon which the Church professeth to proceed to the celebrating of it. And upon this account when they speak of the elements supposing the consecration to have passed upon them, they always call them by the name, not of their bodily substance, but of the body and blood of Christ which they are become."—Laws of Church, Book III., Ch. ii., p. 30.

And again,—

"And upon these premises I conclude, that as it is by no means to be denied that the elements are really changed, translated, turned and converted, into the Body and Blood of Christ (so that whoso receiveth them with a living faith is spiritually nourished by the same, he that with a dead faith is guilty of crucifying Christ), yet is not this change destructive to the bodily substance of the elements, but cumulative of them with the spiritual grace of Christ's Body and Blood, so that the Body and Blood of Christ in the Sacrament turns to the nourishment of the body, whether the body and blood in the truth turn to the nourishment or the damnation of the soul."—Laws of Church, Ch. iv., pp. 33, 34.

From Bramhall, who died Archbishop of Armagh in 1663, a prelate of considerable erudition, I cite these passages:—

"Having viewed all your strength with a single eye, I find not one of your arguments that comes home to Transubstantiation, but only to a true real presence, which no genuine son of the Church of England did ever deny, no, nor your adversary himself. Christ said, 'This is My Body;' what He said we do stedfastly believe. He said not, after this or that manner, neque con, neque sub, neque trans. And therefore we place it among the opinions of the schools, not among the articles of our Faith. The Holy Eucharist, which is the Sacrament of peace and unity, ought not to be made the matter of strife and contention."—Works, fol. ed. p. 15.

And again,—

"Abate us transubstantiation, and those things which are consequent of their determination of the manner of presence, and we have no difference with them in this particular. They who are ordained priests ought to have power to consecrate the Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Christ, that is, to make them present."—Works, p. 485.

Sparrow, Bishop of Exeter and of Norwich, died in 1685. He was also one of the Commissioners for revising the Prayer Book. In his "Rationale" of that book he has these words:—

"Next is the Consecration. So you shall find in Chrysostom and Cyril last cited. Which consecration consists chiefly in rehearsing the words of our Saviour's institution, This is My Body, and This is My Blood, when the bread and wine is present upon the Communion Table. 'The Holy Sacrament of the Lord's Supper,' says S. Chrysostom, 'which the priest now makes, is the same that Christ gave to His Apostles, &c.' Again, 'Christ is present at the Sacrament now, that first instituted it. He consecrates this also: it is not man that makes the Body and Blood of Christ by consecrating the holy elements, but Christ that was crucified for us. The words are pronounced by the mouth of the priest, but the elements are consecrated by the power and grace of God.' 'This is,' saith He, 'My Body;' by this word the bread and wine are consecrated.

"When the priest hath said at the delivery of the Sacrament, The Body of our Lord Jesus Christ which was given for thee, preserve thy body and soul unto everlasting life, the communicant is to answer Amen; by this Amen, professing his faith of the presence of Christ's Body and Blood in that Sacrament."—Rationale upon the Book of Common Prayer, pp. 211, 216, 220; ed. Oxford, 1840.

Tillotson, who died Archbishop of Canterbury, in 1694, and was of a different school of divinity from the last author, nevertheless says:—

"I deny not but that the Fathers do, and that with great reason, very much magnify the wonderful mystery and efficacy of the Sacrament, and frequently speak of a great supernatural change made by the Divine benediction, which we also readily acknowledge."—Discourses on Transubstantiation.

Yardley, fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge, who died Archdeacon of Cardigan, in 1770, an authority cited by Bishop Mant, says:—

"After the consecration of the elements immediately follow the reception and distribution of them, which continue still in their natural substance of bread and wine, though they are changed in their value and efficacy into the sacramental Body and Blood of Christ."—Cited in Mant's Book of Common Prayer.

Beveridge, who died Bishop of St. Asaph, in 1708, and wrote a well-known "Exposition of the Thirty-nine Articles," says:—

"Hence also it is, that our Church requires us to receive the holy Sacrament kneeling, not out of any respect to the creatures of bread and wine, but to put us in mind that Almighty God, our Creator and Redeemer, the only object of all religious worship, is there specially present, offering His own Body and Blood to us, that so we may act our faith in Him, and express our sense of His goodness to us, and our unworthiness of it, in the most humble posture that we can. And, indeed, could the Church be sure that all her members would receive as they ought with faith, she need not to command them to receive it kneeling, for they could not do it any other way. For how can I pray in faith to Almighty God, to preserve both my body and soul to everlasting life, and not make my body as well as soul bow down before Him? How can I by faith behold my Saviour coming to me, and offering me His own Body and Blood, and not fall down and worship Him? How can I by faith lay hold upon the pardon of my sins, as there sealed and delivered to me, and receive it any otherwise than on my knees? I dare not, I cannot do it; and they who can, have too much cause to suspect that they do not discern the Lord's Body, and therefore cannot receive it worthily. Be sure, our receiving the blessed Body and Blood of Christ, as the Catholic Church always did, in an humble and adoring posture, is both an argument and excitement of our faith in Him. By it we demonstrate that we discern the Lord's Body, and believe Him to be present with us in a particular sacramental sense, and by it we excite and stir up both ourselves and others to act our faith more steadfastly upon Him, in that by our adoring Him, we actually acknowledge Him to be God as well as man; and therefore on whom we have all the reason in the world to believe and trust for our salvation."—Bishop Beveridge, on "Frequent Communion," p. 208.

I cannot more fitly conclude this catalogue than by a reference to the high authority of the present Bishop of Salisbury, Dr. Moberly, who, in one of his Bampton Lectures, observes upon the Holy Eucharist as follows:—

"In order to constitute its complete character according to the divine pattern of its institution, it absolutely requires two things. First, there must be the consecration of the elements by the priest, the organ of the priestly Church, empowered by sacred ordinance to do that solemn and indispensable portion of the joint act which none else may presume to exercise or intrude upon; for it is no common nor ordinary work which he has to do. It is no light thing that by the acts that he organically does, and the words which he organically utters, the spiritual presence of the Lord is so brought down upon the elements of bread and wine, as that to the faithful they become verily and indeed, however invisibly and mysteriously, the Body and Blood of Christ."—Moberly's Bampton Lectures, pp. 176, 177.

Again:—

"There has never been a question of the absolute confinement of the power of consecrating the bread and wine to their mysterious efficacy of becoming to the faithful, and to the Church of the faithful, the Body and Blood of the Lord, to the ordained clergy."—Moberly's Bampton Lectures, p. 177.

Again:—

"No doubt some of the ancients, as, for example, St. Chrysostom, in the treatise on the priesthood, use very strong and remarkable language on this part of the subject. I venture to think that as we should not have scrupled to use similar language if we had lived before the Roman theory of Transubstantiation had been elaborated into all its train of evil and superstitious consequences, so would be in all probability have guarded his expressions had he been writing in later days, when that philosophical theory had been invented and made to take the place of the simple doctrine of the real, and, as in our modern mode of speech we call it, the objective presence of the Body and Blood of Christ in the sacred elements.

"Under the outward and visible form of bread and wine we believe that the Body and Blood of Our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ are given, taken, and received; and we believe that that divine food, according to the sacred teaching of our own Liturgy in this respect, imparts to every one of those who receive it with true penitent heart and lively faith, these nine inestimable blessings."—Moberly's Bampton Lectures, pp. 173-4.

Again:—

"That Divine nourishment is the Body and Blood of Christ. It is hardly possible, brethren, in these days of division and disputation on all the most sacred articles of the faith to pass by, quite without notice, the extreme diversity of opinion of churches and doctors on this most sacred, and in its general terms unquestioned, doctrine, but it suits little with my purpose to dwell upon such diversities at any length."

And then this learned prelate adds the following words which deserve the most careful attention, both from the great weight due to the authority which uttered them, and from their bearing upon the present case:—

"I will therefore only say that the ancient doctrine of the Church, and, as I read it, the unquestionable doctrine of the Church of England, is that the spiritual presence of the body and blood of our Lord in the Holy Communion is objective and real.

NEW SERIES, 39.—ECCLES.

I do not see how we can consent, as with Hooker and Waterland, to limit authoritatively that presence to the heart of the receiver; for the words of the institution (and these are cases in which we are rigidly and absolutely bound to the exact words of the revelation), the words, I say, of the Lord in the institution, seem to forbid such a gloss."—Moberly's Bampton Lectures, p. 171.

Real Presence.—The use of the terms Objective and Subjective.

During the course of the argument the use of the phrase objective presence was demurred to by counsel for the promoter.

It was said, I believe quite truly, that the phrase had been recently introduced into treatises of English theology; a remark which might also be made with respect to the introduction of it into systems of philosophy. I mean to speak with proper diffidence on this subject, but the fact seems to be by no means conclusive against the use of it in either science.

Philosophy and theology have derived these terms, objective and subjective, from the schoolmen, and in both sciences they express a distinction which, perhaps, no other terms can adequately convey.

Subjective, in both sciences, denotes, I believe, that which belongs to the mind or soul of man, the thinking conscious subject.

Objective denotes that which belongs to what is without or external to the mind or soul of man, the object known, perceived, or believed to exist. It signifies what is real in opposition to what is ideal; what exists in nature in contrast to what exists in thought; what has a substantive, independent existence in fact, not a relative dependent existence in the mind or soul of the individual.—Sir W. Hamilton's Lectures, Vol. II., pp. 159, 160.

Thus the phrase subjective presence would be used, I presume, to mean that the presence of Christ is in the act of reception by the communicant of the consecrated elements themselves.

The phrase objective presence would be used, I presume, to mean that the presence of Christ is mysteriously, but really, in the consecrated elements apart from the act of reception by the communicant.

The use of these phrases cannot be imposed as a necessary condition of resolving the question as to the mode of the presence. It seems to me that the language of the present Bishop of Carlisle on this point deserves attention.

"We see it and hear it, for instance, continually and very warmly discussed, whether the presence of Christ in the sacrament be an objective or a subjective presence. It is taken for granted that it must be either the one or the other; it must either be objective, that is, independent of the mind contemplating it, or else it must be subjective, that is, dependent upon the contemplating mind. Now it may seem at first sight that this view of the question is exhaustive; and yet whichever horn of the dilemma you take you arrive at consequences not easily admissible. Is it conceivable that the presence of Christ should be altogether independent of the worshipper? If so, do you not degrade that presence, and run the risk of confounding the sacrament with a charm, something that can produce results without the accompanying energy of a true and living faith on the part of those who receive it? On the other hand, is it conceivable that the presence of Christ should be altogether dependent upon the spirit of the worshipper, so that there should be no absolute and independent truth and meaning in the words of our Lord when he said, 'This is My Body,' and 'This is My Blood'? I cannot accept either horn of the dilemma. And if it be asked, What then will you do? I reply by denying that anyone has a right to submit the words of Christ to any dilemma of the kind. What right have we to say that His presence must be either objective or subjective? Why may it not in some sense be both? Or how do we know that that mysterious presence of which we speak is capable of being described under such a formula at all?—Dean Goodwin's Sermons, 1868, p. 112.

However recently the terms objective and subjective may have been introduced into our theology, and whether the introduction of them has or has not been necessitated or justified by increased laxity and confusion of speech upon the subject of the Holy Eucharist, they are certainly now supported by very high authority, even if we confine our consideration to the writers of our own country. They have been adopted, as will be seen in the citations which I have made, by some of the most erudite and esteemed of our own divines. And in my opinion it was legally competent to Mr. Bennett to make use of them.

Real Presence.—Use of the phrase "Under the forms of Bread and Wine."

Great objection was taken by the counsel for the promoter to the phrase "under the form of bread and wine," which it was contended introduced teaching at variance with the formularies of our Church. This form of expression has been used in our formularies as applicable to the substances of bread and wine remaining unchanged. They were so used in the Articles of 1536, and in the "Institution of a Christian Man" in 1537. In the Six Articles a direct statement of transubstantiation took their place. They do not appear in the "Necessary Erudition" of 1543. After a lapse of four years they reappeared under the auspices of Cranmer and other bishops at the end of the first book of the Homilies, where it is said, "Hereafter shall follow sermons of the nativity, passion, resurrection, and ascension of our Saviour Christ, of the due receiving of His blessed body and blood under the form of bread and wine." And it is not unimportant to observe, that, early in the reign of Elizabeth, the bishops advert to this statement, for in their title to the second book of the Homilies they speak "of such matters as were promised and entitled in the former book of Homilies." And in Queen Elizabeth's Primer of 1559, we find the prayer which begins "Our Saviour and Redeemer, Jesu Christ, which in Thy last Supper with Thine Apostles didst deliver Thy blessed body and blood under the form of bread and wine." The first book of Homilies has undergone two revisions, and the statement "under the form of bread and wine" remains unchanged up to the present time.

Ratramn, it will be seen, adopted pretty much the same form of expression.

"At quia continentur et corpus et sanguinem Christi esse, nec hoc esse potuisse, nisi facti in melius commutatione; neque ista commutatio corporaliter, sed spiritualiter facta sit necesse est, ut jam figuratè facta esse dicatur quoniam sub velamento corporis panis corporeique vini spirituale corpus Christi spiritualisque sanguis existit." (5)

It is remarkable that the followers of Wickliffe and the Lollards, who were burnt in the reigns of Henry IV. and V., under the authority of the inhuman statute then enacted, appear to have maintained "the sacrament of Christ's flesh and his blood in form of bread and wine," and to have been burnt for refusing to acknowledge the corporal presence, and to declare that after the words of consecration the material bread and wine no longer existed.—Southey, History of the Church, Chapter XI.—Hume, Vol. III., c. 19.

(5) Ratramni de Corp. et Sanguine Domini, p. 15.

The following is Bishop Burnet's account of Ratramn. "Ratramnus was commanded by Charles the Bald, then emperor, to write upon that subject, which he, in the beginning of his book, promises to do, not trusting to his own sense, but following the steps of the holy fathers. He tells us that there were different opinions about it; some believing that the body of Christ was there without a figure; others saying that it was there in a figure or mystery; upon which he apprehended that a great schism must follow. His book is very short, and very plain; he asserts our doctrine as expressly as we ourselves can do, he delivers it in the same words, and proves it by many of the same arguments and authorities that we bring."—Burnet, Exposition of the 39 Articles, Art. XXVIII. p. 337.

To Sir John Oldcastle (Lord Cobham) in 1414, the inquisitors put the Roman proposition as to the presence, and their question on it as follows :—

"The fayth and the determination of holy church touching the blissful sacrament of the auter, is this; that after the sacramentall wordes ben sayde by a preest in hys masse, the material bred, that was bifore, is turned into Christis verray body; and the material wyn, that was before, is turned into Chrystes verrey blode, and so ther leweth in the auter no material brede, no material wyn, the wych wer ther before the seying of the sacramentall wordes; howe lyve ye this article?" —Wilkin's Concilia Mag. Brit. Vol. III., pp. 355-6; Collier, Eccl. Hist., Vol. III., 294.

To which Oldcastle answered, "in sacramento altaris est verum corpus et verus panis, viz, quem videmus, et corpus Christi sub eodem celatum quod non videmus." He was burnt for not believing in transubstantiation.

The first of the Six Articles, framed by Henry VIII. when he went back to Transubstantiation, is in these words :—"That in the Eucharist is really present the natural body of Christ under the forms and without the substance of bread and wine" (See ante, p. 3); which seems to shew clearly that the phrase "under the forms of bread and wine" does not per se express the doctrine of Transubstantiation.

Ridley would certainly have adopted the language of Ratramn, and have induced Cranmer to do so. Cranmer, moreover, approved of the Augsburg confession, in which the Article is as follows :—

"VII. De Eucharistia.

"De Eucharistia constanter credimus et docemus, quod in sacramento corporis et sanguinis Domini, vere, substantialiter, et realiter adsint corpus et sanguis Christi sub speciebus panis et vini. Et quod sub eisdem speciebus verè et realiter exhibentur et distribuuntur illis qui sacramentum accipiunt, sive bonis sive malis."—Hardwick on the Articles, p. 255.

I may observe in passing, that when the Jerusalem Bishopric Act was passed, the instructions from Lambeth and London to the English bishop were to ordain Prussian subjects who had subscribed the Confession of Augsburg as well as the Thirty-nine Articles of the English Church. The directions were as follows :—

"Congregations consisting of Protestants of the German tongue, residing within the limits of the bishop's jurisdiction, and willing to submit to it, will be under the care of German clergymen ordained by him for that purpose, who will officiate in the German language, according to the forms of their national liturgy compiled from the ancient liturgies, agreeing in all points of doctrine with the liturgy of the English Church, and sanctioned by the bishop, with consent of the Metropolitan, for the special use of those congregations; such liturgy to be used in the German language only. Germans intended for the charge of such congregations are to be ordained according to the ritual of the English Church, and to sign the Articles of that Church; and, in order that they may not be disqualified by the laws of Germany from officiating to German congregations, they are, before ordination, to exhibit to the bishop a certificate of their having subscribed, before some competent authority, the Confession of Augsburg." —From A Statement of Proceedings relating to the Establishment of a Bishopric of the United Church of England and Ireland in Jerusalem; published by authority; London, December 9th, 1841.

By the joint operation of 3 & 4 Vict. c. 33, and 5 Vict. c. 6. s. 4, persons so ordained may officiate with the consent of the ordinary in England.

It may be well to compare this doctrine, that the body and blood of Christ are spiritually present under the form of bread and wine, with the doctrine of transubstantiation as laid down by the Council of Trent. The difference between the two doctrines is at once apparent.

"C. IV. De Transubstantiatione.

"Quoniam autem Christus redemptor noster corpus suum id, quod sub specie panis offerebat, vere esse dixit, ideo persuasum semper in ecclesia Dei fuit, idque nunc denuo sancta hæc synodus declarat, per consecrationem panis et vini conversionem fieri totius substantiæ panis in substantiam corporis Christi Domini nostri, et totius substantiæ vini in substantiam sanguinis ejus. Quæ conversio convenienter et proprie a sancta catholica ecclesia transubstantiatio est appellata."

"Can. II. Si quis dixerit, in sacrosancto eucharistiæ sacramento remanere substantiam panis et vini una cum corpore et sanguine Domini nostri Jesu Christi, negaveritque mirabilem illam et singularem conversionem totius substantiæ panis in corpus, et totius substantiæ vini in sanguinem, manentibus dumtaxat speciebus panis et vini, quam quidem conversionem catholica ecclesia aptissime transubstantiationem appellat, anathema sit."—Canones, &c. Concilii Tridentini, p. 60.

Nicholson, Bishop of Gloucester, one of the committee selected by the Convocation in 1661 to undertake, in compliance with the king's order, the revision of the Prayer Book, speaking of the Holy Eucharist, says, "Christ is there under the forms of bread and wine; not changed in substance but in use" (Exposition of Catechism, 178, cited in Keble on Euch. Adoration, p. 142); and in that well-known book of devotion, Sherlock's Practical Christian, we read—

"Grant, holy Jesus, that as I have now received in faith Thy precious body and blood, veil'd under the species of bread and wine, I may hereafter behold Thy Blessed Face reveiled in heaven."—Sherlock's Practical Christian, part ii. chap. 10, p. 252, ed. 1841.

"He discerns not this body of our Lord who sees not with the eye of faith Christ really present under the species of bread and wine, though he conceive not the manner thereof not curiously questioning, much less pragmatically defining, the way and manner of His presence, as being deeply mysterious and inconceivable. These old verses, expressing the faith of the wisest of our first Reformers, may satisfy every modest, humble, soberminded, good Christian, in this great mystery of godliness:—

"It was the Lord that spake it,
He took the bread and brake it,
And what His word did make it,
So I believe and take it."

* * * * *

"And he that receives Christ's holy body and blood into his soul, not first emptied of all his sins by holy faith, and all the sacred offices of true repentance, doth with Judas betray his Master into the hand of His enemies, even those very enemies which crucified Him; for those were our sins. And therefore it is said of such unworthy receivers that they are guilty of the body and blood of Christ."—Sherlock's Practical Christian, part ii. chap. 1.

"Consider," says Sutton, "the divine wisdom of the Son of God, who, respecting our weakness, hath conveyed unto us His body and blood after a divine and spiritual manner, under the form of bread and wine."—Godly Meditations on the most Holy Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, p. 26.

Real Presence.—Effect of the 29th Article on this doctrine.

An argument was addressed to me, founded on the 29th Article of Religion, which I must notice. The 29th Article is as follows:—

XXIX. Of the wicked which eat not the body of Christ in the use of the Lord's Supper.

"The wicked, and such as be void of a lively faith, although they do carnally and visibly press with their teeth, as St. Augustine saith, the Sacrament of the body and blood of Christ, yet in no wise are they partakers of Christ, but rather to their condemnation do eat and drink the sign or Sacrament of so great a thing."

It was not and could not be contended that Mr. Bennett had directly contravened this Article, because the charge against him, founded upon it, had been struck out by the Court; but it was argued, quite fairly, that this 29th Article furnished a reason why the objective presence could not be the doctrine of the Church of England, otherwise it was said the wicked would be partakers of Christ in the Eucharist, which this Article declares they are not.

It seems to me, however, that it can be reasonably and fairly argued that the object of the Article, which must be construed as a whole, and not, as has been strangely supposed, by the title alone, was to assert that the wicked who received the holy elements received them to their condemnation; that is, that they did not become spiritually partakers of Christ, though they sacramentally received His body and blood. And the phrase, "Eat Christ's body," I may observe, in the title, is a phrase of theology capable of various interpretations. It is taken from the 6th chapter of St. John, and may be, as it has been, by high authority (Pusey on the Real Presence, p. 255), interpreted to mean so to eat the body of Christ as to dwell in Christ, or, in other words, to be "partakers of Christ"; they do not eat Christ's body to any purpose or effect for which it was offered to them; they eat it to their damnation; they eat a judgment to themselves, but still in one sense they eat it, or rather, as it is expressed in the old hymn—

"Sumunt boni, sumunt mali,
Sorte tamen inæquali,
Vitæ vel interitis;
Mors est malis, vita bonis;
Vide, paris sumptionis
Quam dispar sit exitus!"

Bishop Ridley, in the course of his disputation at Oxford, said—

"Evil men do eat the very true and natural body of Christ sacramentally, and no farther, as St. Augustine saith; but good men do eat the very true body both sacramentally and spiritually, by grace."—Works, p. 246.

And again, we have this passage—

Watson.—"Good sir, I have determined to have respect to the time, and to abstain from all those things which may hinder the entrance of our disputation; and therefore, first I ask this question—When Christ said in John vi., 'He that eateth My flesh, &c.,' doth He signify in those words the eating of His true and natural flesh, or else of the bread and symbol?"

Ridley.—"I understand that place of the very flesh of Christ to be eaten, but spiritually. And further I say, that the Sacrament also pertaineth unto the spiritual manducation; for without the spirit to eat the Sacrament is to eat it unprofitably; for whose eateth not spiritually, he eateth his own condemnation."—Works, p. 238.

St. Augustine, upon whose authority the 29th Article professes to be founded, frequently states that the wicked do, in the sense I have mentioned, receive the body of Christ. He says:—

"Sicut enim Judas cum buccellam tradidit Domino non malum accipiendo sed malè accipiendo locum in se Diabolo præbuit: Sic indignè quisque sumens Dominicum Sacramentum non efficit, ut quia ipse malus est malum sit, aut quia non ad salutem acceperit nihil acceperit. Corpus enim Domini et sanguis Domini nihilominus erat illis quibus dicitur Apostolus: Qui manducat indignè, iudicium sibi manducat et bibit.—De Bapt. c. Don., lib. 5.

“De uno pane et Petrus et Judas accepit: Petrus ad vitam, Judas ad mortem; cibus bonus bonos vivificat, malos mortificat.”—In Joh., Tr., 60.

“Corpus Christi cum signo Diaboli accipere non timent.”—Ep. ad Poss.

“Judas Christi corpus accepit.”—In Joh., Tr., 62.

Other instances might be mentioned.

Dr. Jackson, to whom I have already adverted, adds the weight of his great authority to this construction of the Article:—

“The questions then to be discussed are two:—

“First, what it is to eat Christ’s flesh and drink His blood?

“Secondly, what it is for Christ to dwell or abide in us, and us to dwell or abide in Him?

“All agree that there is a twofold eating of Christ’s body and a twofold drinking of His blood; one merely sacramental, and another spiritual; which agreement notwithstanding, there ariseth a third question, namely, what manner of eating Christ’s flesh and drinking His blood is in this place either only or principally meant?

“For the resolution of this question, we are briefly to explicate each member of this division; namely, 1, what it is to eat Christ’s body and drink His blood sacramentally only; 2, what it is to eat His body and drink His blood spiritually.

“First then, all that are partakers of this Sacrament eat Christ’s body and drink His blood sacramentally; that is, they eat that bread which sacramentally is His body, and drink that cup which sacramentally is His blood, whether they eat or drink faithfully or unfaithfully. For all the Israelites (1 Cor. x.) drank of the same spiritual Rock, which was Christ sacramentally; all of them were partakers of His presence, when Moses smote the rock; yet with many of them God was not well pleased, because they did not faithfully either drink or participate of His presence. And more displeased He is with such as eat Christ’s body and drink His blood unworthily, though they eat and drink them sacramentally; for eating and drinking so only, that is, without faith or due respect, they eat and drink to their own condemnation, because they do not discern or rightly esteem Christ’s body or presence in the Holy Sacrament.

“May we say then that Christ is really present in the Sacrament, as well to the unworthy as to the faithful receivers? Yes, this we must grant; yet must we add withal, that He is really present with them in a quite contrary manner; really present He is, because virtually present to both; because the operation or efficacy of His body and blood is not metaphorical, but real in both. Thus the bodily sun, though locally distant for its substance, is really present by its heat and light, as well to some eyes as to clear sights, but really present to both by a contrary real operation; and by the like contrary operation it is really present to clay and to wax: it really hardeneth the one and really softeneth the other. So doth Christ’s body and blood by its invisible but real influence mollify the hearts of such as come to the Sacrament with due preparation, but harden such as unworthily receive the consecrated elements. If he that will hear the word must take heed how he hears, much more must he which means to receive the Sacrament of Christ’s body and blood be careful how he receives. He that will present himself at this great marriage feast of the Lamb without a wedding garment, had better be absent. It was always safer not to approach the presence of God, manifested or exhibited in extraordinary manner (as in His sanctuary or in the ark), than to make appearance before it in an unhallowed manner, or without due preparation. Now, when we say that Christ is really present in the Sacrament, our meaning is, that as God He is present in an extraordinary manner; after such a manner as He was present (before His incarnation) in His sanctuary, the ark of His covenant; and by the power of His Godhead, thus extraordinarily present, He diffuseth the virtue or operation of His human nature either to the vivification or hardening of their hearts who receive the sacramental pledges. So, then, a man by eating Christ’s body merely sacramentally may be excluded from His gracious presence. But no man hath Christ dwelling in him by this manner of eating His flesh and drinking His blood unless withal he eat the one and drink the other spiritually. The eating, then, of Christ’s body, and drinking His blood, merely sacramentally, is not the eating and drinking here meant.—Jackson’s Works, vol. x. pp. 61–3, Oxford ed. 1844.

Archbishop Secker expresses himself in pretty much the same sense:—

“It is not,” he says, “the gross and literal, but the figurative and spiritual eating and drinking, the partaking by a lively faith of an union with Me, and being inwardly nourished by the fruits of My offering up My flesh and blood for you, that alone can be of benefit to the soul.

“And as this is plainly the sense in which He says that ‘His flesh is meat indeed, and His blood is drink indeed,’ so it is the sense in which the latter part of the third answer of our Catechism is to be understood, that ‘The body and blood of Christ are verily and indeed taken and received by the faithful in the Lord’s Supper;’ words intended to show that our Church as truly believes the strong assurances of Scripture concerning this Sacrament as the Church of Rome doth; only takes more care to understand them in the right meaning, which is, that though in one sense all communicants equally partake of what Christ calls His body and blood, that is, the outward signs of them, yet, in a much more important sense, the faithful only, the pious and virtuous receiver, eats His flesh and drinks His blood; shares in the life and strength derived to men from His incarnation and death; and through faith in Him becomes, by a vital union, one with Him—a member, as St. Paul expresses it, of His flesh and His bones—certainly not in a literal sense, which yet the Romanists might as well assert, as that we eat his flesh in a literal sense, but in a figurative and spiritual one. In appearance, the Sacrament of Christ's death is given to all alike, but verily and indeed in its beneficial effects to none but the faithful. Even to the unworthy communicant He is present, as He is whenever we meet together in His name; but in a better and most gracious sense to the worthy soul, becoming by the inward virtue of His spirit its food and sustenance. This real presence of Christ in the Sacrament His Church hath always believed."—Secker, Lectures XXXVI., vol. xiv. p. 493, ed. 1792, Edinburgh.

South did not scruple to speak of his horror when he considered,—

"The pure and blessed body of our Saviour passing through the open sepulchre of such throats."—(i.e. of the wicked).—South's Sermons, vol. ii. p. 310.

Bishop Cosin says :—

"A while before the writing of this Apology, came forth the Dialectic of the famous Dr. Poinet, Bishop of Winchester, concerning the truth, nature, and substance of the body and blood of Christ in the blessed Sacrament, writ on purpose to explain and manifest the faith and doctrine of the Church of England on that point."—History of Transubstantiation, vol. iv. p. 159.

Bishop Poynt, who is thus referred to, says :—

"Now as to the denial that the wicked can eat the body of Christ, which would necessarily be the case if virtue and spiritual grace were united with the bread, we must make a distinction. For, if we regard the nature of the Sacrament, divine virtue cannot be absent from the sign, in so far as it is a Sacrament, and serves for this use; if we look to the morals and mind of the recipient, it is not to him life and grace, both of which it is by its own nature, because the evil of the wicked is not capable of so great goodness, nor suffers it to bear fruit in itself. Nay, rather, it is death and condemnation to them. For, as many kinds of meats are in their own nature wholesome, but, if they enter into diseased bodies increase the evil, and often accelerate death, not by their own nature but by the fault of the receiver, so it is with regard to the Sacrament, in which its own virtue is always present, until it discharges its office; although, when taken by the unworthy, he is not capable of receiving such goodness, or of deriving any profit therefrom. Cyprian confirms this: 'Sacraments, he says, cannot exist without their own virtue, nor can the Divine majesty be ever absent from the mysteries.' But although the Sacraments are permitted to be taken or touched by the unworthy, they whose want of faith or unworthiness resists so great holiness cannot be partakers of the Spirit. Therefore to some these gifts are the savour of life unto life, to others the savour of death unto death, because it is altogether just that those who despise the grace should be deprived of so great benefit, and that purity should not make an abode for itself in those who are unworthy of such grace."

Then the author quotes St. Augustine as maintaining these views. He also says :—

"From these and many places it is evident that the Eucharist, as far as appertains to the nature of the Sacrament, is truly the body and blood of Christ, is a truly Divine and holy thing, even when taken by the unworthy, while, however, they are not partakers of its grace and holiness, but drink their own death and condemnation. Nor in them doth such goodness dwell, nor does it enter in order to dwell, but to condemn; nor does the contact of the Lord's body more profit it than that it did the Jews to have touched that holy body of His, always endowed with its own grace. Wherefore the Sacraments continue, so long as they are Sacraments, to retain their own virtue, nor can they be separated therefrom. For they always consist of their own parts—an earthly and a heavenly, a visible and an invisible, an inward and an outward, whether the good take them or the bad, whether the worthy or the unworthy. Besides, that commutation of the signs, and the transition of the elements into the inward substance, which everywhere occurs in the ancient writers, cannot exist, if we separate the virtue from the sign, and we wish the one to be taken apart from the other. But this is to be understood, so long as the sign serves its use, and is adapted to the end for which it was destined by the Word of God. . . . The dignity of the Sacraments, and the honour due to them, is not injured, but remains whole and entire, so long as we confess that the truth of the body and its nature and substance is received by the faithful, together with the symbols, as the ancient Fathers testify. . . .

"The good and the bad alike eat sacramentally with their mouths the body of Christ and drink His blood, but the good alone do this spiritually. Now to eat the body and blood of Christ sacramentally, and to drink His blood, is to receive the Sacrament of His body and blood; that is, the bread and the body of Christ, the wine and the blood of Christ. For in no other way are the bread and the wine Sacraments. And he who thinks it possible that the outward signs can be taken apart from those things signified, which are a necessary part of the Sacrament, divideth, or rather dissolveth, the Sacrament. For the outward symbols be only one part of the Sacrament."—Dialecticon viri boni et literati, de veritate, natura, atque substantiâ Corporis et Sanguinis Christi in Eucharistiâ.

"He who receiveth only the bread receiveth no Sacrament; for either the Sacrament is received whole and perfect or not at all. Augustine—'Sacraments, however, if they be the same, are everywhere whole and perfect, although their meaning be depraved, and the handling of them be various and discordant.' For it is not more contrary to reason that the flesh of Christ be eaten sacramentally, and His blood drunken by hypocrites, than that it should have been possible that God should have been touched and kissed by the wicked, whensoever they either kissed or touched Christ, without any profit, to their own damnation. (Augustine on Baptism against the Donatists.) Nor doth it make any difference, when the question is touching the perfectness and holiness of the Sacrament what be the belief and what the faith of the man who receiveth the Sacrament. It maketh, indeed, all the difference in respect of the way of salvation, but in respect of the question, what a Sacrament is, it maketh no difference at all. For it may happen that a man may have the Sacrament in its completeness, and a perverted faith, just as it may happen that a man may have all the words of the Creed, and yet have no right belief.—Dialla-ticon viri boni et literati, de veritate, naturâ, atque substantiâ Corporis et Sanguinis Christi in Eucharistia.

Thorndike says :—

"But if eating and drinking the body and blood of Christ in this Sacrament unworthily be the crucifying of Christ again, rendering a man 'guilty' of His body and blood, then is not His flesh and blood spiritually eaten and drunk till living faith make them spiritually present to the soul, which the consecration maketh sacramentally present to the body. And it is to be noted that no man can say that this Sacrament represents or tenders and exhibits unto him that receiveth the body and blood of Christ (as all must do that abhor the irreverence to so great an ordinance which the opinion that it is but a bare sign that Christ crucified necessarily engendereth), but he must believe this; unless a man will say that that which is not present may be represented, that is to say, tendered and exhibited presently down upon the place. It is not, therefore, that living faith which he that receives the Eucharist, and is present at the consecrating of it, may have and may not have that causeth the body and blood of Christ to be sacramentally present in the elements of it, but it is the profession of that common Christianity which makes men members of God's Church; in the unity whereof wheresoever this Sacrament is celebrated (without inquiring whether those that are assembled be of the number of those to whom the kingdom of Heaven belongs), thou hast a legal presumption even towards God that thou receivest the flesh and blood of Christ in and with the elements of bread and wine, and shalt receive the same spiritually for the food of thy soul, supposing that thou receivest the same with living faith. For one part of our common Christianity being this, that our Lord Christ instituted this Sacrament with a promise to make by His Spirit the elements of bread and wine sacramentally His body and blood, so that His Spirit that made them so (dwelling in them as in His natural body), should feed them with Christ's body and blood that receive the Sacrament of them with living faith; this institution being executed, that is, the Eucharist being consecrated according to it, so sure as Christianity is true, so sure the effect follows."—Laws of Church, chap. iii. pp. 17, 18.

Thorndike is very explicit in distinguishing between the merely sacramental reception by the wicked and the spiritual reception by the good.

"Here, indeed, it will be requisite to take notice of that which may be objected for an inconvenience that God should grant the operation of His Spirit to make the elements sacramentally the body and blood of Christ upon the dead faith of them who receive it to their condemnation in the sacrament, and therefore cannot be said to eat the body and blood of Christ (which is the only act of living faith), without that abatement which the premises have established, to wit, in the sacrament. But all this, if the effect of my saying be thoroughly considered, will appear to be no inconvenience. For that the body and blood of Christ should be sacramentally present in and under the elements (to be spiritually received of all that meet it with a living faith, to condemn those for crucifying Christ again that receive it with a dead faith;) can it seem any way inconsequent to the consecration thereof by virtue of the common faith of Christians, professing that which is requisite to make true Christians, whether by a living or a dead faith; rather must we be to seek for a reason why 'he that eateth this bread and drinketh this cup unworthily' should be 'guilty of the body and blood of Christ' as 'not discerning it;' unless we suppose the same sacramentally present by virtue of that true Christianity which the Church professing and celebrating the sacrament, tendereth it for a spiritual nourishment to a living faith,—for matter of damnation to a dead faith. For if the profession of true Christianity be, as of necessity it must be, matter of condemnation to him that professeth it not truly (that is to say, who professing it doth not perform it,) shall not his assisting the celebration and consecration of the Eucharist produce the effect of rendering him condemned by himself (eating the body and blood of Christ in the sacrament, out of a profession of Christianity which spiritually he despiseth,) for not fulfilling what he professeth; or that living faith which concurrereth to the same as a good Christian should do, be left destitute of that grace which the tender of the sacrament promiseth, because the faith of those who join in the same action is undiscernible? Certainly if the sacramental presence of Christ's body and blood, tendering the same spiritually, be a blessing or a curse, according to the faith which it meets with; it can by no means seem unreasonable that it should be attributed to that profession of Christianity which makes it respectively a blessing or a curse, according to the faith of them for whom it is intended."—Laws of Church, chap. iii. p. 18.

Dr. Hey uses remarkable language as to this 29th Article.

"Our application" (he says) "may be confined to mutual concessions. And for these I think there is greater room in this Article than in any other. The dispute between the Romanists and the reformed is merely verbal. I mean about the present Article as separated from all others. They say, the bread after consecration is the body of Christ, even in substance; it follows, supposing this true, that whoever eats that substance, eats the body of Christ; that is, it is not desecrated by one mouth more than by another. We say that the bread continues bread after consecration, and therefore that every receiver eats bread; but that he who does what the Scripture requires may be said, in the prophetic, strong, figurative language of Scripture, to eat the body of Christ; as he eats what is appointed to represent that body, and what the Scripture calls briefly that body itself. The Romanists, therefore, and we, use a phrase, eating the body of Christ, in two different senses; and we also use this proposition, 'The wicked eat Christ's body,' in two different senses, consequently to dispute about its truth is idle, and childish. They too use it as a corollary from a proposition which we think false, though we own the corollary to be rightly deduced. Now it must always be trifling to dispute about such a corollary, as if it were an independent proposition. We both require preparation for the sacrament, indeed Romanists more than we; we both say, that unworthy receivers may draw punishment upon themselves; we both quote the passage of Augustin which is in our Article. In short, we both mean, that the consecrated bread is not desecrated by the unworthiness of the receiver, and that worthiness is required in order to obtain benefit."—Hey's Lectures in Divinity, vol. iv. p. 358.

In truth the construction placed by all these authorities on the 29th Article brings it into harmony with the words of the 25th Article. "And in such only as worthily receive the same they have a wholesome effect or operation: but they that receive them unworthily, purchase to themselves damnation, as St. Paul saith."

I must also observe that the words "the faithful" or "fideles" have been often interpreted to mean the baptised members of the visible Church. The parables of the tares and the wheat growing together, the good and the bad fish in the same net, being cited to support this position. Thorndike in the passage just cited speaks "of that common profession of Christianity which makes men members of Christ's Church; in the unity whereof wheresoever this sacrament is celebrated, without inquiring whether those that be assembled be of the number of those to whom the kingdom of heaven belongs, etc."

And Barrow in those great sermons on The Doctrine of Universal Redemption Asserted and Explained, which have been always received by the Church as the soundest and most eloquent exposition of her doctrine, observes:—

"But our Lord is the Saviour of those persons; and therefore He is the Saviour of all men. This assumption we assayed to shew in the last argument; and many express testimonies of Scripture before mentioned establish it; the common style of Scripture doth imply it, when in the apostolical writings to all the visibly faithful indifferently the relation to Christ as their Saviour is assigned, an interest in all saving performances is supposed, the titles of σωζόμενοι and σωσόμενοι (with others equivalent, of justified, sanctified, regenerated, quickened, etc.,) are attributed. And in one text (ὅτι ἡλικίαν ἐπὶ Θεῷ ζῶντι, ὅς ἐστι σωτὴρ πάντων ἀνθρώπων, μάλιστα πιστῶν. 1 Timothy, iv. 10) GOD is said to be the Saviour chiefly τῶν πιστῶν, of the faithful; which word in its common acceptation denotes all visible members of the Christian communion."—Barrow's Works, vol. iv., pp. 25, 26.

In accordance with this teaching Bishop Beveridge interprets our 19th Article:—

"Of the Church.

"The visible Church of Christ is a congregation of faithful men in the which the pure word of God is preached, etc."

The Bishop says:—

"Though the Church of Christ be one and the same Church, both in heaven and earth, yet it there differs much from itself as here. There it is triumphant, here militant; here it is militant, not triumphant. There it consisteth of good only and not of bad; here of bad as well as good."—Bishop Beveridge on the Articles.

Our Burial Service is constructed on the presumption that all who are not unbaptised or excommunicate or have not laid violent hands upon themselves, are to be considered as belonging to the Church of Christ.

Before, however, I leave the question as to whether the manducation by the wicked of the elements without eating Christ, be or be not an argument for the absence of the Presence from the consecrated elements, I must observe, that an opinion has been maintained by great divines, such as Cyprian and Bishop Ken, that the Presence is miraculously withdrawn from the elements in cases where the wicked or a beast have devoured them.

These are the lines of Bishop Ken:

"How Godhead to our human flesh was join'd,
Transcends the reach of an angelick mind.
How God and man with bread and wine unite,
Is too sublime for bounded human sight;
To boundless Godhead both united are,
God tabernacles here, and temples there.
There undivided God and man exist,
The flesh assum'd is ne'er to be dismiss'd;
'Tis transient here, and when a Judas eats
The sacred bread, Christ's Shechinah retreats.
The day and night each other still expel,
Pure God in souls impure can never dwell."
—On the Eucharist, Poetical Works, vol. i. pp. 123-128, London, 1721.

According to this opinion the real presence in the Holy Eucharist may be maintained by those who deny the reception of Christ "in any sense" by the wicked.

I am of opinion that the doctrine of the real spiritual or of the objective real presence maintained by the defendant is not by necessary implication at variance with this 29th Article of Religion, and, as I have already said, Mr. Bennett is not charged with directly contravening any doctrine respecting the reception of the Eucharist by the wicked.

Real Presence.—Judgment at Bath, 1856.

The judgment given at Bath by Archbishop Sumner and his assessors, against the Archdeacon of Taunton, in 1856, has been cited as having decided the question of the mode of presence adversely to the statements of Mr. Bennett. But I decline absolutely to admit that this decision has any legal validity, or is in any way binding upon this Court in this case.

I do so for various reasons; perhaps one reason is sufficient. That decision was reversed by the Court of Arches and the Privy Council. The decision was appealed from on almost every possible ground of law, civil and ecclesiastical; that is, the nature of the case being considered upon the merits as well as the law. The appeal was heard in the first instance upon the construction of the statute 3 & 4 Vict. c. 86; and this appeal was successful in both Courts. And as it decided that the Archbishop had by reason of the lapse of time no jurisdiction to try the case at all, the other questions were not discussed; but, as a reference to the pleadings shew, the decision of the Archbishop was as stoutly contested on the merits, or on the law strictly ecclesiastical, as on the statute law.

The inference, that because the appellant was successful in limine upon the first objection which he took, he would not have been successful on his other objections which he had not an opportunity of stating, but on which he confidently relied, would indeed be a novel doctrine of jurisprudence.

It is not necessary that I should dwell further upon the subject, or refer to what has happened since 1856; but I ought to add this observation, which perhaps makes all reference to this case unnecessary, namely, that the proceedings against the Archdeacon of Taunton were grounded on his alleged contravention of the law with respect to the reception of the Holy Eucharist by the wicked; a question which I have not to decide in these proceedings against Mr. Bennett.

NEW SERIES, 39.—ECCLES.

Real Presence.—As to the Receptionist Doctrine.

There is a doctrine as to the mode of the presence which has obtained the name of the receptionist doctrine. It is thus expressed by Hooker: "The real presence of Christ's most blessed body and blood is not therefore to be sought for in the sacrament, but in the worthy receiver of the sacrament." To whatever cause this opinion of Hooker may be due, whether, as has been suggested, to his respect for Calvin or his sympathy with the sufferings of Reformers on the Continent (Hooker's Works, ed. Keble, 1 Vol., Pref. pp. 81-83.—Keble on Eucharistical Adoration, p. 124), or to the result of his own convictions on the subject, it was certainly not his intention to maintain that no other mode of the presence could be lawfully holden by clerks of our Church. For, with that wisdom which is the fruit both of deep learning and fervent charity, he says:—

"As for his dark and hidden works, they (that is, 'such as love piety,') prefer, as becometh them in such cases, simplicity of faith before that knowledge which curiously sifting what it should act on, and disputing too boldly of that which the wit of man cannot search, chilleth for the most part all warmth of zeal, and bringeth soundness of belief many times into great hazard."

And again:—

"The fruit of the Eucharist is the participation of the body and blood of Christ. There is no sentence of Holy Scripture which saith that we cannot by this sacrament be made partakers of His body and blood, except they be first contained in the sacrament, or the sacrament converted into them. 'This is my body,' and 'This is my blood,' being words of promise, with we all agree that by the sacrament Christ doth really and truly in us perform His promise, why do we vainly trouble ourselves with so fierce contentions, whether by consubstantiation, or else by transubstantiation, the sacrament itself be first possessed with Christ or no? A thing which no way can either further or hinder us, however it stand, because our participation of Christ in this Sacrament dependeth on the co-operation of His omnipotent power which maketh it His body and blood to us, whether with change or without alteration of the element such as they imagine, we need not greatly to care nor inquire."—Hooker's Works, ed. Keble, Book V., Ch. lxvii. 6.

When Hooker's Puritan adversary observed that in these words he seemed to make light of the doctrine of transubstantiation, Hooker replied:—

"They (the Romanists) ought not to stand in it as in a matter of faith, nor to make so high account of it inasmuch as the Scripture doth only teach the communion of Christ in the Holy Sacrament, and neither the one nor the other way of preparation thereunto. It sufficed to have believed this, and not by determining the manner how God bringeth it to passe, to have entangled themselves with opinions so strange, so impossible to be proved true. They should have considered in this particular sacrament that which Bellarmine acknowledgeth of sacraments in generall. It is a matter of faith to believe that sacraments are instruments whereby God worketh grace in the souls of men; but the manner how he doth it is not a matter of faith." (6)

P

I was referred to some portions of a charge prepared by the late Archbishop of Canterbury, but which his much lamented death prevented him, perhaps, from correcting, certainly from finishing and delivering. From them it appeared that he adopted, as many divines have done, the opinion of Hooker. For Archbishop Longley I can never cease to feel the highest esteem and the deepest regard. It would be a libel on his memory to suppose that he held this particular mode of the presence to be the only mode which the Church of England allowed her children to believe. The last time that I saw him in public, in the year 1868, he was presiding over the meeting in the theatre at Oxford, the object of which was to found a college for the maintenance of those church principles which the late Mr. Keble professed. Mr. Keble's edition of Hooker was published in 1845, and his work on the "Eucharistical Adoration" was published in 1857, in both of which he regretted that upon this point Hooker had suffered himself to be biased by the opinions of foreign reformers, and expressed the strongest possible opinion in favour of the objective real presence in the holy elements.

Having cited all these authorities, I will now recur to the very words of the 28th Article:—

"The body of Christ is given, taken, and eaten in the supper, only after an heavenly and spiritual manner. And the mean whereby the body of Christ is received and eaten in the Supper, is Faith."

I believe that the position of those who agree with the opinions of the defendant would take this form of argument, or something like it: They say—What is given?—The body of Christ. Who gives it?—Our Lord the Great High Priest in Heaven, by the hands of His priests, ministering, as the 28th Article says, by His "commission and authority" on earth. What is taken?—What has been before given, the body of Christ. What is eaten?—What has been before given and taken, the body of Christ.

The manner indeed of the giving, the taking, and the eating is only heavenly and spiritual, but not the less on that account is something given, taken, and eaten external to and apart from the giver, taker, and eater. The whole manner of the presence is indeed supernatural, but not the less true; spiritual, but not the less real; heavenly, but not the less actually there to cleanse the body and wash the soul of the communicant. It has happened that among the recent discoveries of ecclesiastical historical records we have a contemporanea expositio from the compiler of this Article, which cannot, I think, be gainsaid.

It is a letter entitled:

"Edmund Gheast, Bishop of Rochester, to Cecil."

"Greeting in ye Lord," and it goes on as follows:—

"Right Honourable,—I am verye sorye yt you are so sick. God make yow whole, as it is my deayer and prayer. I wold have seen yow er this, accordinge to my dutye and good will, but when I sent to knowe whether I might see yow, it was often answered yt yow were not to be spoken with.

"I suppose yow have hard how ye Bisshop of Gloceestre" (i.e. Cheney) "found him selve greaved with ye playngs of this adverb only in this article, The bodye of Christ is gyven, taken, and eaten in ye supper after an heavenly and spiritual manner only, by cause it did take away ye presence of Christis bodye in ye sacrament, and prively noted me to take his part therein, and yesterdaye in myn absence more playnely touched me for the same. Whereas betwene him and me I told him plainly, that this word only in ye aforesaid article did not exclude ye presence of Christis body fro the sacrament, but only ye grossenes and sensibleness in ye receaving thereof. For I said unto him, though he tooke Christis body in his hand, receaved it with his mouth, and that corporally, naturally, reallye, substantially, and carnally, as ye doctors doo write, yet did he not, for all that, see it, feale it, smells it, nor taste it. And therefore I told him I wold speake against him herein, and ye rather by cause ye article was of myn own pennyng. And yet I would not, for all that, deny thereby anything that I had spoken for the presence. And this was the some of our talks.

(6) Hooker's Works, Book V., Ch. lxvii. 6.—In the same sense the Bishop of Carlisle says, "I mean that they who object to the dogma of transubstantiation, and who say that the Church of Rome had no right to impose such a dogma, do not by that objection express anything incompatible with the strongest opinions concerning our Lord's spiritual presence. What they do say is, that it is wrong to attempt to define that presence by any human formula. And that, especially with regard to the particular formula in question, experience has shown that it is capable of being interpreted in a most mischievous sense, and that it leads almost necessarily, and has in fact led to the most terrible superstition."—Dean Goodwin's Sermons, 1869, p. 104.

"And this that I said is so true by all sortes of men, that even D. Hardinge writeth the same, as it appeareth most evidently by his wordes reported in ye Bishshope of Salisburie's" (Jewel's) "booke, pagina 228, wich be thees: then we maye saye, yt in the sacrament his verye body is present, yea, really, is to saye, in deede, substantially, that is, in substance, and corporally, carnally, and naturally; by that which wordes is ment that his verye bodye, his verye flesh, and his very humane nature, is there, not after corporall, carnall, or natural wise, but invisibly, unspeakably, supernaturally, spiritually, divinely, and by waye unto him only known.

"This I thought good to write to your honour for myn owne purgation. The Almightye God in Christ restore yow to your old health, and longe keepe yow in the same, with encrease of vertue and honour.

"Yours whole to his poure,
"EDM. ROFFENS."

Endorsed.—"22 December, 1556, B. of Rochester to myself."

Superscribed.—"To the Right Honourable and his singler good friend Sir Willm. Cecil, knight, principal Threasure to ye Queen's Matie."—Cited in Pusey, On the Real Presence, p. 203, also printed separately in a pamphlet.

The Homily "Concerning the Sacrament" speaks of faith being "a necessary instrument;" the Article had spoken of it as "a mean." May it not be said to have this signification: a "necessary instrument" or "a mean" of beneficial reception, or what the Homily calls "fruition," of "a ghostly substance?" Is such a construction at all events wholly inadmissible, and does it subject the holder of the theory to punishment?

The alterations effected in the Holy Communion service after the second Prayer Book of Edward VI., both in the reign of Elizabeth and Charles II., were certainly not unfavourable to those who maintained a real, or, as it is not uncommonly designated, an objective presence in the Eucharist. I do not dwell on the marginal rubrics, with respect to manual rites, or the position of the priest before the table. But I come first to the important addition made to the language which the priest is directed to use when he delivers the holy elements to the communicants. It cannot, I think, be reasonably doubted, that the substitution of the words, "Take and eat this in remembrance that Christ died for thee, and feed on Him in thy heart by faith with thanksgiving," for "The body of our Lord Jesus Christ which was given for thee, preserve thy body and soul unto everlasting life," and the substitution of "Drink this in remembrance that Christ's blood was shed for thee, and be thankful," for "The blood of our Lord Jesus Christ which was shed for thee, preserve thy body and soul unto everlasting life," was intended to give a greater prominence to the commemorative character of the rite, and to avoid as much as possible the recognition of the presence. Queen Elizabeth insisted on the restoration of the discarded sentences, and ever since the two have been joined together in the service of the Holy Communion. The part of the Catechism introduced in the reign of James I. relative to the Holy Eucharist, according to the plain meaning of the words, favours the doctrine of the real presence in the holy elements.

In the Canons of 1603, it is said (Canon 57) that "the doctrine both of baptism and the Lord's Supper is so sufficiently set down in the Book of Common Prayer to be used at the administration of the said sacraments as nothing can be added unto it that is material and necessary."

The directions for the reverent consumption of the unconsumed elements, and for covering them with a fair linen cloth, seem to indicate increased reverence for this Sacrament. But the next matter of importance is the alteration in what is commonly, but improperly, called the Black Rubric, i.e., the declaration on kneeling at the close of the Communion Service. This declaration, which contains an apology for the kneeling posture of the communicants, found its way, under the religious influences which then prevailed, into the second Prayer Book of Edward VI. It specified that no "adoration was done or ought to be done either unto the sacramental bread and wine there bodily received or unto any real and essential presence there being of Christ's natural flesh and blood." Queen Elizabeth omitted this declaration altogether from her Prayer Book. There can be no doubt that she did so because it was an obstacle to the communion of the Lutherans and Roman Catholics in our Church, as well as because, rightly or wrongly, she interpreted it as adverse to the doctrine of the presence.

Upon this point we have the consentient voice of two rival historians. Collier says that Queen Elizabeth's Council, on her accession, impressed upon her, that "To prevent discontent the reformed Liturgy ought to be reviewed and made as inoffensive to all parties as may be;" Burnet, that the Queen inclined "To have the manner of Christ's presence in the Sacrament left in some general words, that those who believed the corporal presence might not be driven away from the Church by too nice an explanation of it."—Ecc. Hist. vol. ii. p. 411, fol., 1714; Hist. Reformation, vol. ii. Book 3, p. 753.

"Corporal" is not equivalent "to real and essential" (as Mr. Keble truly remarks). It is not only associated with grosser and more carnal ideas, but in its strict philosophical meaning implies also something local, in the sense of filling a certain space, εἰς τὴν περιγυρίαν. The form of His glorious body "real," "substantial," "essential," imply nothing of the kind. They express our faith in the miracle, without in the least pretending to indicate the manner of it."—Keble on Euch. Ador. p. 137.

At the Savoy Conference in 1661, the Presbyterians desired the restoration of the declaration, and the bishops opposed it, but eventually consented to its restoration, with an alteration of the most material character, namely, the substitution of the words "corporal presence of Christ's natural flesh and blood," for the words "real and essential presence there being," &c.

Alterations in the Book of Common Prayer in 1689.

"(452.) The question.] What is the outward part or sign of the Lord's Supper?"

"(453.) The question.] What is the inward part or thing signified?"

"(454.) In the answer, 'The body and blood of Christ,' &c.] are verily and indeed taken and received by the faithful in the Lord's Supper."

"(455.) The following question.] What are the benefits whereof we are partakers thereby?"

It appears to me that the principle of legal construction applicable to this grave and deliberate alteration is clear, namely, that it was intended to exclude, in conformity with the Articles, that gross mode of presence which is called transubstantiation, but to admit the "real and essential presence," which the second Prayer Book of Edward VI. had excluded.

The alterations which a party in the Church, and the dissenters from without, after the accession of William and Mary, endeavoured in 1689 to effect in the Prayer Book point to the same result.

The Catechism appeared to express so strongly, as Bishop Hampden has observed, the Catholic doctrine as to the Sacraments, that those who did not adopt that doctrine were naturally anxious to alter the language of the Catechism. They did not succeed; but the table which follows represents the attempts that they made with respect to the Holy Eucharist.

"Altered.] What are ye outward and visible signs in the Lord's Supper?"

"Altered.] What are the things signified by ye bread and wine?"

"Struck out and altered thus.] Were offered for us upon ye cross once for all."

"Struck out, and the following additions substituted, which are so constructed as to join on with the answer to that question.]"

"Question.] What is ye inward and spiritual grace?"

"Answer.] The benefits of ye sacrifice of Christ's body and blood, which are verily and indeed taken and received by ye faithful in ye Lord's Supper."—House of Commons Return, 1854.

With respect, therefore, to the charges in the criminal articles against Mr. Bennett, for describing the presence in the Holy Eucharist as "actual" and "objective," I must hold that by the use of these expressions he has not contravened the formularies of our Church, or committed any ecclesiastical offence.

Doctrine of the Sacrifice.

Under the second category of the alleged offences of the defendant, I find the following charges:—

1. "That the Holy Communion table is an altar of sacrifice, at which the ministering priests of the Church appear in a sacerdotal position at the celebration of the Holy Communion, and that at such celebration there is a great sacrifice or offering of Jesus Christ by the ministering priest, and that in such sacrifice or offering the mediation of Jesus ascends from such altar to plead for the sins of men."

2. "That the Holy Communion table is an altar of a sacrificial character, at which the ministering priests of the Church discharge a sacerdotal office at the celebration of the Holy Communion, and that at such celebration there is a living, real, and spiritual offering of Christ by the ministering priest."

In the extract from Mr. Bennett, contained in Article 5, lettered A, he speaks of "sacerdotal representation at her altars;" he has before spoken of the "episcopal representation of the Church in the House of Lords." By the term "sacerdotal representation" is meant, I suppose, the officiating of the priest at the holy table; the Latin word has been used instead of the Saxon, and the language is vague, but I find nothing necessarily at variance with the doctrine of the Church of England in the use of the expression.

In passage B the defendant speaks of "the doctrine of sacrifice" and of "the idea of a sacrifice in the blessed Eucharist." In various passages he speaks of "the Eucharistic sacrifice;" in passage E, of "the sacrificial character of the altar;" in passage G, of a "living, real, spiritual offering of Christ upon the altar;" and in passage L, of "the sacrifice offered by the priest in the Holy Eucharist."

Passage D is as follows:—

(Some Results, &c. pages 12 and 13.)

(D.) "The priest or priest and deacon formerly standing with faces opposite each other, and leaning over the altar in apparently amicable conference, now appear in their sacerdotal position, as though they were in reality occupied in the great sacrifice which it is their office to offer. Formerly, an ordinary surplice, and frequently not over clean or seemly, covered the person of the ministering priest, no difference being manifested between that and all other offering of prayer; now the ancient vestments present to crowds of worshippers the fact, that here before God's altar is something far higher, far more awful, more mysterious, than aught that man can speak of, namely, the presence of the Son of God in human flesh subsisting. And towards this are tending all the ancient rites of the Church which are now in course of restoration. The solemn music and the smoke of the incense go up before God, assuring the world that here is no appearance only of love, but a reality and a depth which human hearts cannot fathom, nor even the angels themselves. The incense is the mediation of Jesus ascending from the altar to plead for the sins of man."

As this extract appears to me to be the most explicit, if such a word be applicable to any of Mr. Bennett's statements, with respect to the offence charged, I have cited it in extenso. It contains, I think, these propositions; that there is a "Great Sacrifice," which it is the office of the priest to offer, to which his position at the altar has reference; that the dresses of the priests are calculated to apprise the worshippers of "the Presence of the Son of God in human flesh subsisting," as to the use of which words I have already expressed my opinion; that the rites of music and incense tend to symbolize this Presence, and to represent the reality and depth of God's love; and that the incense further or especially represents the mediation of our Lord ascending from the Altar. With respect to the propositions relating to the symbolical character of vestments and rites, no specific charge is made; and with respect to the use of incense at the time of the Holy Communion, a judgment prohibitory of it has been delivered by me since these passages were written. But I must observe here that the sentence, "The incense is the Mediation of Jesus ascending from the Altar to plead for the sins of man" is a statement as to the symbolical use of incense, and per se does not contravene the doctrine of the Church. What is here predicated of incense is not necessarily connected with the doctrine of a Sacrifice, but rather, as it would seem to me, with the doctrine of the Presence; and therefore that part of the charging article, which, omitting all mention of incense, applies the words as to the Mediation of Jesus ascending from the Altar to the doctrine of a Sacrifice is founded on a construction of the words of the defendant which they do not necessarily bear. This part of the charge, therefore, is, I think, not well laid; but, if it were, it would be only an aggravation of the charge with respect to the doctrine of a Sacrifice.

It appears to me that the articles of charge are in other respects well founded.

The law on this subject is mainly contained in the 31st Article of Religion:

"The offering of Christ once made is that perfect redemption, propitiation, and satisfaction for all the sins of the whole world, both original and actual; and there is none other satisfaction for sin but that alone. Wherefore, the sacrifices of masses, in the which it was commonly said that the priest did offer Christ for the quick and the dead, to have remission of pain or guilt, were blasphemous fables and dangerous deceits."

With this should be contrasted the Canons of the Council of Trent:

Can. I. "Si quis dixerit, in missa non offerri Deo verum et proprium sacrificium, aut quod offerri non sit aliud quam nobis Christum ad manducandum dari: anathema sit.

Can. III. "Si quis dixerit missæ sacrificium tantum esse laudis et gratiarum actionis, aut nudam commemorationem sacrificii in cruce peracti, non autem propitiatorium; vel soli prodesse sumenti; neque pro vivis et defunctis pro peccatis, poenis, satisfactionibus et aliis necessitatibus offerri debere: anathema sit."—Canones, &c. Concilii Tridentini, Sess. xxii.

I have therefore to consider, first, whether the doctrine of a Sacrifice as connected with the Eucharist be in every sense forbidden by the law of the Church; secondly, whether if the Church admit in any sense the doctrine of a Sacrifice, the passages extracted contain such a sense of that doctrine as it does not admit.

To deal with the first point first:—

I have been referred to the case of Liddell v. Westerton (Moore, Special Report) as a judgment of the Privy Council upon this point. It is said that this decision established that the use of the term "Sacrifice," as applied in any way to the Eucharist, was unlawful. I am unable to take that view of the judgment, for various reasons :

First, the question as to the lawfulness of the term had never been raised in the argument, and a decision upon it was not necessary for the issue in the cause. If this point had been argued it would have been shewn, no doubt, that the authority of Cudworth principally in the absence of argument, relied upon by the Court, was opposed, not only to the great learning and authority of Mede, of Grabe, of Andrewes, of Laud, of Jackson, and the yet greater authority of one whom Waterland himself called—while dissenting from his opinion—"the incomparably learned and judicious" Bishop Bull.—Waterland's Works, Vol. VII., p. 343, Ed. 1823.

Secondly,—Since the observations on this point in Westerton v. Liddell, a flood of learning has been poured out upon the subject by the very learned treatises of Dr. Pusey, Mr. Keble, the Bampton Lectures of Bishop Moberly, the Essay of Archdeacon Churton, and other works ; and when I remember how much effect was ascribed by the Privy Council to a treatise of Dr. Story, which examined with great learning the law as to bills of exchange, and disapproved of former decisions of the Court of Queen's Bench on this subject (Allen v. Kemble, 6 Moore, P.C. 323), I am sure not less effect would be ascribed by that tribunal to the treatises which have since examined with at least equal learning this difficult subject, then, perhaps, as in the case of the bills of exchange, by comparison, but superficially considered.

Thirdly,—The judgment of the Privy Council did not in fact pronounce even any obiter dictum, as to the lawfulness of the use of this term in a particular or metaphorical sense. Even Waterland, whom Archdeacon Churton describes as not impressed with the "higher and deeper sacramental truths," observes :—

"Nevertheless, the Sacrament of the Eucharist has more particularly obtained the name of Sacrifice, partly on account of the offerings to church and poor in the ante-oblation, which are peculiar to that Sacrament, and partly on account of the commemorated Sacrifice in the post-oblation. For though baptism commemorates the death and burial, and indirectly the grand sacrifice, yet it does not so precisely, formally, and directly represent or commemorate the Sacrifice of the Cross as the Eucharist does."—Waterland's Works, Vol. VIII. p. 223, Ed. 1823.

"The value of this treatise of Waterland's will be found to consist in the clear refutation it supplies to the leading Socinian glosses on the doctrine of the Eucharist, reducing it, as it speaks, to a bare memorial of an absent friend. When he comes to deal with higher and deeper sacramental truths, he is no longer persuasive, often no longer trustworthy. He could vindicate the testimony of Holy Scripture concerning the Divine persons, but seems to have seen nothing mysterious in that solemn rite which was given to make men partakers of the Divine nature. It was the tendency of the cold age in which he lived, when even persons of well-regulated lives, and not altogether destitute of piety, could approve of the poor sophism of 'modest Foster,' or one of his admirers.

"Where mystery begins, religion ends. It was Waterland's great misfortune, in other respects, as well as in writing on this great subject, that he was altogether unacquainted with the writings of one who is perhaps the very first of English divines, the most profound and copious reasoner in divine things, the devout and learned Dr. Thomas Jackson."—Supplement to Waterland's works. Fourteen Letters from Daniel Waterland to Zachary Pearce, &c., by Edward Churton, M.A., Archdeacon of Cleveland (1868), p. xxxiii. (Preface).

There are several other passages, both in his work "A Review of the Doctrine of the Eucharist as laid down in Scripture and Antiquity," and in his charge to the Middlesex clergy, entitled "The Christian Sacrifice explained, with an Appendix," where he maintains a similar doctrine. Indeed upon this point, namely, the existence of a sacrifice in some sense, as connected with the Eucharist, it would be easy to accumulate authorities from the divines of our Church. But, as Waterland may be considered as the most prominent master of this school, I content myself with his authority.

I am led therefore to the certain conclusion, that it is lawful for a clergyman to speak in some sense of the Eucharistic sacrifice, and therefore in some sense also of the "sacrifice offered by the priest," and "the sacrificial character" of the holy table. Much of Mr. Bennett's language would fall under these categories, upon the ordinary principles of construction, by which alone in this criminal suit I must be guided. With respect to any language which may be considered to go beyond this limit, I must see whether it exceeds the liberty which, according to the judgments of the Privy Council, I must hold to be accorded to all clergymen in cases where the formularies are not express, imperative, and susceptible of but one interpretation.

Authorities on the use of the term "Sacrifice."

In Dr. Smith's Dictionary of the Bible will be found a learned article on "Sacrifice ;" it ends with these words :—

"Such is the brief sketch of the doctrine of sacrifice. It is seen to have been deeply rooted in men's hearts, and to have been from the beginning accepted and sanctioned by God, and made by Him one channel of his revelations. In virtue of that sanction it has a value partly symbolical, partly actual, but in all respects derived from the true sacrifice of which it was the type. It involved the expiatory, the self-dedictory, and the eucharistic ideas each gradually developed and explained, but all capable of full explanation by the light reflected back from the anti-type." [Signed "A. B.," (Alfred Barry, M.A., head master of the Grammar School, Leeds; late Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge).]

The first authority to which I will refer is that of Ratramn, quoting St. Augustine.

"Nonne semel immolatus est Christus in seipso; et tamen in sacramento non solum per omnes Paschæ solennitates; sed omni die populis immolatus? Nec utique mentitur qui interrogatus, eum responderit immolari. Si enim sacramenta quandam similitudinem rerum earum, quarum sacramenta sunt, non habuerunt, omnino sacramenta non essent."—Waterland's Works, pp. 27, 28.

Again :—

"Quod semel fecit nunc quotidie frequentat. Semel enim pro peccatis populi se obtulit: celebratur tamen hæc eadem oblatio singulis, per fideles, diebus, sed in mysterio: ut quod Dominus Jesus Christus, semel se offerens, adimplevit, hoc, in eius passionis memoriam, quotidie geratur per mysteriorum celebrationem. Nec tamen falsò dicitur quod in mysteriis illis, Dominus vel immoletur vel patiat: quoniam illius mortis atque passionis habent similitudinem, quarum existent representationes. Unde Dominicum corpus et sanguis Dominicus appellantur: quoniam eius sumunt appellationem, cujus existant sacramentum."—Waterland's Works, p. 31.

The next authority is Bishop Ridley, who says :—

"For as St. Augustin saith, in his 20th book, 'Christ's flesh and blood was in the Old Testament promised by similitudes and signs of their sacrifices, and was exhibited in deed and in truth upon the cross, but the same is celebrated by a sacrament of remembrance upon the altar.'" (7)

Again :—

"And in his book, De Fide ad Petrum, cap. 19, he saith, that 'in these sacrifices (meaning of the old law) it is figuratively signified what was then to be given; but in this sacrifice it is evidently signified, what is already given (understanding is the sacrifice upon the altar) the remembrance and

(7) "Hujus sacrificii caro et sanguis ante adventum Christi per victimarum similitudinem promittebatur, in passione Christi per ipsam veritatem reddebatur, post adscensum Christi per sacramentum memoriz celebratur."—S. Aug. cont. Faust. lib. xx. c. 98. Op. Ed. Ben. Par. Tom. viii. col. 348.

thanksgiving for the flesh which he offered for us upon the cross,' as in the same place evidently there it may appear." (8)

Again :—

"Was Christ (saith St. Augustine) offered any more but once? And he offered himself. And yet in a Sacrament or representation, not only every solemn feast of Easter, but also every day to the people He is offered. So that he doth not lie, that saith 'He is every day offered.' For if Sacraments had not some similitude or likeness of those things whereof they be sacraments, they could in no wise be Sacraments, and for their similitudes and likenesses commonly they have the names of the things whereof they be Sacraments. Therefore, as after a certain manner of speech the Sacrament of Christ's Body is Christ's body, the Sacrament of Christ's Blood is Christ's blood, so likewise the Sacrament of Faith is faith." (9)

Again :—

"These Scriptures do persuade me to believe that there is no other oblation of Christ (albeit I am not ignorant there are many sacrifices), but that which was once made upon the Cross.

"The testimonies of the antient fathers which confirm the same are out of Augustine ad. Bonifac., Epist. 23. Again, in his Book of Questions, in the 61st Question. Also in his book against Faustus the Manichee, Book xx., chap. 21. And in the same book against the said Faustus, chap. 18, thus he writeth—'Now the Christians keep a memorial of the sacrifice past, with a holy oblation and participation of the body and blood of Christ.' Fulgentius in his book De Fide calleth the same oblation a commemoration." (10)

(8) Works of Bishop Ridley, p. 40.—"In illis enim carnalibus victimis figuratio fuit carnis Christi, quam pro peccatis nostris ipse sine peccato fuerat oblaturus, et sanguinis quem erat effusus in remissionem peccatorum nostrorum; in isto autem sacrificio gratiarum actio atque commemoratio est carnis Christi quam pro nobis obtulit et sanguinis quem pro nobis idem deus effudit."—Fulgensius. Edit. Lug. 1638.

(9) Ridley's Works, pp. 40, 41.—"Nonne semel immolatus est Christus in seipso? et tamen in sacramento non solum per omnes Paschæ solennitates, sed omni die populis immolatur, nec utique mentitur qui interrogatus eum responderit immolari. Si enim sacramenta quandam similitudinem earum rerum quarum sacramenta sunt, non habuerunt, omnino sacramenta non essent; ex hac autem similitudine plerumque etiam ipsarum rerum nomina accipiunt. Sicut ergo, secundum quemdam modum, sacramentum corporis Christi corpus Christi est, sacramentum sanguinis Christi sanguis Christi est; ita sacramentum fidei fides est."—S. Aug. Epist. xxiii. Op. Ed. Ben. vol. ii. col. 267, F.

(10) Ridley's Works, p. 178.—"Unde jam Christiani peracti ejusdem sacrificii memoriam celebrant sacrosancta oblatione et participatione corporis et sanguinis Christi."—S. Aug. Ibid. c. 18.

Thorndike says:—

"But if it be manifest that by the Sacrament of the Eucharist God pretends to tender us the communion of the Sacrifice of Christ upon the Cross, then there is another presence of the body and blood of our Lord in the Sacrament, beside that spiritual presence in the soul which that living faith effecteth without the Sacrament as well as in the receiving of it.

"Which kind of presence, you may, if you please, call the representation of the Sacrifice of Christ; so as you understand the word 'representation' to signify not the figuring or resembling of that which is only signified, but as it signifies in the Roman laws, when a man is said 'representare pecuniam,' who pays ready money; deriving the signification of it a re presenti not from the preposition re; which will import not the presenting of that again to a man's senses which is once past, but the tendering of that to a man's possession which is tendered him on the place."—Laws of Church, book iii. chap. 2, p. 10.

Bishop Brevint on the question of the Sacrament being a commemorative sacrifice, says—

"There never was on earth a true religion without some kind of sacrifices * * * Nevertheless this sacrifice, which by a real oblation was not to be offered more than once, is by an Eucharistical and devout commemoration to be offered up every day. This is what the Apostle calls, 'to set forth the death of the Lord;' to set it forth, I say, as well before the eyes of GOD His Father, as before the eyes of all men; and what St. Austin did explain when he said that the holy flesh of Jesus Christ was offered up in three manners, by prefiguring sacrifices under the law before His coming into the world; in real deed upon the cross; and by a Commemorative Sacrament after He is ascended into Heaven. All comes to this; first, that the sacrifice, as it is itself and in itself, can never be reiterated; yet by way of devout celebration and remembrance, it may nevertheless be reiterated every day. Secondly, that whereas the Holy Eucharist is by itself a sacrament, wherein GOD offers unto all men the blessings merited by the oblation of His Son, it likewise becomes by our remembrance a kind of sacrifice also; whereby, to obtain at His hands the same blessings, we present and expose before His eyes that same holy and precious oblation once offered."—Brevint, Christian Sacrament and Sacrifice. Cited in the Eucharistica published by the Bishop of Oxford, 1861.

"But now, under the Gospel, other kinds of sacrifices are required. We are now commanded to 'present our bodies a living sacrifice;' not to kill them, but to offer them up alive as a living sacrifice, dedicating ourselves wholly to the service of GOD. Hence all manner of good, pious, and charitable works that are done in obedience to GOD, and for his service and honour, are now called 'sacrifices,' * * * particularly our open or public praying to Him, and to Him alone, for all the good things that we want. For hereby we plainly discover that we believe Him to be the author and giver of 'every good and perfect gift.'

And therefore under the law itself their public prayers always went along with their daily sacrifices, both morning and evening. 'Let my prayer,' saith David, 'be set forth before Thee as an incense, and the lifting up of my hands as an evening sacrifice.' Especially considering that prayer always was and ought to be accompanied with praise and thanksgiving to GOD, which is so properly a sacrifice that it is often called by that name. 'I will offer,' saith David, 'to Thee the sacrifice of thanksgiving' (Ps. cxvi. 17); and let them sacrifice the sacrifices of thanksgiving, and declare his works with rejoicing or singing (Ps. cxvii. 12). But the sacrifice that it is most proper and peculiar to the Gospel is the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, instituted by our Lord Himself, to succeed all the bloody sacrifices in the Mosaic law. For though we cannot say, as some do, that this is such a sacrifice whereby Christ is again offered up to GOD both for the living and the dead,"

The words which follow are important,

"yet it may as properly be called a sacrifice as any that was ever offered, except that which was offered by Christ Himself; for His, indeed, was the only true expiatory sacrifice that was ever offered. Those under the law were only types of His, and were called sacrifices simply upon that account, because they typified and represented that which he was to offer for the sins of the world; and therefore the Sacrament of Christ's Body and Blood may as well be called by that name as they were. They were typical, and this is a commemorative sacrifice."—Bishop Beveridge, cited in the Eucharistica, p. 202.

Field, Dean of Gloucester, in 1609, says, in his History of the Church, as follows:—

"We must observe, that by the name of sacrifice, gift, or present, first the oblation of the people is meant, that consisteth in bread and wine, brought and set upon the Lord's table. In which again two things are to be considered, the outward action, and that which is signified thereby; to wit, the people's dedicating themselves and all that they have to God by faith and devotion, and offering to him the sacrifice of praise. In this sense is the word sacrifice used in the former part of the canon, as I have already shewed. In respect of this is that prayer poured out to God, that he will be mindful of his servants that do offer unto him this sacrifice of praise, that is, these outward things in acknowledgment that all is of him, that they had perished if he had not sent His Son to redeem them, that unless they eat the flesh and drink the blood of Christ, they have no life; that he hath instituted Holy Sacraments of his body and blood, under the forms of bread and wine, in which he will not only represent, but exhibit the same unto all such as hunger and thirst after righteousness; and therefore they desire him so to accept and sanctify these their oblations of bread and wine, which in this sort they offer unto him, that they may become unto them the body and blood of Christ, that so partaking in them they may be made partakers of Christ, and all the benefits of redemption and salvation that he hath wrought. Secondly, by the name of sacrifice is understood the sacrifice of Christ's body; wherein we must first consider the thing offered, and secondly, the manner of offering. The thing that is offered is the body of Christ, which is an eternal and perpetual propitiatory sacrifice, in that it was once offered by death upon the Cross, and hath an everlasting and never-failing force and efficacy. Touching the manner of offering Christ's body and blood, we must consider that there is a double offering of a thing to God. First, so as men are wont to do that give something to God out of that they possess, professing that they will no longer be owners of it, but that it shall be his, and serve for such uses and employments as he shall convert it to. Secondly, a man may be said to offer a thing unto God, in that he bringeth it to his presence, setteth it before his eyes, and offereth it to his view, to incline him to do something by the sight of it and respect had to it. In this sort Christ offereth himself and his body once crucified, daily in Heaven, and so intercedeth for us; not as giving it in the nature of a gift or present, for he gave himself to God once, to be holy unto Him for ever; nor in the nature of a sacrifice; for he died once for sin, and rose again never to die any more; but in that he setteth it before the eyes of God his Father, representing it unto him, and so offering it to his view to obtain grace and mercy for us. And in this sort we also offer Him daily on the altar, in that commemorating his death, and lively representing His bitter passions endured in His body upon the Cross, we offer Him that was once crucified and sacrificed for us on the Cross, and all His sufferings, to the view and gracious consideration of the Almighty, earnestly desiring, and assuredly hoping, that He will incline to pity us, and shew mercy unto us, for this His dearest Son's sake, who in our nature for us, to satisfy His displeasure and to procure us acceptance, endured such and so grievous things. This kind of offering or sacrificing Christ, commemoratively, is twofold, inward and outward; outward as the taking, breaking, and distributing the mystical bread, and pouring out the cup of blessing, which is the Communion of the Blood of Christ, the inward consisteth in the faith and devotion of the Church and people of God, so commemorating the death and passion of Christ their crucified Saviour, and representing and setting it before the eyes of the Almighty, that they fly unto it as their only stay and refuge, and beseech Him to be merciful unto them for His sake that endured all these things, to satisfy His wrath, and work their peace and good."—Field "Of the Church," vol. ii., pp. 60-62.

Again in Chap. XIX. :—

"Of the Real Sacrifice of Christ's Body on the Altar, as a propitiatory Sacrifice for the quick and the dead."

"Touching the real sacrificing of Christ's Body
NEW SERIES, 39.—ECCLES.

on the Altar, the Church never taught any such thing as the Romanists now teach, as appeareth by these testimonies following:—

"'Although,' saith Biel (Expositio Missæ, Lect. 85. fol. 183 b., Ludg., 1514), 'Christ was once offered when he appeared in our Flesh, He is offered, notwithstanding, daily, hidden under the veils of bread and wine, not touching any of those things which import punishment or suffering (for Christ is not daily wounded; He suffereth not; He dieth not); but for two other causes the consecration and receiving of the Holy Eucharist may be named a Sacrifice and oblation; first, because it is a representation and memorial of the true Sacrifice and holy oblation made on the Altar of the Cross; secondly, because it maketh us partakers of the effects of the same. Now, the resemblances of things, as Augustine noteth, writing to Simplicianus, are called by the names of those things whereof they are resemblances, as we are wont to say when we behold a painted table or wall, This is Cicero, this Sallustius. Whereof, seeing the celebration of this Sacrifice is a lively resemblance of the passion of Christ, which is the true sacrificing of Him, it may rightly be named the sacrificing of Him.'

"'Peter Lombard, Thomas, and the other Schoolmen,' saith Bellarmine, Bellarmin. de Euchar., Lib. V. (sive de Missa, Lib. 1), Cap. 15 (Tom. iii. p. 403. Ven. 1721), 'were not careful of that which is now in question touching the daily renewed real sacrificing of Christ, but only sought to shew how the Sacrifice of the mass may be called an offering of Christ, that is, a slaying of Him; and therefore, proposing the question, whether the Eucharist be a Sacrifice, they answer, for the most part, that it may be said to be an offering or Sacrifice, because it hath a resemblance of the true and real offering which was on the Altar of the Cross, and because it communicateth unto us the effects of the true and real killing of Christ.'"—Field "Of the Church," Vol. ii., pp. 370-1.

Again:—

"In that therefore the Church doth offer the true Body and Blood of Christ to God the Father, it is merely a representative Sacrifice, and all that is done is but the commemorating and representing of that Sacrifice which was once offered on the Cross, but in that it dedicateth itself, which is the mystical Body of Christ, unto God, it is a true, but a spiritual Sacrifice, that is, an eucharistical Sacrifice of praise, thanksgiving, and of obedience due unto God. Christ, therefore, is offered and sacrificed on the Altar, but sacramentally and mystically; in that in the Sacrament there is a commemoration and remembrance of that which was once done. Christ is not often slain, which once to think were abominable; but that which was once done is represented, that we might not forget the benefit bestowed on us, but rather be so stirred up and moved by this Sacrament, as if we saw the Lord Jesus hanging upon the Cross. The passion of the Lord, saith Cyprian, is the Sacrifice that we offer to God, that is, that we offer to the view of God, and represent unto him. Neither is it to be marvelled at that we offer the true Body of Christ to revive the memory of the former Sacrifice, and to represent it unto God, seeing the Son of God was given unto us that we might oppose him to the wrath of God as a reconciler, and that, distrusting our own strength, we might represent to the Father this most potent Sacrifice."—Field "Of the Church," p. 73.

Q

Cranmer cites Cyprian and St. Augustine on the Sacrifice, without disapprobation. He says:—

"For the cause why Cyprian and other old authors say that Christ made an oblation and offering of Himself in His Last Supper, was not that He declared there that He would suffer death, for that He had declared many times before; but the cause was, that there He ordained a perpetual memory of His death, which he would all faithful Christian people to observe from time to time, remembering His death, with thanks for His benefits, until His coming again. And therefore, the memorial of the true Sacrifice made upon the Cross, as St. Augustine saith, is called by the name of a Sacrifice, as a thing that signifieth another thing is called by the name of the thing which it signifieth, although in very deed it be not the same.

"And the long discourse that you make of Christ's true presence, and of the true eating of Him, and of His true assisting us in our doing His commandment, all these be true. For Christ's Flesh and Blood be in the Sacrament truly present, but spiritually and sacramentally, not carnally and corporally. And, as He is truly present, so is He truly eaten and drunken, and assisteth us; and He is the same to us that He was to them that saw Him with their bodily eyes."—Cranmer's Works, Vol. iii., pp. 160-1.—"Answer to Gardiner. The Presence of Christ."

"How is it possible to set out more plainly the diversity of the true Sacrifice of Christ, made upon the Altar of the Cross (which was the propitiation of sin), from the Sacrifice made in the Sacrament, than Lombardus hath done in this place? For the one he calleth the true Sacrifice, the other he calleth but a memorial or representation thereof; likening the Sacrifice made in the Lord's Supper to a year's mind or anniversary, whereat is made a memorial of the death of a person, and yet it is not His death in deed. So in the Lord's Supper, according to His commandment, we remember His death, preaching, and commanding the same until His return again at the last day. And, although it be one Christ that died for us, and whose death we remember, yet it is not one Sacrifice that He made of Himself upon the Cross and that we make of Him upon the Altar or Table. For His Sacrifice was the Redemption of the world; ours is not so; His was death, ours is but a remembrance thereof. His was the taking away the sins of the world; ours is a praising and thanking for the same. And, therefore, His was satisfactory; ours is gratulatory. It is but one Christ that was offered then and is offered now, and yet the offerings be diverse; His was the thing, and ours is the figure. His was the original, and ours is, as it were, a platform."—Cranmer's Works, Vol. iii., pp. 538-9.

"And now have I made it evident that Petrus Lombardus defaceth in no point my saying of the Sacrifice, but confirmeth fully my doctrine, as well of the Sacrifice propitiatory made by Christ Himself only, as of the Sacrifice commemorative and gratulatory made by the priests and people."—Cranmer's Works, p. 540.

"Hipinus saith that the old Fathers called the Supper of our Lord a Sacrifice propitiatory. I will not believe that Hipinus so said, until you appoint me both the book and place where he so saith. For the effect of his book is clean contrary, which he wrote to reprove the propitiatory Sacrifice, which the Papists feign to be in the mass. Thus indeed Hipinus writeth in one place: 'Veteres Eucharistiam propter corporis et sanguinis Christi presentiam, primo vocaverunt sacrificium, deinde propter oblationes et munera quæ in ipsa Eucharistia Deo consecrabantur et conferabantur, ad sacra ministeria, et ad necessitatem credentium.' In which words Hipinus declareth that the Old Fathers called the Supper of our Lord a Sacrifice, for two considerations, one was for the presence of Christ's Flesh and Blood, the other was for the offering which the people gave there of their devotion, to the holy ministration and relief of the poor. But Hipinus speaketh here not one word of corporal presence, nor of propitiatory Sacrifice, but generally of presence and Sacrifice, which maketh nothing for your purpose, nor against me, that grant both a Presence and a Sacrifice. But when you shall shew me the places where Hipinus saith that the Old Fathers called the Lord's Supper a propitiatory Sacrifice, I shall trust you the better and him the worse."—Cranmer's Works, pp. 551-2.—"The Sacrifice of Christ."

Archbishop Sharp says:—

"Now to the same use and purpose (say we) serves our Sacrament of the Lord's Supper; or, as it was called by the Ancients, the Christian Sacrifice. Not that we pretend in our Communions to offer up the real Body and Blood of Christ in Sacrifice to God, as the Papists do; for that (as the Apostle tells us) was once done by himself upon the Cross, and by that one offering he hath for ever perfected all them that are sanctified; so that there is no need of any such offering, any more. But we commemorate that Sacrifice which Christ has on this day made for us, and we thank God for it; and we heartily beseech him, that he would accept of it on our behalf, and that it may make atonement for all our sins. And we likewise feed upon it (as the Jews did upon their Sacrifices); that is to say, by eating of that bread which he made to be his Body, and drinking of that cup which he made to be his Blood. Now, in doing of this, we may be truly said both to offer up a Sacrifice to God, and likewise to keep a feast upon this Sacrifice. We offer up by Commemoration and Thanksgiving and hearty Prayer, that Sacrifice that was once offered by Jesus Christ at Jerusalem, near seventeen hundred years ago for the Salvation of all mankind; and we partake both of the Body and Blood of that his Sacrifice, by partaking of the Bread and Wine that he has consecrated not only to be the symbols and signs of them, but to convey the real Benefits of his Passion and Sacrifice to all Believers. So that we may be truly said to feed at God's table whenever we receive the Sacrament."—Archbishop Sharp's Sermons, Vol. ii., p. 153 (Sixth Sermon).

"To come to the other Sacrament, (says Bishop Bull,) the Eucharist, or Holy Supper; this is the most sacred and mysterious rite, the apex, the top and perfection of Christian worship, as the ancients term it, and therefore it ought to be performed with the greatest reverence and solemnity in every punctilio of it, according to the direction of our Church in her rubric to the Communion Office."—Bishop Bull, Vol. ii., p. 22.—"Discourse on the Pastoral Office."

This great luminary of our Church treated the question of Sacrifice, in his answer to Bossuet, distinguishing between the Roman Sacrifice of the Mass and the Catholic Sacrifice of the Holy Eucharist.

"But alas! (he says) "these superadded articles of the Trent Creed are so far from being certain truths, that they are most of them manifest untruths, yea, gross and dangerous errors. To make this appear, I shall not refuse the pains of examining some of the chief of them.

"The first Article I shall take notice of is this: 'I profess that in the mass is offered to God, a true, proper, and propitiatory Sacrifice for the living and the dead; and that in the most Holy Sacrament of the Eucharist there is truly, and really and substantially, the Body and Blood, together with the Soul and Divinity of our Lord Jesus Christ; and that there is wrought a conversion of the whole substance of the bread into the Body and of the whole substance of the wine into the Blood, which conversion the Catholic Church calls transubstantiation.' Where this proposition ('that in the mass there is offered to God a true, proper, and propitiatory Sacrifice for the living and the dead'), having that other of the 'substantial presence of the Body and Blood of Christ in the Eucharist' immediately annexed to it, the meaning of it must necessarily be this, that in the Eucharist the very Body and Blood of Christ are again offered up to God as a propitiatory Sacrifice for the sins of men. Which is an impious proposition, derogatory to the one full satisfaction of Christ made by his death on the Cross, and contrary to express Scripture (Heb. vii. 27, and ix. 12, 25, 26, 28, and x. 12, 14). It is true the Eucharist is frequently called by the Ancient Fathers προσφορά, θύσια, an Oblation, a Sacrifice. But it is to be remembered, that they say also it is θυσία λογική καὶ ἀναψυκτος, a reasonable Sacrifice, a Sacrifice without blood, which, how can it be said to be, if therein the very blood of Christ was offered up to God?

"They held the Eucharist to be a commemorative sacrifice, and so do we. This is the constant language of the ancient liturgies, 'We offer by way of commemoration;' according to our Saviour's words when he ordained this holy rite, Do this in commemoration of me.

"In the Eucharist then Christ is offered, not hypostatically, as the Trent Fathers have determined, for so he was but once offered, but commemoratively only; and this commemoration is made to God the Father, and is not a bare remembering or putting ourselves in mind of him. For every sacrifice is directed to God, and the oblation therein made, whatsoever it be, hath him for its object, and not man. In the Holy Eucharist, therefore, we set before God the bread and wine, 'as figures or images of the precious blood of Christ shed for us, and of his precious body,' (they are the very words of the Clementine Liturgy,) and plead to God the merit of his Son's sacrifice once offered on the Cross for us sinners, and in this Sacrament represented, beseeching him for the sake thereof to bestow his heavenly blessings on us.

"To conclude this matter. The ancients held the oblation of the Eucharist to be answerable in some respects to the legal sacrifices, that is, they believed that our blessed Saviour ordained the Sacrament of the Eucharist as a rite of prayer and praise to God, instead of the manifold and bloody sacrifices of the law. That the legal sacrifices were rites to invoke God by is evident from many texts of Scripture; see especially 1 Sam. vii. 9 and xiii. 12, Ezra vi. 10, Prov. xv. 8; and that they were also rites for praising and blessing God for his mercies appears from 2 Chron. xxix. 27. Instead, therefore, of slaying of beasts and burning of incense, whereby they praised God and called upon his name under the Old Testament; the Fathers, I say, believed our Saviour appointed this Sacrament of bread and wine as a rite whereby to give thanks and make supplications to his Father in his name. - This you may see fully cleared and proved by the learned Mr. Mede, in his treatise entitled The Christian Sacrifice. The Eucharistical Sacrifice thus explained is indeed λογική θυσία, a reasonable sacrifice, widely different from that monstrous sacrifice of the mass taught in the Church of Rome.

"The ancient doctors, yea, and Liturgies of the Church, affirm the Eucharist to be incruentum sacrificium, 'a sacrifice without blood,' which it cannot be said to be, if the very blood of Christ were therein present and offered up to God."—Bishop Bull, Vol. ii., p. 251.—The Corruptions of the Church of Rome, in answer to the Bishop of Meaux's Queries.

Bishop Wilson on this subject says:—

"Lord's Supper."

"Private devotions at the altar, taken out of the most ancient offices of the Church, to render our present communion service more agreeable to apostolic usage, and more acceptable (I hope) to God, and beneficial to all that partake thereof. Until it shall please God to put it into the hearts and power of such as ought to do it, to restore to us the first service of Edw. VI., or such as shall be more conformable to the appointment of Christ and his Apostles, and their successors. Which may the Divine Majesty vouchsafe to grant for his sake who first ordained this holy sacrament. Amen.

"Before Service begins, kneeling at the Altar.

"May it please Thee, O God, who has called us to this ministry, to make us worthy to offer unto Thee this sacrifice for our own sins, and for the sins of Thy people."—Sacra Privata, p. 104, Ox. Ed., 1854.

"Upon placing the Bread and Wine upon the Altar.

"Vouchsafe to receive these Thy creatures from the hands of us sinners, O thou self-sufficient God! who remembered us when we were without hope and without God in the world, and hath made us Thy brethren and heirs of Thy kingdom. May I atone Thee, O God, by offering to Thee the pure and unbloody Sacrifice which thou hast ordained by Jesus Christ, Amen.

"But how should I dare to offer Thee this sacrifice, if I had not first offered myself a sacrifice to Thee, my God?

"May I never offer the prayers of the faithful with polluted lips, nor distribute the bread of life with unclean hands.

"I acknowledge and receive Thee, O Jesus, as sent of God, a prophet, to make his will known to us, and His merciful purpose to save us; as our Priest who offered Himself an acceptable Sacrifice for us to satisfy the divine justice, and to make intercession for us; and as our King to rule and defend us against all our enemies."—Sacra Privata, p. 104, Ox. Ed., 1854.

"Immediately after the Prayer of Consecration.

"We offer unto Thee, our King and our God, this bread and this cup.

"We give Thee thanks for these and for all Thy mercies; beseeching Thee to send down Thy Holy Spirit upon this sacrifice, that He may make this bread the body of Thy Christ, and this cup the blood of Thy Christ; and that all we, who are partakers thereof, may thereby obtain remission of our sins, and all other benefits of His passion."—Sacra Privata, p. 106.

St. Cyprian had written in one of his letters the following passage on the Sacrifice in the Eucharist:—

"Si Jesus Christus et Dominus Deus noster, ipse est summus sacerdos Dei Patris, et sacrificium Patri seipsum primus obtulit, et hoc fieri in sui commemorationem præcepit; utique ille sacerdos vice Christi vere fungitur, qui id, quod Christus fecit, imitatur et sacrificium verum et plenum tunc offert in Ecclesia Deo Patri, si sic incipiat offerre secundum quod ipsum Christum videat obtulisse."—Cyprian, Ep. lxi., p. 609, cited in Waterland's Works, Vol. vii., p. 375.

And Waterland thus deals with this passage:—

"I shall now pass on to Cyprian, to show how this matter stood, upon the change of language introduced in his time. We shall find him plainly speaking of the offering Christ's body and blood. This must be understood of an oblation subsequent to consecration, not in order to it; for Christ's body and blood, whether real or symbolical, are holy, and could want no sanctification or consecration. He further seems to speak of offering Christ himself, in this Sacrament, unto God, but under the symbols of consecrated bread and wine. That may be his meaning, and the meaning is good, when rightly apprehended; for there was nothing new in it but the language or the manner of expression. What the elder Fathers would have called, and did call, the commemorating of Christ, or the commemorating His passion, His body broken, or blood shed, that Cyprian calls the offering of Christ, or of His passion, &c., because in a large sense, even commemorating is offering, as it is presenting the thing or the person so commemorated in the way of prayer and thanksgiving before God. I do not invent this account for the clearing a difficulty, but I take it from Cyprian himself, whose own words shew that the Eucharistical commemoration was all the while in his mind, and that that was all he meant by the oblation which he there speaks of, using a new name for an old thing. I shall shew in due time, that the later Fathers, who followed Cyprian's language in this particular, and who admitted this third oblation (as some have called it) as well as he, yet when they came to explain interpreted it to mean no more than a solemn commemoration, such as I have mentioned."—Waterland's Works, Vol. vii., p. 30.

"This is not the place to examine critically what the ancients meant by the sacrifice or sacrifices of the Eucharist; it will deserve a distinct chapter in another part of this work. But, as I before observed of oblation, that, anciently, it was understood sometimes of the lay offering, the same I observe now of sacrifice; and it is plain from Cyprian. Besides that notion of sacrifice, there was another, and a principal one, which was conceived to go along with the Eucharistical service, and that was, the notion of spiritual sacrifice, consisting of many particulars, as shall be shewn hereafter; and it was on the account of one, or both, that the Eucharist had the name of sacrifice for the two first centuries. But by the middle of the third century, if not sooner, it began to be called a sacrifice, on account of the grand sacrifice represented and commemorated in it; the sign, as such, now adopting the name of the thing signified. In short, the memorial at length came to be called a sacrifice, as well as an oblation: and it had a double claim to be so called; partly as it was in itself a spiritual service, or sacrifice, and partly as it was a representation and commemoration of the high tremendous sacrifice of Christ Godman. This last view of it, being of all the most awful and most endearing, came by degrees to be the most prevailing acceptance of the Christian sacrifice, as held forth in the Eucharist. But those who style the Eucharist a sacrifice on that account, took care, as often as need was, to explain it off to a memorial of a sacrifice rather than a strict or proper sacrifice, in that precise view. Cyprian, I think, is the first who plainly and directly styles the Eucharist a sacrifice in the commemorative view, and as representing the grand sacrifice. Not that there was anything new in the doctrine, but there was a new application of an old name, which had at the first been brought in upon other accounts."—Waterland's Works, Vol. vii., pp. 37-8.

Hey, in his lectures on the Articles, says:—

"It may be objected, that the Gospel Institutions are not to be made complicated and abstruse unnecessarily. Is not the 'simplicity that is in Christ' best observed by taking the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper as a mere commemoration? Bishop Cleaver answers this objection in his first discourse; and Dr. Balguy answers it, in effect, in his Seventh Charge. If you make the Lord's Supper, as it was instituted by Christ, a mere commemoration, you make it a strange and unintelligible rite; for what can be more strange than eating the flesh and drinking the blood of one who is to be regarded only as an instructor and benefactor? If we had been ordered in the Sacrament to kill an animal, and shed its blood; or only to break bread, and pour out wine, the rite would be intelligible, as a simple memorial. It would have represented Christ's death, merely as a death; but it would have been a different rite from ours. Now conceive it as a feast on a sacrifice, and all is easy and simple. We, indeed, are not in the habit of sacrificing; but what is that? Who could not understand, that, when sacrifices were in use, part of the victim was served up at a religious feast; and all who partook of the material feast were understood to partake of the spiritual benefits of the sacrifice. Christ was our Victim; on his body we do not feast literally, because it is in heaven; but he appointed bread to represent it. On that we can feast, and so partake of his body; that is, feast upon the Victim. Such bread is 'the Bread of Life,' because, by his own appointment, it represents his Flesh. This appears to me plain and simple."—Hey's Lectures in Divinity, Vol. iv., p. 349.

I will now advert to the language of Mr. Keble, in his work on Eucharistical Adoration, published in 1867.

"The true oblation" (he says) "in the Christian sacrifice is in no sense earthly or material. It is altogether spiritual; the chief of those spiritual sacrifices in the offering whereof consists the common priesthood of us all. The Eucharist comprehends them all in one; and has, besides, peculiar to itself, that which alone causes any of them to be acceptable. For the true oblation in the Eucharist is not the bread and wine; that is only as the vessel which contains or the garment which veils it; but that which our Lord by the hands of the priest offers to His Father in the Holy Eucharist is His own body and blood, the very same which He offers and presents to Him, with which, as St. Paul says, He appears before Him now, night and day continually in heaven, in commemoration of His having offered it once for all in His passion and death on the Cross. It is the one great reality, summing up in itself all the memorial sacrifices of old. In the Christian scheme, it is 'proportionable' to them; and of course it stands in the same rank and relation to them, as the other antetypes in the gospel to their several types and shadows in the law.

"The memorial therefore made of Christ before the Father in Holy Communion is as much more real, more glorious, more blessed, than all the memorial sacrifices of old; than the yearly paschal lamb, for instance; as the one atoning sacrifice on the Cross surpassed the lamb slain at the first Passover; as the descent of the Holy Spirit at Pentecost surpassed the fire on the burnt offering; as Christ is more glorious than Aaron or Melchisedec; heaven, with the tree of life and the waters of life, more blessed than the land flowing with milk and honey; the new Jerusalem more true and real than the old; he who thinks most highly, and therefore least inadequately, of that holy and divine Sacrament, cannot well say, or conceive anything of it higher than this, that it is, in the strict sense of the word, 'that which the Gospel hath proportionable to ancient sacrifices.'"—Keble on Eucharistical Adoration, pp. 70-71.

And in his sermons preached before the University of Oxford in 1848 he says:—

"And first, for doctrine. Have we not indeed, in the words of the text alone, the substance of the Eucharistical office, in both its parts—both in its sacrificial and in its sacramental character? 'I sanctify myself,'—there is the sacrifice, that they also may be sanctified 'through the truth;' there is the sacrament. Are not these plainly the guiding, the prevailing thoughts, which He our great teacher and exemplar, would have us associate with the services of His sacred altar?

"For thus it is:—After ordaining the Eucharist for a remembrance or memorial of himself, having also by solemn prayer commended to His Father His apostles first, and in them all who should believe on Him through their word, He sums up the effect of what He was doing and saying. 'For their sakes I am sanctifying myself, that they also may be sanctified through the truth.'

"Our blessed Lord then was sanctifying Himself, that is, setting himself apart, devoting or offering up Himself, his own body and blood, to be the conveyance of like sanctification to us. He was making Himself a sacrifice, that we being joined to Him might be holy and lively sacrifices. And all this 'through the truth,' by participation, namely, of Him who is the very truth and reality, the substance of which the old sacrifices were shadows.

"I repeat it, this one saying of Christ conveys apparently in itself, the two chief points of the evangelical doctrine concerning the holy and blessed Eucharist; first, that it is His memorial sacrifice; a means of obtaining God's favour and pardon for all such as truly repent; next, that it is a most high sacrament, a mean whereby we are united to Christ, and so made more and more partakers of His righteousness here, and of His glory hereafter.

"When we say 'a memorial sacrifice' we mean, that the offering in the Holy Communion does not only put us in mind of the great unspeakable things which Christ has done for us, but also that it puts God in mind of them, so the Scripture vouchsafes to speak, over and over putting into our mouth the word

'remember,' when we are being taught to pray. So our Lord, in the very words of consecration, 'This do for the memorial of Me.' So the meat and bread offering mentioned so often in the Old Testament, especially in that manual for sacrifice, the Book of Leviticus, is constantly said to be offered 'for a memorial;' and without all controversy it was a type and shadow of that which we Christians present on our altars.

"The Eucharist, therefore, is a memorial or commemorative sacrifice; that is, God graciously receives what we break, pour out, and offer, as though His Son presented before Him His very own body and blood. He receives it as a continuation of that first awful Eucharist, according to the saying of the wise man, 'I know that whatsoever God doeth, it shall be for ever.' 'He smelleth,' as the Bible speaks, 'a sweet savour,' and is favourable and merciful unto us for the sake of Christ so offering Himself before Him."—Sermons by the Rev. John Keble, M.A. Published by Parker (1848), Oxford, pp. 259-262.

Cleaver, Bishop of St. Asaph, preached several sermons on the Holy Eucharist before the University of Oxford in 1787-1790. In them he dwells largely on the doctrine that the Lord's Supper was a feast on a sacrifice. From these I make the following extracts:—

"But that I may not repeat what has been already urged upon many of these words, I will simply call to your recollection their general relation to a sacrifice by a bare recital of the institution, as it is given by St. Matthew, which is as follows: 'And as they were eating, Jesus took bread, and blessed it, and brake it, and gave it to the disciples and said, Take eat, this is my body; and he took the cup, and gave it to them, saying, Drink ye all of it; for this is my blood of the New Testament which is shed for many for the remission of sins.' Here, I think, I might safely rest my general argument, that easy as the connexion between the parts of this proposition 'Take eat, this is my body,' and again of this 'Drink ye all of this, for this is my blood,' may appear when unexamined, and few as the words of institution are, the real connexion in the parts of the two propositions can be explained satisfactorily upon no other supposition than that of their allusion to a sacrifice, without which a great share of the few words in each of the passages reciting the institution will be superfluous and unintelligible, and all of them ill explained. I may, therefore, I hope, without being unduly sanguine, assert that the idea of a sacrifice is the primary and leading idea of this institution."

The Bishop then says that it does not exactly correspond with any one species of sacrifice under the Mosaic law.

"The truth is, if it be a representation or application of the sacrifice of the death of Christ, it must correspond not exactly with one but essentially with all the sacrifices of the law. 'For as all the sacrifices were types of this great event, and as the event itself must correspond to its own types, so must whatever institution be made to represent that event. The rite, therefore, which should fully shew the Lord's death, must shew the sacrifice made by that death, which doubtless was St. Paul's meaning; a sacrifice upon which alone the merits and efficacy of that death are founded; for it is in the blood of Christ sacrificially shed that the Scriptures found the notion of propitiation, of atonement, and of forgiveness.

"Ancients and moderns have considered it under distinct points of view; used distinct appellations: e.g., 'Christian sacrifice,' 'Christian passover,' 'Christian oblation,' 'the Eucharist,' &c., the language of our Church, 'a continual remembrance of the sacrifice of the death of Christ.'

(P. 22.) "I have not contended that the institution is a material and proper sacrifice, because the command is not, as in the vision shown to St. Peter, 'Slay and eat,' but eat—'This is my body, which is broken for you;' drink, 'This is my blood, which is shed for you.' Thus St. Paul,—'Christ our passover is slain, therefore let us keep the feast.' And again, when he compares the table of the Lord, not the altar, with the table of devils, it is evident that he considers it as a feast upon a sacrifice, unless we could suppose the apostle to draw his argument from a case not parallel. There is, too, a remarkable passage in Ezekiel (xxxix. 17), the words of which on the subject are peculiarly apposite to this point, where the fowls are invited 'to eat the flesh and drink the blood of the sacrifice,' to which it is added, 'Thus shall ye be filled at my table.'

Bishop Moberly's opinion is as follows:—

"Shall I ask," he says, "whether the feast which they there celebrate is or is not a sacrifice? Brethren, bear with me while I venture to say that I am not very careful, so far as I can judge, to answer the question. Indeed, it appears to me to be little more than a question of words, which bears upon no important issue. The feast is what it is; and whether that is or is not what constitutes a sacrifice must depend altogether upon the precise meaning attached to the word 'sacrifice,' and the definition given to it. There surely are good and innocent senses in which it may well and rightly be so called. There surely is a sense,—the highest,—that in which the actual offering of the Lord's body and blood upon the altar of the cross was once offered, the only full, perfect, and sufficient sacrifice, oblation, and satisfaction for the sins of the whole world,—in which we may not dare so to call it."—Moberly's Bampton Lectures, pp. 174-5.

"I know not why we should not rest content to speak in the language of St. Chrysostom, which I have already quoted, and to call the holy feast which we celebrate our Θυσία, or Ἀνθύμιον τῆς Θυσίας, our sacrifice or recollection of the sacrifice."—Moberly's Bampton Lectures, p. 176.

I will conclude with two short extracts from the treatise of the present Bishop of Ely on the 39 Articles.

Writing upon the 31st Article, he says:—

"It cannot be doubted that from the very first the Fathers spoke of the Eucharist under the name of an offering or sacrifice.

* * * * *

"The dread of the mass which has prevailed generally among the reformed Churches, has made the majority of their members fear to speak at all concerning an Eucharistic sacrifice.

"Yet there have not been wanting, in the English Church especially, men of profound learning, deep piety, and some of them by no means attached to peculiar schools of doctrine, who have advocated the propriety of speaking of the Christian sacrifice, and of adopting in some measure the language of the primitive Church respecting it."—Expos. of 39 Articles, pp. 737, 745-6.

The language of Mr. Bennett upon the subject of sacrifice is consistent with the doctrine of a sacrament of commemoration, and does not necessarily imply a sacrifice of propitiation; and it does not, in my opinion, necessarily or directly conflict with the Articles of Religion, nor with the 82nd Canon, nor with the passages selected from the office of the Holy Communion set forth in the criminal articles; nor has it exceeded that liberty of expression which has been used by the divines whom I have cited.

Adoration of the Holy Elements.—Of Christ in the Holy Elements.

With respect to the third category, the promoter alleges that the defendant has promulgated the following doctrines:—"In or by the passage lettered H, that adoration or worship is due to the consecrated bread and wine. In or by the passages lettered N, O, and S, that adoration is due to Christ, present upon the altars or communion tables of the Church in the sacrament of the Holy Communion under the form of bread and wine, on the ground that under their veil is the sacred body and blood of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ."

Mr. Bennett in the earlier editions of his pamphlet used these expressions:—"Who myself adore and teach the people to adore the consecrated elements, believing Christ to be in them—believing that under their veil is the sacred body and blood of my Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ."

It seems to me that the first of these sentences does contravene the mind of the Church as expressed in the declaration about kneeling, which is at the close of the Order of the Administration of the Lord's Supper; and though, as will be seen, these words are not without some countenance from considerable authority, they are in my judgment to be reprehended.

The words of the declaration are:—"Yet, lest the same kneeling should by any persons, either out of ignorance or infirmity, or out of malice or obstinacy, be misconstrued or depraved, it is hereby declared that thereby no adoration is intended, or ought to be done, either unto the sacramental bread or wine there bodily received, or unto any corporal presence of Christ's natural flesh and blood. For the sacramental bread and wine remain still in their very natural substances, and therefore may not be adored (for that were idolatry to be abhorred of all faithful Christians); and the natural body and blood of our Saviour Christ are in heaven, and not here; it being against the truth of Christ's natural body to be at one time in more places than one."

Mr. Bennett has, however, been apprised of the error into which his slight acquaintance with the subject has led him, and in his latest edition this reprehensible language is withdrawn and the following language substituted for it:—"Who myself adore and teach the people to adore Christ present in the Sacrament, under the form of bread and wine, believing that under their veil is the sacred body and blood of my Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ."

I have dealt with the question as to the expression "under the form of bread and wine," and have decided that it may be lawfully used. It remains to be considered whether to profess and teach the adoration of Christ present in the Sacrament is unlawful.

Such a doctrine is not at variance with the declaration of kneeling, which discountenances the worship of the elements and of the corporal presence of Christ.

Nor is it repugnant to the 28th Article of Religion, as suggested by the promoter, for it contains no declaration against the adoration of the spiritual presence of Christ in the Holy Eucharist.

Entertaining this opinion, it is perhaps hardly necessary to refer to authorities in favour of the proposition, that the adoration of the spiritual presence of Christ in the Eucharist may lawfully be maintained.

Some, however, I will mention.

In the dialogue between Ridley and his Papal adversary are these passages:—

"Glyn.—Augustine against Faustus, 'Some there were which thought us, instead of bread and of the cup, to worship Ceres and Bacchus.' Upon this place I gather, that there was an adoration of the Sacrament among the Fathers; and Erasmus, in an epistle to the brethren of Low Germany, saith that the worshipping of the Sacrament was before Augustine and Cyprian.

"Ridley.—We do handle the signs reverently; but we worship the Sacrament as a Sacrament, not as the thing signified by the Sacrament.

"Glyn.—What is the symbol or Sacrament ?

"Ridley.—Bread.

"Glyn.—Ergo, we worship bread.

"Ridley.—There is a deceit in this word 'adoramus.' We worship the symbols, when reverently we handle them. We worship Christ wheresoever we perceive His benefits; but we understand His benefits to be greatest in the Sacrament.

"Glyn.—So I may fall down before the bench here, and worship Christ; and if any man ask me what I do, I may answer, I worship Christ.

"Ridley.—We adore and worship Christ in the Eucharist. And if you mean the external Sacrament, I say, that also is to be worshipped as a Sacrament."—Works, p. 236.

Bishop Poyntet, in his treatise on the Eucharist, says :—

"Here a scruple arises. If we believe the grace and virtue of the real body to be conjoined with the bread and wine, we shall seem to attribute too much to the elements, and hence a twofold evil will arise—1, the adoration of the Sacrament and the peril of idolatry, and 2, that the wicked who partake of the Sacrament eat at the same time the body of Christ, and are partakers of His grace. But this latter cannot take place, for 'Whoso eateth me,' saith Christ, 'shall live for ever,' and 'if any man eat of this bread he shall live for ever,' which cannot be understood of the wicked."

That is, so as to be partakers of His grace, as is more fully explained in the passage I have already given.—See p. 101.

"As to the worship, I reply, that the ancients partook of the Sacrament with the utmost reverence and honour, and yet were safe from idolatry. . . . For as to their worshipping what they received, Augustine plainly testifies on the 98th Psalm, when he says, 'He has given the same flesh to you to eat to salvation, but no one eats that flesh without first adoring, and not only do we not sin by adoring, but we sin by not adoring.' Also, Prosper, 'In the species of bread and wine which we see, we honour invisible things, that is, the flesh and blood.' Also, Eusebius Emisenus, 'When thou ascendest the reverend altar to be filled with spiritual food, behold, honour and wonder at the holy body of thy God.' And Chrysostom (1 Cor. x. Hom. XXIV.), 'I will shew you upon earth what is worthy of this highest honour. For, as palaces, not the walls, not the golden roof, but the royal body seated on the throne, is the most excellent of all; so also is the royal body in Heaven now proposed to your view on earth. I do not shew you angels nor archangels nor the heaven of heavens, but the Lord of all these.' Ambrose (1 Cor. xi.), 'The Eucharist is spiritual medicine, which, tasted with reverence, purifies the devout receiver.' And again, 'The Holy Communion is to be approached with a devout mind, and with fear, that the mind may know that reverence is due to Him whose body it approaches to receive.' Theodoret (Dial. 2), 'Nor after sanctification do those mystical symbols differ from their proper nature, but remain in their former substance, and figure, and appearance (species), and are therefore both seen and felt as before. But they are understood to be that which they are made, and are believed to be so, and are worshipped, as being the things which they are believed.' From this and other places it is easily understood with what honour, with what reverence, the ancients approached to the Holy Communion. Nor is this to be wondered at, when they believed that they took, in that bread, the truth, nature, and virtue, of the true body of Christ, and were far from idolatry, being diligently instructed and taught that they did not worship the outward sign, but the inward virtue, which Augustin shews by these words (De Doct. Christ., lib. iii. cap. 9): 'For he but serves the sign who performs or venerates any significant thing, not knowing what it signifies; but he who performs or venerates a useful sign instituted by God, the power and signification of which he understands, does not venerate the transient thing which he sees, but rather that to which all such things are to be referred.' And again, afterwards, 'At this time, by the resurrection of our Lord Jesus Christ, a more manifest proof of our liberty has taken place, nor are we burdened with the heavy load of those signs which we now understand, but the Lord and apostolic discipline have handed down, in place of many, some few things, and easy to be performed, as the sacrament of baptism, and the celebration of the body and blood of the Lord, which each person when he receives, being well instructed, knows what they signify, and worships them, not with carnal servitude, but with spiritual liberty.'"

Thorndike says :—

"I suppose that the body and blood of Christ may be adored wheresoever they are, and must be adored by a good Christian, where the custom of the Church which a Christian is obliged to communicate with requires it. . . .

"But I suppose, further, that the body and blood of Christ is not adored nor to be adored by Christians, neither for itself nor for any endowment residing in it, which it may have received by being personally united with the Godhead of Christ, but only in consideration of the said Godhead, to which it remains inseparably united, wheresoever it becomes. For by that means whosoever proposeth not to himself the consideration of the body and blood of Christ as it is of itself and in itself a mere creature (which he that doth not on purpose cannot do), cannot but consider It as he believes It to be, being a Christian; and considering It as It is, honour It as It is, inseparably united to the Godhead, in which and by which it subsisteth, in which, therefore, that honour resteth, and to which it tendeth—so the Godhead of Christ is the thing that is honoured, and the reason why it is honoured, both. The body and blood of Christ, though It be necessarily honoured because necessarily united to that which is honoured, yet is It only the thing that is honoured, and not the reason why It is honoured, speaking of the honour proper to God alone.

"I suppose, further, that it is the duty of every Christian to honour our Lord Christ as God subsisting in human flesh, whether by professing Him such, or by praying to Him as such, or by using any bodily gesture, which by the custom of them that frequent it may serve to signify that indeed he takes Him for such, which gesture is outwardly that worship of the heart which inwardly commands it.

"This honour then being the duty of an affirmative precept, which, according to the received rule, ties always (though it cannot tie a man to do the duty always, because then he should do nothing else), what remains but a just occasion to make it requisite, and presently to take hold and oblige.

"And is not the presence thereof in the sacrament of the Eucharist a just occasion, presently to express by the bodily act of adoration, that inward honour which we always carry towards our Lord Christ as God? Grant that there may be question whether it be a just occasion or not:" [he goes on to say in substance, that] "supposing the custom of the Church to have determined it, it shall be so far from an act of idolatry, that it shall be the duty of a good Christian." . . . but that "if the Church hath not determined it" (though for some occasions it may become offensive and not due), "yet it can never become an act of idolatry."—Laws of Church, Book III., chap. 31, §§ 1-10.

Dean Brevint, in his Christian Sacrament and Sacrifice, says:—

"The second is an act of adoration and reverence when he looks upon that good hand that hath consecrated for the use of the Church the memorial of these great things. I cannot, without some degree of devotion, look on any object that in anywise puts me in mind of the sufferings of my Saviour, and if I did perceive but any cloud somewhat like them, although it were but casual, I would not neglect the accident that had caused that resemblance, but since the good hand of my God hath purposely contrived it thus to set before me what I see, and since by His special appointment, these representatives are brought in hither for this Church, and among all the rest for me, I must mind what Israel did when the cloud filled the tabernacle. I will not fail to worship God as soon as I perceive these sacraments and gospel clouds appearing in the sanctuary. Here I worship neither sacrament nor tabernacle, but I will observe the manner that Moses, David, and all Israel have taught me to receive poor elements with after the institution of God hath once raised them to the estate of mysteries. Neither the ark nor any clouds were ever adored in Israel; but sure it is the ark was considered quite otherwise than an ordinary chest, and the cloud than a vapour, as soon as God had hallowed them both to be the signs of His presence. Therefore, as the former people did never see the Temple or cloud, but that presently at that sight they used to throw themselves on their faces, I will never behold these better and surer sacraments of the glorious mercies of God, but as soon as I see them used in the Church to that holy purpose that Christ hath consecrated them to I will not fail both to remember my Saviour who consecrated those sacraments, and to worship also my Saviour whom those sacraments do represent."—Christian Sacrament and Sacrifice, s. ii. 5, 8. Cited in the Eucharistica.

Bishop Andrewes, in his controversy with Bellarmine, setting forth the true doctrine of the Church of England, and contrasting it with that of Rome, says:—

